For Reference

Not to be taken from this room

V218497

...IES' HOME

The Magazine Women Believe In

JULY, 1951 25 CENTS

JOURNAL

21327

BURLINGAME
PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

PUBLIC LIBR
BURLINGAME
CALIF
JUN55

THE SPELL
A Warm, Amusing One-Shot
By ELIZABETH CADELL

A HARRIED HOUSEWIFE
Algy Peterson, who has 3 children under 5, says
HELP WANTED in HOW AMERICA LIVES

SOMETHING SPEC... OR YOU Fashion Pages in C...
By WILHELA CUSHMAN

WEITZER vs. STALIN Two men who epitomize the forces which will build or destroy our world By HAROLD E. STASSEN

VOL. LXVIII NO. 7

Journal Contents

July 1951

Journalities

Elizabeth Cadell, daughter and friend.

ELIZABETH CADELL (The Spell, page 34) was born and brought up in India—"I think the American term is 'raised,' but my parents couldn't have known it, as they raised me to a mere five feet"—and educated in Calcutta, London and Darjeeling. Recently she applied for a visa to visit the U. S., and was about to get it when the man noticed she was an author. A dark shade came over his face. Authors, he said, withdrawing the visa, were in a Delayed Category. They don't get visas Just Like That. They have to be Investigated. "So I'm now being that," Mrs. Cadell writes. "In the meantime I have learned an important fact about the United States: it isn't Acheson to Pekoe, as I've sung so often—it's Acheson Topeka!" • JEAN S. O'CONNELL has written a story about the easiest way to get into this country (Into the Here, page 40). A baby may have troubles, but pregnancy is one thing he doesn't have to put up with. Says the author: "If pregnant girls do behave like the girl in my story, one has a hard time getting them to admit it. But I believe the story is true, or I wouldn't have written it." • Artist TOM MILLER, who illustrated Into the Here, has appeared in the JOURNAL before, but is something of a newcomer. He's from Ontario, Canada, but now living in New York, where he and his wife are waiting for their first child to get "into the here." Tom couldn't think of much else to tell us about himself. He seemed a bit harassed. As Abe Burrows said, "A baby has troubles? Huh! It doesn't even know whether it's a boy or a girl!"

Jean S. O'Connell.

Tom Miller.

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

The Spell . . . . . Elizabeth Cadell 34

Fiction

Melville Goodwin USA (Third part of seven) . . . John P. Marquand 38
Into the Here . . . . . Jean S. O'Connell 40
A Ticket for Thaddeus . . . . . Rose C. Feld 44
About Two Nice People . . . . . Shirley Jackson 48

Special Features

War and Revolution . . . . . Dorothy Thompson 11
Hate is a Two-Way Street . . . . . G. M. White 11
Tell Me Doctor—Conclusion . . . . . Henry B. Safford, M.D. 31
Schweitzer vs. Stalin . . . . . Harold E. Stassen 36
How America Lives: Help Wanted! . . . Betty Hannah Hoffman 107
"My Children Won't Obey" . . . . . Leslie B. Hohman, M.D. 112

General Features

Our Readers Write Us 5
Under-Cover Stuff . . . . . Bernardine Kielty 14
There's a Man in the House . . . . . Harlan Miller 23
Reference Library 24
Making Marriage Work . . . . . Clifford R. Adams 26
Why are You Shy? (The Sub-Deb) . . . . Edited by Jan Weyl 28
Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town 33
Ask Any Woman . . . . . Marcelene Cox 78
This is a Light-Leaver . . . . . Munro Leaf 82
Anemia in Children—More Common Than We Think Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 122
Diary of Domesticity . . . . . Gladys Taber 128

Fashion

Something Specially for You . . . . . Wilkela Cushman 42
Summer Carriage Cover and Pillow 57
Transfer Designs for Children's Clothes 130

Food and Homemaking

When Comp'ny Comes . . . . . Ann Batchelder 46
Line a Day . . . . . Ann Batchelder 50
For a Clean Oven 65
For Goodness' Sake! . . . . . Nika Standen 72
The Best I Ever Ate . . . . . Jeannette Rattray 90
Thrifty Summer Dinners . . . . . Louella G. Shouer 114

Poetry

Sonnet on Rare Animals . . . . . William Meredith 54
Holiday . . . . . Nancy Hale 62
July . . . . . Marion Lineaweaver 84
Tide Talk . . . . . R. H. Grenville 100
Fifteen . . . . . Polly Toland 131

Cover Photograph by Tana Hoban

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address:
LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1951 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries, 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Vice-President and Director of Research; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

DRESS BY CEIL CHAPM

...ORY FLAKES

...adiant Action

...y clothes lovely far longer

...ning dresses
...ou needn't!
...enjoy them
...keep even
...esh as new,

...Flakes has
...y new kind
... washables.
...things gently
...they'll keep
...uty through more wearings and washings than you ever thought was possible!

So never take chances! You know your fine washables are safe in Ivory Flakes! It's the soap millions of mothers use to keep baby's clothes safe and soft. It's the only flake form of baby's pure, mild Ivory Soap. So kind to hands in the dishpan, too. Get a box today!

If it's lovely to wear...
it's worth Ivory Flakes care

You needn't be newly-wed to enjoy Trousseau Luxury

Is your secret self starved for luxurious pastel sheets, for deep, color-drenched blankets, lush bedspreads and towels soft as sable?

Lady, you need a new trousseau . . . fresh from your favorite department store and flaunting the famous Fieldcrest label, a sign of lasting beauty that's kind to your budget.

rest

T S

ts • Bedspreads an Rugs • Lace
osiery • Rayons

Choose these petal-soft sheets from seven blossom pastels: peach, green, pink, blue, yellow, lavender and chartreuse. All vat-dyed for countless washings.

MARSHALL FIELD & COMPANY, INC., 88 WORTH STREET, NEW YORK 13, NEW YORK

Our Readers Write us

No Progress Without Women

Cairo, Egypt

Dear Editors: I wish to thank Dorothy Thompson for depicting in its true light the evolution (in sense of intellectual and social growth) of the Egyptian women.

In this century, the feminist movement in Egypt has advanced decisively: elimination of wearing the veil; elementary and secondary education for women, admission of young women to the universities; the assumption of positions of greater responsibility, and so on. As a result, the Egyptian woman plays an incontestably important role in her country. But while this condition exists, it is not legal. At this time it is our purpose to substitute for this position recognized legal status.

I hope these laws soon will be enacted. In my opinion, no real progress is possible for a country where the women do not take a part in making the laws.

DORIO SHAFIK
President of the National Council of the Women of Egypt

Twins—Four Months Apart

Tulsa, Oklahoma

Dear Editors: Each time I see the Make-Believe Twins I think of our make-believe twins. One of our twins is Elaine and Irita pose a riddle: One twin's mother is sister to the other.

my own five-year-old; the other is my mother's five-year-old, who is only four months older. My mother loves to leave people gaping by her reply to their question, "Are they twins?" "No," she says, "but since they are only four months apart we like for people to think so!"

Yours sincerely,
MRS. GLENN MEDLIN

Childbirth—an Ecstatic Joy?

Fort Wayne, Indiana

Dear Editors: In Tell Me Doctor your author omits entirely the emotional effect of willing conscious delivery in childbirth and assures his patient she doesn't have to know a thing about it. I wish I could express the emotional difference between waking up and asking to see the baby and the ecstatic joy of conscious delivery. All the technical descriptions and the pictures are emptiness beside this miracle of love.

Women hesitate to try natural childbirth, not through fear of pain but through fear of failing. They don't dare refuse drugs and ether for fear they can't make the grade. And the doctors prefer drugs as they have preferred the bottle and formula for feeding babies. Drugs are for abnormal deliveries. I often wonder how much of the mental and emotional unhappiness of American women is due to their loss of the birth experience.

Most sincerely,
PRISCILLA BRIGHTY

For Discriminating People

New York City

Dear Editors: Having grown up in Georgia—white but lucky enough to get my values straight early—Charles Samuels' piece about Mr. and Mrs. James Peters makes me feel very humble. I hope everyone realizes the tremendous courage and integrity of these two wonderful people and their five children. No man has a choice of parents, or color of skin—though anyone with real discrimination would pick Mr. and Mrs. James Peters.

Sincerely yours,
MARY AGNES MOREL

"You Won't Publish This"

Baltimore, Maryland

Dear Editors: The LADIES' HOME JOURNAL will never again be read by me because of your How America Lives concerning the Peters family. That is definitely not the way the Negro lives in Baltimore. The article is a lie and a sham, and it is the best way in the world to start a race riot. Of course you won't publish this, but I will buy next month's magazine to see for myself.

Yours very truly,
NORA HASTINGS BURDETTE

Problems of the Male

Bronx, New York

Dear Editors: There she was before me, the conscious concept of a dream—angelic, captivating, soul-depressing beauty. I looked at her. A feeling of sweet sorrow filled me, a yearning to see the solid, real-life image. The girl on the cover of your April JOURNAL. Who is she? How old is she? What is her telephone number? With excruciating delight, I am

C. VINCENT GRECO

P.S. If you wish to sell this letter to the highest bidder, be sure that the proceeds go to the S.S.A.M.C.A.W. (Society for the Suffering of American Manhood Caused by American Womanhood).

No bids. No sale. No phone number. Keep suffering. ED.

Neither Too Young nor Too Old

Corpus Christi, Texas

Dear Editors: I am a sixteen-year-old high-school senior, and I have had difficulty in finding a magazine that would suit my needs. Then one day I picked up a copy of the JOURNAL which my mother had been reading and thumbed through it. I came across many stories and articles which I really enjoyed. In addition, I noticed that the fashions, in many cases, were youthful styles, such as I like, and mother likes for me.

Now mother and I fight over who gets to read the JOURNAL first; many times we go over it together. Thanks for a magazine for both mother and me!

Sincerely,
MIRIAM HEIFETZ

DRESS BY CEIL CHAPM

New IVORY FLAKES
with Radiant Action
keeps lovely clothes lovely far longer

Do you keep your most becoming dresses tucked away for a party day? You needn't! You can wear them often . . . enjoy them more! New Ivory Flakes will keep even the most delicate washables fresh as new, washing after washing.

It's a promise! For new Ivory Flakes has "Radiant Action"—an entirely new kind of beauty protection for fine washables. And when you wash your nice things gently in pure, mild Ivory Flakes, they'll keep their radiant, brand-new beauty through more wearings and washings than you ever thought was possible!

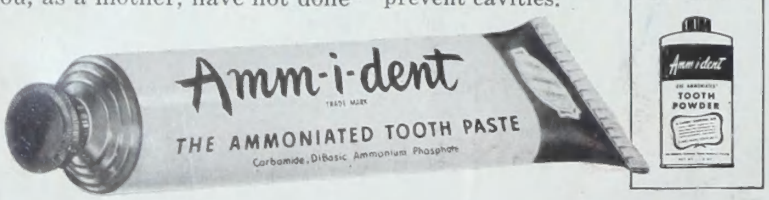
So never take chances! You know your fine washables are safe in Ivory Flakes! It's the soap millions of mothers use to keep baby's clothes safe and soft. It's the only flake form of baby's pure, mild Ivory Soap. So kind to hands in the dishpan, too. Get a box today!

If it's lovely to wear...
it's worth Ivory Flakes care

Too bad! This child's mother was "too smart" to believe the ads that told her...

Amm-i-dent Helps Prevent Cavities!

"Just another exaggerated claim," the mother thought when she read that Amm-i-dent ammoniated Tooth Paste could reduce tooth decay. She didn't even call her dentist, who could have told her about Amm-i-dent. She just kept buying the tooth paste with which her family had been brushing—and having cavities—year after year.



More dentists recommend Amm-i-dent

And now she's sorry. At her child's regular dental check-up—more cavities! She wishes she had followed the advice of the dentists of America. They recommend Amm-i-dent ammoniated Tooth Paste and Powder more than any other dentifrice.

If your family is not using Amm-i-dent, you, as a mother, have not done all you can do—all you should do—to help them to have strong, healthy teeth. You can prove it to yourself. Were there any cavities in your family last year? What did you do to help prevent those cavities?

Does Your Present Tooth Paste Do Anything To Help Prevent Cavities?

No ordinary tooth paste, without ammoniated anti-decay ingredients, can do much to help prevent cavities—beyond what the simple act of brushing will do. But Amm-i-dent supplies for many hours the ammonia content found lacking in the mouths of people who suffer from tooth decay. And you don't have to change your brushing habits. Regular brushing at your regular time, with Amm-i-dent, helps prevent cavities.

What Good is Education?

Paris, Tennessee

Dear Editors: After reading the red lines under Never Correct Your Child's English, by Norman Lewis, in the April JOURNAL, I am reminded of the comely young maiden who, when asked about her education, replied, "Edecashun? No, I ain't got none, never had none, don't want none. Me? I ain't never made no mistake but onct in my life and knowed that just as soon as I'd did it."

Sincerely,
ANNIE MOSES BENNETT

Lit's Git it Right

Winston-Salem, North Carolina

Dear Editors: I've always wondered why so many children, and older people, say git instead of get.

He wouldn't say lit for let,
He wouldn't say pit for pet,
Of course he wouldn't say,
"I'll bit you a dime,"
He'd say, "I'll betcha," every single time.
So why, oh why, does my child say git?
I'm sure it will be the death of me—yit.

Yours truly,
MRS. MANLY A. WATSON

Bunt

Las Villas, Cuba

Dear Editors: I'm sure if LADIES' HOME JOURNAL were given batting average, it would hit .400. Very truly yours, CONCHA M. OLANO

Oh, come now! Baseball players can hit .400 or even less and lead the league, but editors can't. They have to be nearer a thousand. ED.

This is the Army

Augusta, Georgia

Dear Bruce: I sometimes wonder what idea a soldier's parents, and nonservice Americans in general, have of Army life. Everyone knows, or should know, an Army exists to fight, and must be disciplined and economically maintained—and that few soldiers are going to like it. But if civilians are going to understand their service sons, they'll have to give a thought to service reasons and methods. One of my college friends closed a letter to me with, "Well, be a good little soldier." My mother wrote me, a private, saying she had met a young lieutenant who was being transferred to this base, and had asked him to "look me up." The WCTU urges that the soldiers be forbidden beer.

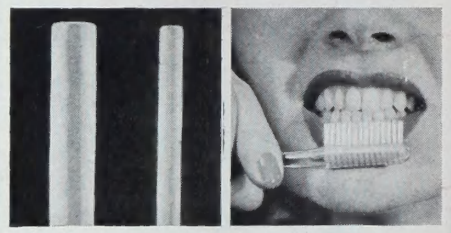
Each of these instances indicates a civilian misconception of what the service is, who's in it, and what we're doing here. In each case, the service doesn't seem to be an especially serious business to the people outside it. I wanted to remind my buddy that for not being a good little soldier, I can be deprived of my citizenship, sent to a Federal penitentiary, or put before a firing squad, all without a trial by jury. Evidently my mother, though she must know something of the officer-enlisted-man relationship, believes that one can set silly formalities aside if one chooses to do so. I suppose she pictures her lieutenant inviting me to cocktails with the colonel.

I beg the ladies of the WCTU, many of whom must have sons or brothers in service, to have mercy. The soldiers are not a group of heedless youngsters on vacation. They are the same young men they were before they put on the uniform, and I believe they're capable of handling those few affairs the Government still leaves in their hands. The powers-that-be have already deprived them of most of their personal liberties—that we may have an effective fighting force.

Soldiers are not soldiering just for laughs, and if at first they think they are, they soon get over it. The military services are the least humorous organizations in the world and have the least amusing job; the soldier doesn't ask for pity, but for understanding. Yours,
WARREN BASSETT

Jungle Doctor

Lambarene, Gabon
French Equatorial Africa



Dear Mrs. Bass: For the past two weeks we have been the guests of Dr. Albert Schweitzer at his native hospital on the new tooth brush with soft NYLON bristles

(Continued on Page 8)

For that zestful, refreshed feeling that comes with clean teeth and healthy gums, try this tooth brush made with soft Du Pont nylon bristles. Like all nylon bristles, these are scientifically produced to meet specific brushing needs. Look at these features of soft nylon bristles:

Soft nylon bristles are thin (right), give true brushing action, aid thorough cleaning between teeth, yet are gentle and stimulating for gum massage. Over 2,000 bristles set in four rows provide greater brushing area.

Springy, resilient nylon bristles never go limp or break off... dry quickly, last longer. You can now get tooth brushes bristled with nylon... soft, medium, hard... to suit your preference and dentist's recommendation.

Whatever your tooth-brush preference, always choose a brush bristled with Du Pont nylon, because...

The best brushes have DU PONT NYLON BRISTLES

DU PONT
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Better Things for Better Living... through Chemistry

Bird Dog

Only Englander brings you the New Sleep

Halfback

Butterfly

Cuddler

Just press down on Airfoam. Feel how it molds itself to your hand, responds with a buoyant "uplift." Millions of tiny air cells cradle you, allow the mattress to breathe.

No other foundation works like this. Joined only through the middle by flexible steel bands, each spring in the upper half is free to adjust individually to every move. Lower part acts as a unit, supports body in the firm, healthful manner doctors recommend.

-only from Englander can you get an Airfoam Mattress with the RED-LINE Foundation*

(floating comfort with healthful support)

It's the greatest luxury of all, the New Sleep. Here's why: Englander has joined comfort—the blissful, dreamy kind you've always wanted—with support—the firm, healthful support you need. Once you've experienced it, nothing less will ever be good enough again.

It's achieved this way: an Englander mattress of the most heavenly stuff on earth —Goodyear's Airfoam—that light, fluffy, springy, joyous material.

And an Englander Red-Line Foundation built solely to add support and years to your Airfoam mattress. So scientifically matched are the Airfoam Mattress and Red-Line Foundation that we guarantee both for 20 years against any defect in materials or workmanship when used together.

*TM The Englander Company, Inc. *TM The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company ©1951 The Englander Company, Inc., Chicago, Illinois

New Shasta Cream Shampoo

Sparks your hair with brighter, richer color

Blonde hair gleams with bright gold

Brunette hair dances with dark fire

Red hair takes on a burnished glory

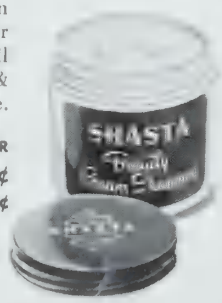
Gray, White hair shines with silver

Not a tint! Not a dye! But a super cleansing shampoo that makes even dull-looking hair sing with brighter color

WHAT A THRILL to see your hair shimmer with colorful beauty after a Shasta Cream Shampoo! New lanolin-enriched Shasta makes your natural hair color look brighter, richer. Makes it sparkle.

"SUPER" CLEANS HAIR: New Shasta contains an amazing sparkle-giving cleanser that "super" cleans your hair. It leaves each strand so radiantly clean the natural color sparkles like sunshine streaming through a clean window pane.

SHASTA IS SAFE! Yet for all its color-sparkling magic, Shasta is safe. Lathers out color-dulling grime. Leaves in precious natural oils needed to make your hair healthy and keep it soft and glamourous.



MAKE THIS CONVINCING TEST TODAY

BEFORE SHAMPOOING, snip off a lock of hair. Put this lock aside while you shampoo the rest of your hair with new Shasta.

AFTER SHAMPOOING, when hair is dry, compare the unwashed lock with your soft and radiant, Shasta-washed hair. If not convinced that new Shasta sparks your hair with brighter, richer color, return the jar and get your money back in full under Procter & Gamble's guarantee.

BIG ECONOMY JAR 89¢

ALSO 57¢ AND 29¢

NEW COLOR-SPARKING Shasta "SUPER" CLEANS SAFELY

DOES NOT ROB HAIR OF NATURAL OILS

(Continued from Page 6)

edge of the primeval forests, one hundred and fifty miles inland from the Atlantic coast. The Gabon is about the most primitive, backward country of all Africa. The natives, who have copied all the bad habits of the white man, and none of the good, are slowly dying out because of the effects of sleeping sickness, venereal diseases and the white man's alcohol. This means that the European working in the Gabon lives under every possible handicap. Only the hardiest remain.

Doctor Schweitzer has been here now for thirty-five years. He is seventy-six years old, but still he works eighteen hours each day supervising the management of the hospital, caring for patients, overseeing his plantations and orchards, playing the organ and writing. The nurses and two doctors here are mostly young people from France, Switzerland and Holland, who also work eighteen hours a day—not for salary, but for the satisfaction of helping others. One lovely twenty-four-year-old girl from Zurich cares for two hundred lepers entirely by herself!

The hospital itself looks nothing at all like a hospital. It is just a large native village, with rows of bamboo and palm-reed houses (or wards) running east to west for protection from the intense tropical storms and the blazing sun. Each patient lives in one of these tiny huts along with his family and animals. Meals are cooked over open fires alongside the patient's reed mattress—the smoke of the fire keeps away the malaria-bearing mosquitoes so common to the Gabon. The alleyways between the rows of huts are always full of screaming black babies, goats, mangy dogs, skinny chickens and monkeys.

If there were a large modern building here, equipped with the latest medical apparatus, there would be no patients. The Gabonese native would be afraid to come, no matter how much he needed help. The hospital had to be constructed as much like a native village as possible—a little dirty, very noisy and full of animals.

Doctor Schweitzer's grinning, blue-faced monkey, Chi-Chi, is now my constant companion. And sitting on the poinsettia tree just outside the door are four red-and-gray parrots who talk to each other in French and shout "Bon matin, mam'selle!" when they see me. Stray animals from the forest somehow realize that at le grand docteur's they will be well taken care of. There are three pelicans (named Lohengrin, Parsifal and Tristram), a gazelle and a very amusing chimpanzee.

It is now quite late at night, and I am writing you with the aid of a flickering candle. Far off in the leper colony I can hear the steady beat of drums. From the immense forest surrounding the hospital comes the sound of owls and curious night-singing birds. Giant bullfrogs are sending echoes over the Ogowe River. There is a scent of frangipani and of the ground orchid in the sultry air.

My very best wishes to you and the JOURNAL staff.

JINX WITHERSPOON

Good News! Something's Cheaper

Columbus, New Jersey

Dear Editors: My husband brought me a stack of old JOURNALS the other day, dated 1903 to 1915. It was certainly interesting to see how much things had changed in forty-eight years. A large house could be built for $3000, and an automobile, the newest style, cost $650. In June, 1903, the JOURNAL cost 10 cents and contained 52 pages. Since a JOURNAL now costs 25 cents and frequently contains 258 pages, it is a lot cheaper than it used to be when a family lived on $10 or $15 a week. Sincerely,

MRS. NATHAN LANE

How to Name a Baby

Rome, Georgia

Dear Editors: Has the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL ever received credit for naming a baby? Well, it is right now! I liked the name, Dana Miller (Year in the Life of a Baby). Beth, in one of your How America Lives, was a sweet-looking little girl. I thought Dana Beth a pretty name. The doctor said "it" would be a boy, but Dana Beth came. When folks say, "What an unusual name, where did you get it?" I reply, "From the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL"

Sincerely,

MRS. J. D. IVESTER

Amazing

NEW TYPE DEODORANT

- NO MUSS
- NO FUSS
- NO DRIP
- NO WASTE

Because it's in

STICK FORM

"A/S"

STICK DEODORANT

At last! A remarkable new deodorant that slicks on in a second, safeguards you hours longer! It's neither messy nor sticky, can't harm clothes . . . and it dries instantly! Pleasant to use . . . delicately fragrant. Both men and women find it the perfect answer. Try it today! 75¢, plus tax.

April Showers

April Showers

TALC

Here's your all-time choice for cooling, soothing refreshment. Made of finest imported talcum powder, and scented with enchanting April Showers perfume. 39¢, plus tax.

CHERAMY

Make it a good one!

IF YOU ARE FOND of someone who is fond of you—keep it that way! Don't let halitosis (unpleasant breath) take the bloom off that kiss . . . or turn ardor into indifference.

Unfortunately, you can offend this way without realizing it. That's the insidious thing about halitosis. But why risk offending when Listerine Antiseptic is such a simple, delightful and extra-careful precaution against off-color breath?

Long-lasting Effect

Listerine Antiseptic is the extra-careful precaution against halitosis because it sweetens and freshens the breath . . . not for seconds or minutes . . . but for hours, usually.

So, when you want to be at your best, don't trust makeshifts. Trust Listerine Antiseptic. Use it every night and morning . . . and between times before every date for that lasting protection.

While some cases of halitosis are of systemic origin, most cases, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles clinging to mouth surfaces. Listerine Antiseptic quickly halts such fermentation, then overcomes the odors fermentation causes.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Mo.

. . . Before any date . . . LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC . . . it's breath-taking!

She hangs the cleanest wash in town

. . . she swears by TIDE!

She hangs the cleanest wash in town—
From work clothes right to "undies"!
It sparkles so, you simply know
She uses Tide on Mondays!

Tide GETS CLOTHES CLEANER THAN ANY SOAP!

NO SOAP—NO OTHER PRODUCT SOLD THROUGHOUT AMERICA WILL WASH AS CLEAN AS TIDE!

JUST TRY TIDE in your washing machine. Wring out your clothes, rinse them, and, lady, you'll hang up a cleaner wash than you'll get with any soap—or any other known home washing product sold from coast to coast!

NOT ONLY CLEANER—WHITER, TOO! Yes, Ma'am! In hardest water, Tide will wash your shirts, sheets, curtains whiter than any soap you can name! They'll be so shining white . . . so radiantly clean, you'll never want to trust them to anything else but Tide!

AND BRIGHTER! Wait till you see how soap-dulled colors glow after a Tide wash! Wash prints look so crisp and fresh . . . fabrics feel so soft . . . iron so beautifully! You'll say there's nothing like Tide—and there isn't! Get Tide today—for the cleanest wash in town!

P.S. PREFER TO SKIP RINSING?

With Tide you can skip the rinsing, and save all that time and work. Just wash, wring out, hang up. Tide will give you the cleanest possible no-rinse wash!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Ladies' Home JOURNAL

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould
Editors

KITTENS ON SILK, CHINESE 1426-1435
COURTESY METRO. MUS. OF ART

Hate is a Two-Way Street

By G. M. WHITE

Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! There are today only a few more than 116,000 Quakers—members of the Religious Society of Friends—in the United States, and less than 180,000 in the entire world. They are probably the world's most-respected minority group. Far more non-Quakers than Quakers work for and support the American Friends Service Committee. Even in their own schools, Quakers are a minority. Many friends of Friends see in them the practice of the essentials of first-century Christianity; others wonder why, if the Friends are a force for good, they are not hated more. Those who know Friends honor them.

There are many reasons for the Quakers' present plight of respectability, not the least being that it is difficult—if not impossible—to hate those who do not hate back. Quakers abhor violence—even of the mind. In time of war each Quaker must himself choose how he will serve his country and his conscience.

In 1652, when the Society was founded by George Fox, it was conceived not as a sect but a movement. Early followers called men and women everywhere to hear and obey their inward Teacher, confident that what was so real and precious in their own experience could not fail to awaken a response in all. This response to the best in oneself is not limited to the membership of the Society of Friends, which is relatively insignificant; it transcends mankind. In July, 1952, Quakers from all over the world will attend the Friends World Conference in Oxford, England, to commemorate the three-hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Society of Friends. But the spirit of the Friends is as old as man's aspiration to love God—and his neighbor as himself. It is no small group that looks to the future with faith that a way will be found to halt the speeding traffic of hate in our times.

War and Revolution

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

I doubt whether the political leaders of the West, and especially of the United States, are giving sufficient thought to the historic interrelationship between war and revolution.

We wish to halt the spread of communism, and picture it as extending itself by the armed forces of the Soviet Union and its satellites. To counter this, we are building up force to frighten the communist states into caution, and, if they attack, to defeat them.

But the question which ought to be more seriously explored is whether a revolution can ever be checked by armed force. Revolutions, to be sure, carry on wars; but wars create the revolutions. For war is, itself, a revolution, embodying the very spirit of violence in its most complete expression, infecting the human spirit, accustoming men to hideous cruelties, dislocating stable economies, and intensifying all the grievances and injustices which are present in every society, by adding to them the supreme injustice—injustice against the very order of nature. For in the order of nature, the sons of men bury their parents: but in the order of war, the parents bury their sons.

Both ancient and modern revolutions illustrate the truth of this interrelationship between war and revolution. The French Revolution, which for those who passed through it was anything but the expression of Liberty, Fraternity and Equality, and was instead anarchy, mob rule, terror, "people's tribunals," tumbrels and the guillotine, followed three centuries of almost perpetual war. The great revolution did not break out all at once. Revolutions never do. Revolution was a gradually mounting thing, imperceptible at first to those who were destined to be its victims, finally exploding in the great torrent of 1793.

The financing of the American war (for the embarrassment of England, with whom France was at war) played a definite role in the French Revolution. It bankrupted France. External struggles greatly increased the power of seceding generals, led to violent

Executive Editor, Mary Bass • Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman
Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Jan Weyl
Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd
Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray, Elizabeth Goetsch, Robert N. Taylor, Elizabeth McFarland, Charles Stryker Ingerman, Elizabeth Crawford
Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Iris Wilken, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Wilson, Victoria Harris, Helen Schmidt Kennedy, Cornelia S. McCook, Rosemary Jones, Virginia Carr, Sallie Eager Kubly, Lee Stowell Cullen, Jeanmarie Dunn, Elizabeth W. Graham, Isabel G. Phelps, Pauline Stieglitz, Erma W. Kelley, Janice H. Bauder, Dolores Knapp, Dorothy Robinson

monarchist reactions further inflaming an oppressed population, and created hordes of émigrés who played a disastrous role abroad, in bringing into being an anti-French war coalition.

The war against this coalition could only be conducted by radical leaders able to resummon the people in the name of revolution itself. It was the revolution which created Napoleon Bonaparte. He was eventually defeated, though it took all Europe to do so. And although the Allies restored a Bourbon to the French throne, the restoration was only temporary. For no "restoration" has ever long survived a revolution. France lost the war, but not the revolution.

The Russian revolution was even more patently the offspring of war—and a war which Czarist Russia invited, though she did not initiate it.

A handful of Bolshevist agitators could never have seized power in Russia but for the anarchy accompanying collapsing armies, and the cry of a war-weary people for peace. The Russian masses knew nothing of Marxist theory. The Bolshevists succeeded because—apart from their promise of land to the peasants—they were the only peace party. The revolution started with a naval mutiny, followed by large-scale desertions from all forces. The first Red Army was made up of these seceding officers and soldiers out to disarm others who, wanting to continue the war, were aided by the Western Allies who were still fighting Imperial Germany. The Western interventionists kept on supporting the "Whites," even after the war with Germany was over, and the civil war then took on the nature of a national struggle against foreign interventionists.

Thus, though the Germans had been the original enemy, and though they had extracted, at Brest Litovsk, a brutally hard peace, the national struggle entirely changed its nature, and became directed against the antirevolutionists allied with the Western powers. It was successful.

The Chinese revolution was also a direct result of over a decade of war. Poverty is endemic to China; landlordism, the depredations of war lords, overpopulation, government weakness plus corruption had been part of the China story for centuries. But war intensifies economic suffering. In China, as in Russia, an international war turned into a civil war. One can argue that the outcome was determined by Russia's arming the communists from the Japanese arsenals in Manchuria, while the Western Allies gave meager support to Chiang Kai-shek's forces. But no one can say with authority that if the West had supported Chiang more vigorously the outcome would have been different.

The historical record of successful armed foreign intervention against revolutionary forces is very poor indeed. For there is a characteristic of all revolutions of which history has a record. They succeed only when they have united the revolutionary creed and order with the national will.

THIS evolution occurred in Russia by grace and aid of the German attack. In anticipation and apprehension of it, following the rise of Hitler to power, Stalin purged the so-called "Old Bolsheviks." Why did he do so? That the original revolutionary leaders so ruthlessly exterminated were guilty as charged, no one who read even the Russian account of the trials can believe. But the original revolutionaries were men of European background and trained in internationalism. Stalin (like Robespierre) was a nationalist. He would not risk the counsels of men who for a generation and more had had ties abroad, even though those ties were with foreign communist parties! He knew that a successful war can be fought against a foreign invad only on the basis of patriotism.

There is another characteristic of re olutions. External interventions always a celerate their extremisms, as they purs and persecute every person even suspect of foreign sympathies or connections.

It looks, therefore, as though it were be for more conservative societies to let re olutions run their course, and to hold alo from them, not rush into them!

IN Asia, in particular, the contempora revolutions are a combination of soc revolt—accelerated by sufferings of t past war—and national revolt from ce turies of colonial imperialism and Weste interventionism.

If we do not understand the British a titude toward nonintervention in China, is because, I believe, we have not shar the British experience in Asia.

India and Pakistan have been kept, wi however tenuous ties, within the Briti Commonwealth and out of the Sov sphere of influence, only because Gre Britain voluntarily left India without firi a shot. Suppose she had insisted on h "rights" in India? Is it possible to belie that men like Mr. Nehru would have be in power today? On the contrary, t power would have passed to revolutiona leaders who would immediately have be supported by the Soviet Union! It wou be a supreme irony if the United States, repelling aggression in Asia—actually intervening in a civil and revolutiona war—should only su ceed in driving Ind and Pakistan out of t British Commonwealt > Alexander, Caesar, Charlemagne and I myself have founded empires: but upon what do these creations of our genius depend? Upon force. Jesus alone founded His empire upon love; and to this very day millions would die for Him. —NAPOLEON.

In Asia the Soviet U ion has acted with gre adeptness. Stalin is su porting Asian nationa isms, while the policy the UN bloc, led by t United States, has be to support internation intervention. I cann see how this can ha any other result than further to solidi the national spirit with the revolutiona order.

UN internationalism cannot, at this sta of history, exercise any pulling force up countries animated by a furious revolutio ary, nationalist and anti-Western spir The one thing that would certainly tight and prolong the Russian domination China would be a war in China between t West and the Red government. For th reason alone the war in Korea has be wholly in the Soviet interest.

As for Europe, the thought that it cou be saved for any order of liberty and law another war fought on its soil cannot entertained by anyone with a political min Another war would break down the la remnants of political, social and econom order, already undermined by the last wa and regardless of the machinations of t European communist parties.

Military minds can figure out how a w can be won—that is their training and bu ness. But they have never been able to e vision the social, economic and political co sequences of even a victorious war.

This country, during the whole Truma Administration, has been far too mu under the domination of military a strategical thinking, and terribly lacki in both historical sense and political i agination.

War never creates the conditions for serene and reasonable social and politi order. It is, for instance, possible that a other war would result in the overthrow the Stalinist regime. But it is hardly co ceivable that it would result in the kind social order we should like to see. The mo probable result would be ungovernable a archy.

This I write down in this year of decisi in a plea for a more cautious and prude foreign policy. Revolution is not stopped war. War is the culture in which it flourish rides again!

CACTUS PETE

He's a tough hombre and today he's ready to shoot it out with Apaches —or rustlers who just went thataway! But a few days ago, he was a mighty sick paleface, with no thought of hitting the trail. A vicious killer with the terrifying name of Shigella dysenteriae, a tiny foe so small you can see him only through a microscope, proved nearly as deadly as a six-gun bullet. But in the nick of time our hero's life was saved—by sulfadiazine! This drug—the most satisfactory and least toxic of the sulfas—stands unrivaled as a weapon against many bacterial dysenteries.

A half century ago, he would have had a slim chance. Since then, the death rate for acute dysentery, diarrhea and enteritis has been cut by more than 95 per cent. Physicians, nurses, research workers and public health officers have all contributed to this result. It is estimated that in the year 1951 about 200,000 children will live who would have died under the conditions existing a half century ago.

Only in a nation where scientific freedom of expression and economic liberty of action exist for all could the men, money and equipment have been assembled to produce such a triumph of scientific ingenuity as sulfadiazine.

Through research, they live who would have died!

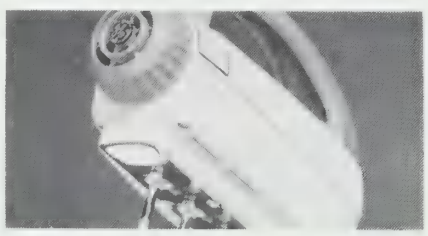
Lederle

(pronounced Led'-er-lee)

A Division of AMERICAN Cyanamid COMPANY 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20, N.Y.

What'll you have?

GRAPEFRUIT JUICE?
CHEESE SOUFFLÉ?
ACORN SQUASH?
CHIFFON PIE?
FROSTED COFFEE?



They're all a snap . . . with the new

G-E Triple-Whip Mixer!

It's so convenient to use . . . so ideal for so many dishes . . . that you'll keep it humming for breakfast, lunch, dinner—even snacks! No dust-collecting here because you'll use it every day! The G-E Triple-Whip Mixer is an around-the-clock beauty that adds appeal to every meal!

New, improved speed selector is up front where you can see it without straining your eyes! A simple twist gives you just the right amount of power you need!

Built-in light shines directly into bowl, spotlighting those fancier whipping jobs. (A 2-quart and 1-quart bowl—and a no-clog juicer—come with each mixer!)

Three beaters—beating from center to side of bowl—give you ideal mixing action! And because the beaters have no center shafts, washing and drying them is a snap.

Whip-Tip for July:

For a creamy Butter Frosting—add whole egg to creamed butter, mixing well. Adjust liquid to obtain a good spreading consistency.

Write for Triple-Whip Recipe Book. 56 deliciously tempting recipes. Address General Electric Co., Dept. L7, Bridgeport 2, Conn. Specifications subject to change without notice.

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

WIDE WORLD PIX

Summer comes to Manhattan: sidewalk cafés are in full bloom again.

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

ON July 4, 1826, the Fiftieth Jubilee of Independence, Thomas Jefferson died at noon, John Adams died at sunset, and Stephen Foster was born.

That Foster lived and died on the Bowery when it was flowery, and wrote some two hundred songs besides Old Black Joe, Oh Susanna and My Old Kentucky Home, we didn't know until we read Eleanor Early's NEW YORK HOLIDAY. Should you be coming to New York on your summer trip, this is a good book to bring along. It not only guides you but gives you a feeling of participation. With Miss Early you're "in the know."

•

John Marquand*, with his wife and children and animals, has been spending his winters on a small island in the Bahamas. No one else lives on the island, and the Marquands' only means of communication with the mainland is a small boat for supplies and mail. They want the simple life, which they could quite easily find there if only the island were farther off the populous Nassau coast, or if they had no boat.

•

Kathleen Winsor (FOREVER AMBER) is a big girl now, but she has never been on a ship, except once, to see some friends off. We saw her at a party the other day looking even prettier than when Amber came out, and calm and relaxed as only a person can be who is pursuing a course she enjoys. Maybe writing a book, maybe being a wife. Kathleen is working on a new novel. It is an American historical novel of the Montana region or thereabouts, and she is still at the research stage.

■

This month's favorite cookbook is our Gladys Taber's STILLMEADOW KITCHEN (enlarged), chiefly because it has a good many dishes that sound like what one remembers from way back. And old-fashioned food, like old-fashioned flowers, is still, to our taste, the best.

WHEN MENTAL ILLNESS STRIKES, by Kathleen Doyle, is a pamphlet published by the Public Affairs Committee (22 E. 38th St., New York 16) It is an important contribution to one of the greatest problems of our national welfare, For mental illness America's No. 1 health problem. It strikes more people than polio, heart disease and cancer combined. And 50 per cent of the average practitioner's patients come to him primarily because of emotional difficulties rather than any physical disability.

This pamphlet contains information about mental illnesses, and advice about what to do when mental illness strikes.

•

Scores of readers have written in asking where they can buy THE WRITER'S MARKET, mentioned here months ago. They wanted to sell their stuff. Now we have a fine little book to suggest which will tell them how to write it. HOW TO WRITE BETTER, by that first-rate analyst of written and spoken English, Rudolf Flesch, is a forty-eight-page pamphlet of the soundest sense, published by Science Research Associates, 228 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago 4, Illinois.

(Continued on Page 16)

AP NEWSFEATURES

there's a world of energy in enriched white

Bread

"your best buy in nourishment"

Breacan be served in so many appeting ways...combining energy id enjoyment...at low cost.

GOOD SANDWICHES start with good bread... the fresh, fragrant, flavorful bread produced by the Bakers of America. It's the world's finest bread... rich in food energy. No other food provides such abundant nutrition . . . at such little cost.

★ ★ ★

In the baking of better bread, many leading bakers use dextrose food-energy sugar...which helps them to produce superior loaves of finer texture, golden-brown crust, finer flavor... at no extra cost.

"Keep the Energy of Sunshine in your diet" better breads are baked with dextrose

(FOOD-ENERGY SUGAR)

Under the brand name of CERELOSE, dextrose sugar is produced by Corn Products Refining Company, originators of the processes by which this great sugar is derived from golden corn.

CORN PRODUCTS REFINING COMPANY

"Only my new Caloric gives me all these features..."

SO EASY TO CLEAN—More than ever before the easy-clean Caloric Gas Range saves work and shortens my kitchen hours. It is porcelain enamel inside and out with the completely removable broiler that washes in the sink like a dish.

IT'S AUTOMATIC—Automatic thermostat keeps the oven at just the temperature I set. And the oven clock control on my model gives me a carefree afternoon while my Caloric automatically cooks a perfect oven meal.

COOKING IS FASTER—I find that Flavor-Saver Dual Burners instantly give me just the heat I want for boiling, frying, simmering or keeping food warm until serving. And there's no lingering heat to cause pot-shifting or pot-watching.

SO COMPLETELY DEPENDABLE—I enjoy the dependable way my Caloric works. And the Caloric people guarantee to replace burners and door springs for the life of my range.

See dealers under "Caloric" in classified phone books.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Ultramatic Caloric® Gas Ranges

America's Easiest Ranges to Keep Clean

Any Caloric model can be factory-equipped for "Pyrofax" Bottled Gas or other LP-Gases. Caloric Stove Corporation, Widener Bldg., Phila. 7, Pa.

(Continued from Page 14)

On Cape Cod you're known as a "livia" if you live there the year round. The other folks are called "summer complaints." Frank and Edith Shay are livias, and they've just got out a book about the Cape called SAND IN THEIR SHOES, which will do your heart good if you know those parts. It is salty and historical, comic and romantic; the Mayflower and the Indians; Thanksgiving and Governor Bradford; whaling and Melville; Sandwich glass and the Provincetown Playhouse. Good exhilarating Americana.

•

One reader sends us her favorite mystery writers: Dorothy Sayers way out front, Ngaio Marsh and John Dickson Carr next. If she does not already know it, she'll be pleased to find that Ngaio Marsh has a good new mystery out this month, NIGHT AT THE VULCAN.

FROM "TWO LITTLE NUNS" EXTENSION, CHICAGO

Another new thriller, done by an expert, is A TIME TO KILL, by Geoffrey Household, author of MAN HUNT, also known as ROGUE MALE. This one combines humor and excitement, English rabbit shooting and international underworld crime.

•

Romeo and Juliet have been in court. Mrs. Juliet Browden said that her divorced husband, Romeo San Remo, blacked both her eyes and beat her up so she had to spend ten days in a hospital. "I only hit her a couple of times," said Romeo. "I couldn't see very well after she broke my glasses."

•

And speaking of court, David Dressler, a former parole officer, now tells all in a book of crime and criminals far more exciting than any detective story, PAROLE CHIEF. "There are only two absolutely distinct types of offenders, so far as I can see," he writes: "male and female. And I'd rather handle a hundred of the world's worst male thugs than one woman parolee."

There used to be a time when you could depend upon a woman criminal to be a lady. But crime has changed, he points out, and so have women. With World War I "the hand went off the cradle and the foot went onto the brass rail." Not only are women worse harridans than they were before, there are also more of them. In 1933, 22,948 females were arrested for major crimes. By 1949 the number was up to 78,585, and of those arrested nearly half had already been fingerprinted. He introduces many professionals, and tells their experiences in their own inimitable talk. If you liked MY SIX CONVICTS, you'll enjoy PAROLE CHIEF.

(Continued on Page 21)

COPYRIGHT 1951 THE COCA-COLA COMPANY

o easy, so welcome

There was a very special ending to

Miss Ames' Last Case

HARRIET AMES—tall and crisply white in her starched uniform—tucked the blankets snugly about the small girl lying in the hospital bed and said, "Go to sleep, now, Dorothy. The doctor says you'll be well enough to go home tomorrow."

The child looked up at her and said, "Will you be coming home with me, Miss Ames?"

Harriet Ames smiled and said, "No, Dorothy. Your mother will be here for you—and besides . . . "

"Besides what, Miss Ames?"

"Oh, nothing, Dorothy—except that starting tomorrow I'm not going to be a nurse any more."

"You're not?" Dorothy's eyes opened wide, as if trying to picture Miss Ames as anything but a nurse and not quite being able to do it. "Why?"

"Well, it's just that I've been a nurse for ever so long, Dorothy—and now I feel as if I need a nice, long rest." No need to tell the child she was over sixty now—no need to tell her it was time to slow down, time to start taking life easy . . .

"Are you going home, too, Miss Ames?"

"Home? Yes, I suppose you might call it that. I'm going back to the town where I lived when I was a little girl like you." Harriet Ames had had no actual home for many years. After her parents died, she had left the small mid-western town to follow her career in larger cities. But now she was ready to go back and settle down in the town she knew and remembered so well. She had a married sister who was still there, and there were old friends . . .

"That will be nice, won't it, Miss Ames?" Dorothy was silent for a moment and then said, "But if you aren't going to be a nurse any more, what are you going to be? Daddy says people have to work or else they won't have any money."

Harriet Ames laughed. "Don't you worry, Dorothy, I'll get along!" She thought, as she had many times before, of the insurance policies tucked away in the old manila envelope. She had developed a fondness for those pieces of paper over the years, because they represented all the things she had hoped for—independence, security, ease in her old age. She had paid for them out of her earnings year by year—and now they would start repaying her every month for as long as she lived.

Little Dorothy's eyes were closing now, heavy with sleep. Harriet turned out the bedside light. While she waited, she made a mental note to be sure to see John and Mary Bailey as soon as she got back home. It was John Bailey, the New York Life agent in her home town, who had first got her to do something about life insurance for her future security, and whose letters and recommendations about it had been so helpful during all the years since then. It would be fun to tell him how everything had worked out as he predicted it some day would.

Miss Ames smiled at the sleeping child, tiptoed to the door and started down the corridor toward her room. There was still some packing to be done before tomorrow.

NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
51 Madison Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

"Home? Yes, I suppose you might call it that."

Naturally, names used in this story are fictitious.

Mexico

In Mexico Milady you will discover romance while sightseeing, while shopping for exquisite shawls, lacework, crocodile bags and shoes, silverware, arts and crafts antiques and French perfumes all priced so astonishingly low.

And Fashions too Milady, hand painted skirts, dress materials and beautiful blouses. For your home, colorful tile and handmade furniture.

Yes Milady, when you think of vacation, think of Mexico, land of charm and exciting contrasts. A perfect climate and every modern convenience and comfort awaits you.

No passport, just a tourist card available at all Mexican Consulates and at points of entry.

AIR MAIL THIS COUPON

DIRECCION GENERAL DE TURISMO

AVE. JUAREZ 89 MEXICO, D. F.

Please send me free illustrated booklet

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

(Continued from Page 16)

"Have you read that book about how to stop smoking?" asked a young man chain smoking through an interview. "I don't dare—I hear it's that good!"

HOW TO STOP SMOKING, by Herbert Brean, is certainly a beguiling little book. The author makes it all so easy. Don't hurry into any decision, he advises. Just let the idea idle along in your consciousness for as long as you like. Then—all of a sudden!—tell yourself, "Today I'm through smoking! This is S-Day!"

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"I smoked two packs a day for twenty years. One day—just like that—I decided to quit . . . I didn't, though."

Even then, he says, don't try to be brave and strong-minded. Baby yourself. Take an extra piece of cake that first day, have a shrimp cocktail and a filet mignon. It gets you over the rough spot. You're going to save a lot of money not buying cigarettes, so indulge yourself. Keep some mints in your pocket, or candy, or salted nuts. You may gain weight for a week or two, but you can get rid of the poundage much more easily than of the smoking habit. Or so Mr. Brean says. It is quite a book!

•

Two good recent English novels, quite different in treatment, deal with the same problem: the child of divorced parents.

NOBODY'S CHILD, by Phyllis Hambledon, is the story of an insecure little girl whose parents separate, for no particularly good cause, when she is ten years old. She tries her best to get along with both, and with the man her mother marries, and the new wife of her father. It is a moving story, simply told, which should find its way into the hands of tottering parents.

PITY FOR PAMELA, by Mary Fitt, is quite another dish—a neat, shiny thriller about a cynical young woman of the cocktail world, whose parents also broke up when she was about ten. (That seems to be the time.) This is gilt-edged suspense, excitement, melodrama, but the same lonely homelessness of the spirit underlies it.

•

THE CATCHER IN THE RYE, by J. D. Salinger, is American—very American. It is the portrait of a boy of sixteen about to be fired from his fourth prep school, who runs away to New York and has a two-day binge. The story of his brash attack on the adult world, a world of "phonies" as he sees it, is told in his own tough, slangy, sometimes obscene vernacular. The temper of the piece is witty and sardonic, but underneath, as in the English novels, lies tenderness and pity. The very young who, not so long ago, were Romance have now become Tragedy.

The LESTER GRAND PIANO

is the Official Piano of the Philadelphia Orchestra

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

welcome addition to your home

When you choose the genuine Lester Betsy Ross Spinet . . . you add a real friend to your family circle. This quality piano brings with it a lifetime of pleasure, entertainment and inspiration for children and adults; it will also be a vital factor in keeping your family closer together.

Renowned for glorious tone, responsive touch and abundant volume . . . each model is a musical masterpiece built of the finest materials to give enduring satisfaction.

Gracefully styled and compactly sized; available in a wide choice of exquisite finishes.

Look for these outstanding features: ▪ three working pedals ▪ full 88 note keyboard ▪ ten year guarantee.

Dampp-Chaser equipped . . . ONLY Lester offers this remarkable moisture control regulation.

See the newest models now; your dealer will arrange terms. Model pictured $687.00; others to $841.00 f.o.b. Lester, Pa.

Made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company Inc., builders of fine pianos since 1888.

ONE name quality price

a beautiful piano with magnificent tone

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

mail this coupon for illustrated booklet

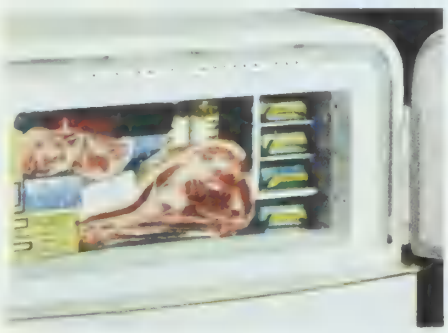
Lester Piano Manufacturing Co., Inc., Lester 13, Pa.

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name _____

Address _____

City _____



Zone No. _____ State _____ LHJ 6L

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 39 Broadway, New York 6, N. Y.

Made for once-a-week shopping—

The new and different 2-door Frigidaire Imperial!

THREE kinds of cold—each with its own refrigerating system!

1. Food-Freezer Cold in Locker-Top. Gives constant, safe protection weeks on end for up to 73 pounds of meats and other frozen foods. You're always prepared for mealtime emergencies! Have plenty of ice cubes, too!

2. Super-Safe Cold in Food Compartment! Foods retain their freshness and flavor days longer because of the Super-Safe Cold provided by Frigidaire's exclusive Refrig-o-plate. This separate refrigerating system also provides positive moisture control. The Refrig-o-plate collects excess moisture, as frost, and automatically defrosts itself without attention. And foods don't change temperature during defrosting.

3. Super-Moist Cold in bin-size Hydrators. Fruits stay fresh as dew—vegetables keep crackling crisp. Constant Super-Moist Cold is provided by Frigidaire's Cold-Wall system of chilling coils in cabinet walls.

The new 2-door Frigidaire Imperial Refrigerator comes in 10 cubic foot size. See the many Frigidaire Refrigerator models—all made for once-a-week shopping—at your Frigidaire Dealer's. Look for his name in Yellow Pages of phone book. Ask about other Frigidaire appliances. Or write Frigidaire Division, General Motors Corporation, Dayton 1, Ohio. In Canada, Leaside 12, Ontario.

One Meter-Miser does it all!

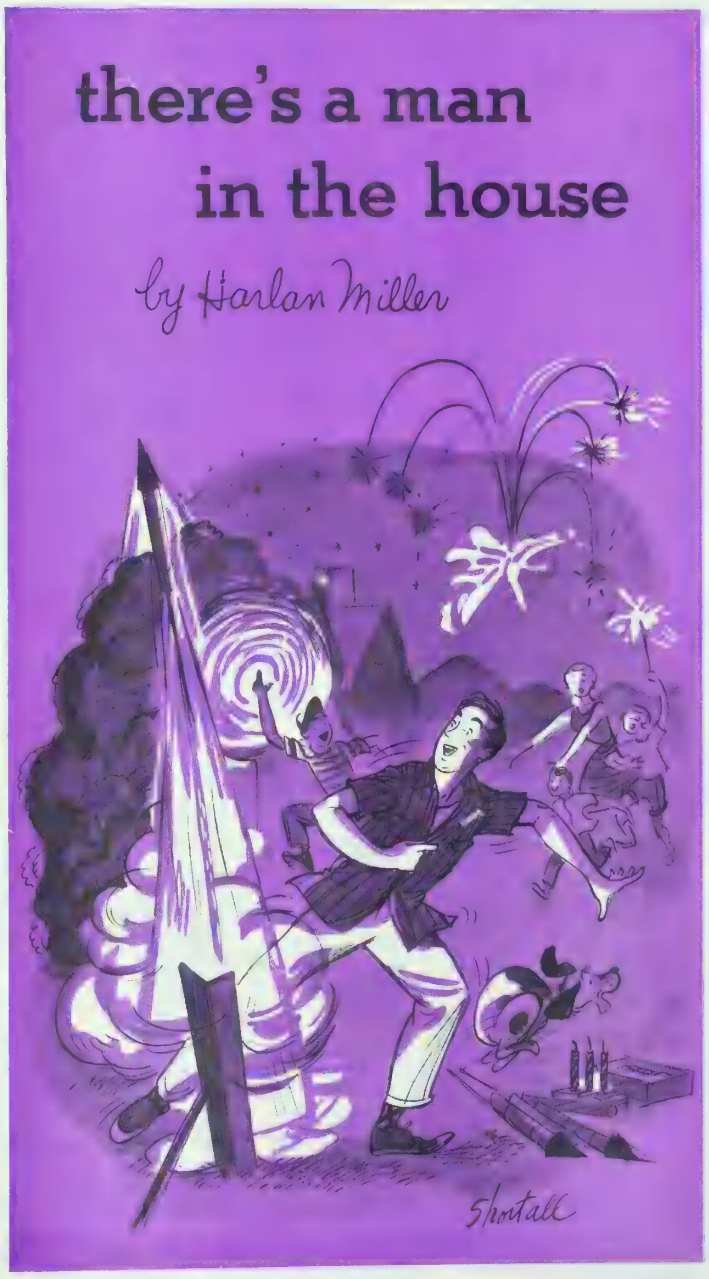
All three refrigerating systems are operated by a single Frigidaire Meter-Miser. It's the simplest cold-making mechanism ever built—only Frigidaire has it!

Protects your food with constant SAFE COLD

You'll love the way this handsome Frigidaire Imperial lets you decide how often to shop . . . lets you do your heavy shopping once-a-week—on days when stores aren't crowded.

This combination food-freezer and refrigerator gives you all the room you need for an abundant supply of food. And three different kinds of constant cold—accurately regulated—to keep all your food safe and appetizing until you're ready to serve it at the table.

There is no finer refrigerator made. You'll like its adjustable shelves, its ice-blue trim and Lifetime Porcelain interior, its new ice-blue and gold Quickube Trays that pop out ice cubes at a finger's touch—and its host of other exciting features. When you see it you'll want this great new Frigidaire Imperial for your very own!



Frigidaire reserves the right to change specifications, or discontinue models, without notice.

Frigidaire

America's No. 1 Refrigerator

there's a man in the house

by Harlan Miller

Our grocer has issued an ultimatum: a 25-cent delivery fee henceforth for every batch of chow ordered by phone. . . . Some of our town's housewives who've never met their grocer face to face will now be pressured by their husbands to get acquainted with him.

•

I've just read an article by a psychiatrist who more than hints that it's a weakness in a husband (or even a malady!) if he yearns for signs of affection from his wife. Maybe he was married by a justice of the peace and never heard the marriage vows.

•

In a rare heart-to-heart talk with his son, one of our town's more pompous fathers asked, "Son, how old are you?" "I'm thirteen, dad," the boy said. "Well, son," said dad, "when I was your age I was fifteen!" (But how did that one ever reach his club?)

•

Sign of our coed daughter's approach to maturity: she has returned my two favorite flannel shirts she's worn out in three years, and now shows a deeper interest in her mother's evening dresses.

•

At the barbershop the other day I noticed another hint of social change: the No. 1 barber was arguing with our town's No. 1 banker about investments. (Of course, he now gets $1.25 for a haircut!)

•

Maybe the best compliment my wife's paid me in months is that my worst fault is my shortage of small talk. In self-defense I tell her that nothing I have to say seems important enough to interrupt three other people. Anyhow, it doesn't hurt any bridge-table group to have one listener.

•

"Whenever I urge my wife to keep our grocery bill under $150 a month," protests Peter Comfort, chasing the kids off the roof of his garage, "you'd think I was scheming to cripple our children with beriberi and scurvy for lack of steaks and strawberries."

•

The man next door asked his young son to mow the lawn, and the boy asked if that wouldn't be a violation of the child-labor law. Probably he learned that in the seventh-grade course so many parents scoff at, under the name of "social sciences."

•

On a summer evening, as the children play hide-and-seek at dusk, or run sheep run or last-couple-out, and fireflies twinkle and a boy tries to hide behind my lawn chair as I read the paper by the fading light, our Russian jitters seem remote and unlikely and far-fetched indeed.

•

At the big round table at the club we virtually agree that it's a cad's trick for a husband to scold or needle his wife in the presence of others. But we're unanimous that a wife who needles her husband publicly commits an unforgivable sin.

Near the end of a party dominated as usual by feminine yakitty-yak, my taciturn neighbor reports, the men in the kitchen agreed that the woman who with great finesse used to make all men feel brilliant has been succeeded by the modern woman who makes all men feel like dopes.

•

"I'm resigned to the fact," says Betty Comfort, drying her hair in her back yard, "that there are at least a thousand ways to cook an egg so that our stubborn child won't eat it."

•

My Dream Girl was triumphant because she got my shell-rimmed glasses repaired (both lenses) for only $10.50 instead of the $20 the first shop asked. . . . It pays to shop around and I wish her idea of shopping for clothes didn't consist of stopping in at one store with a strong-minded saleswoman.

Our Fourth of July fireworks seem to enchant the 1951 youngster as much as they did us in our less sophisticated youth. . . . And the endless last dwindling thirty minutes of daylight seem just as long, before the first rocket goes off, for me as they do for our eleven-year-old.

Oddly, it's the children in our town whom we admire most whose parents worry most about them. . . . The only parents we know who're sure their children are brilliant and flawless are the parents of the worst brats we know.

•

My Dream Girl becomes so enamored of some of the flowers in her garden that I'd not be too surprised if she took some of 'em along in pots as pets on our summer vacation.

•

So far my wife's original criticism of my bridge, the only time I've ever bid and made a grand slam, is still her best: that if I'd played it right I wouldn't have made it.

•

Confidentially, we might as well confess that a man's mind is as aimless as a boy's: we start out to repair the back door of the garage and wind up putting a handle on the top drawer of Junior's dresser.

•

We have two big groups of cultured people in our town: those who travel and those who read good books and magazines. Of these two, the readers seem to know more things, and more positively.

•

Out on the back terrace the other evening we reviewed the divorces in our town, and agreed that most of the husbands and wives would have been better off to remain wed to each other. . . . When the going got rough they might have tried repeating the marriage vows daily for a month—with three kisses.

•

Here's the acid test of a modern woman, my shoe-repair man tells me: Does she think her time is too valuable to darn her husband's socks?

•

A new tradition is growing up in our town: that if a man admires your necktie you're obligated to swap it for his. . . . Unfortunately, most men who admire your best $5 necktie (from your only rich aunt) are usually wearing the best 75¢ tie that money can buy.

•

Another grocer recommended by our friends declines to deliver any order for less than $3. Gosh, is it still possible to order less than $3 worth of groceries?

•

If your wife still seems prettier and younger than all the women at a party who're just as pretty and five years younger . . . and Junior enthusiastically recommends to you a book you raved about twenty years ago . . . and your daughter sees that baffled look on your face and gives you an unexpected kiss . . . and your youngest says he never, never wants to live in any other house than your old homestead . . . then, sir, you're the happy victim of a successful marriage.

Freshest-tasting
PINEAPPLE JUICE ever!
—from fruit picked ripe on LIBBY'S own
Hawaiian plantations!

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Honolulu, Hawaii

Reference Library

Add a touch of summer's brightness to your warm-weather wardrobe

● 2431
SHORT CAPE. Use white piqué, add black velvet bows. 10c.

2330 ●
COOLIE BLOUSE. Order in sizes 12, 14 or 16. Easy to make. 10c.

● 2258
DRAWSTRING BLOUSE. Perfect with full cotton skirts. Fits size 12 to 16. 10c.

2674 ●
SHORT BOLERO. To wear with your favorite sun-back dress. 15c.

● 2465
CROWNLESS TURBAN AND BAG. Use striped silk or shantung. 15c.

2671 ●
BOLERO. Make it in piqué, add tiny black tassels. 15c.

2651 ●
BELT. Made from webbing and ribbon. Use fresh or artificial flowers. 15c.

● 2477
CUFF GLOVE. Crisp in waffle piqué—select white or a color. 15c.

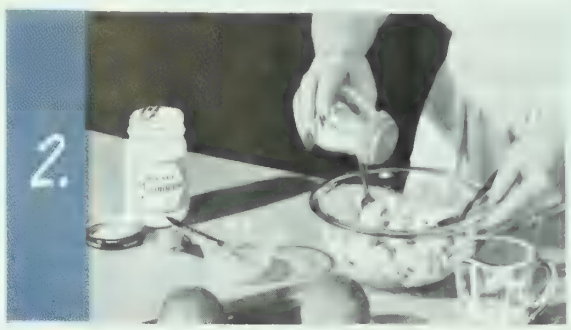
We will gladly send any of these patterns if you'll order by number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes. Allow two to three weeks for delivery. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

ORDER BLANK

PATTERN NUMBERS

Name _____
(Please Print)

Street _____



City _____ Zone _____

State _____

How to make really delicious Tuna Salad

To serve 4, you will need one 6½-oz. can of chunk style tuna. Put the tuna in a colander or coarse strainer, and pour hot water over it. Drain well and chill. Then put it in a bowl with 2 tablespoons chopped sweet pickle and ⅓ cup of chopped celery.

Gradually add 1 tablespoon lemon juice to ¼ cup of Kraft Mayonnaise. True mayonnaise at its finest, Kraft's is so rich, and so delightfully seasoned, it will make your salad really delicious. Toss lightly with tuna mixture; season with salt and pepper.

For each portion, cut a peeled tomato into 3 crosswise slices. Starting with a slice placed on leaf lettuce, alternate the 3 slices with the tuna salad, with a tomato slice on top. Garnish with watercress and delicate-flavored, satin-smooth Kraft Mayonnaise.

True mayonnaise at its finest!

TRUE MAYONNAISE because it is made solely of fine salad oil and eggs, fragrant vinegar and seasoning. Nothing else.

... AT ITS FINEST because Kraft is generous with the costly salad oils . . . gives you mayonnaise that's luxuriously rich. Because Kraft insists on really choice ingredients, blends them in just the right proportions for most delightful flavor. And because Kraft's own special beater gives velvety smooth texture. Do try Kraft Kitchen-Fresh Mayonnaise.

Don't miss TV's most famous dramatic show!
KRAFT TV THEATRE
every Wednesday evening, NBC-TV

Kraft KITCHEN FRESH Mayonnaise

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

You're older than the man you plan to marry.

You wonder, "Does it really matter?" It definitely does.

Manners in Marriage

DURING courtship, a man naturally wants to impress the girl of his choice with his worth in all ways. To heighten her appreciation of him, he pays attention to the small civilities of life: he seats her in a restaurant; he rises when she enters the room; and wishing to look as well as act his best, he is fastidious about his personal appearance.

A girl reacts in the same way. She takes special pains with dress and grooming; she thanks him for his courtesies, caters to his tastes, and tries in every way to please him.

But too often, after marriage, both husband and wife abandon the small pleasantries which enhanced courtship. Securely established in the new relationship, absorbed in the domestic routine, a wife may conscientiously devote herself to promoting her husband's welfare in important matters while ignoring his preferences and prejudices in small things.

Consideration in small matters will not in itself make a marriage succeed—but it adds a final touch of satisfaction to a happy one, and reduces friction in a mediocre one. On the other hand, repeated small discourtesies become a chronic irritation; molehills become real obstacles, if not mountains.

It is impossible to enumerate all the pet peeves of family life uncovered by our research, for their number is legion. But we have culled from them a list of things to do, and to avoid doing, if you'd like to be easy to live with. If the particular items don't apply to you, they may suggest some which do.

Don't

Use his tools, then neglect to put them away. (You would return them if they were a neighbor's.)

"Tidy up his desk" and rearrange his papers without express permission. (You wouldn't disturb a guest's belongings.)

Remind him of additional details, or correct his version when he is telling a story. (Children are reproved for such interruptions.)

Summon him to perform a chore just as he settles down with the papers.

Discuss any of your intimate family affairs with outsiders.

Scatter or mislay newspapers and mail before he's had a chance to see them.

Do

Consult him before involving him in social engagements.

Be punctilious about performing the small personal services and chores (getting his suit at the cleaner's, sewing buttons on his shirts, darning his socks, and so on) which he rightfully expects.

Observe his suggestions about the care and maintenance of household equipment. He has a good reason for asking you not to detach the toaster from the socket by merely pulling the cord.

Appear at breakfast neatly dressed.

Welcome him wholeheartedly when he returns from work, and try to please him with small attentions.

To be sure, most husbands' manners in marriage are far from perfect. Wives' nerves are frayed by their husbands' repeated trifling offenses, ranging from poor table manners to failure to observe such small amenities as opening the car door for them.

But manners, good or bad, are easily—and almost unconsciously—imitated. If you consistently show your husband real courtesy and consideration, in small things as well as great, chances are he will respond similarly. When good manners become a habit, family life takes on a new graciousness and a new ease.

Marrying a Younger Man

IT is not uncommon for a man to marry a woman six, eight or even ten years younger than he, and frequently such marriages prove successful. The wife, acknowledging her husband's greater experience and authority, defers to his judgment and adapts to his pattern of life; while he recognizes that he must accept special responsibility, particularly in the beginning. But what about the woman who marries a younger man? In at least one marriage in seven, the wife is older than the husband. We are frequently consulted by women who are contemplating such marriages, as to the effect of the age difference on their chances of happiness.

First of all, differences of four years or less are not in themselves a serious handicap. In fact, research indicates that husbands of slightly older wives have a somewhat better-than-average chance of happiness.

Further, the older the couple, the less important any age difference. If neither is younger than forty, an age gap of ten years, or even more, will not disrupt a marriage which would otherwise have succeeded.

But if the younger partner is in his twenties or early thirties, and the woman is more than six years his senior, there is reason to question the suitability of the match. For an age difference of this amount is likely to be accompanied by other important differences which impede the delicate personality readjustment essential to married unity.

Interests and personal tastes, for instance, are obviously modified by age; a man of twenty-eight may enjoy late parties, frequent entertaining and a varied social program, whereas a woman of thirty-five or more may have had enough of such pastimes. Disagreements concerning such matters, troublesome as they may be, are less of a barrier than differences in basic beliefs and objectives, and in degree of emotional maturity. And these factors, too, are inevitably influenced by age.

Though it may not be apparent, this type of marriage frequently is based on strong physical attraction. The woman has reached an age where her sexual impulses are urgent; her responsiveness flatters and appeals to the man. Overwhelmed by their emotions, the two contract a marriage in which sexual desire is the only real bond.

Such mismatches can only end in disappointment and disillusionment, but it does not follow that a woman should invariably discourage the attentions of a much younger man, simply because he is younger. The best safeguard is a long courtship, involving at least two years of regular dating. This period gives the couple an opportunity to discover whether the feeling between them can sustain an enduring relationship. And it can—regardless of age—if it is based on compatibility of temperament, personality and character.

Should We Go Steady?

Qualities that make a man a desirable date do not necessarily make him a good husband. Before becoming deeply involved with any man, evaluate his basic traits and attributes. Ask yourself if he:

1. Has a good reputation?
2. Is industrious and likes his work?
3. Meets people easily and well?
4. Is healthy and physically sound?
5. Wants to settle down and have a home?
6. Is stable and dependable?
7. Has standards and ideals you admire?
8. Keeps his head in trying situations?
9. Respects your friends and family?
10. Is considerate and well mannered?
11. Manages his financial affairs intelligently?
12. Is pleasant, friendly, and well liked?
13. Acts poised and confident?
14. Is temperate and free from bad habits?

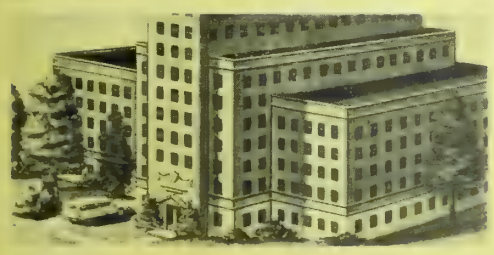
With fewer than 10 positive answers, you would do well to look elsewhere. A score of 12 or more indicates that he is really worth considering as matrimonial material. . . . How would you score if he were to ask these same questions about you?

Do You Know?



What proportion of women working outside the home have husbands?

More than one third of them have husbands, plus one seventh who are widowed or divorced.

Nothing is too good for Tommy

Since knighthood was in flower, the hero's return has been the tender occasion for fair hands to repair the damages of the fray. The foe has inflicted a scuffed cheek on Tommy, and Mother is following the first rule of first aid: "Get it clean and keep it clean." And because any small injury could become a big one, she uses the first-aid dressings most leading hospitals use—Curity. Nothing is too good for a hero. Her hero or yours.

Use the Same First-aid Dressings Most Leading Hospitals Use

Most of America's leading hospitals use Curity Dressings as a standard of protection. Isn't it good to know that you can get these same famous dressings packaged for home use at any leading drugstore?

Curity

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

BAUER & BLACK

Over Half a Century of Adhesive Tape Leadership—
Bauer & Black,
Division of The Kendall Company

edited by JAN WEYL

Why are you shy?

by Joyce Behr, age 19

"If you aren't going with Henry any more, can I have him?"

Shyness is as shyness does.....

When people talk about Sally, they say, "Oh, she's so shy you can hardly talk to her!" And Sally herself admits, "Sometimes I feel like two different people. With my family or best friends, I relax and have fun. But with kids I don't know very well, I get so frightened inside that I can't seem to act like me."

Why can't Sally act like herself? Because she's afraid that if she does relax, she'll say—or do—the wrong thing. Instead of accepting the challenge of finding out how to get along with people, Sally has given up without a fight. She doesn't know yet what you know—that everybody is shy sometimes (even a dreamboat like Van Johnson, who used to be "terrified" of girls), and that many of the people who are the most poised and best talkers today learned how to be!

When you feel tense, remember who you are. Just say to yourself, "I'm Betty Burns, and I'm a good dancer, and I'm just as interesting as any girl here." If people still frighten you, picture them doing something that we all have to do—such as combing their hair or eating breakfast. If you think of them doing some everyday thing, they'll seem much more human.

Try to do everything more slowly—this goes for talking, laughing, and especially for walking across a room. And when you enter a room full of strangers, stand in the doorway a moment until you get a picture of the room—where the hostess is, if you have friends you could talk to first.

Find out who the other guests are when you're invited to a party, and what their interests are. If a baseball fan is coming, be ready with questions to start him talking: "What's happened to the Phillies?" or, "I saw the Bugs play last night, and couldn't understand one of the plays. What does it mean when a pitcher ——"

Keep busy. Look through a pile of records, take your own glass and someone else's out to the kitchen for a refill, or offer to help the hostess pass the refreshments. If there's a momentary lull, reach over for a potato chip and pass them along—"Once you start eating potato chips, it's hard to stop, don't you think?"

Listen intently when someone is speaking to you. Look right at the person, and nod occasionally. Don't worry about this seeming artificial, because if you listen hard, you'll be surprised how soon you forget yourself, and become genuinely interested in what he has to say. Before you know it, you'll be talking without worrying about what you're saying.

Pick out two things you're afraid to do—like spending the afternoon at the swimming pool where everybody goes, or inviting some friends over for a record party—and then make yourself do each one of them. This is a challenge. It may not be easy the first time, but it will be easier the second time—and a great deal easier the third time. Have faith in yourself and your personality. If you like yourself, other people will like you too!

How to make new friends.....

by Lorraine Canon, age 19

Be available. If you have a chance to spend a long, lazy afternoon at the crowd's favorite hangout, be sure to go along. If you're at a stag dance, sit where the boys can find you—with a best friend or two, perhaps, but not in the center of a big circle of girls. Don't refuse a party invitation because you're afraid to go. Here's a chance to try out tricks for overcoming shyness!

Create opportunities for people to get to know the real you. Sign up as junior lifeguard at the city swimming pool or when school starts get yourself a job reporting for the school paper. If you're away at a summer resort, take part in whatever's going on—the tennis tournament, amateur night, or even bridge on the terrace. Activities make you much more interesting to other people!

Act friendly. The way you walk, the way you talk, even the way your hair is combed (or not combed) gives a good impression of you. So keep a careful check on your grooming and, even more important, on your manner. Don't rush around with a big preoccupied "I'm too busy to bother with you" look. Walk slowly with a casual, friendly air, greet people warmly, and suggest seeing them again—"How about a game of tennis some day this week?" If you're off at a summer resort and see someone who seems alone and lonely, make the first gesture by going over and introducing yourself. Tell him what a swell place it is—and why you think so. Offer to show him the badminton court.

Let people like you by letting yourself like them. If you meet a new boy, stop thinking about the impression you're making on him, and concentrate on the impression he's making on you. Think about him—what he's talking about, what he's like, whether you like him. Ask him questions about what interests him most—himself!—and don't be afraid to disagree with him lightly if you really do. Differences of opinion make discussions much more fun—if they're honest.

Give it time. Yesterday you spent nearly an hour talking to a new boy at the golf course, and just because he didn't ask for a date right then, you're sure he doesn't care if he ever sees you again. But that just isn't so. Real, lasting friendships aren't built overnight. They take time—and care. He may have liked you lots—and not had enough money for a date. He may have liked you some—and thought to himself, "Nice gal. Hope I run into her again." If you like him, arrange to run into him again "casually" tomorrow, and again on Friday. Give your friendship a chance to develop slowly and easily—and all of a sudden he'll be sure he likes you a lot!

On a long summer's day . . .

. . . Sub-Debs used to pack a big bag and head for summer camp or a special family vacation trip. But today most girls write that they're getting jobs. "You can make some money and have fun, too, if you latch onto the right job!" Nancy Histed, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, is working as a chambermaid. . . . Mary Jane Lawry, of Philipsburg, Montana, is a ranch hand, while Rose Burdick, of Charlemont, Massachusetts, is working in nearby tobacco fields. . . . Out in Denver, Colorado, Barbara Symons checks truck drivers in for a local bakery, Pat Nelson works at corn tasseling, and Connie Johnson and Iris Stamey are taking part in a door-to-door survey of housewives' main problems. . . . Genevieve Coughlin, of Tidioute, Pennsylvania, is working in a rest home to gain experience for a career someday in nursing—and Cynthia DeHaven, of Little Rock, Arkansas, is doing clerical work for a local radio station, and hoping for a chance at announcing. . . . What are you doing for summer fun?

Dirty, tired—and happy

"Dear Jan: Here's a wonderful party. Forty of us drove to a nearby canyon which has a baseball diamond, a barbecue pit, tables, a stream for cooling watermelon, mountains for climbing, and a luscious summer moon. After a long game of baseball, everyone pitched in and helped fix the hot dogs. I think the most fun about this kind of party is sitting around a fire singing, eating and talking about things that don't get talked about much except around a fire. When it got too cold, we packed up and headed for the drive-in movie at the mouth of the canyon. Everybody went home smoky, dirty, tired and happy. ADRIENNE HARROW, Salt Lake City, Utah."

A good coat of tan will hide blushes . . . but all your sun bathing will be strictly solitary unless you find a cure for S.S. (sudden shyness). Send 5c to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania, for DON'T SHY AWAY, Sub-Deb booklet No. 2275.

Are you always Lovely to Love?

At important moments like this . . . underarm protection must be complete.

Merely deodorizing is not enough. Underarm perspiration should be stopped and stay stopped. Smart girls use FRESH Cream Deodorant because it really stops perspiration.

Furthermore, with FRESH you are assured of continuous protection. That's because FRESH contains amazing ingredients which become reactivated . . . and start to work all over again at those times when you need protection most. No other deodorant cream has ever made you this promise.

New... For head-to-toe protection, use new FRESH Deodorant Bath Soap . . . prevents body perspiration odor yet mild and gentle . . . contains amazing new soap ingredient Hexachlorophene, reported in Reader's Digest.

Pick a Color from the Rainbow!

Color-Keyed to Your Kitchen!

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER Refrigerators

Exclusive with International Harvester! Gorgeous color comes to refrigerators, to make your kitchen sing with a gleaming color accent! Ten brilliant colors to choose from—in cleverly designed, changeable door handle plaques to fit any color scheme.

they're femineered®!

. . . and YEARS AHEAD! Chore-savers by the score! Spacious shelves of chrome or stainless steel! Pantry-Dor, Bottle Opener, Butter Keeper, full-width Freezers, Coldstream Crispers, Egg-O-Mat! Seven sizes, seven prices. See them, NOW!

International Harvester Company, 180 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois

COPYRIGHT, 1951, INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY

International Harvester Also Builds Home Freezers . . . McCormick Farm Equipment and Farmall Tractors . . . Motor Trucks . . . Industrial Power

50 Years ago in the Journal

IN July, 1901, children by the hundreds rode the mule-pulled carrousel in Central Park to the music of a hand organ playing Sweet Rosie O'Grady and In the Good Old Summertime. Americans were reading Kipling's Kim and Frank Norris' The Octopus. George M. Cohan brightened vaudeville. A Chicago schoolboy completed a world tour in sixty days, beating Nellie Bly's record by twelve days.

And in the July, 1901, JOURNAL Editor Bok complains about suspicious authors who load their manuscripts with bits of ribbon or strands of hair, or reverse the order of the pages, to make sure editors read them. Just like today.

"It is false economy to wrap the ice in your refrigerator in woolen cloths," writes Maria Parloa. "This preserves the ice but does not cool the refrigerator."

"The cheaper baby carriages have bodies of shellacked wicker, lined with cretonne, and have parasols of sateen or satin. They cost $10 up."

Party idea: "It is a good idea for anyone giving a soap-bubble party to practice the soap-bubble tricks, so as to be in a position to amuse the invited guests."

"As for hats, I dare not write of them," reports Miss De Forest from Paris. "Only let me say that every one is flat and low, generally with two brims. Quills and currants and cherries make the trimmings."

In this issue, the JOURNAL offers specifications for A Small House with Lots of Room. It has a pine-paneled living room (21′ x 21′), dining room (16′ x 28′), five bedrooms, two baths, and costs $5835.

An article with the intriguing title, Some People I Have Married, turns out to be written by New York City's Reverend D. M. Steele.

The International Sunshine Club requests money for ice during the summer. "You will enjoy your own cold glass of water ten times more if you have furnished one just like it for some invalid."

Jour SPELL

Gossip about people you Editors you and what goes on in New Yor

By ELIZABETH CADELL

al to marry Chris

imself

OVER on Broadway the o evening, at one of Paramou projection rooms, we sat with Geo Stevens watching the film he has rected so magnificently from Theodo Dreiser's An American Tragedy. Du this fall as A Place in the Sun—an worth waiting years to see. We spok of the picture's close-ups—the closes ups we'd ever seen, of Elizabeth Taylo and Montgomery Clift (you can see tiny facial muscles twitch and a bead of perspiration form on Monty's fore-head)—and of how the JOURNAL, foremost among magazines, has for years now been developing the close-up illustrations; bringing people and objects right up to the reader. At any rate, don't miss the picture. It will leave you limp.

When George Rodger, photographer, and Jinx Witherspoon, ex-JOURNAL staffer, were in Africa getting the picture of Albert Schweitzer for Harold E. Stassen's article in this issue, Jinx wrote John Godfrey Morris here that she was enjoying the only available room with a shower. "Just came back from a short safari," her next letter started. "Found Stassen arrived and installed in my room. Now native boy lets me know whenever Stassen goes out to talk with Schweitzer, and I dart over and take a bath."

GEORGE RODGER

Jinx visits Doctor Schweitzer.

The feeling you get from the fascinating boyhood part of the Duke of Windsor's memoirs—of a sort of Spartan frugality in the upbringing of royalty—reminds us of an episode left, for some reason, out of The Little Princesses. As a little girl, Princess Elizabeth asked to borrow Crawfie's handkerchief. When Crawfie asked why she didn't use her own fresh one, the little princess exclaimed, "I'm like my father. I hate to start a new handkerchief." . . . How many men do you know who like to lend you the neatly folded one from their breast pocket?

managed,

herself

By em-ize of strils

This had no effect. A stout Frenchman with a red, beaming face gave her a rapturous smile and threw open the door.

"But see!" exclaimed an excited woman, pushing him aside and giving the glaring Belchamber a friendly bow. "But see, Belchamber, there is plenty of room for everybody."

When we read in a long ... of breakfast habits that du... breakfast experiments, the men made more fuss than the women about being hungry, and that both men and women did more work after eating regular breakfasts, we checked around the Workshop. What we discovered makes no sense. Some of the editors, men and women, work their hardest on a breakfast of a single cup of black coffee; others on a normal morning meal. But what we did learn to our surprise was that the two biggest-breakfasters of all were women, with Alice Blinn having large helpings of two fruits, of kidneys or kippered herring or chicken livers, of popovers or muffins with lots of marmalade, and coffee; and Mary Lea Page, fruit, bacon and eggs, English muffins, and coffee—"And long before lunchtime I'm starving!"

Our favorite story from Social Security registration day for household workers, on the first of May, was of Ruth Matthews' part-time maid. It could only happen here. For when Ruth had drawn up Daisy's return, Ruth asked if all the other people who share Daisy's services in the neighborhood had filed returns for her too. "Yes, ma'am," Daisy replied, "all fifteen of 'em."

Standing near Ethel Merman at a theater benefit recently, we heard another side to our colorful lady Minister to Luxemburg, Perle Mesta, who may or may not be the person Miss M. portrays in Call Me Madam. "You'd never know it," Ethel was saying, "but she's written more than seven hundred personal letters to mothers here of GI's in Europe."

EUROPEAN

U.S. Minister Mesta entertaining GI's in Luxemburg.

... more French-... Here ... day here ... in town on ... ering the home-furnishings market for new ideas. Wilhela Cushman and her fashion staff do a good hundred miles a week covering the dress market, not to mention their photographing on far-flung locations. "How many miles a month do you walk, getting stories?" we asked Hugh Kahler. "More than you'd think," he said. "But why don't you ask how many miles of manuscripts a month I read?"

Marlene Dietrich's* appearance in slacks in 1934 is credited with zooming the West Coast garment business 50 per cent in 10 years. . . . Though only 15 per cent of married women living with their husbands were working outside their homes in 1940, the number has risen to 23 per cent today. The average age of women workers has increased from twenty-six in 1900 to thirty-six in 1950. . . . Eighty per cent of all automobile accidents are caused by twenty per cent of all drivers. . . . Two hundred thousand paper-backed books were sold in 1937, but by 1950 the number had grown to two hundred million.

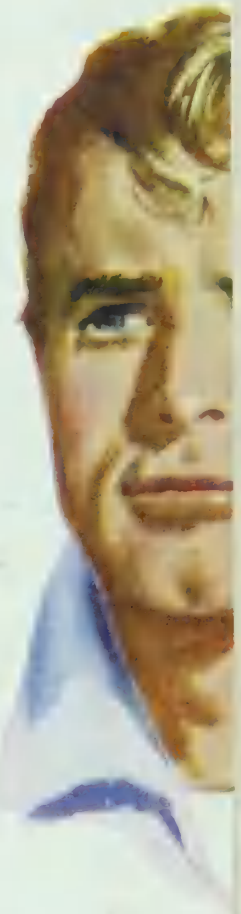
Pick a Color fro



ILLUSTRATED BY CORY WHITMORE

THE SPELL

By ELIZABETH CADELL

Mrs. Belchamber felt that Cressida's refusal to marry Chris was one problem he should solve himself Cressida . . .

Afraid to marry, and with good reason.

Christopher . . .
The man
Cressida loved
but would not marry.

MRS. BELCHAMBER had managed, without much effort, to keep herself to herself all the way from Paris. By employing her usual deterrents—a gaze of piercing dislike, a twitching of the nostrils as if scenting unpleasantness and, in extreme cases, drawing back her head and looking like a cobra about to strike—she had secured seclusion. And space. Her suitcases were on the rack, but her coat, traveling rug, books and papers were disposed upon the three vacant corner seats, while her crochet bag, her flask and traveling handbag occupied the middle ones. She was very comfortable. If the French had only known how to build trains that made less noise she would have gone as far as to say that she was enjoying her journey.

She looked at her watch, saw that it was five o'clock, and decided to pour herself a cup of tea at the next station. She put out a bony, beringed hand and took up her crochet bag, into which she had slipped some of her favorite biscuits.

The train slowed and then stopped. She hoped that the flask would have kept the tea reasonably hot. She was about to unscrew the top when she paused, noting with displeasure that a large group of people had gathered at the door of the carriage with the obvious intention of entering.

This, she felt, was gross impertinence. They could see that she was an elderly Englishwoman, traveling alone and just about to take her tea. To be invaded was intolerable. Mrs. Belchamber put the biscuits back in the crochet bag and prepared her first line of defense—the stony stare.

Copyright, 1951, by Elizabeth Cadell. This is a condensed version of the novel soon to be published by William Morrow & Co., Inc., under the title of Enter Mrs. Belchamber.

This had no effect. A stout Frenchman with a red, beaming face gave her a rapturous smile and threw open the door.

"But see!" exclaimed an excited woman, pushing him aside and giving the glaring Mrs. Belchamber a friendly bow. "But see, here is plenty of room for everybody."

"But see!" shouted two more Frenchmen, poking their heads inside. "Here they will be comfortable."

Mrs. Belchamber understood French imperfectly; in her forty years' residence on the Continent she had found that English did perfectly well; but she did not need to hear the dreadful truth: her eyes told her that some, if not all, of these strangers proposed to foist themselves upon her. She made a last protest by seizing the door of the carriage and banging it firmly, leaving the intruders outside, but two more stout men threw it open again and, with an excited burst of speech and charming smiles, ushered in two small boys in French sailor hats, a smaller girl in a modified version of the same headgear, three suitcases, a large toy boat, a cardboard box smelling strongly of cheese and apples, several overcoats and, finally, a larger suitcase.

Mrs. Belchamber sat in her corner, her bony frame rigid and withdrawn. She saw the last piece of luggage stowed neatly, and realized that the crowd outside was bestowing vociferous farewells on the three children. A wave of horror swept over her: the three sailor hats were traveling alone.

The train doors began to close. The farewells grew louder. The guard came up and raised a small horn to his lips to blow upon it the rude noise (Continued on Page 75)

Scotty . . .
A disgrace to his upbringing, said Mrs. Belchambe

Schweitzer

"Which concept will ultimately prevail in our world of conflicting ideologies—disdain for life or reverence for life?"

By HAROLD E. STASSEN
President, University of Pennsylvania

I HAVE met the kindest man in the world and I have met the most ruthless man in the world. One is, in my opinion, the greatest living philosopher. The other is the most powerful living ruler. They are Dr. Albert Schweitzer, of Africa, and Marshal Joseph Stalin, of Russia.

One is a living symbol of the ideals, the humanitarianism and the philosophy of our way of life. The other is the personal embodiment of the goals, the force and the ideology of the Communist way of life.

The circumstances and surroundings of my conferences with each of these two men are interesting and provide deeply significant contrasts.

I met Dr. Albert Schweitzer on a small, grass-covered jungle air strip in the heart of French Equatorial Africa in the course of my recent journey through Asia and Africa and around the world. From the regular airlines stop in Léopoldville, in the Belgian Congo, I flew in a Sabena DC-3 to Libreville, the capital of Gabon Province, a distance of six hundred miles. There I was met by the able French Governor of Gabon, Pierre Pelieu, and flew with him in an old trimotored German-made Junkers plane to Lambaréne, ninety miles up on the Ogowe River.

As I stepped off the plane, Doctor Schweitzer advanced, extended his hand, and said simply, "I am Albert Schweitzer." A white jungle helmet covered his gray, Einsteinlike hair and shaded his furrowed and expressive face. One of the nurses of his hospital, Miss Emma Haussknecht, stood by as interpreter, and forty or fifty African natives of all ages were gathered at the edge of the airstrip. After he had greeted the French governor and had been introduced to Robert Matteson, my assistant, who accompanied me around the world, and to others who joined us at Léopoldville, I climbed into a waiting jeep with Doctor Schweitzer, and off we went over a rough jungle road down to the river. A launch ride past natives in dugout canoes through beautiful stretches of heavy timber ended at his hospital.

I had met Marshal Stalin in April, 1947, during my journey through Europe and Russia. [Ed. note: Mr. Stassen reported this interview with Stalin fully in the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL for July, 1947.] I was taken to his office, in the center of the Kremlin, by Sergei Kondrashov, our Russian guide, for an appointment at eleven P.M. When I entered he stepped out from behind his desk, and through his interpreter, Pavlov, said, "How do you do?" It was a simple acknowledgment of my presence in a sparsely furnished room. But reaching that spot was not simple.

GEORGE RODGER

Schweitzer's office is a simple frame room adjacent to his bedroom, open on three sides to the green world of Nature that surrounds him. The accent is on human sympathy.

vs. Stalin

We approached Stalin at night through the guarded gates of the walled Kremlin, past electric eyes and alarm bells, through a screen of secret police, and down long, patrolled, zigzag corridors. We approached Schweitzer in the open day, in a setting of river and sky and virgin forest, with the towering mahogany, okoume and oil-palm trees as the only guards, and the weaver birds, the parrots and the monkeys as the only alarm bells.

Stalin's office is really his prison, deep in the heart of the Kremlin fortress, austere and unadorned except for pictures of the revolutionists Lenin, Marx and Engels, and the Czarist military heroes Kutuzov and Suvorov. There are no windows, but one is fully conscious of the Red Square and Lenin's tomb just a block away. The accent is on death and war and ruthless power.

Schweitzer's office is a simple frame room adjacent to his bedroom, open on three sides to the green world of Nature that surrounds him. It is shared by two small antelope, a cat, a kitten, a bird, a small organ, and books on philosophy and theology. The numerous buildings of the hospital and the broad river are in plain view. The accent is on life and friendliness and human sympathy.

Both men are in their seventies. Stalin was born on December 21, 1879, in the village of Gori, in Georgia in the south of the Soviet Union. Schweitzer was born on January 14, 1875, in Kaysersburg, Alsace, then a part of Germany, now of France.

Stalin is the son of a shoemaker who was the son of Georgian peasants. Stalin's mother, Ekaterina, was a girl of similar humble origin. She was a pious Greek Catholic, and she worked as a washerwoman to eke out the low income of her husband.

Determined that her son should have a better life than her husband, she sent him at the age of nine to the Ecclesiastical School at Gori, which he attended for six years, from 1888 to 1894. In October, 1894, he matriculated at the Theological Seminary in Tiflis. Because his mother, now a widow, had no money for his education at the seminary, the headmaster of the Gori school and a local priest obtained a scholarship for him.

In August of 1898, while at the seminary, Stalin joined his first secret socialist organization, and it was then that he first read a copy of Karl Marx's Das Kapital. Though studying for the priesthood, he was planning revolution, and on May 29, 1899, he was expelled from the seminary for what he himself later stated was the propagation of Marxism. In 1901, while he was employed as a clerk at the Tiflis Observatory and vigorously carrying on his socialist activities, his room was raided by the Czarist police, who sought to arrest him. He fled, and for the next fifteen years lived under false names and with spurious passports, an active underground worker for the revolution.

He met Lenin for the first time at the end of 1905 at Tammerfors, Finland. In April, 1906, he attended a Stockholm socialist conference, and in May, 1907, he took part in a similar London conference and there met Trotsky. He spent a total of seven years either in prison for socialist and underground activity, or on his way to or in Siberia. During this period his many revolutionary articles attracted the attention of Lenin, who placed him on the Central Committee of the

(Continued on Page 129)

U. S. ARMY

Stalin's office is really his prison, deep in the heart of the Kremlin fortress, austere and unadorned. There are no windows. The accent is on ruthless power.

Melville Goodwin USA

By JOHN P. MARQUAND

ILLUSTRATED BY AL PARKER

In October, 1949, General Melville A. Goodwin became man-of-the-hour because of news stories about an incident in Berlin which could have brought war. I, Sidney Skelton, a "well-known commentator," was asked by Army Public Relations to help with Mel's publicity because I'd known him briefly during my Army days. I was the one, in fact, back in 1945, who introduced him to Dottie Peale, a vital, ambitious woman, head of the Peale Publishing house, when she toured the battle areas in France with a group of writers. Now that the General was famous, I hoped no one would mention Dottie. Phil Bentley, shrewd and able magazine writer, was to do the definitive article on Mel. I invited Phil, his researcher, Miss Fineholt, the General and Mrs. Goodwin, and Colonel Flax all up to the new place which Helen and I had bought in Connecticut. There they could do the interviewing in comfort, and Gilbert Frary, my boss, hoped for good publicity for me. The General began to tell the story of his small-town background, the Decoration Day parade which first inspired him to be a soldier, his school days with Muriel (later to be Mrs. Goodwin), the Sunday-school picnic when he first kissed her on the cheek. Phil and I found all this like something out of Horatio Alger—almost too simple to believe, but oddly moving too. Mel Goodwin seemed to be a man dedicated to his career, honest and uncomplicated, in a complicated world. Yet when he asked about Dottie and the wartime acquaintanceship seemed about to be renewed, I worried. Next morning we gathered again for the General to continue his story.

III MISS FINEHOLT and Philip Bentley and Colonel Flax were waiting in the library, and when we appeared they all stood up. It was natural for the colonel to do so, but I was surprised to see Miss Fineholt and Phil Bentley snap into it, too, exactly as though they were troops.

"Please don't get up," the General said. "I'm sorry if I kept you waiting." He was not very sorry. He was only acknowledging a military courtesy, and he immediately sat down in his chair by the fireplace.

"Well, let's go," he said. "Where were we?"

"You were starting up to Nashua to see that congressman," Phil Bentley said.

"Oh, yes," the General said, "Congressman Francis J. Garrity. I didn't want to tell my folks what I was going to do. Father was talking college, now that I was finishing high school. I told him I couldn't work in the store that day because I had promised to take Muriel to Nashua to the movies, which was technically true. It's funny what a big town Nashua seemed like."

Melville was seventeen then. Although he had another inch to grow and his hands were too big for his wrists and his feet too big for his ankles, he wasn't so badly set up for his age. He had worn a blue suit again, but it was his own and not a hand-me-down. He had brushed his hair carefully, using some soap to keep it down. If his overcoat was not new—it was a brown overcoat of Harry's—at least his dark green felt hat was. When he saw Muriel crossing the square, he wished she had not wanted to go with him, because it meant that he would have to pretend that he was the hero of one of those West Point stories. At least he was familiar fictionally with the mechanics of getting into the Point.

"Oh, Melville," Muriel said, "you forgot your rubbers, and you'll get your feet sopping wet. But anyway, you look slick."

He was pleased that Muriel thought so. Muriel looked pretty slick herself. She was at least the next prettiest girl in high school. She had borrowed her mother's coat with the squirrel collar.

The two o'clock car still had the stuffy, overheated smell of the Nashua (Continued on Page 52)

Copyright, 1951, by John P. Marquand.

"What's so funny?" he asked. "Just you," she said,
"looking as though you weren't real.
Is it against the rules for you to kiss a girl?"

There are times when a girl's first duty is to feel motherly... but suppose she doesn't?

Into the Fire

SHE had not been married very long when the baby was due to arrive—ten months, to be exact—and she was still a little surprised to be married at all, and quite surprised by the fact of the baby. By now, of course, it showed just terribly, and people smiled indulgently at her whenever she walked down the street. Sometimes they would ask her what she and Peter were going to name it—Mary, after herself, if it was a girl, or Peter Junior? And Mary would look at them, appalled, because the thought of this jumping jack within her actually being human and needing a name seemed ridiculous.

She did not feel motherly toward it at all. Peter said it was because she was so young, whereas he, being older, felt very fatherly. Mary said he ought to—twenty-eight was middle-aged, after all. She herself was twenty, a good age to be a bride, but apparently a bad age to be a good potential mother. Only sometimes she had a feeling that being motherly had nothing to do with age, but she did not confess this feeling to Peter.

In the beginning it had been fun. She would tell people that she and Peter were expecting a baby, and the people would look at her trim figure and lovely face and say, "Not really! I can't believe it." But now she didn't have to tell anyone, and the compliments about her radiant beauty and wonderful carriage were only memories. Almost every day Peter told her she was beautiful, but that didn't count exactly because Peter was her husband, and it was part of his job to say nice things. Missing the spoken compliments wasn't so bad; it was missing the unspoken ones that hurt Mary. Until now, she could not remember ever being the kind of woman men looked at and then looked away from. It was a dreadful feeling and she began to have sympathy for wallflowers and ugly women, and a good deal of pity for herself.

"Maybe if it had more personality," Peter said one evening in a worried voice, "you wouldn't feel so unmotherly."

He picked up one of the baby presents that had arrived at the house that day. Unwrapping the tissue, he took out an infinitesimal sweater with felt letters sewed on it reading, "Michigan State, 1972." He held the little sweater against his chest and it looked like a misplaced pocket.

"Is that supposed to give the baby personality?" Mary asked sourly. "It just makes me think of it as a dwarf."

"Not it," Peter said. "Him, or her. Gives the child a little character." He turned and picked up the card that accompanied the sweater. "From your mother," he said. "Now there's a woman after my own heart. She thinks of the baby as a person."

"Naturally," Mary said. "After all, she's always been a mother." And she did not laugh with Peter.

Peter managed to erase the smile from his face. "Do you ever thank her," he asked, "for the presents?"

(Continued on Page 67)

ILLUSTRATED BY TOM MILLER

By Jean S. O'Connell

It's as if I didn't exist,
she thought for the thousandth time.
All any of them care about is this jumping jack of a baby.

Tapering crepe faille pajamas, long sash. By Clare Potter.

SOMETHING SPECIALL

You owe it to yourself, now and then, to indulge in a dress that is sheer fun . . . one that is uniquely your own. You recognize it at sight, wear it for years for special occasions. Midsummer is the time for it. Color is its essence. The fashion of aprons, stoles and sashes gives it particular importance this year. ▪ By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Glamour separates—blue felt circular skirt with silk jersey top, trimmed with braid and tassels, a seasonless fashion. By Carrie Munn.

This pale green silk honan by Clare Potter becomes a personality dress because of its mulberry grosgrain-ribbon sash, boutonniere, big straw hat.

OR YOU

Afternoon apron in printed sheer cotton, worn over a ruffly white batiste dress and petticoat. By Carrie Munn.

Batik cotton, a dress in lovely colors, to make you feel and look different. To wear with gold jewelry, straw pumps, and a band of straw across the neckline. Dress by Carrie Munn.

WILHELA CUSHMAN

Pale mauve linen by Clare Potter, with a boutonniere designed for it. Hat by Peggy Buchanan.

Tropical-fruit organdy with sequins—apron is separate. Cotton sateen petticoat is attached to blouse. By Iva Karstens.

Two-piece African cotton with sequins. By Polly Hornburg. Fringed wool stole.

He knew what happened to relatives of men in trouble with the police. Even Kathi must not know a ticket for

By ROSE C. FELD

ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY ANDERSON

HE drove along the familiar country road and there was a song in his heart. It started after he left the home of Mrs. Preston, where he had gone to pick up the chest of drawers to repair. Mrs. Preston said the chest had been in her family for two hundred years. In this very house.

"That is good," he declared, and she smiled at his words. She thought them foreign, he knew, just as he was. She did not know how true, how good it was. Carefully he hefted the chest into his truck. "Today is Monday. Thursday, I bring it."

He lifted his hat to her and drove off. The song started shortly after, not on his lips but inside himself, filling him with a deep joy. His mother had sung it to him when he was a child and her mother had sung it to her. A few months from now he would sing it to his child. To Thaddeus Kubaczik, Jr., if it was a boy, to Catherine Kubaczik, if it was a girl. Kathi said they must give the child an American name and she was right.

He drove carefully along the narrow winding road. Around the curve would be the Jessup place, where old Mr. Jessup sat on his porch, sunning himself, watching the cars go by.

He heard it almost before he saw it. A shout—a car coming toward him on the curve at full speed. Then it came, a crash and a tearing, and the sounds filled him with panic. His foot went down on the accelerator and he drove on for a mad moment before sanity returned and, with screeching brakes, he stopped the car. He climbed out of the truck and saw that its left headlight was smashed and the fender below it twisted. Two men were striding toward him and he went to meet them. They were young, expensively dressed, and they shouted things at him that he couldn't completely understand, but their anger and fury were clear. Wordlessly, he followed them to their car, a low-slung convertible. Its side was dented in, the windows smashed.

"Are you hurt?" he asked numbly.

"No, small thanks to you, you fool! Hit and run! You'll pay for this!"

Silently he put his hands into his pockets to hide their shaking.

"Did you hear what I said? You'll pay for this!"

"I hear what you say," Thaddeus answered. "I will pay."

"Are you insured?"

"No, I am sorry. But I will pay."

The man looked him over with something like contempt in his eyes. Thaddeus knew what he saw. A little man in shabby clothes, a foreign little man with hair almost white and brown eyes showing fear.

"You'll pay all right." The man turned to his friend. "I'm going into this house to call the state police."

"No. Please, no. Do not call the police," Thaddeus pleaded in a rush of frightened words. "I will pay, I tell you. I will pay. I will sell the truck. Do not call the police. Please." He put a trembling hand on the man's sleeve, but the man shook him off and strode toward old Mr. Jessup's house.

"May I use your telephone to call the state police?"

"No need," Mr. Jessup answered. "Just called 'em myself. They'll be here any minute."

"You call the police?" Thaddeus asked, his voice choked.

"Always do," replied the old man. "More accidents on this danged curve. They ought to pay me for reportin' 'em."

"He said he'd pay for the damage," the man declared angrily. "He won't get away with it."

"I say I pay," Thaddeus repeated dully.

(Continued on Page 101)

Thaddeus

"Tadi, Tadi, you are in America. You are safe.

When Company Comes

By ANN BATCHELDER

HERE we are, as you all know, practically in the middle of summer. I think, every year, that when we reach this point we're heading as fast as a trotting horse on a good dry track, toward fall and another bout with searching winds and the rustle of dying leaves. But—July is also the month when we celebrate our most significant holiday. That's the Fourth—the day when Fate stood smiling at the breastworks, to whisper in the ears of our great Founding Fathers the prophecy of greatness still to come. That was Independence Day. The first Fourth of July. And every Fourth we have a little ceremony when the flag is raised. We gather at the flagpole, stand at attention and salute, then we sing, our not overtrained voices breaking into the song of birds, the first verse of The Star-Spangled Banner—somehow we skip the rest. And at sunset the ceremony goes into reverse. The neighbors may think we're all a little "tetched," but we have quite an audience of the kindergarten crowd. They're learning. They are seeing Old Glory with new eyes. They've got something to report. And every one of them has a hot doughnut—with sugar on it. Can it be it's the doughnuts and not the flag raising that has held them? Could be.

Vacations and company. But, to get along now to what we're here for, there's another thing that comes along in July, and that's company. You think you are all set for a simple supper and an easy, lazy day, when the gravel in the driveway crunches and up the long drive comes a car—and the next thing you know there's company. Company for dinner. You didn't expect them, but are glad to see them just the same. They aren't fussy and you've been friends a long time. Company—and what'll we have? There's a lovely dessert anyway—made it yesterday and set it away in the refrigerator for a treat for a birthday that takes place tomorrow. And there's a first course the family likes on hot days that's ready too. So what's the worry? There are things to do with and not too much to do, so let's get at it.

Family favorite. Every family has favorites. Boys and girls, the hard-working and golf-playing husband. You yourself are not immune from sniffing and smelling as you come home, and "What's mom got for dinner?" is as common as the weather report for the next day. And much more satisfying, not to say reliable.

Well, here's a first course all made last night and ready as rain, but no family on earth can smell that on the fire. That's a hidden secret. And here it is:

GRAPEFRUIT IN LEMON JELLY

Peel and separate into sections 2 large grapefruit. Soften 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin in ¾ cup cold water. Add ⅔ cup sugar, ¼ teaspoon salt, 2 cups boiling water and stir until dissolved. Add ⅔ cup lemon juice and chill until this side of "set." Nice and thickish,

(Continued on Page 120)

MENU (Planned for 8)

Grapefruit in lemon jelly
Pineapple ham patties
Buttered zucchini
Tomato-avocado salad
Crusty rolls
Chocolate pot de crème
Iced coffee

STUART FOWLER

Ellen had Walter's number right from the start.

In fact, that was the trouble. By SHIRLEY JACKSON

A PROBLEM of some importance, certainly, these days, is that of anger. When one half of the world is angry at the other half, or one half of a nation is angry at the rest, or one side of town feuds with the other side, it is hardly surprising, when you stop to think about it, that so many people lose their tempers with so many other people. Even if, as in this case, they are two people not usually angry, two people whose lives are obscure and whose emotions are gentle, whose smiles are amiable and whose voices are more apt to be cheerful than raised in fury. Two people, in other words, who would much rather be friends than not and who yet, for some reason, perhaps chemical or sociological or environmental, enter upon a mutual feeling of dislike so intense that only a very drastic means can bring them out of it.

Take two such people:

Ellen Webster was what is referred to among her friends as a "sweet" girl. She had pretty, soft hair and dark, soft eyes, and she dressed in soft colors and wore frequently a lovely old-fashioned brooch which had belonged to her grandmother. Ellen thought of herself as a very happy and very lucky person, because she had a good job, was able to buy herself a fair number of soft-colored dresses and skirts and sweaters and coats and hats; she had, by working hard at it evenings, transformed her one-room apartment from a bare, neat place into a charming little refuge with her sewing basket on the table and a canary at the window; she had a reasonable conviction that someday, perhaps soon, she would fall in love with a nice young man and they would be married and Ellen would devote herself wholeheartedly to children and baking cakes and mending socks. This not-very-unusual situation, with its perfectly ordinary state of mind, was a source of great happiness to Ellen. She was, in a word, not one of those who rail against their fate, who live in sullen (Continued on Page 124)

ABOUT TWO NICE

PEOPLE

"Good morning," said Ellen brightly.
"I'm so sorry to disturb you at this hour."

ILLUSTRATED BY Joan Whitcomb

Line a Day

By Ann Batchelder

*Sampler made by the patient fingers of Eliza Jefferes, aged 12, in 1796.

1 I came from a country lawyer's family. I loved the law. (I learned better later.) But when I read, several years ago, Bellamy Partridge's COUNTRY LAWYER, nostalgia had me by the throat, and memory took me by the hand and led me back along the devious ways of courts and judges and juries and brought to mind the friendly firebrands of my youth. Now Bellamy has come through with another book that makes the heart beat faster, the tears lie closer to the eyelids and the laughter, unbecoming, maybe, rise in the throat. It's SALAD DAYS, an unforgettable memory book, an album to be treasured. Read it. And don't forget I told you.

2 Step-on-it item: Make enough brown hot toast to go round. Keep it hot too. Cover each buttered slice with hot spiced and sweetened green-apple sauce and crisp bacon. Don't stand around gossiping, but get these to the breakfast table but fast. See what "step on it" means?

3 Rice note: Cook rice in chicken broth or beef bouillon or consommé instead of water. Add a little color with a dash of paprika.

4 Blueberry season, and time for blueberry muffins. This year I'm making my favorite muffins with brown sugar this way. Try it, and you'll know why.

5 Receipt: Mix 1 beaten egg with ½ cup dark brown sugar, ½ cup milk and 1½ cups flour sifted with ¼ teaspoon salt and 1 tablespoon baking powder. Add 1 tablespoon melted butter and 1 to 1½ cups blueberries, floured. Bake in well-greased muffin pans 12 minutes in a hot oven (425° F.).

6 A nice little dessert dish is this. Having achieved a batch of chocolate cupcakes—mixes make them easy—split them and fill with vanilla-flavored whipped cream with a big walnut meat in the center.

7 Quick sea-food bisque for those who vacation far from the sandy beaches: Combine 1 can condensed pea soup, 1 can tomato soup and 2 soup cans top milk or light cream. Add a pinch of basil, and 1 can crab meat. Heat, season and serve at once.

8 What is so rare as a good tea punch? You answer and I'll give you one. Start with this and double and triple or whatever to get the quantity you need.

9 So, take a cup of very strong hot tea. Add ¼ cup sugar, the same of lemon juice and ¾ cup orange juice. Add 1 can apricot nectar. Chill well. Before serving, add 1 pint chilled ginger ale. Pour over ice in the punch bowl. Garnish with lemon slices and sprigs of mint. And it's a cool comfort on a hot day.

10 Cool, colorful and tasty—for a summer luncheon: Make up a packaged lime-flavored gelatin, substituting ¼ cup fresh lime juice for part of water. Add 1 cup small green seedless grapes. Mold. Serve on lettuce.

11 Serve with a dressing made with ⅓ mayonnaise, ⅔ sour cream, salt and sugar to taste, and a few sliced strawberries folded in.

12 Hot ripe olives make the last divine touch to sweetbread and chicken dishes. As a garnish, of course.

13 Like to spruce things up a bit? Well, try this with a soup or salad. Cut strips of bread and brush them with butter or margarine. Sprinkle liberally with caraway seed and toast to a crisp brown in the oven. Better hot, good any way.

14 Now, for a garnish for ham or chicken or chops, cut ripe bananas into small pieces. Dip them in evaporated milk, roll in crushed corn flakes and fry in deep, hot fat just a minute or two. Sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve with lemon wedges.

15 From an old cookbook: "Lobsters have become very popular among certain classes, but only the most experienced cooks should be allowed to prepare them. The wise housekeeper will eschew this most indigestible of fish altogether from her kitchen." And we were right on the point of making you more lobster-conscious. Life is like that.

16 Try this the next time you make a lemon pie: Just add grated lemon rind to a packaged lemon-pie filling. Adds that certain something.

17 From the Danes come many open-faced sandwiches. This was named for Hans Christian Andersen. Spread slices of rye bread, well buttered, with liver pâté. Top with slices of crisp bacon, thin slices of tomato and a sprinkle of horse-radish.

18 And this is the Danes' idea of a July dessert. Mine too. The name of this treasure is Rödgröd. (You translate as you go along.) It's made with currants—the kind that grow on bushes—and raspberries. This is how you make a Rödgröd:

19 Save out the finest raspberries. Then mash equal quantities of raspberries and currants and cook with a little sugar to get out all the juice. Strain and thicken the juice with cornstarch and cook to a sauce consistency. Not too thick. Like very heavy cream, you know. Cool it. Fold in the raspberries you kept aside, and serve very cold, with heavy cream.

20 One more simple little appetizer also brought from Denmark by my co-workers who travel far afield. Just spread salty crackers with ripe Camembert cheese and sprinkle with finely chopped radishes.

21 Here's something: Make up a fine receipt of doughnuts. Cut them out very small and fry—as you ought to fry doughnuts. Roll them in powdered sugar and cinnamon. Serve hot with coffee. By the young fry, these are called, of all things, Shmoos. Wonderful for picnics—say, what is another name for picnic?

22 Where they like barbecues, they're crazy about barbecues. If you are one of the cult, just get yourself some fine, fresh salmon steaks—a slice for each. Brush them with the barbecue sauce of your choice and broil until the salmon is done. Season and pass more sauce. Garnish with cress and lemon quarters.

23 Up where I came from, they used to have a saying about an extra-good cook. They'd say, for instance, "Mehitabel Jones has a faculty for cherry pie." Or baked beans or apple fritters or whatever. Pretty expressive, don't you think?

24 Like oysters, a shortcake tastes better—to me, anyway—in its real season. But remember cake doesn't make a shortcake. It's short baking-powder-biscuit dough that makes a real shortcake. Have it hot, too, and the berries stone cold. And the cream real cream. Am I glad it's shortcake time again!

25 For supper some night, provide a baked-bean rarebit. Add a chopped green pepper to a can of baked beans, put in tomato catchup to taste and heat well in the oven. When ready to serve, pour a generous rarebit, very hot, over the beans and serve quickly with brown bread. It may sound crazy, but it's awful good.

26 A friend reports that pickled beets, served hot, make an excellent relish. Particularly good with fish.

27 Something the bobby-sox set adores, also their elders. Soften vanilla ice cream a little and fold into it a cup of crushed chocolate-covered molasses chips. Then refreeze it in the refrigerator.

28 A club sandwich is so called because most clubmen prefer ham and cheese on rye, but a little horse-radish spread on the tomato in a club sandwich is like a dollar in the collection plate. Pleasantly surprising.

29 Toasted cheese rolls are good eating with soup or salad. Split French rolls in two; dip in half cream and half milk, then dip in grated Parmesan cheese; place under broiler until golden brown. Serve immediately. For 6 rolls—½ cup milk and cream and ⅓ cup cheese.

30 If you're packing the picnic basket with fried chicken or chicken sandwiches, it's a good idea to tuck in a jar of jellied cranberry sauce.

31 I should have credit for not mentioning the weather once. Haven't even hinted about it. Haven't said a word about the bees or the hummingbirds or the smell of new-mown hay. But, if you don't mind, I am going to make one observation at this time. And I don't expect anyone to dispute me about it either. It's hot.

*NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART — INDEX OF AMERICAN DESIGN

TEMPTING TRAY FOR A SUMMER DAY

Out on the porch—some shady spot! Enjoy this grand main dish—cream of celery soup. Crisp garden-cut celery . . . extra-heavy cream. It's always summer-right!

Cream of Celery Soup
Ham and Potato Salad
Iced Tea

is Quick and Satisfying

. . . make it the One Hot Dish of summer lunches and family suppers

BY Anne Marshall

ANNE MARSHALL
Director Home Economics
Campbell Soup Company

SO often your own good sense about "feeding" your family well is confirmed by nutrition experts.

Take meals in hottest weather, for instance! The happy answer is to plan them cool, easy and tasty. Quick sandwiches, crisp salads or cold desserts, icy drinks . . . and one hot dish!

Yes, that one hot dish of summer meals is just what food experts suggest. And for the one hot dish, what is more beautifully suited than a bowl of tempting soup?

Soup has everything . . . from the nutritionist's point of view as well as from your family's. It's nourishing and delicious . . . gives real lift to lagging appetites. Easy to digest and simple to prepare (4 minutes from opener to table—you and your kitchen stay cool)!

By contrast, soup makes cold dishes taste so much better. And in these days, as always, condensed soup is a good food buy. There's variety to suit everyone's taste . . . if you keep your soup shelf well stocked. So plan summer meals around soup . . . and stay cool doing it!

HERE'S A SUPPER THEY'LL WELCOME

Folks call it a "square-meal" soup—this vegetable-beef soup. And no wonder! Chock-full of vegetables, barley, tender lean beef in a rich beef stock. Great eating!

Vegetable-Beef Soup Cold Fried Chicken Tossed Salad
Watermelon
Iced Coffee

A LUNCH TO BEAT THE HEAT

It's a "natural" for a summer day—with good-eating chicken noodle soup. Made with golden chicken broth, egg noodles, lots of chicken. Mmm-Good!

Chicken Noodle Soup
Seafood Salad Raspberries
Lemonade with Sprig of Mint

FOR YOUR SUMMER SAFETY

Sunshine, fresh air, exercise, and relaxation are essential to good health. Now that the summer months are here, doctors urge everyone to take full advantage of the opportunity for outdoor activities.

Summer holidays, however, are often marred by accidents and injuries. That is why it is important to know first aid and other measures that may help prevent serious crippling . . . perhaps even save someone's life.

It is well to remember that if an accident occurs and there is any doubt about the seriousness of the injury, the only safe thing to do is—call the doctor at once. Here are some other precautions that everyone may take for summer health and safety.

When swimming—be sure to take proper precautions when swimming or playing in the water, as drowning from these causes claims many lives each year. Do not swim alone—or too soon after eating. Obey all warning signs—especially those regarding diving or swimming too far from the shore. It is also wise to safeguard your children by teaching them how to swim early in life.

When sunning—remember that the sun is strong "medicine" and that sunburn causes an annual loss of several million work days. So, take the sun in small doses—about 10 minutes the first day, 20 the second. Sunburn usually can be prevented by applying a "sun-protective" preparation to the skin before exposure. However, to protect yourself against sunstroke or heatstroke, always avoid long, direct exposure to the sun.

When motoring — constantly watch other cars on the road. This may help you avoid an accident, even if other drivers do something wrong. By watching traffic carefully, it is often possible to anticipate situations that might lead to an accident. Take every precaution for your own protection when you see others violating the rules of safe driving.

When exercising—make sure that you do not overdo any form of physical activity to which you are unaccustomed. The best rule, if in doubt, is to check with your doctor about week-end and vacation activities. He will advise you about the kind and amount of exercise that will be safe and beneficial. In any event, avoid excessive fatigue.

When camping—watch out for poison ivy, to which 2 out of 3 adults are sensitive. Remember the old adage—"leaves three, let it be." Also be on guard against other poisonous plants, such as poison oak and poison sumac. Be prepared for all minor injuries—such as cuts and burns—by including a first aid kit in your equipment.

When starting on a trip—make certain that your car is in good condition before starting on a summer outing. Brakes, steering mechanism, lights, tires and other vital parts should be thoroughly inspected. Remember, too, that the older your car gets, the more carefully it should be checked mechanically.

First aid courses are given in most communities by the American Red Cross. Taking these courses will help prepare you to act quickly and efficiently in case of accidental injury.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company
(A MUTUAL COMPANY)
1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of your booklet, 751-J. "First Aid."

Name_____
Street_____
City_____ State_____

MELVILLE GOODWIN USA

(Continued from Page 39)

car in winter. They sat side by side on one of the red plush cross seats in the middle.

"Now, Melly," Muriel said, "what are you going to tell him?"

"Don't call me 'Melly,'" Melville said. He was feeling nervous already. "I'm going to tell him I want to go to the Point, and I don't see why you want to go with me." He was pleased that already he could refer easily and casually to that great institution as "the Point."

"Don't you want me to go with you?" Muriel asked.

"I didn't say I didn't want you to," he answered. "I said I don't see why you want to."

"If I don't go with you," Muriel said, "you might get shy."

He wished she wouldn't act so much as though he belonged to her right there in the trolley car, and it was not going to be any help having her watching him get shy.

"Just look him in the eye," Muriel said, "and tell him that you want an appointment for West Point. Remember, he's there to do what people ask him."

Perhaps Muriel was partly right. If congressmen did not often do what their constituents wanted, they always enjoyed being asked. Mr. Garrity was the only congressman of whom Melville Goodwin had ever asked patronage or favor.

Mr. Garrity's office was on the second floor of a business block on the main street. It consisted of an outer waiting room with a typist's desk and a small private room in back. As they stood in the corridor in front of the ground-glass door marked "Francis J. Garrity, Attorney at Law," it had suddenly occurred to him that he had not thought of any way of explaining Muriel.

"Well," Muriel whispered, "aren't you going to knock?"

"Maybe you'd better wait outside," he said.

"WHAT would people think," she asked, "if they saw me waiting there alone?"

He wanted to ask what people would think if they went in together, but he could not very well argue there with Muriel. He turned the knob of the door without knocking and walked in.

At the end of the outer room a redheaded, freckle-faced girl was pounding on a typewriter.

"Is Mr. Garrity home?" Melville asked.

With a slight sensation of nausea he realized that he had meant to say "in" instead of "home."

"He's not home; he's inside," the r headed girl said. "Did you want to him?"

He nodded. "I want to ask him about ting into West Point," he said.

"Well, all right," the girl said. "Take your coat and sit down. Is this your sis with you?"

Melville felt his face turn beet red.

"I'm not his sister," Muriel said. "I j rode up with him on the trolley from H lowell. He's going to take me to the mov pictures when he gets through with th

"Oh," the girl said. "They don't have tures down there, do they, in Hallowell?"

"NO," Muriel answered, and she gigg "they don't have anything in Hallowell. name is Melville Goodwin. He reads ab history and battles and he's very good algebra and geometry. His father owns drugstore. My name is Muriel Reece. father is vice-president of the hat factory isn't much; there are three vice-president

Then Melville finally found his vo "Say," he said, "can I see Mr. Garrity?"

"Oh," the girl said, "you'd look kinc cute in a uniform, all over buttons. If I you get one of those uniforms, will you me a button?"

"I'll see he gives you one," Muriel s "I guess I didn't get your name."

"It's Flynn," the redheaded girl s "Patricia Flynn." She rose and opene door beside her. "There's the cutest yo couple outside, Uncle Francie," he c hear her saying. "They come from Hallow and the boy wants you to send him to W Point."

Mr. Garrity wore a conservative dark suit and he was smoking a long thin P burgh stogie. Instead of looking like a le of men, he looked like one of the o clerks in Osgood's Haberdashery.

"Well, young man," he said, "so come from Hallowell. It's a fine place, a have many fine friends there. What did say your name was?"

His name was still Melville A. Good

"You couldn't be the son of Robert G win who owns Goodwin's Drugstore?" Garrity said.

"Yes, sir," Melville answered.

"Now let me see," Mr. Garrity "Didn't your father have Orrin Curt poster in his window last election time?"

"Yes, sir," Melville said, "my father friend of Mr. Curtain's."

"Well, now," Mr. Garrity said, "ha seat, Melville. There's nothing I like b

"What is there about the Sunday papers that brings out the beast in you?"

tha s eing a fine boy who wants to enter the Un d States Military Academy, but this is elec n year. What will people say if they hea hat Francis J. Garrity has sent a Repu can boy to West Point?"

Ne ville stood up.

'Wait a minute," Mr. Garrity said. "Do you ve your country, Melville?"

'Yes, sir," Melville said.

'nd so do I," Mr. Garrity said. "Stand up raight and let me look at you."

Ne ville braced himself, and Mr. Garrity wa d around the desk and stood beside hin

'Melville," Mr. Garrity said, "you wo n't mind being in a picture with me in the papers, would you?"

'No, sir," Melville said.

Mr. Garrity pulled a pencil from his po t and drew a pad of paper toward him. 'Now let's see," he said. "The name is Mo lle Goodwin. Goodwin's a fine old Ya ee name. It couldn't be that any of yo family fought in the Revolutionary Wa "

'Yes, sir," Melville said. "My great-gre -grandfather; his name was Amos Go win."

Mr. Garrity wrote carefully on the pad. 'That is a help, Melville," he said. "What ye are you in high school?"

'The last year, sir," Melville said.

'nd you wouldn't mind if I asked the pri ipal for your marks, would you?"

'No, sir," Melville said.

'Well, now, Melville," Mr. Garrity said, 'y did the right thing coming here to see yo representative. I'm not promising, but ma e you'll get a letter from me next week. 'I'm glad to have met you, Melville."

The letter arrived one afternoon while M ville was at school, and it had been pla d on the table in the front entry with his ther's correspondence. For some reason he ad not asked if there was any letter for hi on that particular day. Probably he ha concluded that it was not good luck to as

It was six o'clock on an April evening, and th were having supper in the kitchen. W n Melville came downstairs his father w opening catalogue envelopes and laying th n in a neat pile without removing their co ents.

"More stuff comes in the mail all the ti ," he said. "I wish I had the money it a s to send it out. . . . Oh, here's a letter o you, Melville." He was holding a long G ernment franked envelope. "It's from G rity. I guess he doesn't know that Mel's o young to vote."

MELVILLE took the letter quickly and put it in is inside pocket.

"Aren't you going to read it, dear?" his m her asked.

"I guess it isn't anything much," he said. "Why, Melville acts as though it were a l letter," Celia said.

"Well, it isn't a love letter," Melville told

"I guess it isn't," Mr. Goodwin said. "It's ti len time. Be sure to tell him you want ra sh seeds, Melville."

Melville ate slowly. He said he was not go g anywhere that evening because he had to tudy his geometry. He helped his mother w the dishes, and when she asked him if he was going to do his geometry in the par- he said he would take a lamp upstairs to bedroom because it was quieter up there. I still could remember the crackling sound the envelope when he opened the letter. He shut his eyes now, he could still see its two terse typewritten paragraphs:

Dear Mr. Goodwin: It gives me great pleasure to inform you that I am nominating you for my principal appointment to the United States Military Academy. As the Hallowell High School is not on the accredited list, you must take examinations at Fort Banks in Boston in early part of February of next year.

Would you please call at my office at ten o'clock next Saturday, when I wish you to meet a representative of our local newspaper.

Very truly yours,
FRANCIS J. GARRITY

He wanted to run downstairs and shout the news, but some shadowy suspicion that there might be a catch to it must have stopped him. But he knew that he must tell Muriel before he went to sleep.

He remembered walking softly down the creaking stairs to the narrow front entry, and he seemed to arrive on the Reeces' porch by some sort of levitation. It was lucky for him that Muriel opened the door herself.

"How about going for a walk?" he asked.

"Oh, I couldn't," she said, "at this hour of night."

It could not have been more than nine-thirty, but that was an hour of night for Hallowell.

"I've got to tell you something that's happened," he said, and he said he could not tell her unless she came outside.

She wore her mother's coat. It was dark because there were no street lights then on Prospect Street, and neither of them said a word as they walked down the path.

"Mel," she said, "what is it?"

"I've got the letter," he told her. "I'm going to West Point."

"Oh, Melly," she said, and then she linked her arm through his and pressed his arm against her.

"Muriel," he began.

"Yes," she said, "what is it, Melly?"

"Muriel," he said, "will you marry me if I get through West Point?"

IT had come over him all of a sudden, when he heard that he was going to West Point, that he had fallen in love with Muriel Reece.

"Why, Mel," she said, "I'd like to very much." She sounded exactly as though he had asked her to go for a ride in the Ford or to go to the pictures in Nashua. It was going to be a long, long ride, but after all, there was no way for kids to know about anything like that.

Of course he should have told his plans to his father immediately, instead of deciding to put it off until after his high-school graduation. It never occurred to him that there would be much of an article in the Nashua newspaper. When his mother told him one afternoon in May that his father wanted him down at the store, he only thought that he was needed to open packing cases.

"Melville," Mr. Goodwin said, "come with me to the office."

His father kept his account books and papers in a small room behind the prescription room. This was the room in which he talked to salesmen when he had decided to place an order. He closed the door and seated himself in his swivel chair by the desk and pointed to the salesmen's chair beside it.

"Sit down, Melville," Mr. Goodwin said. "I want to have a little talk with you. I guess I keep forgetting that you're growing up. You may find, if you have a boy of your own, you'll forget he's growing up too. All of a sudden before you know it, there he is, grown up, and this will make you sort of sad. You'll wish you hadn't been so busy keeping shop and trying to make both ends meet. You'll wish you had got to know your boy and what he is thinking of, and about the time you get to wishing, it will be too late. I might have guessed why you ran off in the Ford to see the militia that time down in Blair. You haven't seen today's paper, have you, Melville?"

His father took down the Nashua newspaper from the top of the desk. There it was, on the front page, a picture of himself standing beside Congressman Francis J. Garrity. He read:

GARRITY PICKS HALLOWELL LAD
FOR WEST POINT

In a surprise move that has silenced many critics in this city, Francis J. Garrity announced this afternoon that he has ignored the expectations of many supporters by bestowing his principal appointment to the United States Military Academy upon the son of a registered Republican who worked for his opponent in the last election. The name of the lucky lad is Melville A. Goodwin, the son of Robert Goodwin, popular Hallowell druggist. Commenting on this selection, Mr. Garrity said today that it was made solely upon merit.

Melville looked up from the paper and saw that his father was watching him.

"Garrity's pretty smart," his father said. "This will get him a lot of independent votes. It's funny, I never knew you wanted to go to West Point."

It would have been easier if his father had been angry. As it was, his coolness and reserve showed the deepness of his hurt.

"I was going to tell you," Melville said, "but I was afraid there might be a catch to it."

His father took the paper and folded it. "It's my fault; it isn't yours," he said. "That's all I've been trying to tell you, Mel. Anyway, you did it all yourself. Let's not talk about it now. If you want, you can help me with some prescriptions. I'm pretty rushed today."

His father must have realized that the family would not see much of Melville Goodwin again, but no one at the age of eighteen could have possibly known, and eighteen was his age when he left Hallowell for West Point in June, 1915. He did not see Hallowell again until the day before Christmas, 1916, on his short Christmas leave. He returned in his cadet's uniform with its long gray overcoat and cape all buttoned and fitted to a T. He wore his uniform partly out of vanity but also because he had grown too tall and broad for his old civilian suit.

When he entered the drugstore everyone was glad to see him, but his father's look was like that of all the others, welcoming but incredulous. His father was smaller and older. The house, all fixed for Christmas with the tree, had not changed, but he had not realized how small the rooms were. All the family were there, George and Harry and Celia down for Christmas, but they also regarded him with an uneasy, questioning expression. They were his family, and at the same time he was a stranger.

The only person in Hallowell who did not seem changed was Muriel, and even with her there was a moment of uncertainty. When they stood alone in the Reeces' parlor he felt very shy. He had forgotten how beautiful she was.

"Well," she said, "well," and stood looking at him.

"You're looking fine, Muriel," he said. "You've got a new dress, haven't you?"

"Yes," she said, "and so have you. You look just like the pictures." Then she began to laugh.

"What's so funny?"

"Just you," she answered, "looking as though you weren't real. Is it against the rules for you to kiss a girl?"

The reticences of women, as I have said, were very different from those of men. Women had a different doctrine of security. They, and not the men, were usually the ones who kissed and told. Melville Goodwin, for example, only said that Muriel was just the way she had been, and he let it go at that. It was Muriel Goodwin who gave me the full details of this meeting, and it was she, too, who told most about that earlier walk in the dark when the General had asked her to marry him, but perhaps those episodes had meant more to her than they ever had to him.

"MELVILLE never was a great lover," I remember her saying, while she and I motored to New York the next morning, "but I must have always thought he was going to be. I wish you could have seen him when he came home that Christmas. He was so handsome, so distinguished. I didn't know then that he had just the usual polish that any boy gets at the Point. At first I thought I couldn't be what a boy like that would want—girls, when they're in love, are so much more romantic and imaginative than boys—but it made me want to cry when I found he was still Melville, at least he was with me. The Point makes leaders, but it can't take men away from women."

Melville Goodwin only touched briefly on West Point's relationship to love, although this subject seemed to have some place in the curriculum, judging from the popularity of hops and Flirtation Walk at the Academy. He skipped over these aspects hastily when he described his career to Miss Fineholt and Phil Bentley.

"It was certainly great to see Muriel again," he said. "Nobody knows what love is who hasn't been through Plebe Year at the Point, and that remark isn't original with me."

He was no longer Cadet Goodwin, and his mind was back with us again in the library. There appeared to be a physical change in him as he adjusted himself rapidly from one environment to another. His eyes narrowed slightly, and the lines around his mouth deepened, and everything he was telling became remote.

"Well," he said, "I'm afraid I've sort of gone overboard about all this kid stuff."

A knock on the door interrupted us. It was Oscar saying that lunch would be ready in fifteen minutes.

"And Mr. Skelton," Oscar said, "Mrs. Peale has been trying to get you on the telephone. She asked that you call her before one o'clock."

I did not want to look at the General or anyone else in the room, certainly not Phil Bentley or Miss Fineholt.

"Go ahead, Sid," the General said, "go on and make your telephone call. There's nothing we can do here until after lunch, and remember me to Mrs. Peale, will you?" General Goodwin cleared his throat. "Mrs. Peale was over in Paris with a writers' group in the winter of 1945. I had to give them a lecture on the Battle of the Bulge."

There was no reason for him to have said anything and of course he should have known better.

"Could you make them understand about the Battle of the Bulge?" I heard Phil Bentley ask. "It must have been a pretty complicated subject."

"General," Colonel Flax said, "there's only a quarter of an hour before lunch, sir."

I was not surprised to hear from Dottie Peale. Persistence was one of Dottie's greatest assets, and if she wanted something she could never exercise the virtues of patience. Obviously she wanted to find out what the General was doing and how he looked and what was happening and how much he still remembered about everything. It was impossible to prevent her from gathering this information. It was inevitable that she and the General would meet again eventually. But I did wish she could have waited for what might have been a more decent interval, and I wished that I were not the catalytic agent.

I decided to call Dottie from the privacy of my upstairs dressing room. It was five minutes to one when I called her at her publishing-company office. She must have delayed one of her inevitable luncheon engagements to wait for the call. She had undoubtedly told them at the switchboard to put the call through to her directly, because I was not connected with her secretary.

"Darling," Dottie said, and her voice sounded a little edgy, "are you in any sort of trouble? . . . Then what have you been doing that you couldn't take a minute all morning to answer a telephone call?" It was exactly like her to take such a thing personally.

"I've been busy all morning, Dot," I said.

"I suppose so," Dottie said, and I heard her laugh gently. "You're such a VIP now, darling, that you forget that other people may sometimes be busy too. It just happens that we're giving an authors' luncheon today at the Waldorf, and I ought to be at the head table right this minute. You know what I want, don't you?"

"Yes," I said, "I know what you want, in a general way."

"You're getting so cryptic and funny, dear," Dottie said. "I never thought you'd end up by making puns. All right, is the General still with you, in a general way?"

"You don't mean General Melville A. Goodwin, do you?" I asked.

"Oh, please shut up, Sid, and pull up your socks," Dottie said. "How is he, darling?"

"He's fine. He looks about the way he did in Paris," I said. "We've been in the library all morning, working on that profile."

"Oh, yes," Dottie said. "How's Phil Bentley doing?"

"I don't know," I said. "I'm a little afraid he's going to be funny with it."

"Darling, you know what friends I used to be with Phil. Do you think it would do any good for me to have a talk with him?"

"No, I think it would be a very bad idea," I said.

"Oh dear, do you think he ——" She did not finish the question, and she did not need to.

"Yes," I said, "I do. You know Phil."

"Oh, dear," Dottie said, "I don't see how things get around the way they do. Has Mel asked about me, darling?"

"Oh, yes, he's asked about you."

"Well, give him my love and tell him I can't wait to see him, will you?"

I did not answer. There was nothing I could do about it. It was not even worth while to tell her that it would not be a very good idea.

"Well, darling," she said, "you know I never want to interfere with anything, but it's such a nice day. How do you think it would be if I motored out and we all had tea at five o'clock? I haven't seen you and Helen for such a long while."

"You stay right in town," I said. "There isn't any reason for you to mix things up, Dot. Mrs. Goodwin's here."

"Oh, dear," Dottie said, "oh, dear. Sidney, you don't think she ——" Again there was no reason for her to finish the question.

"I don't know," I said, "and I can't very well ask her. Listen, Dot, why don't you run along to that luncheon?"

"Darling," Dottie said, "I've got to see you. There's something I want to see you about besides Mel. How would it be, if you won't let me come out to tea—and of course I wouldn't dream of doing that if Mrs. Goodwin's there—how would it be if you met me at the office and we had lunch tomorrow, just you and I? We haven't seen each other for a long while."

"All right," I said, "I'd like to have lunch, Dot."

"You don't think you could bring Mel, too, do you?"

"No, Dot," I said, "no, no," and she laughed as though I had said something very funny.

"Darling, I do love you, you know," she said. "Come at half past twelve. It will be heavenly to see you."

Then before I told her that it would be heavenly to see her, too, I thought of something else. "What was this other thing y wanted to see me about?" I asked.

"Well, darling, I don't suppose it's any my business. It's just a little something t worries me a little about you and Gilb Frary."

My own voice had changed. "What ab Frary and me?" I asked.

"It isn't anything. It's just someth that worries me a little bit, darling, bu can't tell you over the telephone."

I tried hard to believe that she proba had nothing to say about Gilbert Frary a that it was only her way of making sure t I would come for lunch.

No one sat down in the living room wh we returned there after lunch. I saw P Bentley look at his wrist watch, and t General saw him too.

"I'm ready to go back there if you ar the General said.

"Sidney," Helen said, "do you have to in there all afternoon? Camilla was say this morning that she hardly saw you y terday. Can't you take a walk with later on?"

THERE was no reason why I should sit at all the conferences now that everyth was moving reasonably well. "All right, said, "if the General will let me off."

Before Helen could answer, Melville Go win joined us and slapped his hand on shoulder. "Let's step outside for two m utes, Sid," he said, "and get a breath of before we start."

We were both embarrassed when He asked the same question again about milla. There was no reason at all for me be there, he said. He realized that he monopolizing me too much. When all was over he and Muriel and Helen an would have to have a long visit together soon as things were arranged in Washingt He had said just the right thing and He said the right thing back, but I knew why wanted to see me for two minutes.

"Say, Sid," he said, when we stood side in the drive, "did you call up Dottie

He had passed the stage of bringing name casually into a conversation, and haps it was better to be direct about it.

"She wanted to know how you were, told him. "As a matter of fact, I'm hav lunch with her tomorrow."

"She understands how I'm fixed h doesn't she?" the General said. "Tell h want to see her as soon as I get to N York."

"All right," I said, "I'll tell her."

"This is the damnedest thing I've e been through," the General said, "hav the Secretary ask me to wait around H and talk. Well, let's go in and keep talking."

It had occurred to me several times w the General was retailing his reminisce that the simplicity of his childhood and uncomplicated quality of his backgro must have been of great value to him i his subsequent adjustments. He was re to receive all his future, uncomplicated many quite ordinary childhood difficul There could not have been many dub channels in Melville Goodwin's subc scious mind.

If any boy wanted to go to the Point, General said, it was a pretty good thing him to start as a pretty simple kid with a few essential loyalties. It was a good th for this hypothetical young lad to have b used to eating plain food, sleeping in a room, to manual labor, and above all telling the truth. It was also desirable him not to have a swelled head or too m preconceived ideas that would only hav be knocked out of him.

You could not possibly, the General s explain the place satisfactorily to an sider any more than you could explain w went on inside yourself. Two main imp sions still stayed with him. The first wa fear that he could not make the grade could still hear the voice of the cadet jutant in the mess hall reading off the na

(Continued on Page 56)

Sonnet on Rare Animals

By William Meredith

Like deer rat-tat before we reach the clearing
I frighten what I brought you out to see,
Telling you who are tired by now of hearing
How there are five, how they take no fright of me.
I tried to point out fins inside the reef
Where the coral reef had turned the water dark;
The bathers kept the beach in half-belief
But would not swim and could not see the shark.
I have alarmed on my behalf or others'
Sauntering things galore.
It is this way with verse and animals
And love, that when you point you lose them all:
Startled, or on a signal, what is rare
Is off before you have it anywhere.

JTH ROMAN, CO-STARRING IN WARNER BROS. "STRANGERS ON A TRAIN"

UTH ROMAN, beautiful Lustre-Creme Girl, one of the "Top-Twelve," selected by "Modern Screen" and a jury of famed hair stylists as having the world's loveliest hair. Ruth Roman uses Lustre-Creme Shampoo to care for her glamorous hair.

The Most Beautiful Hair in the World is kept at its loveliest... with Lustre-Creme Shampoo

/hen Ruth Roman says..."I use Lustre-Creme hampoo"...you're listening to a girl whose eautiful hair plays a vital part in a fabulous amour-career.

n a recent issue of "Modern Screen," a com-ittee of famed hair stylists named Ruth Roman, ovely Lustre-Creme Girl, as one of 12 women aving the most beautiful hair in the world.

ou, too, will notice a glorious difference in our hair from the magic of Lustre-Creme hampoo. Under the spell of its lanolin-blessed ther, your hair shines, behaves, is eager to url. Hair dulled by soap abuse...dusty with dandruff, now is fragrantly clean. Rebel hair... is tamed to respond to the lightest brush touch. Hair robbed of natural sheen now glows with renewed sun-bright highlights. All this, even in the hardest water, with no need for a special after-rinse.

No other cream shampoo in all the world is as popular as Lustre-Creme. Is the best too good for your hair? For hair that behaves like the angels, and shines like the stars... ask for Lustre-Creme, the world's finest shampoo, chosen for "the most beautiful hair in the world"!

The beauty-blend cream shampoo with LANOLIN. Jars or tubes, 27¢ to $2.

FAMOUS HOLLYWOOD STARS use LUSTRE-CREME SHAMPOO for GLAMOROUS HAIR

CLOROX
gives you extra-gentle bleaching
...and then some!

It's a 4 in 1 product!

1 AN extra-gentle BLEACH

Besides making white and color-fast cottons and linens snowy-white and color-bright, Clorox conserves them, too! For Clorox is extra gentle... free from caustic and other harsh substances... made by a patented formula used only by Clorox!

2 A dependable STAIN REMOVER

Clorox makes numerous stains disappear as if by magic from white and color-fast cottons and linens... from kitchen and bathroom surfaces, too. Just check the Clorox label.

3 AN effective DEODORIZER

When you launder or clean with Clorox you also benefit by its deodorizing action. That is why Clorox-clean linens or household surfaces not only look clean, they smell fresh!

4 In addition CLOROX is one of the world's great DISINFECTANTS

Drainboards, sinks, wash basins, tubs, showers, toilet bowls... soiled linens, too... may harbor dangerous germs that ordinary cleaning doesn't kill. For added health protection, make these germ centers sanitary with Clorox... the most efficient germ-killer of its kind! See directions on the Clorox label.

You get all 4 in 1 with CLOROX America's Favorite

CLOROX-CLEAN means ADDED HEALTH PROTECTION!

(Continued from Page 54)

of classmates who would leave the Corps. Often he would dream that his name was on the list. That fear of separation was always his greatest drive and it drove him to elaborate care and conservatism. He had never been as relaxed as some of his other classmates, and there had not been much time for ordinary friendship on account of that fear. Yet if you were to ask any of his contemporaries, he believed that they would tell you that Mel Goodwin had not been such a bad Joe.

The other drive, of course, was the imminence of war. At his time at the Point there was a tension which might not have existed later. You knew that you were being graduated early so that you could get into the war.

There was less time in the war days for social functions, and consequently Muriel had not come to West Point often. She had been there for only one week-end hop for Hundredth Night and for a Summer Camp show until she came with her mother and the Goodwin family for the graduation and their wedding. He and Muriel were married, like a good many other girls and graduates, in the chapel the day after his graduation. He was to report at Merritt in two weeks' time to proceed to France in a school detachment.

Everything was compressed like a jack-in-the-box in those last few days, what with parades and the graduation and the ball and the details of his new uniforms and equipment, and at the end of it—marriage. He could never forget the confusion of the time. He was a cadet and a bridegroom and an Army officer all at once, and strangely enough he seemed to know very little about anything, almost nothing about routine troop duties, for instance.

When he met Muriel with her mother on the porch of the Old Hotel it was like a moment in a dream, but he was trained to handle it.

"Why, Melville," Mrs. Reece said, "you look just as though you had stepped out of a bandbox."

"That's just a part of everything here," he said. "I hope that you and Muriel had a good trip down, Mrs. Reece, and I hope your room is comfortable. Would you and Muriel care to walk around the grounds?"

"I think I'd better take a little rest and unpack Muriel's wedding dress," Mrs. Reece said. "Why don't you show Muriel the grounds of the Academy?"

It was something you always dreamed of at the Point, taking your One and Only around the grounds, and there he was with Muriel with an hour and a half to spend.

"Melly," Muriel said, "don't stand here showing off in front of everybody. Do you want to go walking or what do you want to do?"

He was not showing off in front of anybody. He was simply trying to behave in a polite and natural manner.

"Why, anything you want, Muriel," he said.

"Well," Muriel answered, "let's not stand here like two bumps on a log."

They walked past the equestrian statue of George Washington.

"Aren't you going to say anything?" she asked him. "Aren't you glad to see me?"

"Yes, of course I'm glad," he said.

"How glad?"

"Very glad," he said.

"Well, I'm glad to see you, Melly darling, and I'm awfully proud."

He was very proud of her, too, in her broad-brimmed picture hat, but it seemed strange to have anyone call him "Melly."

An officer was walking toward them as they passed the statue, Captain Folsom, his company tactical officer. It was a compliment that the captain stopped after returning his salute.

Captain Folsom during the last year had asked him several times to his quarters. They were almost friends and now they were almost brother officers. If the captain had often run him ragged, this was all forgotten. It had all been for Melville's good.

"Well," the captain said, "aren't you going to introduce me?"

Melville blushed. "Miss Reece, may I present Captain Folsom?" he said.

"How do you do, Miss Reece?" the captain said. "I recognized you from your photograph."

"Oh," Muriel said, "on Melville's shelf." She knew all about the Point from his letters.

"It's always been a pleasant moment in my inspection, seeing it," the captain said. "I'm the one who checks Mister Goodwin's locker, and I know he won't forget it, will you, Goodwin?"

"No, sir," Melville answered.

"It's a great pleasure to meet the photograph's original. You see, Mister Goodwin and I have been through quite a lot together," the captain said. "May I make a suggestion, Mister Goodwin?"

"Yes, sir," Melville said.

"If I were walking with Miss Reece," the captain said, "I know where I'd be going. I suppose you are on your way to Flirtation Walk?"

The memory of the captain smiling at him just as though he were not a cadet taught him a lesson that he never forgot. It paid to be kind to subordinates. He would have done anything for Folsom, but he was to meet him only twice again in the service, once in the War College at Washington and once dead in Africa at Kasserine Pass.

Right from the beginning Muriel understood the Army. "He's the one who's your 'tac,' isn't he?" Muriel said. "Melly, I'm glad we're going to be in the Army. Now where's Flirtation Walk?"

It was worth going to the Point to take a girl on that semirestricted walk along the Hudson. It was worth all the beating you took to do it. Muriel always understood the service and she understood, too, that there wasn't much time to learn about it back in June, 1918.

You had to remember that 1918 was some thirty years in the past. Speaking now without the aid of notes or a diary—and he had never kept a diary—it was impossible to reconstruct the sequence of events or to separate his military from his private life. The weeks before he went overseas had become scrambled in his memory like the eggs of an omelet. He could not remember exactly when he received his orders, or much, either, about his wedding in the chapel.

What more could he have asked than what was given him that June? He was marrying the girl he had always wanted to marry. He was a soldier and the biggest war the world had ever seen was getting bigger all the time. He was like a football player who had been sitting on the side lines, and now the coach was waving to him. It was a great time to be alive in June, 1918.

Muriel had gone to a secretarial school after he had left for the Point. She had been in the front office of the hat factory for two years, working for Mr. Reece and sometimes for Mr. Hallowell. It was a great relief that Muriel was able to take over the details of lodging and transportation. Muriel purchased the railroad tickets after the wedding and arranged for a reservation at the old Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on Thirty-fourth Street in New York. She had always wanted to go to the Waldorf. He had never realized what a capacity for leadership Muriel had developed until they took that wedding trip.

The old Waldorf was a big jump from the barracks and he was only a kid, still self-conscious in his officer's uniform. Everything around him was new, including his clothing roll and bedding roll and foot locker, but Muriel might have been to the Waldorf a hundred times. Somehow she knew all the finer points about porters and taxicabs.

"Just follow the bellboys and me," she said, "and ask for our reservation when you get to the desk."

He had to make a deliberate effort not to stand at attention when he asked the room clerk if there was a reservation for Lieutenant and Mrs. Goodwin. He was not sure whether he should refer to himself as "Lieutenant" or plain "Mister," but "Lieutenant"

Draperies and rugs need this protection from Sunburn!

No drapery material, no rug, no fine wood finish can withstand the punishment of sunshine streaming through your windows day after day, all year 'round. Sunburn makes fabrics fade and rot, robs wood finishes of their luster, blights the beauty of your home. Stop this costly destruction now with CLOTH window shades—a tiny investment worth hundreds of dollars in protection. CLOTH window shades, with a tough backbone of firmly woven cotton fabric, will shield your fine furnishings from harm. And, because they're CLOTH window shades and not flimsy substitutes, they'll keep their crisp, straight-hanging smartness year after year!

Valuable book free! Plain facts about window shade quality, with actual samples comparing CLOTH and cheap substitutes. Write Joanna Western Mills, Dept. A, 1351 Merchandise Mart, Chicago 54.

Joanna Western Cloth Window Shades tell the world you're a smart housekeeper!

JOANNA WESTERN MILLS CO. · CHICAGO

EASIEST, CLEANEST, QUICKEST WAY TO KILL INSECTS

Only $1.59
Other sizes 79¢ to $3.95

Touch-of-thumb releases a fine spray—reaches even hidden insects

BRIDGEPORT AER★A★SOL† INSECTICIDE is tops in killing power and speed of action—always ready for instant use!

Kills flies, mosquitoes, gnats, moths, roaches, silverfish and many other insects. It's the insecticide for virtually all household insect pests.

Buy it now at your drug, grocery, hardware or department store. †Trade Mar

BRIDGEPORT BRASS CO., Bridgeport 2, Conn
World's Leading Producer of Aer•a•sol Product

ounded better. It was a shock to him when he clerk called him "sir," and he finally igned the register as "Melville A. Goodwin, d Lieut., Inf., USA, and wife."

He was still so bemused when they went in the elevator that Muriel had to whisper him to take off his garrison cap. For a moent he felt she was wrong until he realized at he was wearing no side arms.

"Give each of the boys a quarter," Muriel hispered as they stood in the center of their om.

In all the years they were married, he ever had asked Muriel how she had learned out tips, and hats in elevators.

"Why did you sign your name 'Melville . Goodwin, 2nd Lieut., Inf., USA, and ife'?" Muriel asked. "You should have gned it '2nd Lieut. and Mrs. Goodwin, SA.'"

He never asked her, either, how she knew at one.

"It's all right, Mel," she said, "you don't ave to go back to change it. What are you ooking at now?"

"The room," he said. "I should have sked how much it costs."

"It costs a lot," Muriel said, "it costs eight ollars a day. It's all right, there's the weding-present money."

It was true that Mr. Reece and his father ad each given them a hundred dollars, but wo hundred dollars would not last long at hat rate.

"Just give me the money, Mel," she said. I'll look after the expenses. We'll go back o Hallowell before it's finished, and then ou're going overseas."

"What's in that room there?" he asked.

"It's the bathroom," Muriel said.

"What," he said, " a private bath?"

He did not mind when Muriel began to augh, or feeling like a plebe again in front f Muriel.

"Look," he said, "it's got a tub."

"Of course it has," she said. "Don't they have tubs at the Point?"

"We take showers," he said. "There wouldn't be time to let the water run into a tub."

"Well, there's time now," Muriel said. "Why don't you take a bath?"

"What," he asked, "right now?" and he did not mind her laughing at him.

"Oh, Mel," she said, "don't be so silly. Go in and turn on the water, and I'll unpack our things."

"Not my things," he said.

"Mel," she called, above the running of the water, "hand me out your breeches."

His hearing was as good as his eyesight, but he felt that there must be some mistake.

"Your trousers or whatever you call them," Muriel said. "I want to count our money."

He walked into the bedroom in his shirttails and handed her his breeches.

"Don't," he said, "don't wrinkle them, Muriel. What's so funny?"

"Just being married," Muriel said. "And I guess it's particularly funny being married to somebody from West Point."

A long time later, he and Muriel discovered that many incidents in their forty-eight-hour New York honeymoon, including that bath at the Waldorf, made a story that would set a dinner party into roars of laughter. He never suspected until he began observing other youngsters reporting for duty that their experience was in many ways universal.

The first night they were in New York they had gone to a musical comedy. Just as they were going to get in the taxi for the theater he took his first salute. Two enlisted men went by and their hands snapped up when they saw him, and Muriel had to tell him that they were saluting him.

Summer Carriage Cover and Pillow

White piqué carriage cover and pillow set with an insertion of wide rickrack. Also think of it in a rosebud percale with a colored rickrack. Makes an ideal present for a new baby. Pattern No. 2571, 15c.

Turn to Page 24 for information on how to order this direction sheet.

Sleep tonight!
on a cool cool
Dayton Koolfoam pillow

Stop that tossing and turning, punching and poking, trying to get comfort from a hot old pillow! Really sleep tonight, on a cool, cool, Dayton KOOLFOAM Pillow that's free from feather dust and allergies. Wake wonderfully refreshed!

The Dayton KOOLFOAM Pillow is different from anything you have ever known . . . it's so much softer, so much smoother . . . so much more resilient. That's because only KOOLFOAM is made by Dayton's patented process that creates uniform, round air cells, rather than irregular, reticular cells —and washes the foam in pure, natural, ultra-soft mountain water. There is nothing . . . absolutely nothing like Dayton KOOLFOAM.

Ask the women who pick it 2 to 1 over others in "see, feel, compare" tests. Ask the airlines, railroads, hotels, makers of sleeping cars for troop trains that buy it. Better still—go see! 98% of all leading department stores select it as a sales leader. Try its cool rose-petal softness against your cheek; then compare. That's all!

only $9.95
with nylon cover $10.95, De Luxe size (40% larger) $12.95, Baby Pillow $4.95
Junior Pillow $4.65
(Prices subject to change without notice)
Allergy-free . . . mildew-proof . . . clean and sanitary . . . completely washable . . . Sanforized zippered cover . . . white, pink, or blue.

Enjoy the Rest of your life!

Dayton Koolfoam pillow
TRADE MARK
The world's largest manufacturer of foam latex pillows
DAYTON RUBBER COMPANY • DAYTON 1, OHIO

The man with the hoe and his assistants break ground for spring planting. The vegetables may never come up, but the gardeners are growing like weeds, and they need plenty of healthful foods, high in nutritive value. So give them delicious milk-and-eggs desserts made with real, genuine Minute Tapioca. For instance, this

Super-special treat

Easy to fix...luscious to eat...made the real Minute Tapioca way!

MINUTE TAPIOCA CREAM WITH STRAWBERRIES

1 recipe Minute Tapioca Cream
Sweetened sliced strawberries
(fresh or Birds Eye quick-frozen)

Prepare Minute Tapioca Cream as package directs. Chill. Half fill parfait glasses with the pudding. Fill to top with alternate spoonfuls of strawberries and pudding. Serves 4 or 5—enough to provide seconds for those hungry gardeners. Easy and thrifty for you, too, now that strawberries are in season. Buy real, genuine Minute Tapioca today—no ready-made dessert can match its "country-kitchen" goodness!

REAL TAPIOCA! MINUTE BRAND TAPIOCA

FULL OF COUNTRY-KITCHEN GOODNESS!

Did you know that Minute Tapioca makes the best possible thickener for fruit pies? If your recipe calls for cornstarch, substitute the same amount of Minute Tapioca. If it calls for flour, substitute slightly less.

FREE! Over 50 recipes for pies and other delicious desserts made with Minute Tapioca. Send your name and address to Minute Tapioca, Box 815, New York 16, N.Y.

Offer expires December 1, 1951. Good only in U.S.A. Product of General Foods

After the show he and Muriel walked down Sixth Avenue and passed an open-air shooting gallery. Some enlisted men behind them were singing a snatch of a popular song. "If you can fight like you can love, good night, Germany."

"Melly," Muriel said, "let's see if you can shoot like you can love."

It was a big elaborate gallery with strings of ducks, revolving pipes and balls bouncing on jets of water. He would not have shot if two infantry privates had not called out to move back and give the lieutenant a chance. At least he knew what he was doing when the attendant handed him a .22, even if the weapon was chained to the counter. It was a nicely balanced little rifle, warm from a lot of shooting, but very dirty.

"All right," he told Muriel, "I'll try the ducks," and he knocked all the ducks over, snap, snap.

Now that he had the feel of the rifle, he went on to the revolving wheels of pipes and cleaned out three wheels of them.

"Look at that lieutenant!" the men were saying. "Go ahead and clean it out, lieutenant."

He was better at snap shooting later. There was a trick to it like anything else.

"Go on, Melville," Muriel said, but he told her that they were wasting money.

"I'll tell you what I'll do, bud," the proprietor of the gallery said. "If you knock off the balls from the fountains from left to right, you can have all the shooting for nothing."

A crowd had gathered behind him. The balls were erratic, but Muriel was there and he decided to shoot fast, even if he missed.

"One," the men began to chant, "two, three, four—look at the lieutenant—five, six, seven, eight," and then there was a groan.

"Oh, Melly," Muriel said, "you missed the last one."

"That's all right," one of the infantrymen said, "don't you mind what she calls you, Melly."

Melville set his rifle down carefully on the counter. It was his first experience with troops except for the well-trained personnel at the Point. If Muriel had not been there he would have let the matter drop, but now he had to do something. The man was a green soldier on leave, and even then Melville could see that he meant no harm.

"What's your first name?" he asked. He spoke quietly like his "tac," Captain Folsom, at the Point.

"Charlie," the soldier said.

"Charlie what?" Melville asked.

"Charlie Thompson."

"Yes," Melville said, "but Charlie Thompson what?"

"Charlie Thompson, sir."

"Atta boy," the soldiers called, "give it to him, lieutenant."

A good officer, he knew, should never get mad at troops. He was glad to remember that he had sense enough to smile. "That's right," he said, "you guessed the answer. I'll give you five dollars if you'll knock off that last ball, Charlie."

"I COULDN'T shoot that good, sir," the soldier said.

He had sense enough to know that he was as young as any of these boys and he had made his point, and he had done right, calling the soldier "Charlie."

"Well," he said, and he had the sense to smile again, "you're going where you ought to learn. Remember to squeeze and not to jerk, and hook up your collar and button up your pockets."

He smiled again at the troops and pulled out the bill that Muriel had left him to pay the gallery.

"If there's anything left over," he said, "let some of these soldiers use it. Come on, Muriel."

One of the morals of the story was to learn to handle troops right if you were going to the front and didn't want a shot in the back. Never let them get away with anything, but remember the human equation.

"Say, lieutenant, sir," one of the men said, "what outfit are you with?"

The man, being a sergeant, should ha known better. According to military cou tesy, he should have phrased his question the third person, but then he was not Melville's outfit.

"I haven't been assigned to any yet, s geant," Melville said.

"Well, I hope you get in ours, sir," t sergeant said.

"Why, thanks, sergeant," Melville sa "and here's wishing you a lot of luck. Co on, Muriel."

"Why, Melly," Muriel said, "you sound just like an officer. I mean you sounded ju like that nice man at West Point, that Ca tain Folsom."

HE had been trying to sound like the ca tain, though he felt slightly deflated becau she had guessed. It was just a good idea have a model when you started in the Arm

"It might be just as well," he said, "if y didn't call me 'Melly.'"

"Yes, sir," Muriel said, "and I'm pleas you're assigned to my outfit, sir."

It all made a pretty good story, if you t it among old friends, or even if you had make yourself agreeable to some gauc young officer and his wife, and there was other moral to that story, and he always lik to end it with that moral. The moral w don't let your wife control the situation the time. Let her handle you, but you han troops, and don't push troops too hard wh they're on leave, especially in the States.

The mass of American manpower wh poured into France that summer left m to be desired from the point of view of tra ing. It was basically excellent material, very raw, and admittedly even some of regular divisions were not yet the smoot working units that they should have been Melville Goodwin was ordered to Fra in a school detachment of officers from a r division which was still being organized the States. The officers of the school deta ment were to receive various sorts of tec cal instruction in France, after which t would meet their division at some debar tion point and assist in its final polishi This would have been an excellent idea if demand for manpower had not bec pressing after the German breakthroug the vicinity of Château-Thierry in July.

He received orders to report upon a tain date to the advance school group of t nebulous division at Camp Merritt. Mu wanted to go with him and stay somewh in New Jersey outside of Camp Merritt u the detachment sailed, but he told her t it was better to say good-by right there Hallowell. She would be all right because could go to work again in her father's o at the hat factory.

The thing to do in wartime was to away from home. Women, even Muriel, v only a complication when you were g overseas. It never helped to remember look on a woman's face when you were l ing her, even if she were as brave as Mu It was demoralizing to see a woman tryin be brave.

"I'd hate to have you stay," Muriel s "but you'll think of me sometimes, w you?"

Women, even the best of them, could help but be jealous of war. They never wholly believe it when you said you w always be thinking of them and you n believed it either. There was no use des ing the details of parting because the thi do was to get going and get away from h and to try to forget as much of those moments as you could. He hated to a when he finally said good-by, that he glad to go.

When he saw the wooden barracks an mess halls of the embarkation cente Camp Merritt and turned in his order was happier than he had been for days days. It was like coming home to arri Merritt. There was a beautiful, restful plification. An American Army post where in the world would be more like h to him in the future than any other pla

He had hardly entered the barracks had scarcely started to look over the of he school detachment, who were check- their equipment, before he saw Spike nedy, his roommate at the Point. He had r been so glad to see anyone as Spike, they stood there laughing and pounding other on the back.

"Mel," Spike kept saying, "we've got to k together."

he thing to remember, Spike said, was they were in a pretty funny crowd. tenant Colonel Redfern, the detach- nt C.O., came from the Point and had service in the Philippines Insurrection the Boxer Rebellion, but aside from him e were no other regulars in the detach- nt unless you included a former enlisted n, now a lieutenant. All the rest of these ls, Spike said, were either from the Na- nal Guard or from Plattsburg or some- ere. They had not been for more than six nths in the service.

Lieutenant Colonel Redfern had almost same attitude when Spike took Melville und to the colonel's quarters to report. lonel Redfern was in his middle forties, n and stringy, with pale blue eyes and a g, reddish face. It was only when the onel got quietly drunk by himself on the nsport that Melville began to feel that he l failings. He must have been very lonely h that school detachment, or else he would have expressed himself as frankly as he l.

"Sit down, gentlemen," the colonel said. his is a hell of a war. I never thought I'd d up taking a menagerie across the ocean. ere's even a college professor! Do you y bridge, Goodwin?"

"No, sir," Melville said.

"That's right," the colonel said. "I for- t the attitude toward cards at the Point." e colonel stared at the table in front of n. "We're getting out of here in forty- ht hours. Do you have any questions?"

"No, sir," Melville an- ered.

"Well, if you have any," e colonel said, "don't ther me with them. All e rest will, but you n't, because you're from e Point. I don't under- and civilians. Do you understand civilians, oodwin?"

"I don't know, sir," Melville said.

"Don't say you don't know," the colonel ld him. "Never try to understand them. ave as little to do with them as is reason- ly possible. You'll only get yourselves con- sed, fraternizing with those ninety-day nders. Now one thing more—our associa- n will be brief, but I might be able to ach you the rudiments of bridge. It calms e mind, it teaches patience and self-con- ol."

"Yes, sir," Melville said.

"Well," the colonel said, "we've got to t this organized. That professor, Captain ucker, plays bridge. We can sweat Rucker. ennedy, give him my compliments and tell m to report in here after supper for bridge ith you two young gentlemen."

Lieutenant Colonel Redfern was quite a rd. Heaven only knows what happened to m later. He had no future and he never ld about his past, but all the way over on e old Kroonland, Colonel Redfern had em playing bridge whenever they were not submarine lookout.

ES, Lieutenant Colonel Redfern was quite card. Melville could remember him more early than he could remember the docks St.-Nazaire. This was not peculiar, be- use one day after landing he was on a ain and three days later he was at the eadquarters of a division north of Château- hierry and an hour after that, with no food his stomach, he was on a truck moving to e front as a replacement officer for an in- ntry regiment which was to attack at awn. The Germans were retreating in the hâteau-Thierry salient, and there was no me for school detachments.

It always seemed to him that at one mo- ent he was at Merritt, the next jammed be- w decks on the Kroonland, then there was momentary view of Brittany, then a six- hour wait in a Paris station and then a trip through villages with all their roofs blown off and unburied corpses in the fields. Then there was a road in the dusk, jammed with French cavalry. It was the first and last time he ever saw cavalry in any war. Next there was the sound of shells bursting in a patch of woods, and he was walking through the woods in the dark. Then he was behind the blankets of a dugout in a regimental post of command. It was like a bad dream, but it was the Army.

"Take this officer up to C Company," the adjutant was saying.

THEN he was outside again with a guide, stumbling through the dark. He did not have even a pack or a blanket, but he did have a web belt and a .45 automatic and one of those flat tin hats of World War I. He did not know where he was going and he had not even seen a map. The company command post was in a shell hole in the woods and he was told to stay there until morning, and join his platoon at dawn. Almost without his knowing how he got there he was in the middle of an artillery duel. The 75's were firing over him and machine guns were chattering out ahead. There was nothing he could fit together, but it was a great experience.

General Melville Goodwin paused and lighted a cigarette. "It was quite a mess at Château-Thierry," he said and he was out of his chair and on his feet. "Well, we're up at the front. I admit it's taken a long while to get there. Suppose we all take fifteen minutes out. Come on, Flax."

Colonel Flax stood up instantly and followed the General out of the library.

"I was there myself, sir," I heard the colonel saying, "at a place near La Charme. . . ."

Miss Fineholt and Phil Bentley and I still sat silently, considering the life and times and metamorphosis of Melville Goodwin. He had changed from a schoolboy at Hallowell into what he was today in the course of a very brief time.

Folks like the truth that hits their neighbor.

—AMERICAN PROVERB.

"What a life!" Phil Bentley said

"Whose," I asked, "yours or his?"

"His," Phil Bentley said. "I guess we have something to be thankful for."

Then I remembered that I had promised Helen to take a walk with Camilla.

Until I saw Camilla in jodhpurs and a light brown pull-over sweater I had not realized that Helen had started her on riding lessons. All Camilla's class at the country day school, Helen had said, were going to a place called the Winding River Riding Academy, conducted by an Anglo-Irish gentleman named Mr. Delaney.

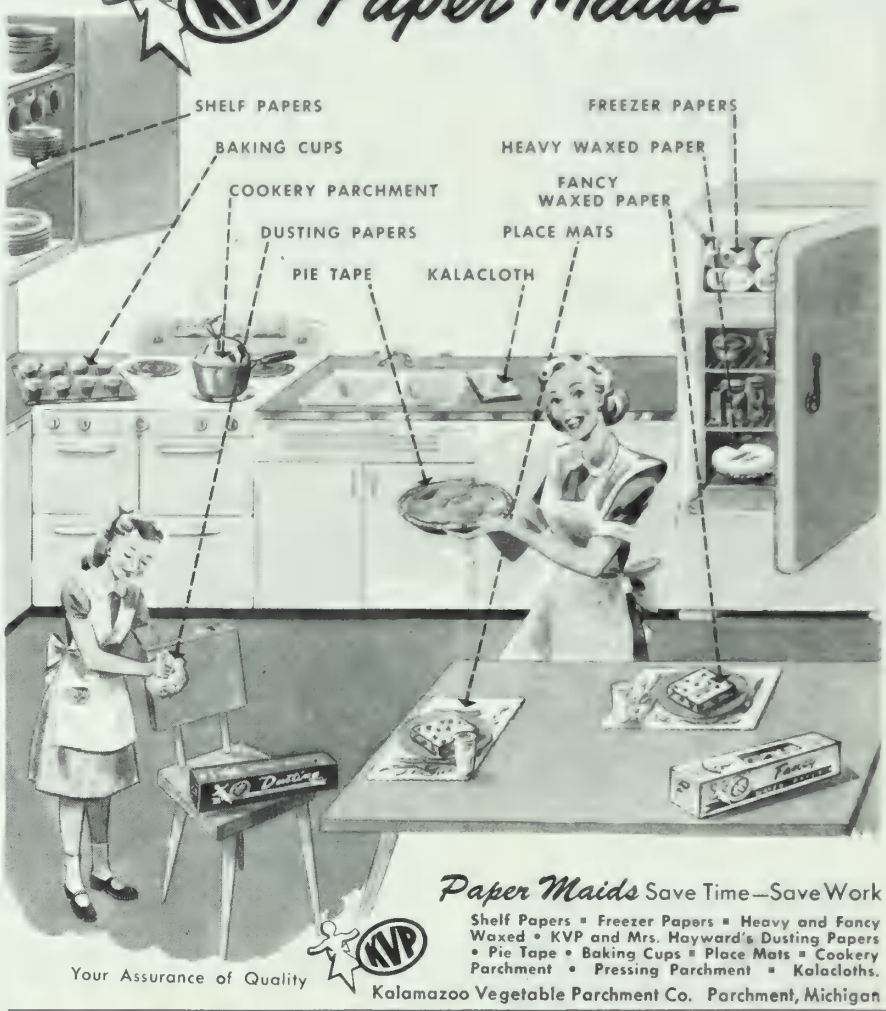
Camilla seemed to be growing away from me already, and, as often happened these days, we both struggled to find a common subject of conversation.

"Well," I said, "what did you do at riding school?"

"We rode around in a circle," Camilla said. "Mr. Delaney stood in the middle. My horse's name was Daisy."

It was exactly what a horse should have been named, and I told her it was a quiet name and I hoped that Daisy was a quiet horse.

"Daddy," Camilla said, "we never have time to have a talk. What are we going to talk about?"



It was a very good question. What were Camilla and I to talk about? As a matter of fact, we did not have to work this out immediately because when we walked around the house we encountered the General and Colonel Flax.

"Well, well," the General said, "here's Camilla. Come here and shake hands with the old man. We haven't had time to get acquainted, but we'll have time someday."

"Camilla's pretty busy," I said. "She runs on a very tight schedule."

When I saw Camilla looking at the General's stars and ribbons and timidly holding out her hand, something in her wide-eyed expression reminded me of Rudyard Kip-

FOR NEATER, EASIER LIVING
KVP Paper Maids

Your Assurance of Quality

Paper Maids Save Time—Save Work

Shelf Papers ▪ Freezer Papers ▪ Heavy and Fancy Waxed ▪ KVP and Mrs. Hayward's Dusting Papers ▪ Pie Tape ▪ Baking Cups ▪ Place Mats ▪ Cookery Parchment ▪ Pressing Parchment ▪ Kalacloths.

Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment Co. Parchment, Michigan

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

Serve Mushrooms with cottage cheese or rice; in cucumber boats or potato salad. . . . Treat the family to

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

"—it's the Quality Pack"

Enjoy these finest of Cultivated Mushrooms, picked at flavor peak; packed vitamin-fresh by a process that retains all tenderness and fresh mushroom flavor. If your Grocer doesn't have KEYSTONE Mushrooms send his name. For FREE Recipe Book write Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa.

MAKE MONEY FAST!

Sell Christmas Cards, Gift Items Stationery and Everyday Cards

Make AMAZING PROFITS calling on friends, others. Show 7 leading 21-Card $1 Christmas and Everyday boxes, Religious, Comics, Currier & Ives, Secret Pal Cards, Gift Wrappings, Ribbons, Rain Sandals, Glove Holders, Napkins, Telephone Pencils, Children's Cards and Books. New items galore.

21-CARD CHRISTMAS Assortment $1.00

OVER 150 FAST SELLERS

21-CARD ALL OCCASION Assortment $1.00

No Experience Necessary

Thousands succeed. WRITE TODAY for actual SAMPLES On Approval, Special Offers and bonus plan for yourself, club or church group.

Hedenkamp & Co. INC.
361 Broadway, Dept. L-9
New York 13, N.Y.

QUICK CASH for YOU!!

4 POPULAR PRICED IMPRINT LINES FREE SAMPLES

50 Big Money Making Christmas and Everyday Assortments. Show Friends America's outstanding line. Up to 100% profit. Samples sent on approval. PEERLESS GREETINGS, 404 S. Wells St., Dept. LJ CHICAGO 7, ILLINOIS

Deluxe ALBUM OF REAL GREETINGS

JOLLY TIME POP CORN ALWAYS POPS BETTER

TRY THIS

"mouth-watering"

BARBECUE SAUCE

1 minced onion
2 tbsp. butter
2 tbsp. vinegar
2 tbsp. brown sugar
1 tbsp. lemon juice
1 cup tomato ketchup
1 cup brown stock or water
1 cup diced celery
2 tablespoons LEA & PERRINS Sauce

Fry the minced onion in the butter. Add other ingredients in order named. Cover and simmer for an hour, adding a little water if necessary.

Double this barbecue sauce recipe if you want sufficient quantity for basting as well as serving with the barbecue.

Whenever recipes call for Worcestershire, you can be almost certain that the experts who write the recipes mean you to use LEA & PERRINS Sauce, the original Worcestershire. Always ask for it by name.

FREE RECIPE BOOK. Write LEA & PERRINS, INC. 241 West St., New York 12, N. Y., Dept. L-7

Bowled over by scorchy pans?

New "Shine meter" tests prove

BRILLO

gives

TWICE the SHINE in HALF the TIME!

Polish pans fast! Sturdy Brillo outshines all cleansers tested.

Fast. Neat. Easy! No scraping.

A square, metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap has gumption! Just slicks off gummy crust!

And Brillo has jeweler's polish—shines as it cleans! Wonderful on aluminums, casseroles, too!

Brillo now lasts longer!

More Shines in Every Pad!

RED box—soap-filled pads
GREEN box—pads plus cake soap

ling's little Una on Pook's Hill. I wondered whether she knew enough about English history to understand Puck of Pook's Hill if I should ever have time to read it to her.

"Well, well," the General said, "so you've been out riding, have you?"

"Yes," Camilla said.

"When you speak to General Goodwin," I told her, "remember to call him 'sir.'"

Both the General and Colonel Flax laughed. "Don't you mind your pappy, darling," the General said. "How'd it be if you called me 'Uncle Mel'? I used to have two little boys once myself. I'll tell you about them someday, Camilla. They were always riding bareback. They started riding at Benning. Did you ever see the children's riding class at Benning, Flax?"

"No, sir." The colonel looked at his wrist watch. "I think they may be waiting for us in the library, sir," he said.

"Oh, all right," the General said. "Are you coming, Sid?"

"I'll be back in a little while, sir," I said. "I'm just going to walk up that hill with Camilla."

"Well, don't be too long, Sid," he said. "I don't like it in there without you."

Camilla took my hand and we walked across the garden. "Daddy," she asked, "who is General Goodwin?"

Probably no one had explained him to her except possibly Miss Otts, whose views on the American Army would have been rudimentary. It was difficult to tell in a few words who General Goodwin was. I could not tell Camilla that he was a resultant of a disturbed political order or one of those people you had to maintain as an insurance against dangerous contingencies.

"He's a man who tells soldiers what to do," I said. "He has those stars on his shoulders so that anyone can tell that he's a general. The more important a general is, the more stars he has, and the more of those ribbons he has over his pocket. Some poor generals have only one star. General Goodwin has two."

"How many stars can you get to have," Camilla asked, "if you get to know everything?"

I could see where her mind was moving. They must still have been giving out stars in school as rewards for scholastic attainment.

"They can get up as high as five stars," I said, "but hardly any of them do, and when you get five stars you can have them in a circle and not in a row."

"Will he get five stars?" Camilla asked.

"I don't think so," I said, "but don't tell him I said so, Camilla. That might hurt his feelings."

"Isn't he bright enough?" Camilla asked.

"I don't know," I said. "He's pretty bright about a lot of things."

"Is he anything like Samson?" Camilla asked. "You know, like Samson in the Bible."

"Oh, Samson," I said. "Samson wasn't bright at all or he wouldn't have let Delilah cut his hair off. I don't think Samson would have been a two-star general."

Then I began to think that I might be wrong about Samson. High physical courage always had its blind spots, and even if you had five stars, perhaps there was always some Delilah in the background sharpening up the shears.

I COULD tell from the General's voice that I had missed something when I had returned to the library.

"I was waiting until it was firing over there," the General said. "I had time to get up on my knees and —— Oh, there you are, Sid. Did you have a nice walk with Camilla?"

"You made quite an impression on Camilla," I said.

I was a disturbing influence, and everyone looked impatient.

"How about it?" Phil Bentley said. "Did you throw in the grenade?"

"You're damned well right I did," the General said, "and it landed on the button, or I wouldn't be here now."

I had missed a good deal by taking time out. I had left Lieutenant Melville Goodwin in the shell hole in the woods at the P.C. of C Company, but I caught up with the story later when I read Miss Fineholt's notes.

Artillery fire, even under optimum conditions, had not developed the precision it had attained in World War II, and there were no conditions at all in the Château-Thierry salient, optimum or otherwise. It was no joke in those days to be out in front of American artillery. The artillery was firing short that night, though this was no one's fault particularly, since no one had located the front lines. In the pitch dark you could hear the shells crashing among the trees. The company command post was trying to get the regiment whose code name was Banana One, but the line was dead. He was told to stay where he was instead of trying to reach his platoon in the dark.

In the morning, he first saw gray in the sky and then the treetops and then figures moving in the woods. The night seemed to rise up slowly like a curtain on a scene of distorted confusions. No one could adequately describe the disorder of a battlefield with its litter of equipment and the senseless distribution of matériel. The captain of Company C had been killed and the commanding officer was a first lieutenant who spoke with a broad a. There was not much chance to exchange any ideas with him because this officer ended up a few hours later by being dead himself. The orders were to advance at dawn through the

---

It is my firm belief that men and women, after fifteen or twenty years of married existence, would, if given the choice to choose again, select precisely the same wife or the same husband. Even those couples who lead rather a squabbling sort of existence would not wish to change. They probably know, in their heart of hearts, that with another spouse they would quarrel a great deal more. Moreover, squabbling is a way some people have of enjoying themselves. One thing that I have realized is that couples who appear to disagree most violently are often the most devotedly attached.

—MRS. THOMAS HARDY.

---

woods, and Melville Goodwin went forward to take the command of the second platoon from a sergeant. It was not the best way to begin with troops, walking in among them out of nowhere. In fact, he did not reach his platoon until after the sergeant had blown his whistle and all he could do was to tell the sergeant to go ahead. Fortunately, the sergeant was an old Army man. His name was Riley and Melville did not need to tell him anything.

"They've pulled out, sir," the sergeant said. "It's all clear just ahead."

There was nothing to do but walk with the sergeant beneath the trees and there was not much underbrush to cope with in those French forests. The artillery fire was slackening because the guns were moving forward. Everything was moving forward, and the Germans were pulling out of that salient so hastily that only light forces were engaged.

Of course no officer, least of all a lieutenant in the first wave, could get the whole picture of an operation. Yet some individuals were born with a tactical seventh sense. It was an indescribable gift—"the feel of battle," Melville Goodwin called it in a paper he had once read before the War College. You had it or you did not have it. He could see nothing except the men of his platoon walking through the woods, but at the same time he could feel whole divisions moving—reserves, artillery and supply.

The men were wet and their faces were drawn. They were tired but not too tired. They moved ahead cautiously but not nervously. They had left their heavy equipment, but they carried gas masks, rifles, grenades and bayonets.

"Sergeant," he asked, "did the men have breakfast before they started?"

"They had corned willy and hard tack, sir," the sergeant said.

They were better off than he was, but no longer felt hungry.

"What about water?" he asked. "their canteens filled?"

"We've about run out of drinking wat the sergeant said.

"Have they got chlorine tablets?"

"Yes, sir," the sergeant said.

"Then have them fill their canteens next place where there's a well or any r ning water," he told the sergeant, "and that each of them drops in about six table

"Yes, sir," the sergeant said, peering the woods ahead.

He knew now that the sergeant must h thought he was a little squirt, but it w sensible order.

HE saw that the trees were thinning a that they were reaching the edge of woods. Everything was quiet except for rustling of branches and the snap of sm twigs underfoot and the dripping from trees and the distant artillery, until sudde he heard machine guns on the right fr and the crack of bullets passing close o head.

"Tell the men to lie down, sergeant," said.

Perhaps he should have given the or himself, but then the men had hardly s him. They were approaching a line of res ance, but it was only a hasty improvisat by the enemy to afford a delay which wo facilitate his retreat.

"Come with me, sergeant," he said, a they crawled to the edge of the trees.

"Easy," he heard the sergeant whis "You gotta watch it, lieutenant."

The sergeant did not need to tell him. was crawling as he had been taught, w gling and pulling himself with his kn and elbows, taking advantage of the grass at the edge of the wood. A pretty pastoral scene lay before them, a broad o field of hay which had not yet been harvested but which was too short and tramp to afford cover. The ground ahead rose gr ually to a low ridge crowned by another pa of woods. It was a good two hundred ya across that field to the woods on the cr When he looked to his right he saw why gun there had revealed its position, becau handful of bodies lay sprawled in the o field. Then in his interest he raised his h too far—two inches higher and he wo have been dead. Another machine gun opened fire from the woods directly on front. He lay flat with his face in the m earth, but he had seen its flash near the tr of a large oak tree, and the fresh earth of emplacement.

"It's right up there," he said.

"You ought to know, sir," the serge answered and they crawled back to the toon.

Just then a runner came with word t Lieutenant Johnson wanted to see him. E in this short interval everything had b moving up behind them until the wo were jammed with troops. Lieutenant Johnson was talking to a freckled, sandy-hai major who, Melville guessed, would be battalion commander. Lieutenant Good saluted smartly.

"Never mind that now," the major s "Who's this officer, lieutenant?"

"He just came up last night, sir," the tenant answered. "I can't remember name."

"Well, a name helps," the major s "What is it?"

"It's Goodwin, sir."

"All right," he major said. "What h you stopped for, Mr. Goodwin, are tired?"

Melville reported the situation quic and concisely. He was even able to tak pencil and paper and sketch the positio the major's notebook.

"Very pretty," the major said. "Take up there and show me the original. We c wait here all day."

They were faced with the same old p lem that cropped up in any battle, the lance of loss of life against element of t That light defense in front would be ove

(Continued on Page 62)

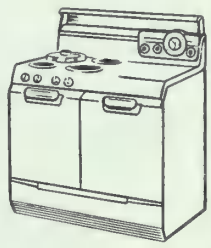
BUY-LINES • by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING PAGE

I COOL and be free as a breeze every day this summer . . . even those "inevitable" days that no woman can escape. How? Why, just depend on TAMPAX for monthly sanitary protection . . . for it not only frees from the heat and discomfort of rnal belts and pads, but is discre- itself in a bathing suit, thin dresses scanty play-shorts. That's because MPAX is worn internally . . . can't be or felt or interfere with any activity. chafing and no odor is possible, er . . . and you can wear it in tub shower as well as in swimming. MPAX is the invention of a doctor, and is made of extremely absorbent ical cotton compressed into dainty e applicators . . . easy to insert, quick hange and no trouble to dispose of. be TAMPAX wise this summer . . . by the happy relief it affords from heat worry.

WAYS SMILE YOUR PRETTIEST . . . don't the painful hurt of a corn or callous a frown on your pretty face. How can help it . . . because when your feet t you hurt all over? It's easy . . . just use R. SCHOLL'S Zino-pads at the first t of sore, chafed, red toes or callouses. ese super-soft, soothing, cushioning, tective pads not only bring you quick, come relief, but even stop corns and louses before they start. But if they've eady developed, the separate medica- ns in each box remove them f-a-s-t . . . fact, it's the quickest corn and callous moving medication of its kind known to dical science. And now is the best time now for you to get relief from your foot ubles . . . during DR. SCHOLL'S Foot mfort Week (June 23–30). You'll find DR. SCHOLL Foot Aids you need at ur Drug, Shoe, Dept. and 5–10¢ Store w . . . not only during Foot Comfort eek but all year around!

IT'S easier than you think to keep cool during the sunny, sultry summer . . . just follow these simple rules and see. Lots of showers of lukewarm water come first . . . followed by a lavish sprinkling of chilled cologne. And wear cotton lingerie . . . for it absorbs perspiration. You'll feel cooler and look prettier if you wear stockings, too . . . with light airy shoes to let the breezes in. Doctors say you'll stay cool longer if you have one hot dish at every meal . . . and I can vouch for it.



HAVE THE URGE to improve your cooking . . . as well as make it easier? Well, what you need is a new GENERAL ELECTRIC Triple-Whip Mixer . . . for it has feature after feature that I can assure you will make endless dishes taste better and give you extra leisure time. For example:

A G-E Triple-Whip Mixer gives you a new, improved speed selector out in front . . . lets you get just the right amount of power no matter what you mix. There are three powerful beaters that beat from center to side of bowl and give you ideal mixing action . . . yet they're a cinch to clean and dry since there are no center shafts to get in your way. And in the G-E Triple-Whip Mixer the built-in light shines directly down into the bowl . . . spotlighting those fancy whipping jobs. You get a 2-quart and 4-quart bowl with every mixer, too . . . but learn all about it first-hand at your G-E Dealer's.

FREE Color-Illustrated Recipe Booklet with 56 delicious treats . . . write Nancy Sasser, Dept. S7, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

ASK ANY GOOD COOK . . . she'll tell you that timing a home-cooked dinner so that everything's ready to serve all at once . . . is really an art. And now even a beginner can master that art with FRIGIDAIRE'S amazing "Wonder Oven" Range. For with the "Wonder Oven", you can bake and broil at the same time . . . in the same oven! Foods no longer have to "wait their turn" to go in the oven—and everything's ready at once! Just imagine—while you're broiling or roasting your meat in one oven, you can be baking your dinner rolls, potatoes, or dessert in the other . . . at the same time! But that's not all. Simply slip out the center Divider and slide it into its bottom position and presto! . . . you have one huge oven with abundant space for even the most massive holiday turkey!

Visit your FRIGIDAIRE Dealer. See the new "Wonder Oven" Range and FRIGIDAIRE'S complete range line. See them all, then choose the one designed for YOU!

SUMMER TIME IS YOUR TIME to take a "vacation" from the kitchen . . . so turn your catering over to DEMING'S Sam-O-Lets. It's a deliciously-different kind of salmon your family will love . . . light in color, delicate in flavor, with the skin removed. It's a "boon" to your budget, too . . . as well as quick 'n' easy to fix into an elegant party dish. These Deviled Sam-O-Lets are a good example . . . why not try 'em tonight?

Hard cook 6 eggs, cool, remove yolks from whites. Mash yolks, season with ½ tsp. prepared mustard, 1 tbsp. Worcestershire sauce, 2 tbsp. mayonnaise, salt and pepper to taste. Add ½ cup (½ can) DEMING'S Sam-O-Lets. Fill egg white halves with mixture. Garnish with chopped parsley. Use remaining Sam-O-Lets for delicious salmon sandwiches.

And for more good eating at budget-beating prices, get DEMING'S Sirloin Salmon (that old favorite Alaska Red Sockeye) with skin removed . . . and DEMING'S Recipe Pink Salmon in the regular pack.

ACCEPT MY INVITATION to cooling refreshment these hot July days . . . by serving tall glasses of sparkling DEL MONTE Unsweetened Pineapple Juice often. I think it's the perfect juice for all-round use . . . wonderful with meals and snacks. But that's only natural . . . because DEL MONTE'S exclusive strains of pineapple have true tropic flavor and are picked only when natural tartness and sweetness are in perfect balance. That's why it's not too tart, and not too sweet . . . but the most refreshing Pineapple Juice you ever tasted. Think I'm exaggerating? Well, compare DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice with any other brand . . . 'n' judge for yourself! It's good for you, too . . . abounds in natural fruit sugars and is a good source of Vitamin C. So why not keep several BIG cans on hand all the time . . . you'll need plenty once your family and guests taste this wonderful juice.

FOR A BANG-UP PICNIC on the Fourth of July, or any date for that matter, there's one thing for certain-sure . . . the cold drinks must be really ice cold and all the foods fresh and crisp. And as far as I'm concerned, there's only one answer to that . . . a handy little Picnic Ice Chest. Here's how I manage our outings . . . I pick up the extra ice I need, put it into my Picnic Ice Chest with the food and beverages . . . then slip it into the luggage compartment of our car. I know you'll love having one, too . . . especially when you learn how inexpensive they are. So ask your local Ice Company about a Picnic Ice Chest today. And at the same time ask them for the address of the nearest Ice Vending Machine or Ice Station where you can pick up extra ice . . . the pure, crystal-clear, taste-free, slow-melting kind that only an Ice Company can make.

E YOU A BORN BEAUTY? It really doesn't matter . . . for ay's woman is blessed with a alth of beauty secrets that can ri- even Mother Nature. But, of rse, it's up to you to use them to vantage . . . which is why I'm re- nding you again that a CO-ET is ur best bet for all your beauty atments. That's because these fluted ton squares are wonderfully soft, ooth and absorbent . . . perfect for applying home rmanent wave solutions and lotions . . . as well as moving eye shadow, lipstick, excess cold cream, etc. ke to sun-bathe? Then protect your complexion with a efore-and-after" facial . . . like this:

fore . . . apply cleansing cream, remove excess with a O-ET, then rub in sun tan lotion with a clean CO-ET. er . . . use another CO-ET to smooth in a rich lubricating . . . leave on 30 minutes.

O-ETS cost only 35¢ for the large economy package th 80 fluted cotton squares, 19¢ for 40 . . . at all Drug d Cosmetic Counters.

CONFUSED by all you read and hear about shampoos . . . can't decide which one will really do the most for your hair? Well, if I were you, I'd be guided by that famous beauty authority, John Robert Powers . . . he recommends KREML Shampoo to all his models. Why? Because, unlike many shampoos that contain drying ingredients, it has a natural oil base . . . helps keep hair silken soft, an angel to manage and encourages any natural curl. I particularly like its special cleansing qualities . . . the way it brings out all your hair's natural highlights and makes it glisten with natural, glossy sheen. Easy to see why Powers Models depend on KREML Shampoo to keep their hair gloriously soft and radiantly lovely . . . and why I urge you to make it your shampoo from now on.

And do introduce your "Mr. Who" to KREML Hair Tonic in the handsome new package at the lowest cost in KREML history. P. S. The 16-oz. size saves you up to 40¢.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE learns one thing early in her career . . . that Johnson's BABY OIL plus Johnson's BABY POWDER "equals" baby-safe protection against irritation, chafing and prickles! Why? Because both these fine products are made especially to "agree" with baby's tender, sensitive skin by America's foremost makers of baby products . . . Johnson & Johnson. So keep them on your nursery tray . . . and then:

Smooth on mild, pure Johnson's BABY OIL at every diaper change . . . and apply to baby's scalp and body after every bath . . . for it helps prevent irritation and keeps baby's skin soothed and smoothed. Sprinkle on silky-soft, delicately-scented Johnson's BABY POWDER often . . . such a pleasant way to chase away prickles and chafes . . . keep baby comfy and contented.

But why go on . . . I know you want the best for your baby and you can trust these two wonderful Johnson's Baby Products to give him baby-safe protection against prickles and irritations. So get both today . . . and use them regularly.

(Continued from Page 60)

eventually. The only question was how soon and at what cost. Obviously it was necessary to test the strength of the position before deciding to wait for heavy weapons. In a few minutes there must be an approach.

That defense could have been brushed aside in modern war, but in World War I, the machine gun was an ace that was hard to beat. With a few well-placed automatic weapons, a handful of enemy specialists who were willing to die could delay a whole division and snarl up the timetable.

The plan was improvised right there in the woods. The attack was ordered along the regimental front, and his platoon was in it. He had only time before the show started to find a haversack and fill it with four grenades. He was to lead the platoon, of course, and he remembered that he was shaking—you often got involuntary shakes before a jump-off—but he was conscious of a detached academic interest through the minutes of preparation. He had the sense to examine the contours of the slope ahead and to take note of a fold of ground about seventy-five yards in front that might afford some shelter. Beyond this he saw there was a depression He could see the fresh earth of the gun emplacement on his front, and to the right he could see another. Haste had denied the Germans the refinements of concealment, and none of those guns supported each other perfectly, two facts which explained why he came through that attack alive.

He pointed out the fold of ground to the sergeant, and also the depression beyond it. When he told the platoon to follow him, his voice had an unwelcome quaver. He had often dreamed, both asleep and awake, of leading a real attack, but now that he was in motion, the ground was not solid and he seemed to move with exasperating slowness. Then he found himself flat on his belly behind that bulge of ground with half the platoon there with him. German machine guns had rather narrow traverses, and they could not fire everywhere at once, and the gunners had no time to pick up the whole weapon in order to fire at a wider angle. This explained why half the platoon reached the shelter.

As he lay there, catching his breath, he saw that the whole advance had been checked halfway across the field. He could see the dead and wounded on the open ground, and small pockets of the living pinned down by the fire. His platoon was out ahead and a glance at the woods behind him showed that the attack was not being pressed. His men lay in temporary safety, although bullets were gouging the crest in front of them. If they could wriggle up that hollow toward the oak tree, they might knock out the gun with grenades. There were twenty yards of open space between the hollow and the rise that sheltered them and the winding hollow.

"Follow me," he called.

The Jerries did not quite catch him before he reached the hollow. Only the sergeant and a private went with him. He never could blame the others for staying where they were.

He would not try to describe that crawl up the hill. He could only admit that he was shot with luck and besides, the nearer you got to an emplacement the harder it was to get you. When he reached the crest, he remembered rising to his knees with a grenade in his hand and pulling out the pin and seeing the newly dug earth and a German helmet. Then he threw the grenade and fell flat. He got up again directly after the explosion. He had hit the nest right on the button.

"Come on," he heard himself calling, "come on."

He had another grenade ready in his hand as he ran through the trees to the emplacement on the right. Perhaps he was two minutes in reaching it. He came on it suddenly from the rear. The gun was firing, and its noise must have prevented any of the crew from hearing him. As he crouched behind a tree before tossing the grenade, he had a glimpse of the gray backs of the gunners. The air was full of dirt and stones and the gun had stopped before he could throw another. The Germans who weren't dead were in a daze. There was one thing in particular he did not like to remember—a German officer smeared with blood, staggering toward him with his hands above his head and then the sight of Sergeant Riley, running him through with a bayonet. He could still remember his amateurish wonder at the sergeant's struggles to pull the bayonet out. Then it seemed as though everyone had followed him, not just the sergeant and the private. The attack had carried through.

He grew accustomed to the sight of corpses later, since sudden death and mutilation were sequels to any action, and after all, war in itself was a grotesque abnormality, but this was his first day in a practical school. The mangled bodies of those Germans around their gun brought home to him all in a rush the enormity of what he had been through, and a spasm of nausea swept over him. He staggered weak-kneed to a tree, leaned against it and retched. Though later he had seen other good men succumb to this and to more humiliating forms of bodily weakness, he could never quite forgive himself. It was all well enough to explain that exertion and emotion had put an undue strain on him. It was a mortifying anticlimax. All he could do was lean against the tree, shaking with the spasm. At any rate, that was how the regimental commander found him.

H. J. Jeffers was commanding the regiment then. Later, after the Armistice, when the colonel once alluded at brigade-headquarters mess to their meeting, Melville was glad that he was able to laugh about it.

He had been leaning against the tree only half conscious of what was being said or done around him when he heard a voice ask if that was the officer. Someone slapped him hard on the shoulder. When he turned around he saw that Colonel Jeffers, in a muddy trench coat, had been addressing him. Beside the colonel was the major, and a French officer in horizon blue. When he saluted, his diaphragm and intestines were still chasing each other inside him.

"I'm sorry, sir," he said.

"That's all right," the colonel said, "quite all right, lieutenant. What did you say his name was, major?"

"He told me, but I've forgotten, sir," the major said. "He just came up last night. . . . Sergeant," the major called. "Where's the sergeant? Come here, sergeant."

Melville found himself standing with the sergeant as though they were two schoolboys led out before the class.

"This is Sergeant Riley, sir," the major said, "Second Platoon, C Company. . . . Tell the colonel what you told me, sergeant."

The sergeant was an old-timer, but he had been overwrought himself. "Sir," the sergeant said, "the lieutenant got the both of them."

Then Melville found his voice. "There was a private with us, too, sir," he said.

"Jackson, sir," the sergeant said. "He's dead."

The colonel pulled a notebook from his pocket. "What's your name, lieutenant?" he asked.

"Goodwin, sir," he answered, "Melville A. Goodwin."

"Do you feel all right now?"

"Yes, sir," Melville said.

"Then walk along with us, Mr. Goodwin. We'd better catch up with things. This is Captain Bouchet, and we don't want Captain Bouchet to tell his general that we're loafing around here."

There was a gentle undercurrent of appreciative laughter.

"It is a pleasure to meet the lieutenant," the Frenchman said.

Those French liaison officers were all smooth and hand-picked for the job of establishing cordial relations. It was only good luck that the captain was there, itching to pass out Croix de Guerres. Melville never knew until later that he was getting the Distinguished Service Cross out of it too. He was pretty hot that day; it was all good luck.

On the other hand, there weren't any colonels or Frenchmen around when he led a patrol across the Vesle River and returned with sixteen German prisoners. No medal except a Purple Heart was passed out when he got his bayonet wound in the Bois des Rappes. Actually both those occasions had demanded more skill and guts and leadership than that episode in the Château-Thierry salient. Further, he had seen a lot of others, both officers and enlisted men, who had done more than he ever had beyond the call of duty without even getting a word of commendation. He was luckier than a great many others, and that was about all there was to say.

Lieutenant Goodwin was with the Army of Occupation for a while at Coblenz, but he was detached and sent home as a casual officer from Brest in June, 1919. He returned to the States on an antiquated passenger ship filled exclusively with other unattached officers from every branch of the service, most of whom hoped to leave the service as soon as they got across, particularly the junior officers.

Major General Goodwin paused.

"What did you do when you landed?" Philip Bentley asked.

"Why," the General said, "as soon as I could get to a telephone I called up Muriel, of course, and she said she'd come down to New York."

"What did you do after you telephoned?" Phil Bentley asked.

"After I telephoned," General Goodwin repeated, "I took a taxicab and went to the Waldorf and got a room and took a bath, and do you know what I did that night?"

"No," Phil Bentley said.

"Well, son," the General said, "I didn't do any of the things you might think I would. I strolled down to that shooting gallery on Sixth Avenue and knocked off all the pipes. It made me think of Muriel." The General rose from his armchair. It was late in the afternoon. "Let's break this up," he said. "Come on, Flax, let's go for a walk."

Phil Bentley looked at me and took off his glasses and polished them. "I wish I could get it straight in my mind why I should begin to like Goodwin," he said.

Miss Fineholt closed her notebook. "He's sort of cute," she said. "He's so clean-cut. It makes him sort of cute. I wish I had been there when he was shooting those pipes in New York."

Helen was reading upstairs in our dressing room, and when I came in she asked me how everything was going.

"Well," I said, "he's through World War I and he's back in New York."

"Sid," Helen said, "just how long are they going to stay?"

"It can't be much longer," I said. "Mrs. Goodwin's leaving for Washington tomorrow. I'll take her into town myself, and you can leave the rest of them alone."

"You didn't tell me," Helen said. "When do you have to go to town?"

I had forgotten. I had been so involved with Melville Goodwin that I had not told her of my telephone conversation with Dottie Peale.

"If I don't have lunch with her," I told Helen, "she'll drop out here at any minute. You know Dottie."

I did not mention my concern about Gilbert Frary, because there was no immediate need to worry her.

"What do you suppose she really wants to do about him?" Helen asked.

This was something I could not possibly have answered.

"Well, anyway," she said, "as long as she doesn't do anything about you."

Women were always competitive. There was no reason at all why Dottie Peale and Helen should have liked each other, but Helen was always very nice about her. All through that time she was nice about Dottie Peale and the General and me and everything, and it must have demanded a lot of self-control.

I was thinking next morning when Helen was putting Mrs. Goodwin's suitcase in the Cadillac, just before we left for New York, that the Goodwins had learned all the techniques of farewell. They had been saying good-by to each other through two wars and in the interim between, and they had learned how to do this officially before an audience.

"Good-by, Melly," Mrs. Goodwin said. "Now don't tell that Mr. Bentley anything you shouldn't, and call me up tonight."

Melville Goodwin smiled at Helen and then at Mrs. Goodwin. "Don't you worry any," he said. "And don't seduce any of the Joint Chiefs before I get down. Remember they've got a lot of private rooms in the Pentagon."

"What about you?" Mrs. Goodwin said. "I don't know whether we ought to leave him alone here with Helen. Do you think so, Sid?"

It was all good clean fun and it showed that the Goodwins felt at home. When Mrs. Goodwin kissed Helen she said she had never thought we could all get to be such friends so soon, and she said we must come to visit them just as soon as they found out where they were going to be.

"You know, I can't wait," Mrs. Goodwin said when we started off together for the city, "for Mel and me to have a little place of our own somewhere after Mel retires. We can't wait to be settled somewhere instead of always moving from one post to another. Army houses are all alike, you know, even the furniture."

Mrs. Goodwin was used to motor transport as well as making conversation. She took another washcloth from her handbag and began working on it.

"It's so nice to be driving to New York," she said, "instead of taking a train, after you've been so generous looking after Melville, Sid. I wish I could have been with you when the General was being interviewed. He seemed a little tired last night."

"I should think he would have been," I said.

"No one would notice it except me. It is hard to tell when he's tense, but he seemed worried about something last night."

"Worried?" I repeated.

Mrs. Goodwin glanced up at me. Though I looked ahead at Henry's back, I could feel that she was watching me. "Melville said you are going to have lunch today with a mutual friend, a Mrs. Peale. He wrote to me about her from France. She's a writer or publisher or something, isn't she? She sounds very interesting."

"Yes, she's pretty interesting," I said. "We used to work on the same newspaper together once."

I could detect no change in her voice, no undue curiosity, but I could still feel that she was watching me and not her washcloth. "It's queer how seldom Melville gets c

(Continued on Page 65)

Holiday

By NANCY HALE

Here time is drowned in summer, the deep sea
That sways on drowsy tides, swings in, draws out,
Bearing the days like driftwood on the swell.
Is it July?
Don't think; don't ask what day
It is; don't stir to find your place
In summer; be at ease and lie
In these deep arms; only observe the dawn,
The sun of noon like a red flower, rain
That starts and stops, the sunset on the clouds.
And sleep at night. Forget the time, the I,
And swim in summer.

Time for Ideas— a timely service from the meat industry

You'll find the recipe for this "something different" dish on the next page. Show this picture to your husband and ask him how he would like some tomorrow night.

New Swank for Franks

Red Devil Franks

Mrs. Ray F. Swanson of Galesburg, Illinois, passes along this idea. A satisfying, glamorous and easy-to-prepare meat meal that helps take the strain off the budget.

Ideas are often more important than money.

There's a lot of credit due women who find a way to take the less expensive things and make them look like a million, whether it's making over a dress, redecorating the living room or preparing a meal.

The case of the glorified frankfurters explains what we mean by a woman with an idea. This dish is something you can be happy and satisfied to set before the pickiest husband. Also it's your private assurance that you are doing a fine job with the meat money at hand.

We in the meat industry are hopeful that we can continue to contribute ideas here and there, with pages like these, to help women along with the job of keeping meat, always in tempting form, on the table regularly, yet with an eye peeled on the budget.

Why meat is called "Yardstick of Protein Foods"

Meat is our No. 1 source of complete protein—the kind needed regularly by everybody for feeling and looking his very best. This complete, high-quality kind of protein does many wonderful things: It is needed to build sound muscles, good red blood . . . It promotes more rapid convalescence after injury or surgery . . . It is needed to keep you going longer without fatigue . . . It is the key element of the modern reducing diet . . . Meat is also an abundant source of essential B vitamins and minerals.

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE
Headquarters, Chicago • Members throughout the U. S.

Nourishing Meat—yardstick of Protein foods

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

This Seal means that all nutritional statements made in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

Ideas for Franks -or putting the wiener to work for your budge

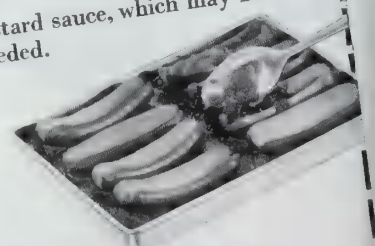
Red Devil Franks—Those winning wieners are a happy thought to build many a meal around. For instance, try 'em in a menu like this:*

Chilled Pineapple Juice

RED DEVIL FRANKS ON BUNS

French Fried Potatoes — Tossed Green Salad



Chocolate Cake — Milk or Iced Tea

How to prepare the new "Red Devil Franks"

HOW TO PREPARE THE NEW

RED DEVIL FRANKS

The new twist is the zippy, not-too-hot barbecue-mustard sauce, which may be prepared in advance, kept in the refrigerator until needed.

1 lb. frankfurters or wieners (8 to 10)
4 tablespoons butter, margarine or salad oil
1 cup finely chopped onion
2 cloves of garlic, minced
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1½ tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
1½ tablespoons prepared mustard
1½ teaspoons sugar
½ cup chili sauce

Cook onion and garlic in fat over low heat until onion is tender (about 10 minutes). Stir frequently so as not to burn.

Add all other ingredients. Continue heating till flavors are well blended (about 5 minutes).

Split frankfurters lengthwise, arrange them split side up in shallow pan. Spoon sauce over frankfurters and heat under broiler as in illustration.

Serve piping hot on frankfurter buns, piling on extra sauce.

You'll want to use this recipe

Red Devil sauce is also a natural for spareribs, hamburgers, leftover roast beef or pork. It keeps well in the refrigerator, so why not make up a double or triple recipe?

"I'm a Frank"

Look at my gentle curves—not a bone in my whole body. I'm part pork and part beef—and all good. I'm a snap to prepare, and I carve with a fork. Kids love me—and I love kids because I'm so digestible and my skin's simply packed with nutrition. I team up with everything. I'm fun on a bun. I'm handy, dandy and no waste at all. I'm the Friendly Frank. Buy me by the pound and always keep me on hand!

The Gentle Art of Heating a Wiener

They're already cooked when you buy them, so, when you're heating frankfurters in water, just let them simmer 8 to 10 minutes. Don't boil. You'll keep the good meat juices inside the franks instead of in the cooking water. To pan-fry: Fry wieners in a small amount of fat in heavy skillet until lightly browned. Use low heat; turn frequently. Be careful not to pierce the skins.

Bright idea for picnickers

Don't be fazed by "No Fires Allowed" signs at your favorite beach or park picnic spot. You can have piping-hot frankfurter sandwiches and be the envy of the crowd. The trick: heat 'em at home, pack 'em in a vacuum bottle and take 'em with you.

Two other good ways to make the family say "Thanks for Franks"

Slice 'em for hot potato salad
Cut six franks into crosswise slices. Dice six medium potatoes (4 cups) that have been boiled in their jackets and peeled. Heat together in dressing made by browning ¼ cup each of chopped onion and green pepper in bacon drippings. Add ½ cup water, ½ cup cider vinegar, sugar, salt and pepper to taste.

Stuff 'em for broiler meals
Have you tried splitting franks, inserting a stick of cheese, wrapping with bacon and then broiling? Try these tasty variations, too: Stuff 8 to 10 franks with a mixture of 2 cups hot mashed potatoes well blended with ¼ cup each of grated American cheese and finely minced onion. Broil 10 to 15 minutes. Or, try a stuffing of sauerkraut moistened with catchup.

WIENERS AWAY!

If all the "friendly franks" produced each year by America's meat packers were stretched "link to link," they would reach to the moon and back—with enough left over to reach 6 times around the world—650,000 miles. Actually, in 1950 you and other Americans ate 7½ billion frankfurters, which is a lot of fun on anyone's table (or at ball park or picnic).

Send 5¢ for this booklet for more help in making the most of meat. Contains 32 tested recipes along with buying information and serving suggestions. Just send 5¢ in coin to American Meat Institute, Dept. L 1, Box 1133, Chicago 77, Ill.

P.S. Your own favorite ideas for making the most of meat may be helpful to other women in these times. Won't you send them along?

(Continued from Page 62)

l gets on, with people outside the serv-
" she said.
I suppose it's because he leads a speed sort of life," I answered. "Now pera ly I often find it hard to get on with peoin the service."
or some reason she seemed astonished her voice grew warmer, and at least we off the subject of Dottie Peale.
Why, you don't act that way at all," she

Back in World War I," I said, "we were ng the General what he did when he ed in New York. He said he called you n Hallowell."

remembered all of it very clearly. We going down the Merritt Parkway, but . Melville Goodwin was leaving Hallofor New York to become an Army wife,
, watching her expression, I could imagow she must have looked. She must have ed both very competent and very pretty.
I wish you could have seen Mel," she
. "He was in his overseas cap and his Sam wne belt, and he had those ribbons and ad his hair cut short, just the way he rs it now. He looked a whole lot more like ldier than anyone else in Grand Central tion. As soon as I saw him I knew Mel just the same. He always has been the ie. Then he told me we were going to e a month's leave and that then we were ng to Fort Bailey. That was because of medal. Everybody doesn't get to Bailey."
Where's Bailey?" I asked.
What?" she said. "Seriously, haven't ever heard of Bailey? It's where they e the small-arms school, out in Texas."
That was where the Goodwins started sekeeping. It was scorching hot in sum-and miles away from anywhere. You ld hear the machine guns going every rnoon out on the range.

I had never heard of Fort Bailey, but I was at Bailey with Muriel Goodwin all the way to New York and the Pennsylvania Station. Robert, their eldest son, had been born there at Bailey.

I left her with a porter on the Pennsylvania side.

"Good-by, Sid, dear," she said, and, though I was startled when she called me "dear," I felt that I had known her for a long, long time.

"Where to now, sir?" Henry asked me.

It was ten minutes before twelve, but Dottie Peale had asked me to meet her at the office early. It was always a part of Dottie's stage direction to show off that office of hers at Peale House. Anyone going there could not help but realize that Dottie should be taken seriously.

The Peale Publishing Company was what the book trade called "a fine old house" and sometimes "an old-line house." It published a sound backlog of textbooks and a book called Mrs. Gosling's Cookery, which, with occasional revisions, had been a popular seller for fifty years, but the Peale money was only partially derived from this enterprise. Henry Peale's grandfather had been fortunate enough to invest his savings in Mr. Alexander Graham Bell's telephone and in Calumet and Hecla Copper.

Henry's father had never cared for books and authors. Instead he had collected pictures of the French school, and a part of the Peale collection was now in the Metropolitan.

Henry Peale, on the other hand, must have always been what was called literary. It had never been possible for me to grasp all the details of his life, which had been led along the elaborate lines of wealthy boys who had lived out their early manhood around the turn of the century. He had been a shy, retiring, serious-minded boy, educated by private tutors until he went to Yale, and he was always quiet when I knew him. As Dottie often said, it was very hard for Henry ever to get out of himself, and you had to know him a long while before you appreciated him.

Personally, I had not known him as long as that, having seen him only occasionally after he and Dottie were married. Though Henry Peale was in his fifties when he married Dottie, he looked much younger. He was very kind to me the few times I saw him, not on my account, I imagine, but because Dottie and I were old friends and because he was completely devoted to Dottie.

He had a reputation in the trade for sound editorial taste, though I imagine his assistant, Martin Dever, was the one who really picked the manuscripts until Dottie finally took things over.

Martin Dever, after certain disagreements caused him to leave Peale House, was the one who told me most about Dottie and Henry Peale, though in a prejudiced way, since he never had been partial to Dottie. Actually he was the one who introduced them, he said. It had happened when Dottie was on the book page of the paper, working for old Ralph Edgill after I had gone abroad. She was immensely valuable to Edgill because she did have a marvelous dexterity and she was superb at make-up. She was the one who helped Edgill spruce up the whole Sunday book section, and when it was suggested that the paper sponsor a series of book-and-author afternoons Dottie was all prepared. Dottie did everything right down to helping the publishers drag authors to them. That was how she met Martin Dever. Then one morning when she was in Martin's office, Henry Peale came in.

"That was all there was to it," Martin said. "He wanted to ask me about the design for a jacket, and Dottie said it ought to be plainer, and then he asked her into his office to look at alternate designs. They stayed alone in there for about half an hour and then they went out to lunch, and the next morning he asked me for Dottie's telephone number, and next he asked her to the theater, and so they got married."

Martin did not know why it happened any more than I did. He could only say that directly after the honeymoon Dottie moved right in, taking over the office next to Henry's, and in a year she had taken over the whole editorial and production department. Martin could work for Peale—in fact, he had run the whole editorial department for him and a good deal of everything else—but six months after Dottie showed up, there wasn't anything left for him to run. She had her finger in every pie. She was terribly sorry when he finally resigned.

She was the one who got him the job in Philadelphia, and she had not done too badly when she was left alone with Henry. In fact, she was a very smart cooky and someday she would take over the whole reprint business. That was all that Martin could tell me.

After Henry Peale's death Dottie had moved the Peale House offices to a more modern building on Murray Hill. The rooms were large, noiseproof and air-conditioned. The walls were painted in restful, unobtrusive tones. Dottie's own office in a corner of the building was the same as that of the other executives, with a gray steel desk, a gray carpet, a bare oval table and six gray upholstered chairs. There was nothing on her desk except a clock, a calendar and a blotter. I could not help but compare the place very favorably with the offices of the fashion magazine on which Helen had once worked.

Dottie's secretary appeared about thirty seconds after I had given my name at the front desk. Dottie was dressed in a severe gray tailored suit, softened only by a ruffle at her neck. She smiled at me brightly, but she did not shake hands.

"It's awfully kind of you to pick me up here, Sid," she said. "Bernard and the car are waiting. Shall we have my Bernard take us uptown? Or shall we have your Henry?" She walked around the desk and put her arm through mine.

"No man can be a hero to his valet, Dot," I said.

"Darling," she told me, "I am really not preposterous. I don't know why I always like it when you think I am."

"Because I always have," I said. "It goes with the Chanel Five."

"Oh, Sid," she said, "it's nice to see you, darling."

And I was glad to see Dottie too. I had forgotten what good friends we were, and that there were no friends like old friends, with occasional reservations.

It was preposterous to think of descending from my Cadillac, even if it was a company car, and walking into the Peale house and hearing Dottie say "Hello, Albert," to her butler. When the door closed behind us I was thinking that we were in a larger, more complicated version of Savin Hill. We were both interlopers, not legally but spiritually. We were both intelligent enough not to make fools of ourselves, but still we did not belong.

The Peale house had been built in the early nineteen hundreds. The entrance hall was paved with marble. A double dark oak staircase swept upward. In one dark corner near the door through which Albert the butler had retired with my hat and topcoat was a suit of armor on a pedestal.

I had never made any comment on the house to Dottie because there had always been Henry Peale or company when I had been there before, but now I felt impelled to whistle softly in a slightly vulgar way.

"All right," Dottie said. "What about that little shack of yours in Connecticut?"

"It isn't quite the same," I said.

"No," Dottie said, "it isn't, but it's the same in principle. Darling, I can't help it. There's an income from a special trust fund running it."

"Don't apologize," I said, "don't exhibit social guilt."

"Oh, shut up," Dottie said. "We might as well take the elevator up to my study. I don't believe you've ever seen it, have you? I did over the top floor after Henry died. I spend most of my time there when I'm not entertaining."

I had never seen Dottie's study. Nothing in the house had ever looked like her, but the study did. The curtains were yellow brocade, and there were Chinese carpets and a sofa in front of the fireplace and a desk with her typewriter and sharpened pencils and all her favorite books along the walls and two very good Renoirs.

"Sid," she asked me, "does it remind you of anything? I mean the fireplace and the sofa and the books and the typewriter."

"You mean your place in the Village?" I asked her.

"Don't you think it's like it?" she said. "My room's in front and I'm going to put on another dress, but I'll leave the door open."

It was a little like her old apartment in the Village and it reminded me, too, of the suite in the Ritz in Paris when I heard Dottie whistling in her bedroom. I never thought until I heard her whistling what a difficult time she must have had at first being Mrs. Henry Peale. I had only thought before how well she had succeeded.

I sat there waiting under the illusion that I was younger and still working on the paper, and that there were no broadcasts or no Helen or Camilla, which I am sure was the effect that Dottie desired. It was as if everything we had gone through were still in the future when she came back into the room. She was wearing a purple dress and a gold bracelet and a topaz pin. She did not look at all as though she was nearly forty. The blatantly unobtrusive cut of the dress showed that it had been made for her and that it probably cost about three hundred dollars. She sat down on the sofa beside me with that prim, sort of schoolgirl posture that I remembered from the days on the paper.

"Darling," she said, "it's just like old times, isn't it?"

Of course I knew Dottie well enough to know that she was consciously setting this scene of old friendship because she wanted something from me. It would not be anything tangible, I knew, since she had everything in that line she desired. It would be something more in the nature of affirmation, of sympathy and support.

She had always understood men better than women. When she wanted, she was like

For a clean oven

To our way of thinking, berry pies are at their best when brimming full of juice. But we want the juice in the pie, not in the oven to burn and smoke.

To Clean an Oven

- Leave an open cup of household ammonia in the closed oven overnight. The next day use a fine steel-wool pad or cleanser to lift the charred crust. A grease-cutting detergent speeds the job.

To Prevent Pie Run-overs

- Build the piecrust up like a fence. Insert a small funnel of aluminum foil, cooking parchment or even glazed paper through upper crust—the juice rises in the funnel instead of flowing over the edge. Short lengths of large macaroni may be used too. Piepans with extra-high or wide rims contain the juice.
- For extra precaution, catch drip with shallow pan or circles of foil with edges folded to form sides on rack under pies. The pan is easier to clean than the oven—the foil is tossed out.
- Long-handled lifting devices hold hot pans firmly so they aren't spilled in removing from oven.

Now...from Salad Dressing Headquarters...

KRAFT Salad Oil

for you who love to make your own salad dressings!

Your grocer has it! And you'll love it!

This new kind of smooth-blending salad oil was perfected by Kraft Salad Dressing Headquarters!

Every golden drop of Kraft Salad Oil is superfined by a special Kraft process. Every golden drop is lighter-bodied to blend quickly and perfectly with other flavors.

Kraft Salad Oil will improve your own favorite salad dressing recipes . . . as well as all your cooking. Put it on your shopping list today!

In pints and quarts. Freshness and purity protected by special light-filtering bottle!

A lighter-bodied oil that blends perfectly with other flavors!

Blends a fresh taste into homemade salad dressings . . . gives tender lightness to fried foods . . . puts a grand fluff into your chiffon cakes!

a dancer who could follow any lead, conforming without the least apparent effort to any taste or intellect. I had forgotten how utterly congenial she could be if she wanted, and how much she knew about things that interested me.

She sat on the sofa with her feet curled under her and shook her head and smiled at me wistfully. "Sid, it's queer, isn't it," she said, "that nothing changes when we see each other?"

Being with her was always like a game, and I knew that she had moved our conversation to exactly the place she wanted. She had talked about me, and herself and me, and now we were going to talk about her.

"Now just a minute, Dot," I said, "before I forget to ask you. Didn't you say over the telephone that you were worried about Gilbert Frary and me, or something along those lines?"

Dottie assumed an expression that was partly cryptic and partly amused. "Oh, dear," she said, "I wouldn't have dreamed of saying that if I had thought you were going to mull over it. Did it really bother you, darling?"

"Not much," I said, "but you probably wanted it to, didn't you?"

Dottie's cryptic expression changed and she looked delighted. "Of course I wanted you to be worried," she said, "because I wanted to be sure you'd come to see me. There really wasn't anything else, but it is interesting if you feel a little uncertain about Gilbert."

"Are you sure that's all?" I asked.

"Well, darling," she said, "when I think of you and Gilbert I sometimes get intuitively worried, but I haven't really heard anything. But if anything ever should come up—anything like a break with Gilbert—you'll promise to come right to me, won't you, darling? You know how dreadfully happy I'd be to help in any little way."

There was a discreet knock on the study door.

"Oh," she said, "there's Albert with our lunch."

Albert the butler and a maid came in, pushing tables on wheels like room service in a hotel, and they knew exactly how to turn one end of the room into a little dining alcove. It was a simple luncheon but it was very good—clear soup and squab and mixed green salad and Camembert cheese and coffee.

"I hope it's what you want," Dottie said. "I know you don't like much in the middle of the day."

"Come on, Dot," I said, "let's get down to what you want to talk about. Why don't you tell me why you wanted to see me?"

DOTTIE sat up straighter. "Now, Sid," she said, "that isn't fair. You know I always love to see you, and we see so little of each other, but well, all right. Tell me about Mel Goodwin. Has he asked about me?"

"I told you he had," I said. "Why shouldn't he?"

"Oh, all right," Dottie said, "tell me some more about him. Tell me how he looks."

"He looks about the way he did in Paris," I said, "but you've seen the pictures, haven't you?"

"I mean does he look well?" Dottie said. "Does he look happy?"

"Didn't he look happy in the pictures?" I asked her.

Dottie shook her head impatiently. "Darling," she said, "I know exactly what you're thinking and I know you don't approve, but it's none of your business, is it, really? I wish you wouldn't act like a buffer state. You know you can't stop me doing anything I want and at the same time you're the only one I can talk to about this. Why is it you don't approve of my seeing Mel Goodwin? We were getting down to plain facts at last.

"Because I think it might upset him unnecessarily," I said. "I know it's none of my business, except I rather like him, Dot."

Dottie pushed a strand of hair back from her forehead. "Thank you, darling," she said. "That's what I wanted to know. I was sure. I'm awfully glad he still feels that way about me."

"Oh, my God!" I said.

DOTTIE smiled. "I know," she said. "Why don't you pull up your socks, darling? Your attitude really makes me a little annoyed. I wish you'd think about me just a little, Sid. You haven't really thought about me in years. If you had, you'd know how little I really have in my life. I don't mean materially. I'm pretty sick of materialism."

"Since when did you begin getting sick?" I asked.

"All right," Dottie said, "be nasty if you want to. I was only thinking you have everything I've always wanted. You're married, you have a home and children."

"A child," I said, "not children."

"All right," she said, "a child, and you don't deserve to have one. You don't know what it means."

"Well," I said, "if I don't, you do either. Since when did you start liking children, Dot?"

Suddenly Dottie began to cry. It was something I had not expected, and I was quite sure that she had not expected it either.

"Oh, Sid," she said, "don't you see I have nothing? I have anything? I have never even got you."

I would have laughed if she had not been crying. It was exactly like her not to have wanted something when she could have had it and then to end by regretting that she had wanted it. It was like the ending of a rather badly written story.

ABOMINATIONS

These six things doth the Lord hate:
Yea, seven are an abomination unto him:
A proud look, a lying tongue,
And hands that shed innocent blood,
An heart that deviseth wicked imaginations,
Feet that be swift in running to mischief,
A false witness that speaketh lies,
And he that soweth discord among brethren. —PROVERBS 6:16–19.

I could not think of anything sensible to say and I patted her softly on the back.

"Oh," she said, "I'm so sick of always thinking about myself."

"Dot," I told her, "everybody has to most of the time."

It was curious. Her saying that she had nothing left, not even me, though personally annoying, had a ring of complete veracity, and I was glad that my reaction was close to complacency. I wished Helen could see how well I was acting under the circumstances.

Dottie was not wholly responsible for what had happened to her. She was the finished product of a new era of competitive women. There were no precedents and no rules in this new competitive arena, where bright girls were taught to invade all sorts of fields of endeavor that were once reserved for men. The town was full of Dottie Peales, and there was no reason for them not to have been confused in their values because they had to get along the best they could and they had no mothers to guide them, or at least the guidance of their mothers was very selective useful. I hoped she did not know that I was sorry for her in such a detached way, but of course she did know.

"Stop pounding my back," she said. "I'm not asking you to be sorry for me. I'm not asking you to be kind."

"Now, Dot," I said, "how can I be kind unless I'm sorry?"

"Oh, nuts!" Dottie said, and she blew her nose. "Stop sitting here humiliating me. You've put me in the position of making me deliberately humiliate myself, and I can't stand it, Sid."

It was difficult to follow her logic, but when I was with Dottie I was accustomed to having things end up by being my fault.

Her mood had changed and she sniffed just as though she had not been crying.

lling," she said, "it isn't asking very
, is it, to talk to me for a few minutes
Mel Goodwin without acting as h I were contagious or something?"
ere was no reason at all, and yet I did this attitude. "Listen, Dot," I said, not face it? You're not going to help poor guy at all by being interested in
He just isn't in your class."
Why, darling," Dottie said, "that's the thing you've said to me all day, not I understand just what you mean by ut of course she understood, and we sat there for a while thinking in our ent ways about General Melville Good-

Why don't you admit," I asked her, t you had forgotten all about him until came a figure in the news?"
ttie sighed, and the corners of her eyes kled. "Well, I remember him now," she "Oh, Sidney, let's not be so silly with other. After all, we're adult." is was a time-worn word in certain cir-
By being adult she meant that one l be freed from the trammels of convenand face facts fearlessly and now she facing them in her own way.
Darling," she went on, "I want to make one else happy. That's one of the rules e, isn't it? But I could do a lot for Mel lwin."
His wife wants to make him happy
" I said. "At least she has a few ideas.
don't you try to put your mind on one else? There are a lot of other men."
ottie lighted a cigarette and blew a cloud noke toward the ceiling.
He isn't happy with her," she said, "in way he ought to be happy with someone,
She's always managing him. He told me
Paris."
could imagine without undue effort what ville Goodwin must have told her in s, and I did not answer.
Aren't you going to say anything?" she d.
Yes," I said, "and you know exactly
I'm going to say. For two days now been listening to him telling the story of fe. He's different from you and me, Dot.
loesn't know what is going to happen to professionally. He's restless just like you, that's about all that you and he would in common. He's never had the chance e people like you, Dot, and he's a very guy basically. All you can do is upset
The only way you can help him is to him alone. Dottie, aren't you going to e Goodwin alone?"
ottie threw her cigarette into the fire-
e. "No," she said. "Aren't you going to to me about him?"
No," I said, and I stood up. "I'd better
ing. I've got to get back to the country."
Oh, darling," Dottie said, "when you're y, you're like a hero in a juvenile, and I ought to know, because we're printing a lot of them. Please don't go. Can't you and Helen bring Mel Goodwin around to dinner?"

"No," I said. "When he's through with us he has to go to Washington."

"Well, he can drop in here on his way, can't he?" Dottie said. "I'm going to call him up right now." She walked to her desk and picked up the telephone. "I want to make a person-to-person call," she began, "to Major General Melville A. Goodwin ——"

There was nothing I could do about it. "Well," I said, "good-by, Dot."

"Darling," Dottie said, "you can't go yet. You don't know how to run that elevator."

It was true that I was not mechanically minded, but I could try.

"Just keep your mind on Mel and forget about me," I said; and while I pressed the elevator button I could hear her speaking in her gayest, sweetest tone.

"Mel," I heard her saying, "Sid's here and we've been talking about you all through lunch. When are you coming here to see me and tell me how you won the war?"

I had not known what button to push, but the car started downward. Dottie must have rung some sort of bell because the butler was standing at the foot of the staircase with my hat and coat.

"Thanks," I said. I wanted to get out of there. I was glad to be in the clear sunlight of the October afternoon, and even Henry and the studio Cadillac seemed like very old friends. "We'll go home now, Henry," I said.

Henry was an excellent driver, and I felt entirely secure speeding along the West Side highway well ahead of the rush hour. Nevertheless, I was thinking of a Grant Wood picture I had seen once when Helen had taken me to an uptown gallery—a picture of a car and a truck moving swiftly toward inevitable collision on a winding road, and I thought of the impending doom of Melville Goodwin. I had never thought until then of Mel Goodwin as a classically tragic figure whom the fates were conspiring to destroy. I thought of him in the garden just before Camilla had asked me suddenly about Samson and Delilah. He was one of those Samsons ready and waiting for some Delilah to give him a haircut, and Dottie Peale was just the one to do it.

Melville A. Goodwin was going to get his hair cut, and medals and stars and clusters would not help. He had killed his lion and had carried away the gates of Gaza, but he was going to get his hair cut. There would be no light or heavy weapons to help him now that Dottie wanted to do something for him. The Philistines would be upon him and he would not even know that the Philistines were there.

(To be Continued)

INTO THE HERE

(Continued from Page 40)

I thank her," Mary sighed. She was l of all the presents, the baby presents.
he remembered one day when she and her her had been shopping together, several ths ago. Hanging on a rack in one store a blue dress, a sweeping, impractical, tiful dress. Her mother had taken it n and said quickly, enthusiastically, w right for you, Mary." And then she looked at Mary's thickening waistline said, "No future for it," and had hung ck in place. Since then, all the packages had sent had been for the baby.
I thank them all," Mary went on, her e growing louder, "I thank everyone—hers, sister, father, your family. Don't ry. They get thanked." It's as if I didn't
, she thought for the thousandth time.
any of them care about is this jumping of a baby.
eter laughed. "You look as if you were g to spit," he said, and when Mary spat, t on the floor, he grabbed her and ed her. "The doctor says you're not id," he murmured, "just unprepared."

"Unprepared!" She pushed him away. "Even you talk about the baby all the time—unprepared!" she said. "With everyone asking me what I want to have, a boy or a girl, and the family always gasping and making comments about the size. Unprepared! I'm sick of this baby."

The telephone rang. "Let it go," Peter said. But Mary made him get up, and he answered the phone. His voice as he replied to the message was deep, worried.

"What is it?"

He hung up the receiver and groaned. "I have to go away," he said dramatically. "For two weeks. To Cleveland."

Suddenly she was frightened. "No!" she gasped. "Not now! Not with everything just about to happen." Her heart fluttered and she felt ill. I am unprepared, she thought. "I can't stay here alone with the jumping jack, I can't, Peter," she told him. "Call them back."

"I can't." Peter sat in an armchair and leaned forward. He clasped and unclasped his hands. He started to speak and then Return Flight Guaranteed!

Government orders now restrict the manufacture of Reynolds Wrap and all household foil. Military needs demand aluminum foil to protect rations, drugs, delicate instruments. The day will come, however, when Reynolds Wrap will wing its way back. Back to your favorite store. Back to your home. Aluminum production is being rapidly expanded to bring you, as quickly as possible, all the Reynolds Wrap you want.

REYNOLDS 25 ALUMINUM REYNOLDS WRAP the pure aluminum foil

Remember these food-time-work-savers

Roasting meat in foil to save shrinkage.

Wrapping leftovers to conserve food.

Lining broiler pans to save scouring.

Keep salt DRY!

Airko*
MOISTURE-PROOF
SHAKERS

Free-flowing salt, no matter how damp or muggy the weather! Over 11 million American homes now have AIRKO Moisture-Proof Shakers giving wonderful free-flow service day in and day out. The patented Airkonite element in the gleaming chrome top is a self-reactivating drying unit . . . no further attention is required!

The beautiful Deluxe Airkos stand four inches tall, are made of sparkling crystal glass, with hand-cut satin-finish base. Packed in unique "Show-Case" gift boxes.

$1.00 PAIR

GET A PAIR TODAY!
At Better Stores, Leading 5 & 10's
Dealer Inquiries Invited

AIRKO* ORIGINALS

These smaller Airkos have the same amazing drying element . . . Ring-designed crystal clear glass, metal tops with plastic colored shields.
Only . . . . . 39¢ PAIR

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

AIRKO MFG. CO., Clermont, Florida

Are you in the know?

If you and your pal are smitten by the same Sigh Man, should you —

☐ Date him ☐ Suggest a double date ☐ Bow out nobly

Let's say you and your best pal are vacationing at a Dude Ranch. Gals meet cowboy—and you're both "gone" dogies! But if you are the one he favors, why bow out? Suggest a double date: your femme friend may have a pleasant change of heart. Whatever the plans, you needn't cower in a corner just because it's that time. Come slacks, Levis or datin' duds, no one will know, with Kotex—for those flat pressed ends prevent revealing outlines—shore 'nuff! And see how comfortable you can be, because Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it: has softness that holds its shape.

With sleeveless dresses, which goes best?

☐ Long gloves ☐ A stole ☐ A razor

Daintiness, like diamonds, can be a girl's best friend! And sleeveless frocks, especially, call for underarm contact with the razor's edge. Keeps you out of the untidy bracket. Promotes your poise. Self-assurance at calendar time calls for just the right answer to your sanitary protection needs. So Kotex gives you 3 absorbencies to choose from (different sizes, for different days). Try all 3 to learn which one's exactly right for you.

A train acquaintance asks you to dinner?

☐ Call the conductor ☐ Go dutch ☐ Dash for the dining car

No harm in casual chatter to while the miles away—when the Handsome Stranger's not the wolf type. But, if you accept his dining car bid, go dutch; then you needn't feel indebted. (Convenient—if "Dr. Jekyll" turns out to be Mr. Hyde.) It's smart to be wary. On trying days, likewise. Smooth sisters choose Kotex—an "auld acquaintance" they can trust for extra protection, such as that special safety center gives.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*

3 ABSORBENCIES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

How to prepare for certain days?

☐ Circle your calendar ☐ Perk up your wardrobe ☐ Buy a new belt

Before "that" time, be ready! All 3 answers above can help. But to assure extra comfort, buy a new Kotex sanitary belt. Made with soft-stretch elastic—this strong, lightweight Kotex belt's non-twisting . . . non-curling. Stays flat even after many washings. Dries pronto! So don't wait till the last minute, buy a new Kotex belt now.

Kotex Sanitary Belt . . . Buy two—for a change!

P.S. Have you tried Delsey*? Delsey is the new bathroom tissue that's safer because it's softer. A product as superior as Kotex . . . a tissue as soft and absorbent as Kleenex.* (We think that's the nicest compliment there is.) Won't you try Delsey, next time?

didn't speak. At last he stood up. "You will go to your mother's," he announced.

Doom, that's what it is, doom, Mary thought. She had not even visited her mother since the dress episode. Going home to visit her two younger brothers and sister and her father was no longer a pleasure, because she was not Mary, the beautiful eldest, but Mary, the pregnant one.

"I'll stay alone!" Mary shrieked. "Not to mother's, Peter, with all of them staring and talking and being glad all over the place. No, not without you."

She waited for his arm to embrace her shoulder, waited for his soft words of sympathy and encouragement and surrender. Nothing happened. "You will go," his voice said. There was nothing to do but cry, so she cried. And afterward she wondered how Peter could resist her tears. Because he did resist them, and she found herself giving in, and going to live with her family while Peter was away.

The first morning of her stay, Mary lay in bed, listening to the racket outside her room, deciding that the thing she had forgotten most was the noise. Now, at eight o'clock of this chill February morning, she could hear her father bellowing about not being able to find a razor blade. Her mother's voice, sweet but surprisingly penetrating, asked everyone in general where her sewing basket was. And she could hear her sister and two brothers excitedly yelling at the end of the hall.

Mary tried to sink her head deeper into the pillow, wishing she were back in her own little house. She wished Peter were snuggled next to her, quiet Peter who liked to sleep late in the morning.

Her door burst open. That was another thing about living here: no privacy, even in bed. Her younger sister, Andrea, dressed in men's pajamas, stood in the doorway, one hand on the doorknob, dramatic as always, her feet apart. For a moment Mary looked at Andrea's thin body in genuine envy. She looked lithe and wonderful, and most decidedly unpregnant.

"It's not so bad when you're lying down," Andrea remarked. "Only a little heap. More like a cantaloupe than a watermelon." She stood and stared openly at her sister, and Mary's modesty was offended. How did I ever grow up modest, she wondered, in this mob? Maybe because I'm eldest.

"What do you want, Andrea?" She was annoyed. "What is it?" Mary asked again impatiently.

"The toilet froze!" Andrea shouted, remembering herself again. "I just looked in because you might have morning sickness and you just can't this morning because it won't flush."

"Get out of here," Mary said firmly.

HER brother's head appeared behind Andrea's. "Is she going to?" he asked. He smiled at Mary, and she almost smiled back because he was her favorite. Handsome, Nathan was, and charming. "Are you going to puke?" Nathan asked.

"I never have," she said, still lying on her back, feeling silly with the two of them looking at her. "Go away."

"Let me see her," a voice said, and Curtis, who was twelve, youngest of them all, crawled between Andrea and Nathan. He looked carefully at Mary's shape under the bedclothes. "Well," he said, and that was all. Then he left the room. There was relief in his every gesture.

Mary remembered that when she had entered the house last night with Peter, Curtis had all but fallen over backward at the sight of her great bulk. It had been humiliating, and it was even more humiliating now, seeing his relief. I suppose he came in to see if I'd exploded, Mary thought, and suddenly she was angry at the whole bunch of them: at Peter for going away and leaving her here, an object of curiosity and pity; at her mother for letting the kids burst into her room every five minutes; at her father . . . for what? For loving children, that was what.

She reached down and found a slipper, threw it with excellent aim at Andrea and Nathan. "Get out! Get out!" she screa... at them, like a shrew, and they went.

Later she saw the sign Nathan had n... It said, in large black letters, MOR... SICKNESS PROHIBITED. Oh, they were a... awful. They were lewd and disgusting... much too curious. They asked her, ... stantly, if she felt life, and clucked ... delight when one evening the baby k... the evening paper off her lap.

"I do not like," Mary said, "being... center of a physical discussion. If I weren... like this," she went on, wondering wi... was so easy to cry lately, or to feel... crying, "you never would have started... discussion."

"Oh, nuts," Andrea said. "Yo... neurotic."

"I'm not neurotic, I'm not!" Mary tu... to her mother. "Tell them I'm not."

HER father looked at her for a mor... "How can your mother tell them you'r... neurotic when you act neurotic?"

"Your father's right," her mother ...

"How deadly," Mary said.

"You mean being neurotic?"

"No, I mean saying 'Your father's ri... It's so cliché. It's so settled. It's so paren... she fumed.

"And someday you'll be saying it t... Nathan said.

"Ha-ha," Andrea added.

Mary jumped to her feet, forgetting ... self, and the weight of the baby mad... fall forward to her knees. Nathan d... tangled his long legs from the sofa and ... across the living-room floor in one step... took hold of Mary's elbows and half pu... her to her feet. As she brushed her long... back out of her eyes, she saw that everyo... her mother, her father, Andrea—was ... ridiculous pose, half up, half down. A... them looked anxious. How silly, M... thought, I only fell on my knees. But it... nice of them to care, she thought.

Nathan smiled, the recent argument... gotten. "Be careful, Mary," he said. ... careful of my nephew."

It was the baby they were all conce... about, not her. Her knees stung from ... fall, and she felt shaky. "Leave me alo... she snapped, pulling her arm out of Nath... grasp. "Leave me alone. And I mea... You all make me sick!"

After that it was a little better. F... whole day Andrea and Nathan and C... kept clear of her. Her mother, for rea... known only to herself, had stopped tal... about the baby entirely, and Mary foun... change refreshing. On their walks they... cussed everything except Nathan and Ar... and Curtis.

And Mary did not see them very ... now. Only at meals. In spite of herself ... began to feel lonely. Her mother was ... The friends with whom she had grow... had married and moved away, or else ... worked all day. Peter's nightly telep... calls were the only bright spots in her ... but they were very short.

Her irritability increased as the days ... by. Her heavy body was something of w... she was always aware now. It was diffi... to bend; sometimes it seemed an effo... breathe, and the feeling of being an over... balloon began to absorb all her thou... all her days, and so she became irritabl... first she enjoyed it. There was a ce... satisfaction in seeing Nathan and Ar... and Curtis look subdued if they made ... and she objected, or if they acciden... brushed against her when they walked ... She enjoyed their apologies, telling h... that she deserved them. After all, she ... not living here of her own free will. It w... imposition upon her to be living here a ...

But one day she found her irritab... increased when no one answered her ... The entire family was seated at the brea... table. Except for her father, no one ... dressed except Mary. Nathan had on ... the bottom of his pajamas, as did C... Andrea was wearing something indescri... that she had obviously snatched up o... way downstairs. Her mother wore a fl... robe, chic, but patched.

Why," Mary burst out, "do you all have ess like charity cases? Really, it makes eel sick."
Relax," her father said.
Everyone in this family is too relaxed," y retorted. "You boys could at least tops. Hairy thing," she added, looking athan. "Mother, must you be patched—different color?".
o one rose to the bait. Her father con-ed to eat his oatmeal, her mother sipped
e. Nathan hunched lower in his chair to his bare chest.
, no one wanted to fight back, and it
e Mary angrier that they should all give You," she said to Andrea, "you ought ashamed. You look the same all day as do at breakfast. Why don't you comb hair, why don't you do something to e yourself pretty, or to try?"
ndrea did not look up. Busily, she cleaned plate of its scrambled eggs and bacon, then left the room.
ne by one, the others left, until Mary sat e at the table, except for Curtis. He n sat for hours at the breakfast table, ng nothing, saying nothing, just sitting, ing up. He had always done it, even as a e fellow. Conversation flowed over and him.
She makes me mad," Mary said, talking Curtis as if he were a post, knowing he ldn't answer. "She just looks haggy half time—and with her figure! You'd think d care a little."
Curtis stretched languidly.
I'd forgotten," Mary went on, "about sloppy everyone is here. Look at me, only one decently ssed. Peter hates people ook messy. Ever."
Curtis scratched his chest.
It's just not fair," ry went on, warming the subject, "that I e to live here. I'd be ch better off at my own house, alone.
ch better. At least the toilet doesn't ze there. Oh, people just don't under-nd here, how I feel. And they don't care." felt very sorry for herself now, and tears
ang to her eyes.
Curtis pushed his chair back and stood up.
ou stink," he told his sister, and walked y.
ike a slap. That's what his remark was , like a slap. Mary sat still, recovering, ting for righteous anger to course through . Nothing coursed through her; she was fectly calm, calmer than she had been in s.
nto her mind flashed a picture of herself child, having a tantrum, furious because could not go to the movies with her her and father one evening. "You prom-
!" she had screamed. "You're mean, el!" And suddenly, in the midst of it all, father's hand had reached out and slapped in the face. She had stopped crying, ngely satisfied. She was satisfied now. I rved that crack, she thought. Oh, did I rve it! I'll bake Curtis a cake to thank him it.
nd an inner voice said, Go and find drea and tell her you're sorry. Tell her re jealous of her figure and her freedom her pep. Do something, the voice said, do ething to undo the mess you've made of this ily.

T she was afraid, of course, and so she not look for Andrea right away. But for first time during her stay, she washed dishes. Reaching up to put them away an effort, and she was glad it was an rt. She mopped the kitchen floor. She ned the dining room. She mixed a cake Curtis and put it in the oven, and then thought, Now I'll go make my bed, and I'll find Andrea. lowly she went upstairs. I feel like an old an, she thought. Maybe it's a good thing.
could not believe, now that she had come her senses more or less, that she had.
r being married and living her own life, e back here and tried to act like the r sister, a childish older sister at that.
The shame was a red-hot thing within her, obliterating all else.

She opened the door to her room, and there was Andrea. She had made the bed, straightened the room, and she was sitting in front of the dressing table, combing her long hair. Andrea's hair was very straight, and Mary had always thought it beautiful—very shiny, russet-colored hair, thick. Now Andrea held it back from her thin face in a sort of knot, and Mary had to take only one quick look at her sister's reflection in the mirror to see that she had been crying.

Why can't I say it? she asked herself. Say I'm sorry. She had never apologized to Andrea, never. Always she had been the eldest, the pretty one, and in the topsy-turvy world of childhood, she had therefore always been right.

"I'M sorry, Andrea." It sounded forced and insincere, but it was hard to say, very hard to say.

Andrea's slim shoulder straightened a little. She let her hair fall back over her shoulders again. "It's okay," she said. "It's okay, Mare."

"Thanks for making the bed."

They looked at each other, Andrea staring past her own reflection in the mirror.

"I——" Andrea said. "Do you think I'd look better if I cut it?" She pulled at a lock of her hair.

"Oh, no," Mary said. "Your hair is beautiful. You are too."

"Oh, Mare!" In Andrea's voice was a whole world of gratitude and pride. "You're the pretty one, you've always been."

"Once, maybe."

Andrea patted her on the shoulder awkwardly. "Even now."

"Thanks," Mary said. She could not look at Andrea, afraid that the tears so near the surface would fall if she saw so much as a glistening in Andrea's eyes.

Andrea coughed. "I'm sorry I came into your room without asking. But on the third floor I don't have anything—you know, brushes and stuff. So I sort of couldn't help looking haggy." She smiled.

"It is your room now, isn't it?" But it was not really a question. So who's been imposing on whom? the inner voice asked. Just who? "I've gone and discombobulated the whole family, I guess," Mary said at last.

"Well," Andrea said, "we really didn't mind."

"Much," Mary added.

"Much," Andrea said.

When the maid turned up at four o'clock to start cooking dinner, Mary shooed her out of the house, telling her to take a day off. All morning and afternoon Mary had thought about how to show the family she was sorry. The idea of apologizing to each person in turn was impossible, silly—and so she had decided to cook the family a dinner, all by herself. Dishwashing and all. She had ordered chicken because she cooked that best, and carrots and shrimp and everything, and had even paid the man out of her own money when he brought the supplies to the back door. She had finished baking Curtis' cake, and had iced it carefully.

It was very hot, working in the kitchen. She was awkward as she moved about, and broke two glasses trying to carry them into the dining room when she set the table. But at last everything was ready. The family, assuming that the maid was in the kitchen (Mary heard Andrea saying, "Gosh, mom, that new maid sure is noisy," and her mother saying, "She'll learn"), assembled in the dining room, and then Mary appeared, served them all, watched happily as they ate. Her mother, she noticed, had difficulty in speaking at first, but presently she recovered. Her father beamed. Nathan and Curtis and Andrea made insulting remarks about the food, which they gobbled up with relish, and it was all very successful.

It was not until dessert that anyone said anything—anything about the way Mary

A hundred men can make an encampment, but it takes a woman to make a home. —CHINESE PROVERB.

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Not a soap, not a cream— Halo cannot leave dulling, dirt-catching soap film!

Gives fragrant "soft-water" lather —needs no special rinse!

Removes embarrassing dandruff from both hair and scalp!

Halo leaves hair soft, manageable— shining with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or oily cream shampoos leaves dulling, dirt-catching film. Halo, made with a new patented ingredient, contains no soap, no sticky oils. Thus Halo glorifies your hair the very first time you use it. Ask for Halo—America's favorite shampoo—at any drug or cosmetic counter!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

had acted, about the fact that they all understood, without being told, that she was trying to make up. And then she carried in the cake and set it in front of Curtis.

"You get to cut it, pal," she said, "because of what you said this morning."

He blushed. "I didn't mean it. Not physically." They laughed together at the joke between them.

Her father patted her arm as she passed the first piece of cake to him. "There was a little girl, who had a little curl," he said, "right in the middle of her forehead." He winked. "And when she was good, she was very, very good ——"

"Oh, shut up," Mary said, but she was smiling.

It was after she had finished the dishes and was sitting in the living room writing a letter to Peter that her father threatened the newborn peace.

"Mary," he said, squinting over the top of his book, "what do you expect this child of yours to sleep in?"

She looked at him in surprise. "Why do you ask?"

"Why do I ask! Because generally babies sleep somewhere other than in laps."

"It's a funny question." She paused. "I—I don't know," she said at last.

"There, you see?" he said to her mother. "I told you she was peculiar. About the baby, I mean." He coughed. "I personally resent the fact that my grandchild has no bed to sleep in."

"It's true," her mother said, "you are queer, Mary. Very. About the baby."

Are they joking? Mary wondered. She looked carefully at both of them, trying to decide.

"It's no use," she said at last. "You can just sit there and feel as triumphant as you look. Because I just don't feel motherly. See?" She spoke loudly, too loudly.

"Boloney," her father said, stamping out of the room. "You resent the poor little thing," he added, over his shoulder. "You feel sorry for yourself, that's what."

Her mother sighed. "I don't know," she said, coming over to Mary and taking her hand and pulling her to her feet, "why he has to be so violent about things he loves." She sighed again. "Come along. I'll show you why he's so excited."

Together, then, they went into the cellar. Huge floodlights, dangling from a series of cords, lighted the place as if it were day. People—Andrea's and Nathan's friends—crowded the floor. In the midst of the people stood Nathan and Andrea, looking funny in blue jeans and long shirts covered with paint. Curtis was dashing from one person to another, serving coffee.

All the people were talking, standing in a rough circle. Mary could see her father's white head bobbing as he apparently directed something in their midst. Then he caught sight of Mary over the heads of the others, and he just looked at her, and all the others slowly turned around.

"What is it?" she found herself asking. "Have you discovered gold down there?"

"Let her see," her mother said, and the group parted. In the center of the circle stood several pieces of furniture—a crib, a small wardrobe, a chest.

"It's for you," Nathan said at last. He picked up a pink potty seat and waved it in front of her. "Indirectly for you."

"For me?"

"There's even a high chair," Curtis said, pointing it out. "It took me six whole months to make it. All by myself."

Mary looked down at him. His yellow hair was standing up straight, and he smelled of khaki pants and little-boy sweat. This is my little brother, she thought, hugging him. Isn't he darling! And he's made something for me.

As Curtis wriggled out of her grasp, Mary thought again about what he had said. "What do you mean, six months?"

Curtis smiled the rare, shy smile that he reserved only for moments of great joy. "We've all been working six months, at least. Even pop. He made the crib."

"It was a secret," Andrea said. "The furniture should have been done sooner, but we weren't such hot carpenters."

"So we just had to invite all these people in to help paint," Curtis added, sweeping his arm in a gesture just like his father's to include the people, the lowly helpers.

"Well," Mary said.

"Well," Curtis said, "only then you acted like such a boob that pop said we shouldn't show them to you. Any daughter of his, he said, acted like that ——"

A hand reached out of the crowd, her father's hand, grabbed Curtis by the back of his shirt, and lifted him bodily away from his spot in front of Mary.

"You know how he is," her father said. "He exaggerates." Turning back to the crowd, he started them all working again, and after a moment rejoined them.

Mary wandered among the pieces of furniture. All this time that I wouldn't come and visit, she thought, they've been working. Their feelings were probably hurt all the time, too—and they kept right on. How wonderful families are, she thought, feeling warm, feeling loved.

"Think he'll sleep well in this?" her father asked suddenly. He stood by the crib with a proprietary air.

"Sleep?" Mary looked at the crib. It was beautifully made, very functional, very handsome. It would look well in a house. She gazed at it very hard, trying, because her father seemed so anxious, to visualize a baby sleeping there. But it was no use.

Her father watched her face and then sighed. "Don't say we didn't try," he muttered.

Mary could not look at him. No words came out.

"Gosh," Nathan said, "I feel so uncle-y. Watch," he added, "watch this, Mary." He had a paintpot in his hand, and even as Mary watched, he started to paint on the inside of the crib's headboard over some lines he had sketched there earlier. He was reaching downward over the headboard so that what he was painting was upside down to him. Fascinated, Mary watched, and before her eyes, as Nathan carefully outlined his drawing, changing brushes and paint to put in color, she saw a picture—quite a charming picture of a baby—appear on the headboard. Nathan stopped a minute. "Wait," he said, "it doesn't look like anyone." And then he painted two large ears on the baby's head.

Suddenly the baby looked exactly like Peter.

Mary stared at it, amazed. The picture was the very image of Peter. And adorable. She thought of how sweet a baby like that would be, with its funny ears and all, lying in the crib. Here was a picture of a baby who would sit in the high chair and yell, probably, and be difficult when hungry. She could even, if she tried very hard, imagine a baby like that sitting on the potty seat. She looked around at the furniture and back at the picture again. Why, she thought, my baby will look like that. Our baby, Peter's and mine!

"Listen," she said to her mother and father and the three kids and everyone else in the room, "I want to thank you. I'm so grateful that I just almost can't stand it. I—I want to start a family, too, like this one—a family that loves babies . . . and all." She was terribly embarrassed, now that she'd said all this, and her father put his arm around her. The other people turned tactfully back to their work. "I don't deserve it," Mary muttered into the crook of her father's arm, where she was hiding her face.

"No," her father said, "but the baby does." He kissed the top of her head.

Mary turned and went upstairs then, unable to face all the guests again, having said so much in front of them. And she had to hurry now. Diapers, the baby would need, and clothes. How wonderful that there was furniture. It was then she remembered that her mother, her family, her sister and brothers and aunts had sent almost everything the baby would need. And I didn't make it a thing, she thought. Not a thing.

She said it to her mother, who followed her up the stairs. "Mother, mother, my baby'll be born without even a single bootee I made for it."

And her mother did not laugh, but found wool and needles for Mary; and Mary worked all evening long until her eyes ached and her back hurt, until she had finished a tiny pair of blue bootees for the child. They were crooked and had five mistakes in them, but as she went to bed at three she thought, There, its mother has helped a little.

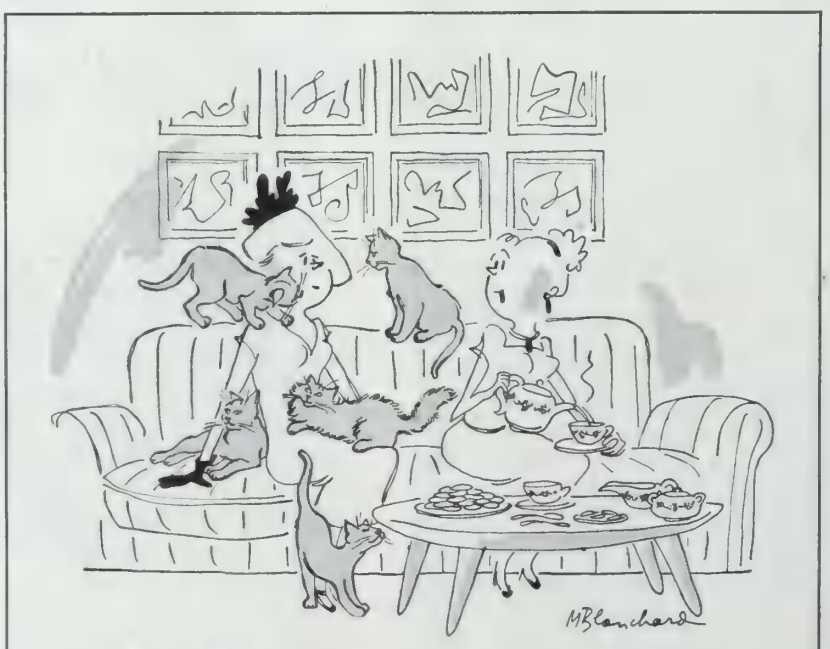
The next morning, for the first time since that awful morning when she had thrown the slipper at them, Nathan and Curtis and Andrea appeared in her doorway to wake her up.

"What's the occasion?" she asked weakly, because going to bed so late had not agreed with her.

"Moving the furniture," they said. "To your house."

"Get up!" Curtis jumped on her bed, and Mary groaned. Nathan dragged him off.

"We have a station wagon," Nathan said. "Pop wants us to move the stuff early. It's all dry and all, and we have to do it now, he said, so you can tell us where it goes."



"Now?" she asked vaguely.

"It's due tomorrow, isn't it?" Andrea asked. They all looked worried for a moment, as if they had been involved in an enormous hoax. "What kind of a question is that—now? Pop's right, you are queer."

"I sure am," Mary said. "I have a stomach-ache."

"Eek!" Nathan said. "Hey, ma! She's having the baby right here."

"It's only a stomach-ache," Mary said, as it got worse.

"They just love people who hate cats."

"Mom," Nathan yelled again. "It's b born! It's your fault," he added, turnin Curtis, "you jumped on my nephew."

"Forget about your nephew," Mary "I only have a stomach-ache."

"You're having the baby," her mo said calmly, entering the room. It was she were saying, It's going to rain. "Let' I've called the doctor. Andrea, help dress."

So Mary gave in. It was easier arguing. I'll humor her. But surely this ache can't be a baby coming.

By the time Mary had dressed and reac the bottom of the stairs, the ache bec quite real. She sat down until it subsi Her mother was waiting outside in the Andrea and Nathan were standing by h their pajamas. Why are they always in jamas? Mary wondered. And at a time this? Curtis stood by the front door.

At last Mary stood up, ready to "Thanks," she said to all of them. "G how can I thank you?"

"Name it after me!" Andrea and Nat shouted in one breath.

But Curtis said nothing. He looke Mary's huge body and shook his head have a feeling it's going to be a freak," he s

Mary looked at him, very hard. She never thought of that. Maybe it would freak. Oh, she thought, not that cute little with the big ears—not him a freak.

Both Andrea and Nathan looked iously at Mary. They don't know, she thou how motherly I really am, now. It was responsibility to set their minds at ease.

"No," Mary said slowly to her l brother, "not my baby, not our baby will be perfect." And she went out the with her mother.

The hospital was efficient and frighte until the doctor arrived. Looking at Mary thought, I never thought I'd see the when I'd be glad to see him. But he see suddenly very nice indeed, comfortingly v versed in his business. Once he said, " you tired?" and she said, "Well, I di think it would take this long," and laughed and said, "I don't think you thought about it," and she said no m because he was right—or he had been u last night. He told her that Peter woul with her just as soon as the child was b "Right away?" she asked, and he said, " the minute afterward," and she believed

The minute afterward—or was it h afterward?—but the minute she opened eyes, Peter was there. Wonderful Pe Peter whom the baby looked just like. H did she know? I must have seen him, thought, because she knew the baby w boy, and she knew its ears stuck out she knew he looked just like Peter and t he yelled loudly. But she did not re remember how she knew all this.

Peter kissed her gently. "I hurried," said. "Darling, I hurried. Was it awful alone?"

She smiled because it had really b wonderful. "I was never alone," she said only thought I was. Before."

"You look awful," Peter said. "Tire love you."

"You look awful too," Mary said, "b love you too."

"Well," Peter said. "Oh, how I mis you—just you, my wife." He held her ha kissed it, many times.

"Aren't you going to ask about the bab she said at last, impatient with him. H could he not ask about the baby?

"All I care about is you," Peter s "The baby's okay, that's enough for m

"Okay," Mary repeated scornfully. " magnificent!" She tried to sit up a lit "You dope—he's beautiful, and you di even ask about him!"

Peter smiled. "I seem to remember saying you were sick of being treated lik mother. That you were sick of the bab

"Oh," Mary said, hugging Peter, "I a fool then. But now I'm a mother!"

"Oh," Peter said, "where's that leave m

"Being a father," Mary said, and t laughed together.

THE E

or margarine. Mix all the ingredi- roughly (including the noodles) and with 1½ teaspoons salt and a dash er. This dish must be served very hot, neans that it must be heated—with- vely cooking—for a few minutes.

Black Butter Sauce

as much butter or margarine as you d let it cook in a frying pan until it brown in color. Take it away from the heat and let it cool. For ¼ pound butter, you'll need 2 tablespoons vinegar which you will put into a small saucepan, with salt and pepper. Simmer and boil down, then stir it into the cooled butter. Warm up the whole together, but gently, and pour over cooked, hot string beans. It may seem a little more complicated to make black butter sauce this way, but try it—you'll see that it is so much nicer than ordinary melted butter.

Fruit Cup
Potato Soufflé
Buttered Spinach
Coleslaw Cake

Soufflés of eggs, cheese and potatoes keep the Swiss healthy.

Swiss are great ones for soufflés, and e looks of the lads and lassies, I'd say nothing better to build lissome bodies, ng teeth and shiny eyes than the delec- oncoctions of milk, cheese, eggs and s which are staples of their diet. h it, spinach that's just barely done in e water than that clinging to the washed Three to four minutes of rapid cooking ou need for an effect that's pleasing to e teeth and the taste buds. When you've d your spinach, put it back into the ith salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. tter and heat, stirring until the spinach oughly warm and the butter melted. le with lemon juice just before serving. d and dessert are simple.

Potato Soufflé (43c)

Prepare 2 cups hot mashed potatoes. Don't let them cool, to avoid the unfriendly taste that's particular to cold mashed potatoes. Beat in, with abandon, ½ cup hot milk, ½ cup grated Cheddar cheese, 2 tablespoons butter, 1 tablespoon finely chopped parsley (optional) and 1 teaspoon salt, and set on the side of the range. Beat the yolks of 4 eggs until thick and lemon-colored, and the whites until stiff but not dry. Fold the yolks into the potato mixture, and be sure to do the job properly. Fold in egg whites with big, easy strokes. Pile lightly—lightly, I said—into a greased baking dish, and bake in a hot oven, 400° F., for 25 minutes, for a lovely, puffy soufflé.

Fruit-Juice Cocktail
Fried Spaghetti
Broiled Tomato Halves
Waldorf Salad
Brownies

hen your purse feels slender, remember children love spaghetti.

iety is the spice of life, and if this isn't ay for swishing everything around in ng room, change your spaghetti. Much r, and sure to please the family. d spaghetti is that heavenly invention— children like, and come back for again gain. Since I don't think you'll have with the adults either, I urge you to try your purse feels particularly slender, ing. To begin with, let's have a fruit- ocktail, made from the sirup you saved our peaches, plums, pears and pine- Nice—even nicer with a squeeze of h the spaghetti, broiled halves of to- sprinkled thickly with parsley and ouch of grated cheese. A Waldorf salad spness, and brownies for dessert. Come t it!

Fried Spaghetti (66c)

Cook ½ pound spaghetti according to package directions, but keep it definitely on the underdone side. You've got to cook it again, and you don't want to end up with a mush. Drain. Beat 4 eggs with 1 cup milk thoroughly, add ½ cup grated Cheddar cheese, 1½ teaspoons salt and a little pepper, with a few extra beats for good measure. Cook 4 tablespoons butter in skillet to a delicious golden foam. Add spaghetti and swirl around so that every strand is coated with the butter's goodness. Pour milk-egg-cheese mixture over spaghetti and give it a good stir. Then lower heat, and cook without stirring until golden and deliciously crusty on the bottom—20–30 minutes. Loosen all around edge with a spatula. Slice onto plate, which is easy because the

Now a new protein cereal that helps your child have a fine body

KELLOGG'S CORN SOYA—more body-building protein than any other well-known cereal—hot or cold!

Today's children are taller, stronger, healthier than we were at their age. Government authorities say that's because they get more protein than we did. But they go on to say that children still don't get enough protein at breakfast!

That's why Kellogg's created Corn-Soya, the new protein cereal. No other well-known cereal—not one—is so rich in protein.

And children eat it eagerly because Corn-Soya has a different flavor . . . crisp and inviting. Vitamins, minerals and energy value, yes! But above all, it's rich in protein, the key body-builder. Today, with the help of Corn-Soya, start your child on the way to a fine body for life.

BODY-BUILDING PROTEIN—RIGHT IN THE BREAKFAST BOWL!

Percentage of daily protein needs provided by a standard portion (1 ounce) of Kellogg's Corn-Soya when served with 4 ounces (½ cup) of milk.*

Average Man (154 lbs.)	13.36%
Average Woman (123 lbs.)	15.58%
Child (78 lbs.—10-12 yrs.)	13.36%
Child (58 lbs.—7.9 yrs.)	15.58%

*Recommended dietary allowance (revised 1948). National Research Council.

Silverware with your own initial!
Four initialed teaspoons for 75¢! See complete offer on Corn-Soya package.

Easy way to keep double-crust pies from boiling over —a pie-baking hint from

MARIE GIFFORD,
Armour's famous home economist

Cut the top crust off with a pair of kitchen scissors, one-half inch beyond the edge of the filled pie tin. Fold the top crust under the lower crust — and then crimp the edge. Folding the top crust under seals the juices in the pie.

Do you know the secret of flaky, tender pie crusts? It's lard! And Armour Star Lard is America's perfect pie lard — the lard of pie-baking champions. Armour Star Lard comes in a handy, self-measuring carton — with Marie Gifford's famous 5-minute pie crust recipe printed on it. Try this easy, quick, can't-fail recipe — you mix all ingredients at room temperature! Armour Star Lard makes wonderfully delicious biscuits — light, tender hot breads. Armour Star Lard makes all your fried foods more digestible, too!

Got a pie-baking question? Just write to Marie Gifford, Dept. 460, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois. She will help you with any pie-baking problem you may have. Write to Marie Gifford, too, for an interesting free booklet of her favorite baking recipes.

Armour Star Lard

—the all-pure lard that stays fresh without refrigeration. Remember, lard saves you money, too!

Pea Soup
Rice Croquettes
Carrots with Onions
Deep-Dish Pie

The rice should cover the cheese like a Victorian bathing suit.

Our main dish is rice croquettes with a difference and, since it's rather on the light side for dinner, I think you should serve your favorite hearty soup—pea soup would be a good choice.

The vegetable is carrots with onions, a welcome change from peas with carrots. To let you in on a secret, I don't really care for the traditional peas—that's why I put onions with the carrots I love. Try to slice your carrots into fine rounds, and as for onions, I calculate four smallish ones for a bunch of carrots. Melt a lump of butter or margarine the size of a walnut into a pan with a tight cover. Add your vegetables, a little water—it should come to no more than halfway—salt and pepper. Cover, and leave to its own devices until done. You might check from time to time if more water is needed—hot water, mind you. Remember, that's always easier to add than subtract, so be easy on the water to get this dish as it should be: carrots and onions tender, the water absorbed, and all the vitamins and minerals going where they should go—namely, into your family and you.

The rice croquettes are a fine way of using leftover rice, but it would be dull to fry them bare of surprises. Talking of surprises, remember when grandma taught you to knit? Her balls of wool invariably held a surprise in their core, to reward you for knitting up. Neatly wrapped in tissue paper or in a little box you'd find a coin, a little ring or some other coveted trinket. That's what I mean when I put cheese plump in the middle of my croquettes—something to look forward to, to surprise me.

For dessert, pie—you choose that. I go for one-crust deep-dish pies—more fruit, you know, and easier on the calorie-conscious conscience.

Rice Croquettes (39c)

Cook ½ cup rice in boiling salted water. Drain. There should be 2 cups. Add 1 egg, well beaten, and 1 teaspoon salt, making sure that none of the egg's goodness goes wasted in the dish in which you have beaten it. Cut enough of your favorite cheese or cheese food into cubes to make 1 cup. Pieces should be ¾" square. Cover each piece of cheese with rice mixture—you can put several pieces of cheese into one croquette, if you're a lavish girl. Shape into croquettes. Here's a tip: be careful to cover the cheese very thoroughly (the way mother was covered by her bathing suits—dresses, I should say). You must do this so that the cheese will not ooze out, which would spoil both the taste and the effect of the croquettes. Dip croquettes into bread crumbs, neatly and evenly, and fry in deep fat until they are nicely browned on all sides, and crisp. That's a croquette's secret—crisp on the outside and soft within, to make each bite a pleasure. Serve with a lovely tomato sauce.

P.S. There are more ways to rice croquettes—why not use morsels of leftover meat, ham, bits of sausage or small, sautéed mushrooms. Surprises—remember?

Tomato Juice
Italian Risotto with Ham
Creamed Spinach
Pears with Hot Chocolate Sauce

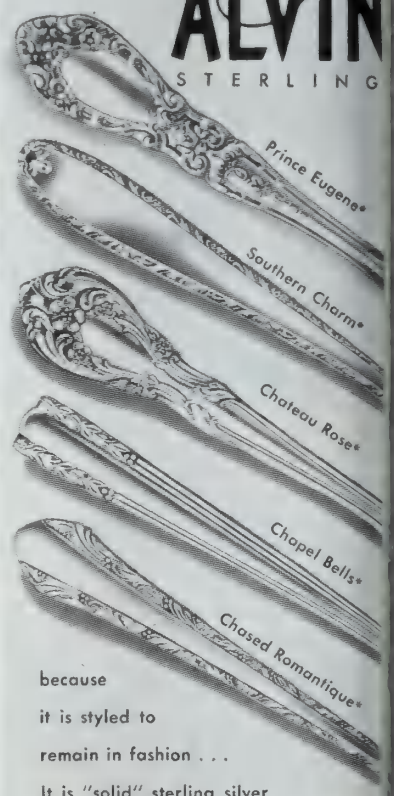
Father Risotto's rice children are shapely individuals.

Everything but the main dish is familiar to you on today's menu: the tomato juice pepped up with a dash of Worcestershire and a squeeze of lemon; the creamed spinach (don't forget to add a whisper of nutmeg for a lovely, elusive flavor) and the dessert—canned pears with chocolate sauce we'll have for that, the pears carefully drained, and the chocolate sauce hot and very vanilla-ish.

The main dish is Italian Risotto with Ham, and before giving you the recipe for this, I want to raise my voice on behalf of this friend of man, rice.

Italian cooking uses plenty of rice, especially in Northern Italy, where it's grown under water over large areas. In fact, it is little known in America that Northern Italians seldom use spaghetti—their staple is rice, and on occasion, corn meal. Risotto is one of their ways of cooking rice, and I think, along with gourmets all over the world, one of the best. The difference comes in with the liquid (water, tomato juice or bouillon, all hot) being added gradually, as soon as one batch is absorbed by the rice—you'll see how this is done below. This way, the rice is so much tastier, since it is cooked inside out, so to speak.

There are many varieties of risotto, but for today's menu we will concentrate on:



Italian Risotto with Ham (79c)

Mince 1 medium onion and fry in ¼ pound butter or margarine until it's limp and golden, but no more. Be sure it's really soft, because for some reason it never catches up with this initial cooking. Add 1½ cups rice, which must be dry. If yours isn't quite immaculate, rub it clean between two clean kitchen towels, but don't wash it. Cook rice in butter or margarine until it is very dry, a bit frizzly at the edges and quite glassy to look at. Stir plenty. I beg you to do this carefully—this is the stage when the rice mates with the butter flavor, never to be torn asunder again. Next step: add as much hot diluted canned consommé (or bouillon made from cubes and water) as the rice will absorb easily, which means that it should be just covered. And stir, stir, stir. As I said before, risotto is rice cooked from the inside, getting more flavorsome as it goes along; that's why it's so much nicer to add consommé rather than plain, dull, old hot water. And do you know why the liquid must be hot? Because you can't add cold to hot, or the rice will sadly close its pores, so to speak, which have been opened during cooking, and get hard and stay so. But back to rice. Add more hot liquid as you go along and stir to prevent sticking and burning—it is really very easy. When the rice is a little more than half done, you add 2 teaspoons salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper and 1 cup diced ham. More liquid (you will need a total of 3½ cups altogether), more stirring—you can tell by the taste when the rice is done enough. (If you haven't the time to stir and watch, watch and stir, you can add the hot consommé all at once, to the buttered rice, in a heavy pan. Add the ham and seasonings, cover tightly and simmer very gently 40 minutes—no peeking.) Again, I warn you of overcooking—Father Risotto likes his grain children soft, but shapely, and distinct from one another. Sprinkle with cheese, and serve and eat hot.

THE END

It's smart to buy

ALVIN STERLING

because it is styled to remain in fashion . . .
It is "solid" sterling silver through and through and constant use will only enhance its beauty.
Modestly priced for satisfaction and service, year after year, for a lifetime.

SEE IT . . BUY IT . . AT YOUR JEWELER'S
Write us for free illustrated price folder of these and other ALVIN patterns.

THE ALVIN SILVERSMITH Makers of Exclusive Silver Designs for over Sixty years
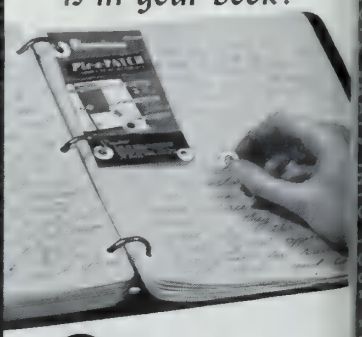
PROVIDENCE 7, RHODE ISLAND

*Trademarks



EARN THE MONEY YOU NEED
SELLING SUNSHINE CHRISTMAS CARDS

Friends and Neighbors buy on sight America's Leading Folder Ass't. with many DECORATIVE LINED ENVELOPES $1. NEW! DIFFERENT! 100% Profit. NOVELTY KROMEKOTES, NATURE PRINTS, CHRISTMAS HOLLY, Religious, Gift Wraps, Stationery, Value Imprints 50 for $1.25. Big $1,000. Sales Clubs. Special Money-Making Plan for Clubs. SAMPLES ON APPROVAL.

SUNSHINE ART STUDIOS
Dept. LE-7, 115 Fulton Street, New York 38

NEW! DISPENSER ENVELOPE

You'll never lose those notes you took When Pic-a-PATCH is in your book!

NEW! PINK TINT IDENTIFIES GUMMED SIDE

Dennison
*Pic-a-*PATCH
The new dispenser for GUMMED REINFORCEMENTS

AT STATIONERY COUNTER

THE SPELL

(Continued from Page 35)

ı served as a signal. Then the group
d and a tall young man, with a brief, ant nod of farewell that embraced member of the party, stepped into rain, shut the door firmly and, withincommoding Mrs. Belchamber, ard the three children at the window in best position for making their final es. The train moved, the children waved he cries of the farewell committee died in the distance.

rs. Belchamber found, with deep relief, the newcomers were silent. She studied hree of them and decided that their ıer might just as well have saved herself ble and had one child instead of three, apart from their size and the fact that girl's hair was somewhat longer than oys'—she could not detect the smallest rence in them.

ıere was the elder boy—he might have ten, with brown skin, brown hair and brown eyes. There was the younger —about nine, brown skin, brown hair large brown eyes. The little girl, she ght, would be about seven—brown skin, vn hair and large brown eyes. They ed typically French, and so did those ulous hats, but it was pleasant—if sur-ng—to find that French children could ave with English calm.

Irs. Belchamber's eyes went to the young ı, and she experienced a distinct feeling of k. He was as unmistakably English as children were French. She wondered t he was doing with three French chil-ı. Tutor, probably. But they were too ng—and he didn't, somehow, look like a r, though he was obviously in charge of n.

Friends of yours?" she inquired of the ng man.

hristopher Heron paused in the act of ing tickets and rested a pair of cool gray s upon the stranger. He sensed rather n saw a rich old lady—one got the im-ssion of plain but good clothes, good gage, general well-being. He disliked her y much; she had a disagreeable expression l a long thin nose which he did not care to e thrust into his affairs. He placed her as of a type which considers its own good eding sufficient cover for a display of bad nners.

He answered her laconically, and went k to his sorting. "Relations," he said.

Mrs. Belchamber flushed with anger, but curiosity was stronger than her anger. If ormation was withheld in one quarter, she uld get it elsewhere. She looked at the er boy, assembled her French and adssed him.

'Quel est—er—votre nom?" she inquired.

IE answer came in halting but correct glish. "My name is Robert," he said. He licated first the younger boy, and then the
l. "This is my brother, Paul, and this is sister, Josette."

Mrs. Belchamber stared at him. "You ak English very well," she informed him.

He gave her a short, un-English bow.
hank you."

'I, too, speak English very well," said ul.

'Moi aussi," said Josette.

'That," explained Robert, "is because we English."

'That is true. I am English," corroboed Paul.

'Moi aussi," said Josette.

There was a pause. Three pairs of brown es were fixed upon Mrs. Belchamber, but e was a little bewildered by this accommo-ting response. She saw the Englishman rring restlessly, and hastened on with her estions before he could divert the chil-n's attention.

'Where are you going?" she inquired.
o England?"

'Yes," said Robert.

'To England," said Paul. "I have been fore."

'Moi aussi," said Josette.

Christopher leaned back and closed his eyes. To England. He thought with relief of the journey's end—though it was not to be quite the end. It was a pity to be taking the three of them to a London flat, especially in June, but it was all the home he had at the moment. Perhaps it would have been wiser, when he heard of the fire, to have postponed coming over to fetch the three of them, but the arrangements for transferring them permanently to England had been long and elaborate, and he had felt it best to stick to the plan.

THEY had been, he remembered, singularly unmoved when he had told them the news. That, perhaps, was the English side of them—but he had expected Robert, at any rate, to show some emotion at the thought that the home of his ancestors stood in ruins. But Robert had made a practical approach to the situation.

"The castle, it is burned?" he had asked.

"Yes. Not the walls, you understand, because they're stone, and very thick, but the inside."

"It cannot be made again?"

"You mean the damage repaired? No. You see," Christopher had told him, "it would mean a great deal of expense, and another thing ——"

He had hesitated. It was not the time to explain that an erection which for the last six hundred years had been an unsightly blot on the landscape was now a picturesque ruin. It was better not to dwell on the fact that since its erection in 1059 by Robert Fitz-Heron the silhouette of Piershurst Castle had stunned all beholders who had any appreciation of line or beauty. William the Conqueror, looking round for Saxon manors to confiscate for his own adherents, had reined in his horse, looked incredulously at Piershurst and crossed it off the list of awards. After the anarchy of Stephen's reign, it had been placed on Henry II's black list of unlicensed castles ordered to be destroyed, but the King's advisers had persuaded him to allow the notorious eyesore to stand as a perpetual punishment to the district. It had resisted sieges and survived assaults; it had seen countless Herons born and buried. Paul Heron, the sixth Earl of Piershurst, had been the last to live in it; before his son, Robert, the seventh earl, could be brought over from France to take up his residence at the castle, it had come at last to disaster. The seventh earl was homeless.

Christopher turned his head and studied the seventh earl. A nice little boy. A nice trio, in fact. This, his third meeting with them, had confirmed him in his previous view that they were, as children went, extraordinarily little trouble. He had not yet come to any conclusion about the wisdom of transplanting them to England, but it had been their mother's wish. She had displayed great sense throughout her difficult marriage, and had an instinct for doing the right thing. Christopher hoped that this would turn out to be the right thing.

He listened to the children's polite answers to the questions of the sour old woman opposite, and smiled to himself; she would extract something, but not a great deal, of their history, for it was a complicated one. A troubled one, but those who had been most troubled were now at rest. Christopher himself—the only one who might have felt a pang at the sight of the three children—felt nothing but liking.

He had been brought up as heir to the earldom of Piershurst. Until he was fourteen, he and his widowed mother had lived at the castle with his uncle, who was an elderly bachelor, quiet, scholarly, almost a recluse. He had gone to Aix-les-Bains for a cure and, to the incredulous astonishment of all who knew him, returned with a French wife. Christopher remembered his mother's face, stony with rage, when the news reached her. She and Christopher had left the castle, and he had not seen Piershurst again until he looked upon its blackened and gutted ruins.

The Secret of Lovelier Hair for More Than a Century

Photograph by HORST

EMILE-ROCKEFELLER CENTER styles the hair of MRS. JOHN N. COLE, JR., of New York and Easthampton, following a Conti Castile Shampoo.

Pure castile is the shampoo that leading beauty authorities recommend above all others.

That is why leading hairdressers use Conti Castile Shampoo regularly. Its pure castile is a perfect cleanser. It guards the health of the scalp and leaves the hair radiant and glowing with lustrous highlights. And it contains pure imported olive oil that tones the hair and leaves it perfectly conditioned to take and hold its wave.

For more than a hundred years, pure castile has been the preferred shampoo. Women first made it by dissolving Conti pure castile soap, imported since 1836. Their great demand led to today's perfected ready-to-use Conti Castile Shampoo . . . pure, safe, and non-irritating . . . recommended for every type of hair, for young children and all the family.

For Conti contains no mysterious ingredients—no harsh chemicals. It protects the natural beauty of the hair, does not dry the scalp, streak grey or bleached hair, and requires no conditioning agents or after rinses.

For really lovely hair, be sure to use Conti Castile Shampoo regularly.

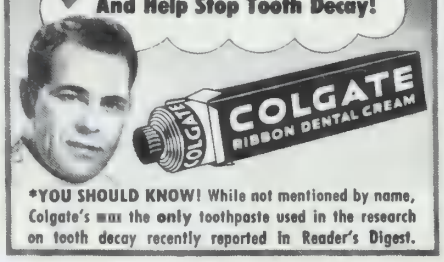
Conti Shampoo

PURE CASTILE

Now also available in Canada

READER'S DIGEST* Reported The Same Research Which Proves That Brushing Teeth Right After Eating with

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST



Reader's Digest recently reported the same research which proves the Colgate way of brushing teeth right after eating stops tooth decay best! The most thoroughly proved and accepted home method of oral hygiene known today!

Yes, and 2 years' research showed the Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever before reported in dentifrice history! No other dentifrice, ammoniated or not, offers such conclusive proof!

LATER—Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

Use Colgate Dental Cream
To Clean Your Breath
While You Clean Your Teeth—
And Help Stop Tooth Decay!

*YOU SHOULD KNOW! While not mentioned by name, Colgate's was the only toothpaste used in the research on tooth decay recently reported in Reader's Digest.

He wondered, sometimes, at his own calm acceptance of the fact that his chance of becoming the seventh earl was gone. He had faced the prospect without any great sense of loss, but to his mother it had been a shattering blow.

The couple were left severely alone. After the birth of the third child, the earl took his family to France and settled them in a house near his wife's home in the Pyrenees. It was here that Christopher, some time later, had, on an impulse, interrupted a holiday tour and paid them a visit.

He was nineteen when he first saw his aunt and the children. He had always liked his uncle; he liked even more his mature, sensible wife; he grew to love the atmosphere of the big, rambling house and the happiness in it. He could even find pleasure in teasing his fat little brown-eyed cousins.

He went back the following year after the death of his mother, and it was the last time he was to see his uncle. At his death, Christopher brought his aunt and the children to England for a visit; she had decided to go back to France, and it was then that he had promised her that, if anything happened to her, he would bring the children to England and act as their guardian.

He was now fulfilling his promise. But what had been a smooth plan had developed a great many hitches. Ursule, the children's old nurse, had been coming with them, and with her Monique, her daughter; but Ursule had met him with a woebegone countenance: Monique was ill—it was not much, but she had a fever and it was necessary to wait until it passed before they traveled. They would follow when Monique was better.

So he was on his way to London with three children. Well, that was all right, he reflected. These three had a capacity for keeping their heads.

It was obvious that they were enjoying the journey, chatting in a friendly manner with the thin Englishwoman. The day was warm, the seat deep and soft. . . .

He awoke to find his charges gone and the old lady's eyes fixed upon him with a look of grim expectancy.

"Well?" she snapped. "Aren't you going after them?"

"After them?" Christopher raised an interrogative eyebrow.

"Those children. They went out. You're in charge of them, aren't you?"

"Yes, I am," said Christopher, with an emphasis on the pronoun that made the old lady flush angrily.

"Suppose they fall out of the train," she demanded. "Who's to stop them?"

"If you saw three children preparing to fall out of a train," said Christopher, "wouldn't you try to restrain them?"

"Certainly. But ——"

"Anybody would," said Christopher. "You mustn't have any anxiety. The train is full; the windows are in full view; somebody will see them and stop them." He closed his eyes.

"Do you mean to tell me," she asked, "that you're going to make no move to see that they're not getting into any trouble or annoying people?"

"They won't get into any trouble," said Christopher, "because there are so many kind people about—you, for example—who are at hand to avert disaster."

"Oh, really?" The sharp nose was curled in contempt. "Then all the other passengers must submit to annoyance just because ——"

"If anybody has any complaints, I am here"—Christopher stretched out his legs more comfortably—"I am here to receive them."

He closed his eyes with a well-feigned air of a man on the point of repose. The pretense was too good: in a few moments he was fast asleep.

Christopher awoke to find the carriage empty, and wondered, as memory came back, if the old lady was following in the wake of the children. The passage of a steward down the corridor informed him that dinner was being served.

He went slowly along the swaying train and found the quartet seated at a table for four. He took a seat near them and had his meal; the old lady paid her own account and prudently sent Christopher the bill for her three companions. Together they returned to the carriage. The flying trees outside were beginning to have a woolly look, and Christopher presently looked out and saw that they were running into mist. The old lady pulled her lips into the long, tight line that Christopher was beginning to recognize.

"We're going to be late," she stated. "Late this end, and late crossing the Channel and late the other side. No sort of time for young children to arrive. Why couldn't you have got them across earlier? Look at that little one—half asleep now. If you're looking after children, then for pity's sake look after them."

Christopher gazed out the window. It was not much of a view, but it was better than a stringy form and a sour face. He knew, by now, her name and something about her. Belchamber, widow, by all appearances rich, had been, before her marriage, one of the Melhamptons of Melhampton, owned a large house and had given it to a committee engaged in forming homes for aged gentlefolk, on condition, Christopher gathered, that she was to occupy the best suite for the rest of her life. The committee, he reflected, probably imagined—from her age—that she was on her last legs. When they saw her, they were going to get a shock; this was the type that lived to be centenarians. He, personally, would give her twenty more years,

My country owes me nothing. It gave me, as it gives every boy and girl, a chance. It gave me schooling, independence of action, opportunity for service and honor. In no other land could a boy from a country village, without inheritance or influential friends, look forward with unbounded hope. —HERBERT HOOVER.

and he was glad that he was not to see her for any of them. The late Belchamber must have had a time.

Josette was asleep, leaning heavily on Christopher's shoulder, when they reached the port. The train was a good deal behind schedule, and the mist had thickened. Christopher, after a glance at the tired and drooping Josette, put her into her thick overcoat and wound a scarf round her head. He would put her into a berth on the boat and let her sleep during the crossing.

"The sea," announced Robert, with a disappointed air, "will be so ——" He held out two hands, the palms flattened. "The ship will not rock."

"And a good thing, too," said Mrs. Belchamber. "We've got enough trouble with darkness and fog and raw June air. We don't want any more. Come along now, like a good boy, and get me down these things."

Christopher noted, with apprehension, that she had attached herself to his party. He could scarcely refuse her his help in getting her luggage onto the platform and finding her a porter; after this he made a brief farewell and hurried away.

On the boat, she made it clear that she expected him to attend to her comfort. She chose a site on the deck and stood on it, with the children, until Christopher had got berths, paid the porters, arranged the luggage and returned to announce that all was ready. He saw her go with Josette to the cabin which they were to share, and determined to shake her off when they set foot ashore.

The crossing was calm, but slow. Robert and Paul remained on deck with Christopher, pacing slowly to and fro, their hands thrust deep into pockets in imitation of his, their steps lengthened to his stride.

Christopher stared into the fog; in less than an hour they would be in England. His car was waiting; all they had to do was get into it and drive up to London; his servant, Merrow, a family man, would have the children in bed and tucked in and they could sleep it out; Ursule and Monique would arrive in a few days and resume their responsibilities. All that remained, after that, was choosing schools and finding a home—no castle this time, but a house with la enough to give the children space a freedom.

Fellow passengers passed to and fro, a some stared curiously at the tall, go looking Englishman with the two lit French boys. Christopher's face wore a w ried frown not often seen upon it; he v thinking that unless the mist lifted, he wo find it impossible to drive up to London.

The steamer nosed its way into the harb Robert and Paul hung over the side, peeri as ropes were flung and the ship edged up the jetty. Christopher went below to rou Josette, and was met by Mrs. Belchamb

"I've been looking at that child," she sa "She's caught cold. She ought to have be in charge of someone who knows somethi about children."

"Well, she will be soon," said Christoph

He went into the cabin and roused Jose gently, and found the old lady at his hee

"See what I told you?" she said. "Sh got a nice, heavy cold." She shouldered h aside. "I'll stay here with her while you g the luggage looked after."

Christopher gave her a long look in which he threw all his dislike. "I think you better see about your own things," he sa coldly. "I've got enough on my hands wi three children and our luggage."

"I'll stay with the children," said M Belchamber, returning stare for stare. "Y go along and get seats in the train."

"I don't want seats in the train, tha you," said Christopher. "I'm not going train."

She seemed, for a moment, almost disco certed. "Not?"

"No. My car's here. I'm driving up."

"In this fog?" She gave a snort. "Y can't see a yard in front of you."

It was true, but Christopher, ignoring t remark, applied himself to the task of wra ping Josette up again in her warm scarf. I noted uneasily her heavy eyes and listle air.

Christopher lifted Josette and set her her feet. "Come along," he said gentl "You can stay with Robert and Paul un we go ashore."

She slipped her hand into his and he l her outside; the old lady followed close b hind. Christopher was shocked at the heat Josette's small hand resting limply in h own. Children's temperatures rose wh they had colds; she should be warmly in be

His spirits lifted a little when they got in the customs shed, for Mrs. Belchamber, his infinite relief, was claimed. A thin, middl aged woman in spectacles and a tweed clo had come to meet her.

"You are Mrs. Belchamber?" she said.

The old lady turned her grimmest look the newcomer. "I'm Mrs. Belchamber yes."

"How nice to see you. I was asked to co and meet you."

"And who asked you?" demanded M Belchamber.

"The committee." The tone was pleasa but firm. "We have your suite all read Have the customs finished with you?"

"They haven't begun with me," stat Mrs. Belchamber flatly. "And I didn't a anybody to send anybody to meet me."

The newcomer lost none of her determin amiability. "Shall we get through as quick as we can? We don't want the London trai ours is the branch line."

"Ours is nothing of the kind," said M Belchamber. "And I shall get through in n own time. I know where my own house thank you. I don't need any committee show me the way. I shall go up to London, I have always done in the past, and I sha stay the night at my usual hotel and I sha travel down to Melhampton comfortably the morning. I've never used that bran line, and I'm not going to begin now."

Christopher was relieved to see that t committee's smile remained fixed. He swu his cases onto the customs counter. He h great faith in the committee, which look extremely efficient; it would have the o

(Continued on Page 78)

See how KLEENEX serves just ONE_

Perfect balance. Of course you want a soft tissue—a strong tissue. *Kleenex has the "just right" combination of softness and brawn. (Thanks to a special process.) And each Kleenex tissue is perfectly uniform: always the same top-flight quality you know you can depend on for every use—from colds to makeup removal.

Pure...so lint-free. Only finest ingredients go into Kleenex . . . from pulp to package. Pure cellulose fibers, with absolutely no ground wood. That's why you won't find weak spots or hard particles in this tissue. And test after test proves Kleenex freer from lint. Won't aggravate sore noses during colds.

Saves as it serves. No other tissue has the handy Serv-a-Tissue box. With Kleenex you pull one double tissue at a time (not a handful), and the next pops up. Ends waste—saves trouble, saves money. So don't take just "tissues." Insist on wonderfully soft, strong Kleenex—your best buy in tissues.

Ends waste...

...saves you money

Get several boxes when you buy—you'll always have a good supply

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

(Continued from Page 76)

lady on the branch line in no time at all. His mind reverted to his own problem.

He could not drive up; visibility, which here was about twenty yards, was, he was told, nil in the London area.

He could send the children up by train and telephone Merrow, and Merrow could meet them and take them to the flat. But after a glance at Josette, he rejected the idea.

He felt suddenly desperate. He was tired; he had left England two days ago and the past forty-eight hours seemed a nightmare of trains, stations, changes, a babel of tongues, farewells, promises. The fog was an unnecessary, a spiteful obstacle at the end of his journey. He didn't want to go on the London train, but it seemed as though there was nothing else to be done, and nowhere else to go. A feeling of frustration gripped him.

He shook it off and turned to the porter, and, as he did so, it flashed upon him that there was, indeed, somewhere to go. Not fifteen miles from here was a house where he would find shelter and a welcome. He would go to Scotty's.

Scotty was not, and made no claim to be, a Scotsman. His surname was Linden, but his friends, if they ever knew it, had forgotten it.

He had been one of four children whose mother, for some reason best known to herself, had christened them Violetta, Dorothea, Wilhelmina and Maximilian. These cumbersome labels had been shaved by their contemporaries to Vi, Dot, Bill and Thanks-a-Million, and this last Scotty remained until the night following a dormitory feast, when he had wakened his companions with screams and informed them that Mary, Queen of Scots, was sitting at the foot of his bed.

His father had been a successful businessman, and at his death Scotty had inherited a good deal of money. He was a young man of simple tastes and inexpensive habits. Scotty, moreover, was of an industrious disposition, and anxious to invest his money in a career that would give him exercise and profit at the same time.

He bought a fruit farm in Warwickshire; this venture failed, as did, subsequently, a chicken farm in Yorkshire, a sheep farm in Cumberland and a cattle ranch in the Scottish Highlands. He had then decided to try mixed farming in Kent, and now, after four years, was—to the surprise of his friends—still trying it.

Though Scotty was older than Christopher by about four years, the two men were lifelong friends; Christopher had seen and deplored every project save the mixed farm, which he had never visited. He had thought the scheme a foolish one, but he felt thankful, now, that Scotty had refused to take his advice, and had come to live near the old town of Grenton.

He freed himself gently from Josette's small, hot hand, and issued instructions to Robert.

"Don't move," he said. "I've got to see if the car's here. All right?"

"Yes," said Robert. "All right."

The car was here; Christopher tipped the mechanic who had brought it from the garage, and took Josette in his arms.

"Let's get going," said Christopher. "I'm going to tuck you all up in the car while I telephone to a friend to say we're on our way. Ready?"

EVERYBODY was ready. Robert and Paul were settled warmly on the back seat of the car, while Christopher wound Josette into a traveling rug and placed her in front beside the driving seat.

"There!" he said. "I'll be back in a minute and then we'll be off."

"To where, off?" inquired Robert.

"To a farm. To a nice farm where you'll see cows and things. And pigs, perhaps."

Both boys smiled; slow, attractive smiles that scarcely moved their lips, but lighted up the large, beautiful eyes.

"I like the cows," said Robert.

"I like them, too," said Paul.

Christopher waited for Josette's corroborative murmur, but it was not to be heard; stooping, he saw that she was asleep. Again he felt a pang of uneasiness and apprehension, and hurried to the telephone.

Painfully, perseveringly, Christopher extracted from a waspish operator the information that there was, indeed, a Linden, M., living at Lower Grenton.

"It's in the book, if you look," she said tartly.

"It isn't in my book," said Christopher. "Can you tell me the number, please?"

"It's in the book. Did you look under the L's?"

"Yes, I did. What's the number, can you tell me?"

"It's in the Elwing area," stated the operator. "What area were you looking in?"

Christopher ground his teeth and glanced down at the book. "Elwing area," he said. "District number ——"

"Well, then, it's in there. It don't do to call Enquiries if you don't need Enquiries."

Christopher, willing to be convinced, flipped open the book and ran down the L's once more.

"There is," he stated slowly, "no Linden, M., in this book. Now will you very kindly give me the ——"

"You're lookin' at the L's?"

He gritted his teeth. "I'm looking at the L's. I'm looking at the Elwing area. I'm looking at the January issue. I'm looking at the ——"

"Oh-h-h! Well, naturally if you look at January! Grenton wasn't in the Elwing area, not in January, and then it was changed, see?"

"I see," said Christopher. "May I have the number now?"

"Yes, you can. If you'd said you were looking in January, instead of wasting my time, I could have told you before. The number's Grenton four two four. Want to be put through?"

"Please."

He waited through a series of buzzes, squeaks, a jumble of voices and, finally, a jarring whir that pierced his ear and made him wince.

"Hello," said a voice, and Christopher squeezed the receiver to his ear in ecstasy.

"Scotty!" he shouted.

"Good heavens—it's Chris!" exclaimed Scotty in mild surprise. "Go away and ring later—I've got a cow calving."

"I'm coming over, Scotty," said Christopher. "Is that all right with you?"

"Over? Over here? Well, come on then—what's keeping you?"

"I've just got over from France, Scotty, and I wanted to make sure you were there. I've got three children."

A rift appeared in Scotty's equanimity. "You've what? Three!"

"They're my cousins. You know—my uncle's ——"

"Oh! You mean little Lord Fauntleroy and his brother and sister?"

"Yes. We've just landed from France, and they're cold and tired and one of them's got a temperature."

"Well, well, well," commented Scotty. "I always thought you were the kind of fellow who kept out of trouble. Well, bring 'em along. How're you coming?"

"I've got my car here. Can you put us all up? Have you got room?"

"I've got rooms. There's nothing in 'em except beds, but we'll fix something up. There's nothing to eat except cheese and nothing to drink except milk."

"How do I get out to you?"

Scotty told him, and Christopher, after repeating the instructions, banged the receiver down and made hurriedly for the car. He whistled a soft little air, wrenching the door open. There was Josette, still asleep, and in the back, the boys ——

The tune died on Christopher's lips and stared, open-mouthed. On the back se between the two boys, sat Mrs. Belchamb

"This looks," admitted the old la grudgingly, "like an intrusion. But I sho be glad of a lift up to London. That dete able creature ——"

"I'm not going to London," broke Christopher brusquely.

Mrs. Belchamber glared at him angr "My good young man, you told me c tinctly that you were driving up."

"I changed my plans," said Christoph "I didn't see any necessity to inform yo "Inform me? But you completely mis me! You gave me to understand that ——

"I'm sorry," said Christopher, "but I in a hurry to get off. A friend is waiting us. If you'd very kindly ——"

CHRISTOPHER leaned over and opened back door, holding it open politely for M Belchamber. She made no move to alight

"I don't want to be impolite," beg Christopher grimly, "but I'd be very gra ful if you'd allow me to get off."

"And what do you expect me to do?" quired Mrs. Belchamber. "The Lonc train has gone long since. The next one somewhere near midnight. Am I to sit in t place in the fog until midnight?"

"The lady who came to meet you will ——

Mrs. Belchamber's black hat waggled w satisfaction. "Her? She's gone. I gave her slip."

"I wish I had your technique," s Christopher. "Good-by."

"You can shut that door," said Mrs. B chamber flatly. "You've got me into t scrape and now you've got to get me o Tell me, if you please, what we're going do."

Christopher looked round him. It was ing to be difficult enough to drive as it w if he had to go round looking for somewh to put this detestable old woman, he wo find himself befogged, stranded with th cold and hungry children. They, after were his first charge; he must find th warmth and comfort, and what happened the Belchamber was none of his affair. S had entered his car uninvited; she must wherever he cared to take her. Without other word, he got into the car, swung i the road and headed north.

"Where are you going?" inquired M Belchamber.

"To a friend's farmhouse. I don't kn what it's like, and I don't particularly ca If it isn't up to your standards of comfort won't be my fault," said Christopher colc

There was no reply. He drew Josette ward him until her head rested against shoulder, then he concentrated on the d cult drive ahead of him.

The car lurched and swayed; nobo spoke, and he concluded that the boys h fallen asleep. The road became a lane, the a cart track and suddenly, round a be they saw the lights of a house. The small li dancing before them must be a tor Christopher edged on through the swir whiteness, and the torch gleamed straigh front of them. He stopped, and a bulky fo loomed through the mist. The car door wrenched open and a voice boomed out.

"Well, well, you made it! Good to see y Chris—I'll direct you." Scotty banged door, stood on the footboard and pilo Christopher into a huge barn lit by two h ricane lamps. "She'll do here," he said, st ping off and opening the car door once m "Now come on out and let me have a l at you."

Christopher found the boys wide awa and Mrs. Belchamber looking about her w her sharp glance. He gathered the sleep Josette into his arms, and she roused a lit

"It's all right, my sweet, we're he Christopher told her. "You'll soon be and warm in bed. . . . Scotty, this is M Belchamber. She missed her train."

"How d'you do. Any friend of Chris's cetera, et cetera," said Scotty. "Come follow me. You two little fellers—you give me a hand with the luggage. Av Heave-ho! Yo-ho-ho and there she g

(Continued on Page 80)

Ask any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

PROGRESSIVE education: the shortest distance between orange crate and soapbox.

Psychiatrists once were as rare as airplanes in the sky.

One difference between youth and age is the conception of what constitutes the silver lining.

The best parents are those who strive devotedly to make children see what will happen—and when it does never say, "I told you so."

Child's comment, after being spanked: "This wouldn't have happened, you know, if you'd co-operated with me in the beginning."

There's only one excuse for dad's playing ball with the boys: to get exercise for himself.

Suggestion for hostesses: Name plates pinned on guests, as if they were attending a convention.

Child conformist: Four-year-old to mother: "I don't want to go to heaven; I want to go under the grass like everyone else."

There's the kind of woman you by-pass in conversation the way you do a Travel-At-Your-Own-Risk stretch of highway.

A young girl in her first high heels is as unsteady as a long-handled pan with nothing in it.

School custodian, in his sixties: "I'm old enough now to know that all I'm going to get out of life is what I pick up from day to day in little pieces, and that it isn't going to be a big hunk at the end."

If I know how much silver my son has when he goes out at night I can tell, almost to the minute, when he will return.

Young wife airs grievance: "My husband tells me just how to open a can, how to get into and out of the driveway, how to cross a street—then goes away on a two-week fishing trip leaving me all alone."

If interested in knowing how many times a refrigerator goes on in one night, accept your friend's offer to occupy her small apartment the week end she is out of town.

Whenever my mother complained she had nothing left to show for her day's work, my venerable aunt would say, "Ahem! If you didn't make it so good they wouldn't eat so much."

Boy to teacher: "When I came in this morning I saw the flowers in the vase and the one on you and I decided to be good."

"Whenever I go out at night," confides a friend, "my husband says he'll worry till I get back—and proves it by going to bed and to sleep."

The mother is yet unborn who sooner or later can forgo telling her children all she has done for them.

Instantly stops perspiration odor...checks perspiration moisture

Now—a deodorant created for you by famous skin care specialists: Tussy Cream Deodorant.

This famous cosmetic deodorant instantly stops perspiration odor... checks perspiration moisture! Tussy Cream Deodorant is antiseptic, keeps you so sure of yourself—throughout the longest days.

Tussy Cream Deodorant has a fragrant, fluffy vanishing, cream base—disappears without a trace. Actually makes your skin feel smoother... can't harm the filmiest fabric. Tussy Cream Deodorant comes in economical jars and tubes—50¢ and $1 plus tax.

NEW—Tussy Liquid Deodorant in plastic squeeze bottle—$1.25 plus tax.

TUSSY cream and liquid deodorant

The dream chicken that came true!

It's tender-grown Swift's Premium

HERE is chicken at its finest—specially fed for quality meat, specially raised to give springtime flavor every month of the year.

Planned just for eating, this chicken is a sensational example of the research and development going on in the poultry industry today.

Look for fresh tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken with the tag on the wing or Quick-Frozen in the blue and white picture package.

"A Tisket, A Tasket," serve

CHICKEN-IN-A-BASKET

- 1 tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken, cut for frying
- 1 cup flour
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- ½ cup Swift's Brookfield Butter
- Shortening
- 2 teaspoons salt

Put flour and seasonings in paper sack. Shake 3 or 4 pieces of chicken at a time in sack to coat. Heat butter and enough shortening in a heavy skillet to make ½ inch layer. Brown chicken on both sides in hot fat. Cover tightly. Reduce heat and cook 30 to 40 minutes. Serve hot or cold in napkin-lined dinner basket.

(Continued from Page 78)

What muscle, what muscle, what hustle and bustle, what fussle and tussel and Moses! What muscle!"

Scotty had the suitcases out in a line. Robert and Paul were doing something to help, but they were finding it impossible to keep their eyes off the huge figure swinging out cases and booming out a hearty welcome. In the uncertain, flickering light Scotty did, indeed, look a fearsome figure, and it was clear that Mrs. Belchamber's expression, as she took in details of his appearance, was growing more and more grimly disapproving.

Scotty was six feet two, broadly built, with limbs that looked—and were—of enormous strength. He was dressed in a pair of dark blue dungarees, with a shirt that had once been white; his feet were encased in waterproof boots, into the top of which he had tucked the ends of his trouser legs. Mrs. Belchamber's eyes traveled to his face, and as she scanned the sleepy eyes, the large, sensual-looking mouth, Christopher could see that she was drawing conclusions which were to prove as fixed as they were erroneous.

She was not, he knew, the first to be misled. Scotty was a perfect model for the popular conception of raffishness. It took adults some time to realize that, like a book, Scotty was not to be judged by the cover. Children, reading nothing in his face but indolent kindness, got at once onto terms of warm friendship. The light in the eyes of Robert and Paul showed the beginnings of hero worship, but Mrs. Belchamber's look of wary distrust deepened. Scotty, attributing it to embarrassment at having come uninvited, increased his efforts to put her at her ease.

"Now we're all here," he said. "We'll take the luggage you want, and fetch the rest in later. Fall in and follow me! Madame, your servant. Through the yard, up to the door, throw it open. Madame, ze kitchen. A humble roof, and not entirely rainproof, but look at that whale of a fire!"

Christopher had already looked: he had pushed a large Windsor chair before it and had settled Josette comfortably. Now he straightened and looked at his friend.

"Food," he said.

Scotty led him to a cupboard. "Cheese, like I said," he answered, throwing open the door. "Cheese and bread; not much bread, but fresh—more or less. Mrs. Garcia brought it only yesterday. She does my work. Butter—in there, in that bowl. And there's milk—gallons of it. And eggs—les oofs. That's all. But we've enough for now, I trow."

"All right—bread and cheese and eggs and milk. Bedrooms?"

"Six. That's not counting the two attics where the rats romp. Go and inspect, old son."

Christopher looked round the great kitchen. The fire blazed; over the mantelpiece were two oil lamps which shed a soft glow over the room. The furniture consisted of some wooden chairs, two large cupboards and an enormous deal table. There was a sink in the corner, but no taps; two buckets of water stood beside it.

"No hot-and-cold," said Scotty, following his glance. "But a well and a pump. Those two young Frenchies'll have us watered in no time. Eh, you two?"

ROBERT and Paul, gazing up at him, gave long, blissful sighs. How warm, how friendly was this England! When the black curtain of night was swept aside by the sunlight, how much there would be to look at!

While Christopher looked and the boys listened, Mrs. Belchamber's sharp nose investigated the smells. Farmyard and manure and something more—yes, that unspeakable smock hanging on a peg on the door. Milk had dried on it, soured on it. Her nose lifted in disgust, Mrs. Belchamber walked to the door, lifted the offending garment and, opening the door, dropped the smock outside and closed the door firmly.

"There are healthy smells," she said, looking Scotty in the eye, "and there are unhealthy smells."

She walked past him and out of the room, obviously on her way to inspect the accommodation. Scotty looked after her with admiration.

"Old war horse," he commented. "Are you guardian to her as well as the others?"

"No. Never met her before we got on the train today, and can't shake her off. Let's give these kids something to eat, Scotty—and then into bed. They're played out."

"Supper," said Scotty. "Now then, you two, while we're getting something to eat, you go and get your things off and find a room to put 'em in. Get yourselves out a couple of nightshirts. I'm going to put this pan on the fire and make some omelets. Chris, old son, busy yourself getting that little Sleeping Beauty ready for bed. Then we'll find a bed to put her in."

Mrs. Belchamber returned, her expression grimmer than ever. "Scarcely any furniture," she reported. "No gas, no electricity, no running water, no bathroom."

"No television," chanted Scotty, "no croquet, no diabolo, no ——"

"And no sanitation," ended Mrs. Belchamber grimly.

"I'll show you," said the contrite Scotty. "You should have asked! Out here and across—here's the torch," he continued, leading the way. "Don't mind the geese. There's the door. No lock, I'm afraid, but the geese always give plenty of warning. They ——"

"Give me the torch," said Mrs. Belchamber, snatching it. "This serves me right."

SUPPER was eaten round the huge table. Mrs. Belchamber, her black hat still firmly on her head, carved great slices of bread and buttered them thickly. Scotty made omelets, light and golden, and put steaming jugs of hot milk on the bare board. Robert and Paul ate like hunters, but Josette, leaning against Christopher, merely sipped some warm milk. Mrs. Belchamber eyed her uneasily.

"That child isn't well," she said. "You oughtn't to take her out of this warm room into those vaults of bedrooms."

"We'll light fires," said Scotty, spooning out helpings of cream cheese. "We'll light great, big, roaring fires and warm the old bones of the homestead."

The old bones were not long in warming up. The fireplaces were old-fashioned, but efficient; Scotty brought up wood and coal, lit fires and propped the mattresses round them to air. He produced from somewhere threadbare blankets, and to these were added all available coats, rugs, anything that could serve as bedcovers. The boys were put into a room next to the one allocated to Christopher; Mrs. Belchamber would, she said, have Josette in with her, and Christopher carried Josette upstairs and tucked her into her bed, which was pushed as close to the fire as possible.

Under the glow of the lamps, in the warmth of the big, leaping fires, the household settled gradually into some kind of order. Christopher sat by Josette's bed until her eyes closed, and then, gently freeing his hand, tiptoed along the corridor to look in at the boys. They lay under a miscellaneous assortment of covering, warm and rosy.

Scotty, walking in to inspect them, asked, "Would the old lady like anything before she turns in?"

"I'll see," said Christopher.

He turned and walked back along the corridor and raised his hand to knock gently on the door. Softly though he touched it, it gave way a little, and Christopher's eyes fell on something placed on a chair just inside the room. It was Mrs. Belchamber's black hat. Fastened to it on each side was a bunch of neat gray curls.

Christopher opened his eyes to see sunshine flooding the room. He glanced at his watch and saw that it was half past seven, and, with a jerk that freed him from his assortment of bedclothes, got out of bed and, walking from one to the other of the two large windows, looked out, getting a fair idea of the extent and position of the farm.

It was not large. The first gate visitors came to when approaching from the town of Grenton was the wide and usually open one ng to the farmyard. Entering this, g through a smaller gate, callers nd mselves in a stackyard with a view he i chen door.

Beyond the stackyard, Christopher saw ba in which the car had been left; the sh , long and low, came next, beyond e sties, empty pigsties and a fold with a zen calves among which moved, ingr sly, two French sailor hats. Chrishe wondered how long they had been out re ince dawn, probably.

oc ng across the fields, he saw, about nl s away, a low wooded hill and the nr s of a large house; beyond was nt . The scene was open and peaceful, Christopher saw that Scotty had, as alws, laced himself in one of Nature's elit settings. On this June morning, n ast faint touch of mist to soften outs, e countryside had an enchanted air. hr opher turned from the window and ec n his clothes hastily. Moved by an en desire to know how Josette had se he night, he walked down the corrit rd her room. As he did so, the door he nd Mrs. Belchamber came out. She f y dressed, and on her head was the l ck hat. He greeted her briefly and xe an undertone.

H 's Josette?"

I said Mrs. Belchamber. "She's been gl g all night, and you'll have to get a o She's caught a good, thorough chill."

Wi out answering, Christopher went past r the room. The fire was still burning; e ed that Mrs. Belchamber must have going during the night.

Josette was lying with he d toward the blaze; Christopher came in, t ned and gave him g st of a welcoming e He sat on her bed t k a hot little hand s

H w are you, Jo- he asked gently.

c ughed—a hard sound that brought s pher's fears rushing back. "Thank ry well."

w do you feel?" asked Christopher.

feels perfectly well," said Mrs. Bel- r sharply, from behind him. "But ired—naturally, after such a long —and she's got a headache. Now you get a nice, sensible doctor, and he'll r a pill and make her well in no time."

stopher sat still, sizing up the situa- He had on his hands a sick little girl, all boys and a detestable old woman. st get away as soon as possible, shake old woman, get the boys to his flat t Josette under professional care. He ger, but no return of the panic that pped him the night before. He patted 's hand.

get a nice doctor to come and see he promised, "and then you'll soon be here is Paul?" inquired Josette.

ul? He's outside with Robert, where soon be—playing with the baby cows e baby chicks and the geese."

tucked her in, rose and followed Mrs. amber out of the room.

n afraid," he said, "that you had a bed night."

aturally I did," said Mrs. Belchamber. somebody has to look after children. bout breakfast. Do you suppose your has taken any steps to get us any?"

STOPHER thought it unlikely. His exce told him that Scotty provided a welcome, simple food and ample fuel, ent outside to get on with his work.

ng downstairs in the wake of Mrs. amber's poker-straight back, Christofound a large fire burning in the n, but no preparations for a meal.

told you," said Mrs. Belchamber. ning. For the past thirty years I've able to order my morning tea and take ore I rose. I ——" ou should have gone off on the branch said Christopher abruptly and then, bering that she had watched over Josette during the night, he spoke more gently. "I'll go out and see Scotty and find out about a doctor. The breakfast can wait."

Mrs. Belchamber gave a snort. "If there exists a more irresponsible man than you anywhere, I have yet to meet him."

Seven-thirty in the morning was not the time for an argument. Christopher opened the kitchen door and stepped outside.

THE air was cold, but soft. Geese arched their necks and ran, hissing, toward him; hens cackled and pecked round his feet. He heard voices in the cowshed and made his way toward the building, stumbling over three small puppies as he went. Scotty was milking a cow, and Robert and Paul were looking on entranced.

"—— and that one's the mother of that heifer I showed you outside—remember?" Scotty was saying. "Moss Green, she's called. This is Green Farm and so I call 'em all greens—that one's Olive Green. There's Lime Green and Sea Green—that end one. Fetch that barrow up, one of you, and that spade, and you can start cleaning up. . . . Hallo there, Chris, old son."

Christopher watched the two boys as they shoveled busily, staggering under heavy loads and finally pushing the reeking barrow out through the far door.

"Useful pair," commented Scotty. "Chic hats too. How're things indoors?"

"Not too good, Scotty, I've got to have a doctor."

Scotty got off the milking stool, lifted it and a foaming bucket of milk and lumbered down the narrow shed.

"Josette bad?"

"Yes. She's coughing and she's got a temperature—I don't like it. Who's your doctor?"

Scotty emptied the milk into a large churn and leaned against the whitewashed wall. "A doctor," he said slowly. "Oh, dear, oh, dear. Oh, dear."

Christopher frowned. "Come on, Scotty," he urged. "I'm worried."

"The best doctor here," said Scotty, "is a chap called Curtis. But I don't ——"

"Well, will you ring him up, or shall I?"

"Oh—you," said Scotty decidedly. "Definitely, you. He doesn't like me."

"Well, I'm not going to hold that against him. What's his number?"

"Four eight two. You'd better explain that this is nothing to do with me. You see, he doesn't realize that I like my animals better than I like most humans. The first time I ever rang him up was one of those mix-ups you can't explain afterwards. You see, the vet's number is eight four two ——"

"You called him in mistake?" Christopher asked.

"It was winter, and snowing, and the cowsheds were leaking and my best cow was dying. I don't know to this day what I said, but I rang up what I thought was the vet's number and the doctor came out here, through the blizzard, thinking he was going to deliver a Mrs. Wintergreen who was in the throes. So he's put me on his black list. If you want him out here, you'll have to make some soft, persuasive noises over the telephone."

"Four eight two."

"Let him have another hour in bed, if it isn't too urgent," advised Scotty. "He'll be all the sweeter, and we'll be all the fuller."

Christopher went inside to see the black hat bent over the old-fashioned range. There was a tattered cloth on the table and some battered spoons and forks. Mrs. Belchamber straightened and looked irritably at Christopher.

"This peculiar friend of yours," she began, "hasn't he any possessions?"

"Possessions?"

"Doesn't he own anything besides cows? He has no spare sheets, no spare blankets, no silver or glass, saucepans without lids and buckets without bottoms. If I'm to cook I must have something to cook with. I could find only two eggs—with all those hens making all that clatter out there, why should

The probability that we may fail in the struggle ought not to deter us from the support of a cause we believe to be just. —LINCOLN.

Barbecue with that French's flavor

Barbecue Sauce

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 medium onion, minced
1 small green pepper, minced
2 tablespoons brown sugar
1 tablespoon French's Worcestershire Sauce
1 teaspoon salt
¾ cup ketchup
2 tablespoons French's Mustard

Melt butter or margarine; add onion and green pepper; cook slowly for 2 minutes. Add the remaining ingredients; simmer 10 minutes. Yield: 8 servings.

Frenchwise Hamburgers

1½ lbs. ground chuck beef
2 tablespoons minced onion
1 egg
1½ teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon French's Pepper
2 tablespoons French's Mustard

Mix all ingredients together thoroughly; pat into cakes and broil over charcoal. Serves 5-6.

French's is smoother, creamier, millions prefer it!

(Also made in Canada)

French's is a blend of the finest spices, mustard seed and vinegar money can buy. You'll find this famous mustard has a delightfully different taste—gives food added flavor and zest. No wonder it's America's favorite prepared mustard!

free New recipe book—"DINING DELIGHTS"

Send name, address to The R. T. French Co. 1681 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

"Aw gee, Mom, the only kind of swim trunks for me got to have LASTEX in 'em . . .

"Gosh, Mom, I hate trunks that are always slippin' down and fillin' up with water like a balloon . . .

"Heck, Mom, I'll bet Dad knows LASTEX makes trunks fit fine when a fella's racin' or divin' . . .

"Golly, Mom, all I ask is——just get me a streamlined job that's made with

Lastex
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

the miracle yarn that makes things fit

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
Rockefeller Center • New York

there be only two eggs? And I shall want some milk."

Christopher took the largest jug he could find and filled it from one of the churns in the dairy, then called the doctor. Inquiring about eggs, he was informed by Scotty that there were scores of eggs, if only one knew where to look for them.

"The hens lay," he said. "But they choose out-of-the-way little corners. Find the earl and his little brother and tell them to go on an egg hunt."

Robert and Paul found egg hunting an enchanting game; Mrs. Belchamber found egg cooking less amusing. She provided, however, a breakfast solid enough to satisfy the keenest appetite, and served it with acid comment.

"That range," she told Scotty, "hasn't been cleaned properly for years. Didn't I understand that a woman comes to work for you?"

"Mrs. Garcia," said Scotty. "I make my own breakfast and she clears it up and cleans up generally and then cooks me a midday meal and leaves a bit of cold supper in the cupboard before she goes."

"Well, judging from the state of this place," said Mrs. Belchamber, "'cleans up' is a gross overstatement. What time is the doctor coming?"

"Any time now," said Christopher.

He finished his breakfast, went upstairs and sat on Josette's bed, rubbing one of her hands gently and murmuring comforting sentences from time to time. Soon he heard footsteps and Mrs. Belchamber ushered in the doctor. Christopher saw that he was middle-aged, of a short, stocky build, and with a pugnacious jaw that made Christopher understand the dangers of bringing him out on wild-goose chases.

His examination was brief; he closed his bag with a snap and gave the patient a reassuring smile.

"You'll be fine," he said. "We'll soon have you out there milking all the cows."

He went downstairs, Mrs. Belchamber leading the way. She swept the doctor into the kitchen and faced him.

"Well, what?" she inquired abruptly.

"Measles," said the doctor. "Has there been any sort of contact, do you know?"

"None, as far as I know," said Christopher. As he spoke, Ursule's words rushed to his mind. Monique, who had a fever. "Well, yes," he said. "I think perhaps there was—but I didn't know."

"How long were you intending to stay here?" inquired the doctor.

"I only came for the night," said Christopher. "We landed late in that fog, and I didn't think I'd get up to London. Can I get a bed in a nursing home anywhere near?"

"What d'you want a bed in a nursing home for?" demanded Mrs. Belchamber.

"This place isn't exactly fitted out with all the conveniences," pointed out Christopher.

"Certainly it isn't," said Mrs. Belchamber, "but this isn't the time to worry about yourself. You've got a sick child up there and she'll want careful nursing, not carrying from nursing home to nursing home. She won't notice any lack of home comforts for a little while." She turned to the doctor. "Will she?"

"She'll be all right here if there's someone to nurse her," said the doctor.

"You can leave it to me," said Mrs. Belchamber. "Do we have to send in for the medicine?"

The doctor wrote a prescription, tore it off his pad and handed it to her. "Get that and follow the directions," he ordered. "I'll be out again tomorrow. What about those two boys out there? Any symptoms?"

"Not so far," said Christopher, "but I suppose it's only a matter of time."

"Not necessarily. Well—I'll be here in the morning," said the doctor, taking up his hat and bag.

Christopher saw him to his car, walked back into the house and found Mrs. Belchamber waiting for him.

By Munro Leaf

THIS naughty, thoughtless little lumpkin is a Light-Leaver, and it's no help to its family at all. It never, never turns out a light when it is through with it. It wastes electricity, light bulbs and money so steadily that it really ought to have to pay the bills all by itself. If you know a Light-Leaver, speak to it seriously—maybe it just didn't think.

make your dollars do double duty
SIEBERT'S NEW 2-in-1

Your baby deserves everything — yes, the best everything. But these days it takes careful planni to provide all the things you'd like to give yo youngster. That accounts for the instantaneous su cess of Siebert's new 2-in-1 Stroll-N-Strut.

IT'S A Smart BABY BUGGY
Strong tubular frame; hard wo seat; blue rubber cloth body w cream trim; rubber-tired, oil bearings, disc wheels.

IT'S A Sturdy BABY WALKER
Simply flip two fasteners and Stroll-N-Strut becomes a ha some, strong baby walker. F rest detaches in one motion.

IT'S Easy TO STORE OR CARR
The Stroll-N-Strut folds in fl — may be stored away c veniently or carried along on trip.

Siebert also makes a complete line of conventio baby carriages, strollers, doll carriages, velocipe and trainer bikes.
Write for address of your nearest dealer, and new Siebert Catalog. Dept. LJ-7.

O.W. SIEBERT
Guaranteed by Good Housekeep
GARDNER, MASS. 1898 1951

AT LEADING DRUG COUNTERS

POISON IVY
OAK or SUMAC
STOP ITCHING this excellent new tr ment for ivy, oak or su poisoning. It's gentle SAFE, dries up the blisters in a surprisingly s time,—often within 24 hours. At druggists, 69¢.
Ask for IVY-DRY

Here's $55 for Yo
Sell only 50 boxes new Gold Star C mas Cards. You make up to $1.10 a Big line EXCLUSIVE Name-Impr Cards low as 50 for $1.25, can't be bo elsewhere. Dozens of Christmas and Everyday Assortments. Exclusive Gift Wraps, Printed St ery, Napkins. Up to 100% cash profit. Write for IMPRINT SAMPLES and approval Assortments on Free
COLONIAL STUDIOS, Inc., Dept. 17-J, Greenwich,

MAKE QUICK EASY CASH! FREE SAMPLE
SELL Empire CHRISTMAS CARDS
Big new line — fire sellers. Gorgeous $1 Christmas and All-Occasion Assortments. Metallic, plastic, comic cards. Surprise gift items. Top value name printed Christmas Cards 25 for $1 up. Animated children's books. Scented stationery. NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED—Costs nothing to try. Fund raising plan for churches and clubs. Special offers. Extra Cash Bonus. Write now for samples.
100% CASH PROFIT! NO MONEY
50 Name Pr Cards $1
Personal STATIONE Napkins-C EMPIRE CARD CO. 232 FOX STR ELMIRA, NEW

MATERNITY DRESSES
Summer Styles
Dresses & suits for morning, street, afternoon, or sports. $2.95 to 22.50. Also maternity corsets & lingerie. (Catalog mailed in plain envelope.)
CRAWFORD'S, Dept. A, 729 Balt., Kansas City

ou've been very kind," said Christocoldly, "but there's no need for you to on and make yourself uncomfortable.
friends will be anxious about you."
et them," said Mrs. Belchamber. "I'm to stay here and see that that poor is properly looked after. I don't care much for children—or animals—but I o see them in good hands. And I don't der yours good hands. You're proposing t that child into a nursing home and—mably—take the two boys to London, e they'll both develop measles in a flat, while you go out and look for nursing homes for them. It won't do, e tell you. The sensible course is to let get it all over here."
see," said Christopher. "And the cook-
And the cleaning? And the nursing?"
shall do the cooking," she told him.
m the look of this place, I wouldn't dream owing that visiting woman to touch my , or the children's. I shall see her when arrives this morning, and I shall make understand that she has got to clean the and keep it clean. You will have to do shopping. There are several things I want."
Look here," said Christopher, "I ——" efore he could say more, there was an ruption. The door of the kitchen was wn open and the figure of a woman ap-ed on the threshold.
Garcia's the name," she said, entering.
he two women faced each other. Mrs.
hamber saw what she had expected: a ng, muscular figure, garments that could by any stretch of imagination, be called and clean; a bold, defiant expression.
. Garcia saw a lady of the type she recog-d as genuine; the type, moreover, that . Garcia most loved to subdue.
he silence lengthened, and tension grew.
. Belchamber straightened her shoulders looked at Christopher. "You may go," said firmly, "and leave us alone."
hristopher went.

Irs. Garcia, on a visit to relations in Lon's dockland, had met and married the ning Garcia, to whose other charms was ed the name José. José was employed as dy man at Grenton's largest hotel; and he farm, with the uncritical Scotty, Mrs.
cia had found a billet that suited her very
. She was able to get in a good many rest-hours while Scotty was working out of
t. She put her feet up comfortably on the e, and applied herself to thinking out hods by which she could lure her husband post which offered him less opportunity xercise his charms. José was notoriously cessful with the chambermaids. His wife ained to her friends that his wandering s were due to the fact that their union never been blessed. The touch of little ds, she explained, would have kept him ome. Her flowery phrasing had earned her a deep respect among her own circle.

BODY ever knew what effect the flowery asing had had upon Mrs. Belchamber ing that first interview. Scotty, informed Christopher that it was being held, waited
Mrs. Garcia to sweep by him, pausing to inform him that she was leaving for-
. No Mrs. Garcia appeared, however; n next seen, she was sweeping the rs—a task she had not performed since first day at the farm. She was then seen bbing the kitchen and informing all who sed that she considered it her Christian y to put aside her feelings and work herto the bone for the poor little mite lying a bed of sickness upstairs.
cotty accepted this explanation without ment, as he did the news that his house to be used throughout the nursing of one more cases of measles. All that was re-red, in his opinion, was space, and there plenty of space.
You can spread out, you know, Chris. If look round, you'll find four bedrooms on t floor and two on the next level and then attics—roomy ones, with a lot of light.
ke good studios."
Who," inquired Christopher irritably, ants studios? I'm not running down your hospitality, Scotty, but where in Christmas is all your stuff?"

"Stuff?"

"Stuff. Furniture, cutlery, china, linen, silver. Where's all the stuff your father left you?"

Scotty wiped his hands on the back of his trousers and considered the matter. "A lot of the stuff is in crates and boxes in the feed store."

"Well, why don't you unpack it? That first place of yours was comparatively luxurious. Then you moved ——"

"That's just it," said Scotty. "I kept moving. I got into the way of leaving things packed up, and I've found it much less trouble." He looked at Christopher with a puzzled air. "Have you ever seen what happens to stuff if you leave it about a house untended? Silver, for example, gets spots all over it. Black spots. It's cheaper, in the long run, to leave the stuff in boxes and just get along with the essentials."

"You haven't got the essentials."

"Well, what's essential for one isn't necessarily essential for others. If you're in need of anything special, just say the word and I'll pop along into town and ship it back for you."

"We'll be all right," said Christopher. "At least, the Belchamber says we'll manage. . . . How can I go about getting rid of her, Scotty?"

"RID of her? If she's going to nurse the little 'un through measles, what do you want to get rid of her for? I like that Continental cooking she did this morning. After four years of Mrs. Garcia ——"

"Well, that's what I was coming to. The Belchamber proposes to do the cooking and the nursing, too, and if she attempts it, she'll be the next on the list of patients. We need a nurse, Scotty. Isn't there a strong girl who'd come in for a few hours a day and sit with Josette?"

Scotty pursed his lips. "Can't think of any offhand. If only Cress had been home ——"

"Cress?"

"Cressida." Scotty's voice was lowered to a reverent note. "She only comes at the beginning of every month and . . . let me see—this is still June, isn't it?"

"End of. Who's this Cressida?"

Scotty walked to the nearest firm support—the stable door—before answering. Christopher saw that his eyes had taken on a faraway, dreamy look.

"You can't explain Cressida, Chris, old son," he said slowly. "There are some things you can't put into words."

"If she has that effect on you, why don't you get her to marry you?"

"M-marry me? Cressida? Why, she wouldn't dream—she wouldn't ——"

"How d'you know until you ask?"

"I did ask," said Scotty simply. A long, long sigh came from somewhere in Scotty's depths. "She didn't say anything. She just took my hand, and smiled gently, and shook her head."

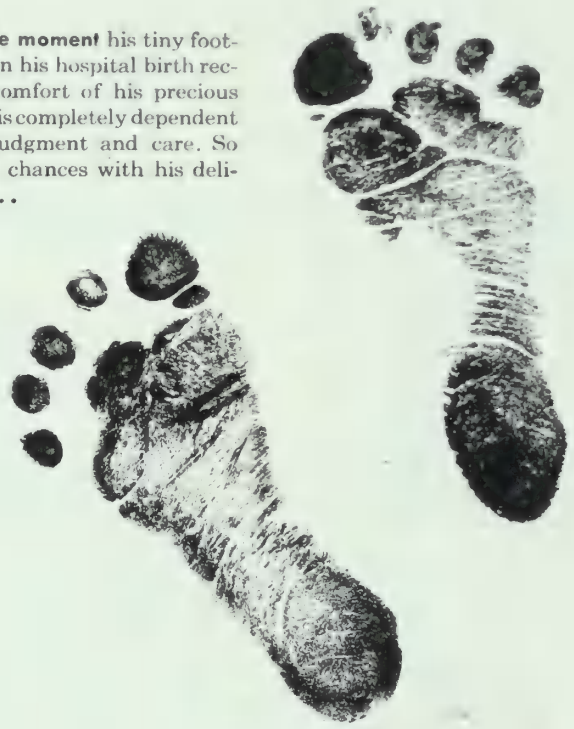
"Is she a nurse?" asked Christopher.

"She took a nurse's training once—when she was younger," Scotty told him. "But she broke down."

"A broken-down nurse. Well, I think we can do without that one," decided Christopher. "Any other suggestions?"

"You don't understand, Chris," said Scotty urgently. "If you could get hold of Cressida, every single thing would be all right—and even if it wasn't, you wouldn't notice. Go on up there to the house, Chris," he urged, "and try. Walk up to Greensleeves and ——"

"To ——"



"Greensleeves. The name of the house. Look"—Scotty drew Christopher a few paces and pointed—"among those trees. This farm belonged to the house; I bought it, four years ago, from Cress's father. Walk up there and say I sent you, and tell Cress, if she's there, that we've got measles and need a hand."

"All right. All right, I'll go."

"You can go across those fields. Mind how you go through that far orchard—there's a bull in there, and he uses a pretty rush."

From the very first day baby is born...

...from the moment his tiny footprints go on his hospital birth record, the comfort of his precious little body is completely dependent on your judgment and care. So don't take chances with his delicate skin...

...help protect him from impetigo, cradle cap, heat rash and diaper rash with ——

Johnson's Baby Lotion

NOW you can give your baby scientific protection against common irritations.

It's Johnson's Baby Lotion, specially formulated to help prevent impetigo, diaper rash (ammoniacal dermatitis), heat rash, and cradle cap.

Hospital tests with this velvety, white lotion have proved its effectiveness.

Johnson's Baby Lotion actually kills germs, yet is non-irritating, soothing, pleasant to use. Prevents "ammonia" diaper odor, too.

Every day, give your baby this scientific skin care.

Johnson & Johnson

"I see. Is that why Robert and Paul are picking cherries close by him?"

"That bull's got a good head behind those nasty horns," explained Scotty. "He doesn't waste his vitality chasing speedy little boys—he saves it up until he can pick on something your age, a bit gone in the wind. You don't look as hard as you used to, old son."

"Thanks. See you later," said Christopher.

He went through the far orchard, keeping to the hedge and giving the bull a wide berth. The fields were damp underfoot, but the air was fresh and dry. Christopher found himself squaring his shoulders and breathing deeply, and he realized, with a lifting of his spirits, that, in spite of this temporary setback, the problems which had beset him for the past two or three months were coming to an end. He had got the children to England; he liked them and knew that they liked him. The measles would be a merely temporary check on the way to his goal: a home for himself and the three children.

With every step he felt better. Scotty was a grand fellow. Mrs. Belchamber's keepers would find her soon and remove her. It was June and he was strong and young—in another three weeks or so he would be twenty-six, which was a good age, neither callow nor calloused.

He came to the brow of the hill and found himself walking beside a high wall. The wall continued for some distance, and then Christopher saw a small wooden door.

The door was unlocked. Christopher closed it behind him and, following an ill-marked path, came out on a drive, which presently widened and wound through open parkland. He looked at the beeches with respect; they were magnificent specimens, tall, beautiful and of great age.

The drive turned somewhat sharply. Christopher, absorbed in the view of the countryside, was totally unprepared for the sight of the house when he came upon it. Entranced, he stood stock-still, gazing with a slowly mounting delight.

It was a perfect example of a fourteenth-century manor house. As Christopher stared at it, his gaze changed from that of enchanted spectator to one of professional scrutiny. He saw that it had been, originally, enclosed in high walls. These had been in some places lowered; in others, removed. The moat had been filled up. The roof had mellowed to a warm, beautiful color. He stared at the battlements, the stone-mullioned windows with their delicate Gothic tracery; his eyes went to the massive towers with their buttressed walls.

He walked along an alley of ancient yews and slowly drank in the atmosphere of Greensleeves. For atmosphere it had; he felt completely removed from the hurry and worry of modern living.

Christopher made his way round to the forecourt, paused and looked doubtfully from the open windows to the massive closed door. The heavy door swung slowly open. In the doorway, framed against the shadowy hall, stood a girl. . . .

Long afterward, Christopher was to remember that he had always given the girl of his dreams a small, fragile figure. She was to have had a delicate skin, a wistful expression and an unusual shade of violet eyes, preferably with long black lashes. The girl in the doorway was slim, but she was tall; her lashes were long and black, but the eyes below them were brown and their expression was one of coolness and detachment, which changed, as Christopher stood staring at her, to a question.

Christopher knew that he should state his business, and made an effort to remember what it was. "Good morning," he said.

HER lips, he noted, were wide and curved and soft. He thought them so lovely that his despair left him and he was filled with an uplifting rush of happiness. What a day, he rejoiced, what a lovely, lovely day and what a lovely house and what a ——

"Are you Cressida?" he asked her suddenly.

"Yes," said Cressida, and then, as he remained staring, saying nothing: "Did you want anything?"

"Yes," said Christopher. "I came to ——" He paused.

Cressida's gaze became cooler. "Well?"

"To —— Do you know," said Christopher in a burst of confidence, "I can't for the life of me remember."

"But I told you!" said Scotty.

"You didn't," said Christopher. "You said nothing whatsoever about her."

"I said you couldn't put her into words," said Scotty. "Can you put her into words?"

"Certainly I can," said Christopher. "She's slim and beautiful. Scotty, I can tell you this—confidentially. She knocked me right off my feet."

Scotty appeared unmoved. He was in the feed room, filling a small, battered basin with a mixture of food for the cows. "What did she say?" inquired Scotty after a time.

"She says she'll come. I'm going to walk up and fetch her after lunch and she'll spend every afternoon here, helping where and how she can. Then I'll walk back with her after supper every night."

July

By Marion Lineaweaver

Summer! Summer! Milkweed and laceflower
Grow by the roadside,
Mine for the taking;
Summer, when bunches of grapes in the bower
Smell of the hot sun,
Wine in the making.

Wine effervescent, the winds of July
Diffuse their bouquet
Through the haze of the noon.
All night move the murmurous tides that comply
To each magnetic, mesmeric
Phase of the moon.

All day, on the breath of the languorous air,
Children cast ribbons
And bells of their laughter,
With summertime tangled and warm in their hair,
And never a shadow
Of what's to come after.

"Chris," said Scotty, "you can't horn in like this! I've got priority—I've known her for four years!"

"Then it's time you gave someone else a chance," said Christopher. "Incidentally, she's been living within a stone's throw of me in London. I didn't like to ask her what her job was. Scotty, what does she work at?"

"She's a model. One of those photographic models you see in all the magazines. She's featured in other places too. On theater programs; and in those powder advertisements—you know, Florette or Laurette or one of those. Picture with Cress holding a baby in one hand and a supply of Florette powder in the other and the caption: 'At two, or at twenty-two.' You must have seen it. It's on all the busses."

"That accounts for it!" said Christopher. "I had a persistent feeling that I'd seen her before."

"There's nothing odd about it," said Scotty. "Her likeness is everywhere. She's what they call a free-lance model. It took her a little time to get known, but she does all right now."

"There's one more thing," said Christopher. "It sounds something of an anticlimax, but I don't know Cressida's other name."

"Surname? Gray. Spelled with an a. Her father's Major Gray—used to belong to one of the crack regiments, and sent in his papers when he inherited this house. I met him up north when that ranch I was running packed up. He said he'd just come into a manor house and offered me the home farm. So I bought it."

"Without seeing it?"

"When I paid the money down," said Scotty slowly, "I didn't even know for sure that there was a home farm. The major has a way ——"

He stopped. Two small figures had made their way into the feed store and were waiting politely for him to finish his sentence. The sailor hats were still firmly on their heads, not fresh and neat now, but streaked with mud. Their shoes were unrecognizable. Their clothes were torn and flour-sprinkled.

Robert's teeth gleamed in his enchanting smile. "We've been up there." He pointed toward the granary.

"So I see," said Christopher gravely. "And what brought you down?"

"The bell," explained Paul. "Madame has rung the bell for déjeuner."

"She has rung it twice," said Robert. "We are to go inside, I think."

"Well, I'll go inside with you," said Christopher. "Madame'll have a few words to say when you walk into the kitchen. . . . How long'll you be, Scotty?"

"I'm through now. I'll come with you."

They walked in procession to the door of the kitchen and waited until Scotty and the two boys had wiped some of the removable dirt from their footwear. Christopher lifted the latch and, ushering the boys in, followed with Scotty. They stood, a little sheepishly, while Mrs. Belchamber, standing stiffly by the table, ran her eyes over them.

The kitchen, Christopher saw, had undergone a complete transformation. The floor was scrubbed, the range had a gleaming blackness it had not known for a long time. There was a cloth spread on the table—a tattered cloth, but clean and white. On the stove were plates and dishes, and from the dishes issued a savory smell that made hungry mouths water.

Mrs. Belchamber still wore the stiff black hat and gray curls. Over her suit was a stiff white overall. She addressed the company impartially.

"Lunch, while I am cooking it, will be served at one o'clock. It is now a quarter to two. Will you two boys kindly go outside and remove your unspeakable shoes?"

Robert and Paul went.

"You, too," said Mrs. Belchamber, to a point above Scotty's head.

Scotty followed the boys.

The meal was cheerful, despite Mrs. Belchamber's grim presence. Robert and Paul gave an account of their morning's activities. Scotty ate voraciously, pausing only to compliment Mrs. Belchamber on the excellence of her cooking.

Lunch over, the company dispersed. Scotty bestrode a bicycle which had wheels but no tires, and went up to a distant field. It was decided, after a short conclave, that Robert and Paul might be allowed to visit Josette whenever they wished to.

"They've been with her all this time, and there's no point in keeping them away now," Mrs. Belchamber decided. "If they're going to get it, let them all get it together and be done with it."

The boys crept quietly upstairs, and Christopher faced Mrs. Belchamber, his dislike of her no less from having to acknowledge his debt to her.

"You've been very kind," he said. "But you couldn't be expected to . . . as a matter of fact, we've got hold of a—well, a sort of nurse, who can come every afternoon and evening to give a hand."

"What do you call a sort of nurse?" inquired Mrs. Belchamber.

"Well—she trained, in a way," Christopher told her. "She's a friend of Scotty's, and she's here for about a fortnight. I'm going along to fetch her now."

"What is her name?"

"Miss Gray."

"And her age?"

"I don't know. Yes, I do. She's twenty-two."

"Ah!"

With this monosyllable, uttered with gre reserve, ringing in his ears, Christoph vaulted over a gate into the orchard, walk through it in happy abstraction. He was g ing to see Cressida and—to add the la touch of felicity—she had promised to sho him round the house. He could think of n setting more suited to her than the beautifi gracious house.

The door, this time, was open, and seemed to him that it breathed a welcom He heard a movement inside, and was on t point of calling Cressida's name when I realized that the footsteps could not be her

The next instant, a man appeared at th door. He was tall and handsome, with a rath long, clean-shaven face and close-clipp graying hair. His clothes were easy, witho being informal.

THEY looked at each other for a momen and then Christopher began. "I'm afra I ——"

The man stopped him with an upraise hand and a whimsical smile. "I know," said. "You're looking for my daughter."

"Yes, I'm —— You must be Major Gray

"I'm Cressida's father. She tells me she going to help nurse a case of measles at t farm."

"Yes. I hope you won't mind." He w trying, as he spoke, to account for Maj Gray's presence. Scotty had said that n body lived here but a caretaker and a ga dener, but ——

"I came down from town about an ho ago." The pleasant voice broke into t thoughts. "I don't know where Cressid got to—won't you come in and wait i her?"

"I'd like to very much," said Christoph "I've been pretty keen to get in ever since saw the house for the first time this mornin Houses are my job."

"You're an architect?"

"Yes. Heron and Mayes. I'm the Heron

They went round the house, Major Gr proving an interesting and instructive guid The interior, Christopher saw, was as w preserved as the outside. Every room w furnished, even to silver and ornaments ar here and there, great vases of flowers.

"You'll know the date?" Major Gr asked, smiling.

"Edward the First, I'd say."

"You're more or less right. It was beg in Thirteen Hundred and finished in Edwa the Second's time. It's not unique, course—I've been over a good many hous that could compare with this one, but no I think, in as good a state of preservatio

Christopher, eager, absorbed, followed host down to the beautiful hall at the end the inspection, and drew a deep breath.

"Thanks," he said. "It was very good you."

"Not at all,' was the answer. "It's pleasure. I come down frequently in t summer, and sometimes people come and show them round. That's why I'm down day, as a matter of fact—I'm expecting man and his wife at three o'clock. Swedi This fellow's coming to look at that arq bus—or arquebuse, or harquebus, if you p fer it." Major Gray pointed to a gun on o of the walls. "I was telling him about it a he asked if he could look at it. He's got one Fifteen-thirty, he says it is—and he thin this'll make the pair. Take it down if y want to. It's an interesting piece."

Christopher took the gun down careful Major Gray stood at his shoulder, runnin finger affectionately along the barrel.

"See that serpent-shaped piece of iro That held the burning match. You press t trigger—so—and the match comes to t flashpan and ignites the charge in the b rel—there, through the touchhole. Th were used in Henry the Eighth's time—l not, of course, this one." He took the g from Christopher and put it back in place.

"Why not this one?" inquired Chris pher.

Major Gray looked at him with an expr sion at once surprised and quizzical. "Wh Because it isn't genuine. This man ins

(Continued on Page 87)

Four boxed corners fit baby's mattress like a slip-cover. Shaped tuck-under anchors sheet firmly, keeps it wrinkle-free.

Keep him cool on a CONTOUR sheet
It won't wrinkle, can't pull out

ON HOTTEST SUMMER NIGHTS baby sleeps peacefully in cool comfort on a Pacific Cribfast* Contour Sheet. It's the most perfect crib sheet ever invented! These smooth, smooth crib sheets can't wrinkle, can't pull out, no matter how baby sleeps, stands or crawls . . . never need retucking.

All four corners are carefully cut, taped and sewed to hug the mattress corners—stay snugly in place 'til Mother takes them off. A shaped tuck-under slips into place on all four sides, holds the sheet firm—prevents wrinkling through the middle.

Cribfast sheets are a time saver for busy mothers, too. They stay so smooth and unrumpled, they need less frequent changing, slip on without effort. And they stretch so neatly over the mattress, ironing is optional. They keep their trim fit washing after washing because they're Sanforized.

You can get Cribfast sheets in cool muslin pastels or in snow-white percale in the baby departments of leading stores.

• • • • •

For adults, too—A PACIFIC CONTOUR SHEET with these same wonderful wrinkle-proof features! Available in standard double or twin sizes in smooth percale and sturdy muslin.

Get them at your favorite store or send for folder and name of nearest dealer to Pacific Mills, Dept. DD-7, 1407 Broadway, New York 18.

*TM Pacific Mills Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

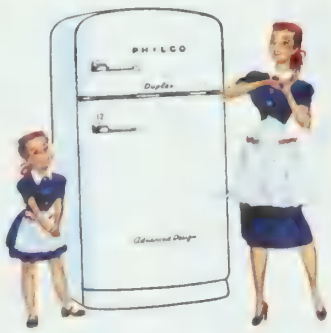
It's a PACIFIC sheet BY PACIFIC MILLS . . . WEAVERS OF FINE COTTONS, RAYONS, WOOLENS AND WORSTEDS



2-Door Luxury! Automatic Defrost!

ONLY PHILCO GIVES YOU BOTH!

PHILCO
Advanced Design has a woman in mind!

...now at far less cost than you'd pay for a 2-door refrigerator without automatic defrost!

PHILCO
REFRIGERATORS

NEVER BEFORE A REFRIGERATOR that gives you both the luxury of 2 doors and the convenience of complete automatic defrost! Now, thanks to Philco engineering genius, you can enjoy both—yet pay less than you'd have to pay for a 2-door refrigerator without automatic defrost!

PHILCO DUPLEX DEFROSTS ITSELF! You don't have to do anything about defrosting! You're free forever from the messy chore of frost melting or scraping. Nothing to turn on or off.

FROZEN FOODS STAY THOROUGHLY FROZEN. Philco De-Frost is true, honest defrost. Philco De-Frost works so fast that your frozen foods can't thaw! No need to remove foods during defrosting.

YOU ENJOY 2-DOOR LUXURY! Now, at amazingly low cost, Philco Duplex gives you the absolute ultimate in refrigeration: luxurious 2-door styling plus complete automatic defrost plus every conceivable convenience feature! Adjustable Shelves you can arrange as you please, Giant Freezer, Meat Storage Drawer, Deluxe Crispers!

PHILCO DUPLEX DESIGN MEANS A DRY REFRIGERATOR. In old-style 2-door refrigerators, water collects on the walls and floods down. Philco engineering has ended all this—no more wall-sweating or messiness!

SEE THIS SENSATIONAL PHILCO DUPLEX! 8, 10 and 12 cu. ft. sizes. Single door models in 7, 9, 11 and 13 cu. ft. sizes. At your dealer's now!

(Continued from Page 84)

t it is, and nothing I can say will convince h that he's wrong."

But . . . I can't pretend to be an expert," said Christopher hesitatingly, "but I know ething about old firearms. If that isn't uine, sir, it's an astonishingly good fake."

Of course it is. If I were a dealer," said or Gray, "I'd have no trouble in calling a genuine article and asking a pretty price—but I'm not a dealer. If this fel- that's coming today wants it, he can e it—but not if he insists that it's gen- ."

But if it isn't—I mean, if he decides that sn't genuine," said Christopher hesitat- y, "will he buy it?"

I shouldn't think so," said Major Gray. hy do you ask?"

Because"—Christopher turned and ked up at the gun—"if he doesn't want it, you'd sell it, I'd like to buy it."

You? What do you want it for?" asked jor Gray in surprise.

I'm like the Swede—I've got a piece it uld go with very well. Mine's a flintlock, -loading gun—as a matter of fact, it's uine Charles the First. My uncle—well, vas left to me. That fellow up on the wall re would go awfully well in its company. w much"—he hesitated—"how much re you going to let it go for?"

I didn't want to let it go at all," said ajor Gray frankly, "but if you really want you can have it for what I gave for it."

He named his price, and the two men od for a moment, smiling at each other. ristopher felt a warm surge of liking for e man facing him.

"It's a deal," he said. "Thanks."

"That was a swift bit of business," com- ented Major Gray. "I"—he paused and alked toward the door—"I hear a car," he d. "I think—yes, I can see Cressida there. ill you go and meet her?"

Christopher needed no second invitation. e saw Cressida and went with long strides intercept her.

"I've been with your father," he said. Where were you?"

"I went into Grenton—there were some ings to get."

He fell into step beside her and they rned in the direction of the farm. "Do you alize," he said, "that when I left you this orning, I didn't even know your name? I dn't know anything about you, except that hen we get back to town, we'll be prac- cally neighbors. Let's make a dinner date r the night we get back."

"I'll be back in a fortnight or three weeks," inted out Cressida. "You'll be here indefi- tely."

"Why indefinitely?"

"Because one of the boys will wait until e very last day of the quarantine, and then down with measles, and the other boy'll ait until the very last day, too, and then t them. Then Scotty'll get them, and then u."

"Well, I planned to be home by the end the month," said Christopher. "It's hard you," he added thoughtfully, "leaving a use like Greensleeves to go back to Lon- n."

"Why hard?"

"Good heavens, wouldn't you give your rs to live there? Given the requisite staff, at is. Wouldn't you?"

"No," said Cressida quietly. "I wouldn't en give one ear."

"Why don't you like Greensleeves?"

She gave him a little sidelong glance. "I dn't say I didn't like it. I think it's beau- ful. I just said I didn't want to live in it."

His curiosity was piqued; he could sense rong feeling behind the quiet words, but e obviously did not wish to pursue the bject, and he was content, for the moment, drop it. She had not shown, as yet, any due pleasure in his society; her manner as friendly, but in it there was none of the arm responsiveness he usually met when e showed his preference for a woman. He oked for a word to describe her detach- ent, and found to his surprise that it was wary." It was perhaps natural, he reflected, that a girl with so strong an appeal for the opposite sex should cultivate a technique for keeping them at a distance.

"I didn't quite explain about Mrs. Belchamber," he said. "She's the old lady who for some reason has attached herself to my suite. I ought to be grateful to her, but she's got a grating voice and a hard face and one of those sharp, interfering noses. I think she's got some idea that I've abducted the children. . . . They're nice children," he added. "You'll like them."

He helped her over gates, kept her close to the hedge when passing the bull, and found Scotty looking out for them.

"Cress, darling, you do my eyes good," he said. "You go on in, Chris, old son, and Cress can stay out here and talk to me."

"I've come to make myself useful," smiled Cressida.

"Ah, please!" begged Scotty. "I haven't seen you for a whole month, and it's seemed like years. . . . Do you like Chris?"

"I'll tell you," said Cressida, "when I know him better. I'm going to report for duty."

"Well, then, I'll come with you," said Christopher.

"No—I'll go alone. See you later," she said lightly, and was gone.

"She's always doing things like that," said Scotty gloomily. "You look forward to her company and then find you haven't got it. . . . That old lady of yours, Chris, doesn't like me."

Scotty was feeling a little sore. He had gone into the kitchen for something he had forgotten, and Mrs. Belchamber, waylaying him, had given him a pithy résumé of the conclusions she had reached about his person and possessions. She had used expressions which he had never before heard applied by a lady to a gentleman, and his ears were ringing with adjectives, the more complimentary of which were "slovenly," "unkempt," "out-at-elbows," "unself-respecting," "clodlike" and "animal."

"And you know what?" he said to Christopher, at the end of a recital of his humiliation. "She's ordered hot baths all round. How can you provide hot baths in a place that hasn't a hot bathroom? Monday, you and the boys; Tuesday, her first and then me; Wednesday, you and the boys; Thursday, her first and then me; Friday, you and the boys, and Saturday—what d'you think? Me again! Three baths a week!"

"How do you manage when you're by yourself?" asked Christopher.

"Me? Well, I manage, that's all. Every so often I yank the tin tub into the kitchen and give myself a rubdown, but it's a troublesome performance and I can't say I let the matter of ablutions weigh on me too much."

"That's what the Belchamber said. She said you were a disgrace to your upbringing."

"What's my upbringing got to do with her?" demanded Scotty. "Could you find time to tell her that my name isn't Scott?"

"Here she comes," said Chris. "Tell her yourself."

Mrs. Belchamber had opened the kitchen door and was addressing Christopher. "We'd like you to come in and help us move some furniture round."

"Delighted," said Christopher.

"And Mr. Scott"—Mrs. Belchamber fixed her eyes coldly on Scotty—"there's a bucket of slops here to be emptied."

Scotty gazed at her, his eyes starting out of his head. "A—a b-bucket —— What's wrong with Mrs. Garcia?"

"Mrs. Garcia left, as usual, at three." Mrs. Belchamber drew in her chin. "Do you expect me to do it?"

"Well—no. But do you mean to say that I—me—a descendant of a family that can trace its ancestry back to George the Fifth, do you mean I've got to descend to this?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Belchamber.

"Oh. All right," said Scotty. "If you say so."

After Mrs. Belchamber had interviewed Cressida and acknowledged, grudgingly, that she might be useful, the household fell into a routine which became daily more settled. The doctor, calling each morning, pronounced the case of measles to be mild.

Mrs. Belchamber issued orders, and everybody obeyed them: the children with a lighthearted air which proved that they stood in no awe of her, Cressida with quiet amusement, and the others—Christopher, Scotty and Mrs. Garcia—with varying degrees of unwillingness.

The sickroom was darkened to protect Josette's eyes; as her condition improved, Mrs. Belchamber decided to read aloud to her now and then. The choice of literature was not extensive, for besides innumerable copies of the Farmer and Stockbreeder, Scotty's library appeared to consist of three books only: Ruskin's Ethics of the Dust; an out-of-date guide to Paris entitled On Foot Through France, Part 3: The Capital; and a small volume of commercial correspondence with the title Businessman's French.

"They're not exactly children's literature, are they?" asked Christopher.

"I'm not looking for children's literature," declared Mrs. Belchamber. "I don't want any of your Piggy-wiggy or Henny-wenny, thank you. If you're going to read children that kind of thing, all they'll do is stay awake and listen. I'm looking for something that'll send a child to sleep, that's all."

The three available books certainly served this purpose. Cressida listened to the harsh rasping voice and watched Josette's eyes fixed on the reader; from round-eyed fascination, they would change to an absent stare, and soon the lids would droop and the patient fall into a sound sleep.

"It's odd," she told Christopher, walking homeward across the fields. "She's a dreadful person, in many ways, but she does get things done. She pushes everybody around, but never on unessential jobs. She's got a hawk's eye for anything that needs fixing."

"You don't like her?" asked Christopher, incredulous.

"N-no. I don't see how anybody could like her, but I like certain things about her. She's shrewd and clear-sighted and she's never afraid to say just what she thinks."

"Why do you consider that a virtue? It's much harder not to say what one thinks—and much pleasanter all round."

"In a way. But look how useful it is," pointed out Cressida.

"What do you think makes her stay?"

"She hasn't, for the moment, anywhere to go. She gave up her house in Switzerland. I think she'll go—eventually—to this house of hers at Melhampton, but I think she wants to give them all the trouble of finding her and apologizing for what she calls her schoolgirl reception."

They walked a little way in silence, and now and then Christopher turned his head and looked at the girl beside him. She was friendly; she was even, in a sense, responsive—but it was not the kind of response he was looking for. Behind her quiet, easy manner was something he could not fathom—a touch of reserve, a hint of distance.

"Christopher ——"

He looked down at her, a little unsteady at hearing his name on her lips. "Well?"

"I want to talk to you about Scotty."

"No—not now," pleaded Christopher. "Let's talk about you—or even about me. We've so little time, Cressida; how much of the day do I get you to myself like this? I want to know so much about you. Let's be together while we're together, please—won't you . . . Cressida?" The name was spoken like a caress, but her voice, when he heard it, was cool and unmoved.

"You're Scotty's friend—the first of his friends I've ever met—and I'm worried about him."

"Why? He hasn't got three orphans on his hands, one of them sick."

"Didn't he, at one time," asked Cressida, "have quite a lot of money?"

"Well—yes. His father left him a packet. What he's done with it—specifically—I can't tell you, but he's got the erroneous idea that you can be a farmer just because you like messing about with cows and crops. Or perhaps that's inaccurate. I don't think he ever tried to be a farmer. All he wanted was to live this carefree, open-air life, without much responsibility—except to see the cows regularly milked—and without much hardship. Why are you worried about Scotty?"

"Hasn't he run through most of his money?"

"Probably. If he goes on long enough without making ends meet, he'll have to chuck it and live on an allowance—he's got some capital he can't touch, and some trustees he can't touch either. So you see, he won't starve."

"Couldn't you look into things for him while you're here?" pleaded Cressida. "I feel, in a way, responsible. You see, he bought . . . my father sold him the farm, and I'd feel better if it—if it paid better."

"Scotty couldn't make anything pay," said Christopher. "You mustn't lose any sleep about his affairs. What he needs is a good, steady wife. Not a girl like you—you wouldn't suit him at all—but a strong, sturdy girl with a good head and strong muscles. Can't we find him one?"

"Perhaps you can," said Cressida. "But I lead rather a busy life."

They had reached the last gate. There was only the lane, and then the road, and then

"Why don't you make surprise cookies with dimes in 'em?"

"Naturally...

"I'm a registered nurse," says Mrs. Fred Bender of Elizabeth, N. J. "When I come home late it's wonderful to open the oven of my new automatic Gas range and find dinner 'done'—all ready to eat! Everything tastes better, is better for you when cooked with Gas. And Gas pressure-cooks best because you can turn it down instantly!"

"As drafting supervisor of a large firm," says Mrs. Richard Wellman of Chicago, "I have to make every minute count. That's why I'm so enthusiastic about my new Gas range. It's so fast I can have a home-cooked meal no matter how late I come in. Nothing could be easier to keep clean. And how I love the flame-kissed flavor Gas gives to meat!"

"I have 7 children," says Mrs. C. E. Gibson of Chattanooga, "and I just couldn't do without a good Gas range. Fixing baby bottles or a big Sunday roast, my Gas range does exactly what I want—when I want it to. Saves time. Money, too...for the low steady heat in a Gas oven means less meat shrinkage—enough for everybody from a smaller cut!"

I prefer a Gas range!"

NEW FREEDOM GAS KITCHEN (® A.G.A. INC.)

MAGIC CHEF "CP" GAS RANGE IS JUST ONE OF MANY ALL-AUTOMATIC GAS RANGES NOW AT YOUR GAS COMPANY OR APPLIANCE STORE.

and there are 26,999,997 other smart women who cook with Gas!

Gas has got it!

FOR MODERN COOKING
REFRIGERATION WATER-HEATING
HOUSE-HEATING
AIR-CONDITIONING CLOTHES-DRYING
INCINERATION

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

the grounds. She would murmur her thanks, say good night and slip away and it would be fourteen . . . sixteen hours before he saw her again. There was so much he wanted to say, but he was afraid to say it.

He left her at Greensleeves and walked back the way he had come, dreaming, planning, rehearsing scenes in which Cressida, at last, looked at him with eyes in which he could read feeling similar to his own. He would ——

"Where," shouted Scotty, "did you get to?"

"We looked everywhere for you," said Christopher.

"Don't lie." Scotty clambered over a gate and came up indignantly. "You waited till that calf was on the way and then you sneaked off. Cressida would never play a low trick like that without your lying assurances that I wasn't able to come. A fine friend!"

"Well, you could have followed us."

"I couldn't. That cow behaved as though nobody'd ever had a calf before." He sighed. "Oh, well, I'd have done the same in your place. That's a wonderful girl, Chris."

"Yes. She's—well, I ——"

"Oh, I know what you think of her. I can give you the names of at least four poor fish round these parts who all feel just as you do—and I do. If I thought you had any more chance than the others, I'd feed you to the bull, piece by piece. Mind you, short of marrying me, I don't think Cressida could hit on a better fellow than you."

"Thanks. Tell me, Scotty, how often does her father come down?"

"The handsome major? Oh, in the summer, quite frequently. He invites people down and then gets here in time to stand in that picturesque doorway exuding the well-known charm."

The words jarred on Christopher, and he found himself speaking abruptly. "I like him."

Scotty stopped in his tracks. "But you haven't seen him!"

"Yes, I have. I met him when I went up the second time to fetch Cressida. He showed me round. It's a lovely place, and he made it pretty interesting. He's got some good stuff there."

"Ah," said Scotty again. "You think so?"

"I saw some of it. I bought a gun off him."

Once more Scotty came to a dead halt and, turning, stared at Christopher. "You—you bought a gun off him?"

Christopher frowned. "Well—yes. Anything wrong with that? Bit quick, I admit, but we made a deal."

"You made a deal," repeated Scotty. He threw his head back suddenly and gave a shout of laughter.

Anger, slow but hot, rose in Christopher. He was not often angry, but something in Scotty's tone sent the blood to his head. "Shut up," he said.

SCOTTY checked a burst of laughter and peered into Christopher's face. "I said something?" he asked.

"Yes. No—you didn't. To tell you the truth, I enjoyed going round that house more than I can tell you, Scotty. And I liked Major Gray. He didn't try to sell me anything—I saw the gun and asked if I could buy it. He went out of his way to tell me it wasn't worth much—at least, that it wasn't genuine." He paused. "If you want to tell me anything about him, go ahead and I'll listen. But don't laugh before you let me in on the joke."

Scotty thrust his hands into his pockets and hunched his shoulders in a gesture Christopher knew well. "I slipped up," he acknowledged soberly. "I forgot that it's four years since I bought something off him, and I forgot that he had the same effect on me, when I first saw him, as he had on you."

"Why don't you like him?"

"I didn't say I didn't like him. I was laughing because—well, in four years, if someone tells you they've made a deal with Major Gray, you'll laugh."

"All right, I'll laugh. Why?"

"Because that's how he lives—by making deals. Major Gray makes a nice comfortable living by doing just what he did when you met him. He gets you into his house and shows you his treasures—all the heirlooms. Before you leave, you've persuaded him—and sometimes he takes a lot of persuading—to let you buy something that's taken your fancy. He won't live here because it pays him better not to. He lives in his club in town, and keeps his eyes open for the rather special kind of tourist he needs for his purposes. They have to have money. They have to be, in a sense, connoisseurs and collectors. He doesn't invite them down. He talks, quietly and with a whimsical regret, about Greensleeves. Can they, they ask hesitatingly, by any chance —— Well, yes, they can. Oddly enough, he's going down the next day to see his caretaker. If they care to drive down, he'd be delighted to show them over the house. They come, and almost invariably make a deal. He does what every merchant does—buys low and sells high. Whether his methods stick in your throat or not is something you decide for yourself. I just happen to have found out more about him than most people know, so I suppose that makes me prejudiced."

THE voice ceased, and it was some time before Christopher spoke.

"You'd better let me have it all," he said.

"There's not much. I bought this place from him. I had a bit of a job finding the money and went to my trustees. One of them went to a lot of trouble to find out something about Gray. He found out where he has a lot of his fakes made. None of it criminal, of course. You can't be had up for selling copies as copies. And in my case—and in yours, of course—there's always Cressida to keep us from complaining."

"What does Cressida think of it?"

"Cress? Well, it took her a bit of time to see what he was up to. She was in Switzerland when he inherited the place—she was brought up in a school in Lausanne. Her mother died when she was eight, and she didn't see much of her father. She thought—when she heard about Greensleeves—that she'd have a home at last, but when she saw it, she gave up the idea. There was no money—only the house and its contents. She tried nursing, but went at it too hard and it knocked her over. She had a hard time for a while, and then she was offered one or two modeling jobs, and she hasn't looked back since. She doesn't talk about her father. I often feel I'd like to find some kind, quick method of putting him out of the way, but that's only because I think he lets Cress down, not because I've any strong feelings about him myself. That gun you bought—you'll see another, and then another, exactly the same, hanging on that wall next time you go. He'll know you've seen it, and he won't mind. Well, that's the major. I hope you won't like your gun any less."

Christopher made no answer. He would not, he felt, like his gun less, but his thoughts on the man who had sold it to him were oddly mixed. He had warmed to Major Gray in a way which he now looked back upon as extraordinary. "I thought," said Christopher, "that he was a—a particularly nice fellow."

"Who wouldn't?" asked Scotty. "After all, he's a confidence man, and who ever made a success of that job unless they could inspire confidence? One of these days the major'll go too far. These artists have a way of overreaching themselves. That, I think, is what Cressida's frightened of. She's had to learn a lot these last four years, and she's learned it fast."

"I can't see," said Christopher, "why he didn't sell the house."

"He wouldn't have got his price, and if he had, he wouldn't have got more than about three per cent on his money, like us all. That wouldn't have brought him a tenth of what he makes this way. And, as I said, all tax-free."

Scotty turned in the direction of home, and Christopher fell into step beside him.

"I've lowered your spirits," said Scotty. "I might have kept my mouth shut, but if you're in love with Cressida, you'd better know. You are in love with Cressida?"

"Yes," said Christopher. "I am."

da Gray had spent a good deal of ring the past four years, wishing that ringing had been designed to equip e fully for the pace and harshness of living.

Major Gray learned that Green-had been left to him, he had sent for ghter, asking her to bring with her nd Zoute, an old couple who had in her mother's old home near
ne. The three arrived at Grenton; nd Zoute took over their duties as r and caretaker, but for Cressida llowed a long and painful period of ent.

e was no home; it was not long before that her hopes of living at Greenwith her father were not to be
l. There were other disappointments, ef being the gradual realization that her was not the close, understanding nd companion she had hoped to find.
what he had always been during his to her throughout the years—gay, ng, amusing. Far from being guide or n, she found him entirely free from nse of responsibility. He made his nd told her of them when they were ted; he made no inquiries about her as a situation which would have tried e experienced young woman than

la. But during the months of struggle neliness, she found one friend—Scotty
. It was Scotty who, unable to mans own affairs, showed a cool clearlness when advising her about her nd it was Scotty who supported her in fficult days when her first love affair o grief.

as an ill-starred affair, and Cressida, g back upon it, knew that she had d it badly. She had rets, however, about cision in the matter, deep, warm feeling itude toward Scotty
s stanch adherence me when everybody
lamed her bitterly.
ad a deep affection for Scotty; about elings for Christopher she preferred, at t, not to think.

s. Belchamber came to trust her sufly to sit with Josette whenever she was sy to do so herself; the rest of the time da spent obeying orders and keeping e morale of Mrs. Garcia, who declared he new regime had already taken ten ls off her weight.

ading away, I am," she confided to da. "This is the fourth time I've d this kitchen floor, and these floors made for it. This is a farm'ouse, and I it better when it looked like a farm-
Mr. Linden 'asn't been comfortable it all got cleaned up."

e'll get used to cleanliness," said Mrs.
amber, appearing from nowhere with peed and unexpectedness that made Garcia feel she had materialized, like a . "Mrs. Garcia, you were late this ing."

Iadam," said Mrs. Garcia with dignity, my 'usband. He didn't get back."

ack? Back from where?"

shouldn't care to say," said Mrs. Garcia
y. "'E said he was going to London in ourse of his duty, but there was no for 'im to take Nellie Carson with 'im keep her there till the last train 'ad
It won't be the last time." said the ged wife with resignation. "When I ed Howsay, they all warned me that 'e f a roving dispersition."

Iarried who?"

OWSAY, madam. That's what Mr. Gar-Christian name is. It's pronounced with tch and not a J. 'E don't like to be d Joe, like people call him—he prefers o call him Howsay."

Vell, don't go away until you've done full time," said Mrs. Belchamber, ng back to the point. "Late come, late Certainly, madam." Nothing could ex-

Mrs. Garcia's dignity. "But I can't 'elp having my troubles, and a husband who keeps me short and spends his substance on chambermaids is a 'eavy weight on me."

"Well, use a heavy weight on him," advised Mrs. Belchamber briskly. "No woman needs to lie down and let a man walk over her."

"There's nothing to keep him at home," mourned Mrs. Garcia. "No little 'ands. If our union had been blessed, 'e would have ——"

"—— gone off just the same. Now we'll start on those spoons."

"Was your union blessed, madam?" asked Mrs. Garcia, starting on them.

"It was."

Mrs. Garcia stared at her. "You mean you 'ad children, madam?"

"I mean I didn't. Now sparingly with the polish, if you please, and generous with the rubbing. . . . Cressida, I should like your help upstairs."

SHE swept upstairs and Cressida, a little smile on her lips, followed.

"We'll do the boys' beds first. That woman will work better if she has no opportunity to chat. What she ought to do is try and get hold of some of her husband's wages before he's had time to spend them on other women. She rather enjoys being the injured wife."

"She says she loves him, and ——"

"Love!" Nothing could exceed the surprise, the scorn Mrs. Belchamber put into the word. She whisked off a sheet, shook it and tossed one end to Cressida. "Love," she said, "is the most overworked word in the language. The impulse that's called love is given far too much space in the public consciousness. I myself, I can tell you now, have never—tuck that in more tightly, will you, please?—have never been in love."

Cressida stared at her. "B-but if you—I mean you were ——"

"I was married. Certainly I was. Three times. Twice because I knew what I was doing, and once because I didn't. When I was a young girl we spent our time either looking for a husband, or waiting until somebody found one for us. I was brought up by an aunt who found my first husband for me. He came from Luxemburg and his name was Federico Besnard, and I was no more in love with him than the man in the moon. But everybody insisted that any girl who could look at Federico's wide shoulders and fine mustaches without feeling something must be very odd. So by looking at them long enough, and hard enough, I managed to feel enough to get married on. Nowadays, of course, girls are more sensible."

Cressida said nothing; she was longing to learn something of Federico Besnard's successors. She smoothed a blanket and waited hopefully.

"When my first husband died," Mrs. Belchamber went on, "I thought of coming back to England. But he had left a great deal of property and I had to see to it; while I was seeing to it, I met my second husband—he and my third husband were both English and both a good deal older than I was, but I buried them both. People used to say that it was my money they were after, and it may be so, though I had excellent teeth and a good head of hair; if it was my money, they were disappointed, because I don't allow other people to manage my affairs."

Cressida bent over her work, unwilling to look at the harsh, wrinkled countenance before her. Though her ideas of what a thrice-married woman would look like were vague, Mrs. Belchamber fitted into none of them. She put aside, finally, any thought of allure, and decided that the trio, from Federico onward, had been in search of a home.

Mrs. Belchamber, in her turn, was reviewing her impressions of the girl before her, and found herself ready to acknowledge that, as girls went, Cressida had some pleasing qualities. Greatest test of all—though aware of the admiration of Mr. Heron and of the odious Mr. Scott, she satisfied the feminist in Mrs. Belchamber by keeping both men at arm's length.

Slander expires at a good woman's door.
—DANISH PROVERB.

KENTILE DEALERS' PRICE
ONLY $38.75* INSTALLED

See these low-priced
KENTILE FLOORS
at your KENTILE DEALERS only!

GUARANTEED
as long as you live in your home!

IF ANY of your rooms need doing over—if you want the most beauty and longest wear for your money—see your Kentile dealer now! He'll show you richly beautiful Kentile in 26 glorious colors that can be arranged to make rooms seem larger, smaller...creating any decorative scheme you wish. Think, too, of the many hours of work you'll save with this quick-cleaning floor that needs only occasional no-rub waxings to gleam like new. Your Kentile dealer, and nobody else, has these low-priced floors with that unbeatable guarantee. Get a FREE estimate today—look under FLOORING in your classified directory for your Kentile dealer's name and address.

*Price is for a 7'6"x9' kitchen. Your Kentile Floor may cost less or slightly more depending on the color you choose; size and condition of floor. Color of Kentile shown in kitchen: Napoleon Gray and Toledo Red, in Dining Room: Grand Antique. In Bedroom: Genoa Green.

KENTILE • KENCORK • KENTILE RUBBER TILE • KENTILE, INC., 58 2nd Ave., Dept. I-1, Brooklyn 15 N.Y.

Colors Built in! Kentile colors can't wear off—they extend right through each tough, durable tile.

Dirt Locked out! Dirt or stains can't penetrate the smooth surface of Kentile—easiest of floors to keep clean.

KENTILE®
The Asphalt Tile of Enduring Beauty

Christopher was scarcely at arm's length. It would have taken a harder heart than Cressida's to resist the warmth and charm of his wooing. He brought all the weight of his personality and charm to bear, and Cressida knew that she was giving way before it.

Scotty knew, too, and since he had never had any real hope that Cressida could love him, was content to see her loving, he explained to her, the next-best fellow.

There was no sign, as yet, that any steps were being taken to trace Mrs. Belchamber, but Christopher thought it unlikely that those who felt themselves responsible for her would allow her to disappear without making any efforts to find her. There was, as Scotty pointed out, a slender thread reaching back to the world she had left. Mrs. Garcia was a talker and, if inquiries were made, Mrs. Belchamber's whereabouts would not long remain a secret.

"And then," he ended, "our troubles'll be over."

"Yours will," corrected Christopher.

"Mine will. Tonight's my bath night, and something tells me that the old lady's going to glue her ear to the door to hear me step in and splash."

"You'll step in and splash," promised Christopher. "I'll see to it personally."

"The skin," said Scotty, "has a natural grease, and boiling it off too frequently does the system no good at all. Oh, and I forgot to tell you. There was a telegram for you."

"Who from?"

"It was from that place in France. And it was signed Ursule Desmoulins. Who's she?"

"Children's nurse. What did she say?"

"Well, I don't want to worry you. She said her daughter's still ill, and you can guess what she's got."

"No!" exclaimed Christopher.

"Yeah!" said Scotty. "Measles!"

"'The gallery,'" read Mrs. Belchamber, seated by the window in the sickroom, "'consists of two rooms. In the Salle Chanzy can be found various relics of the Defense Nationale in 1870–1871.'" She paused to peer over her spectacles. "Do you know about this Defense Nationale?"

"No," said Josette.

"Oh. Well, I can't enlighten you, but you ought to know your own history. 'The Salle Ney comprises the ——'"

Josette lay contentedly in the big bed, listening and looking. When Mrs. Belchamber was tired of reading, she sewed. Scotty's table linen—what there was of it—was in shreds. Her comments to Cressida on the rapid decline and fall of Scotty's living standards grew even more terse and uncomplimentary.

"It's a matter of soft rearing," she said, pushing the needle through a patch in a tablecloth. "No discipline. Take this Mr. Scott"—she jerked her head in the direction of her host, now crossing the stackyard below. "His own cowman, if he had one, would have more pride. I don't like shiftlessness. What are you showing that child?"

"It's your pincushion," explained Cressida, who was sitting at the head of Josette's bed. "We're making a spell."

Cressida and Josette were holding the pincushion between them, and Cressida was making a new pattern with the pins.

"What sort of nonsense is this?" demanded Mrs. Belchamber.

Cressida looked up for a second, eyes mischievous, lips curled in amusement. "Oh, it isn't nonsense, is it, Josette? We made a spell yesterday for the spots to go away, and—look—the ones on her arms are going. Now we're making a spell so's she can eat a custard tomorrow." Her head bent close to Josette's. "We make this pattern—see?"

"Yes, I see." Josette took the pincushion and studied it. "Where shall we put it?" she asked.

"You can put it back in my workbasket," said Mrs. Belchamber. "The spells can work just as well in there, and I'll still have a pincushion. Now then, you boys"—she glared at Robert and Paul, who had clattered upstairs and were peering round the door—"let me see your shoes."

"They are clean," declared Paul.

"We made a spell," said Josette. "Look."

Both boys clambered onto the bed and looked. "What is it?" asked Robert.

"A spell. Une charme," explained Josette. "Tomorrow I shall eat custard."

"Tiens!" Paul handled the pincushion reverently. "Est-ce-que"—he stopped and corrected himself—"Is zis good spell, or bad spell?"

"Well, good, naturally," said Cressida.

"But if it is good, then it can be bad?" persisted Paul.

"Just like a boy," grated Mrs. Belchamber. "Will it work, will it tick, will it pull, will it come to pieces? You mind your feet on that bed, young man. And now who?" she demanded, looking at the opening door. "Oh, it's you."

"Yes." Christopher entered, his manner more conciliatory than the one he usually showed to the enemy. "I've had a letter from Ursule."

"From Ursule!" The children were instantly alert. "From Ursule? Has Monique," asked Josette, "got spots, like me?"

"Lots and lots of spots."

"Read what she says."

Monique had been ill, but the doctor was now satisfied that she would make a rapid recovery. A month would have to pass, however, before she could travel with her mother to England.

"What's she coming over for?" asked Mrs. Belchamber of Christopher. "These children are too old for a nurse!"

"Ursule cooks," explained Robert, "and she mends our clothes, and washes them, and makes up the beds and sweeps the rooms."

"Well, that's most of the work taken care of," said Mrs. Belchamber, folding her work and rising. "If she were here, I shoul going downstairs to get the tea. You t she fixed Robert and Paul with a eye—"come when I call you. Cressi send up the boys with your tea and J barley water."

She went toward the door and opened it for her, giving her a stiff lit as she passed him. He shut it behind l turned to look at Josette's face, puck disgust.

"You do not like the barley?" he Josette, face screwed in distaste, sh head.

"It'll do you good, you know," sai sida gently.

"I will make a spell," said Paul, r for the pincushion. "I will make a b for the barley. Perhaps madame will able to find it when I have put the

He rearranged the pins carefully, w by his brother and sister.

"There!" said Paul. "That is a bad

"This is only a game, you know," Cressida. "It wouldn't be very nic could make bad spells, would it?"

"Yes—it would," said Paul firmly

"Why not?" asked Christopher. are good fairies and bad fairies. If t good spells, there must be bad spell voice dropped to a mysterious whispe you must put the spell near the fi must warm it; if it isn't warm, i work."

Paul walked across the room and pincushion on the fender. "So?"

"So," said Christopher. "Now yc say 'Spell, spell, do your work well.'

"'Spell, spell,'" enjoined Paul, "' work well.'"

"Don't," said Cressida, her voice ing sharply into the hushed tones. Christopher's only ——"

Best I Ever Ate

Give me a hot clam pie, a tossed green salad with plenty of fresh gard herbs in season, a bit of cheese, and crackers; with a tall glass of iced t on a hot summer day or a cup of coffe in wintertime—and I call it a meal n French chef could equal.

Jeanette Rattray

CLAM PIE

By Jeannette Rattray

OUR village housewives have a culinary specialty which is, like that "charm from the skies" that John Howard Payne wrote about in Home, Sweet Home, "ne'er met with elsewhere." It is an inexpensive, all-season main dish. The ingredients are obtainable anywhere, if canned clams are used—which of course they never are on the Long Island shore. That dish is clam pie.

There are two schools of thought on clam pie. Some cooks use only hard clams (quahogs). Others prefer to use mostly hard clams, but add just a few of the soft (steamer) clams for their sweet flavor. The recipe below is my mother's:

Prepare a rich pastry recipe for a 2-crust pie. Wash and scrub 1 to 1½ dozen hard-shell clams, or a combination of hard-shell with a few soft-shell (steame clams for their sweet flavor. Steam ju long enough for the shells to open. Th takes only a very few minutes. Y don't want to really cook them. Ch the clams. Cook 2 good-sized peel potatoes, cut up very fine, with peeled onion, also cut fine, in a ve little water until tender. Drain; blen teaspoon flour into 2 tablespoons melt butter or margarine. Add 2 tablespoo cream, 2 tablespoons chopped parsl 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ clove garlic, mash and the chopped clams (1–1¼ cup Mix together. Line one 8" piepan or t 5" tart pans with pastry. Fill with cl mixture; cover with pastry, pinch ed together and gash the top. Bake in a h oven, 425° F., until pastry is brown nicely. This takes about 20 minut Serves 4. Canned minced clams may used instead of fresh if the fresh are available.

(Continued from Page 90)

Mrs. Belchamber, seeing it drive into th yard, went out to interview the caller.

"I beg your pardon ——" he began.

Mrs. Belchamber took off her pince-ne and put on her long-distance glasses. "Yo want to see Mr. Scott?"

"Mr. Scott? Well—no. I thought Mr Linden ——"

"I've never heard of a Mr. Linden," sai Mrs. Belchamber. "Mr. Scott owns thi farm. This is Green Farm—perhaps you'v come to the wrong place."

"No—oh, no." The inspector summoned his official manner. "It's Green Farm I'm after. Could I see Mr. Scott? He could per haps put me on to Mr. Linden. Shall I find him on the farm?"

Mrs. Belchamber, glancing over his shoul der, thought it probable; Scotty was at that moment carrying two buckets of water to the horses. The operation, she knew, took about ten minutes.

"You won't find Mr. Scott, I'm afraid," she told the inspector. "He's out."

"When will he be back, do you know?"

"Tomorrow."

"Tomorrow?"

"Yes. He's taken a rather valuable animal to the show. What show, I can't tell you." And neither, she thought grimly, can anybody else. "Can I," she asked, "do anything for you?"

The inspector hesitated. "I needn't bother Mr. Scott," he said. "I really came to ask about a lady who ——"

"Do you mean Mrs. Belchamber?"

"Well—yes. Are you ——"

"You're too late," said Mrs. Belchamber. "She's gone. She left yesterday. Mr. Scott drove her to Grenton station."

The inspector was thinking hard. "Would you tell me your name?" he asked.

"I am Madame Desmoulins. I came with Mr. Christopher Heron from Switzerland to look after his three little cousins. They call me Ursule, and I have been with them since they were born. May I know why you are asking these questions?"

"I—I'm sorry. I should have explained. I'm from the Grenton police station, and I called to make inquiries about a Mrs. Belchamber. She was on her way to ——"

"To Melhampton. She told us. She left two addresses—the Melhampton one and a Swiss one. I can give them to you if you wish."

"No, thank you. We have them, as a matter of fact. Well ——"

"If we hear anything," said Mrs. Belchamber, "we'll let you know."

"Oh, thank you. Er—thanks." The inspector turned toward his car. Coming through the orchard, he saw two small, dusty figures, and eyed them with a revival of hope. "Those are ——"

"Two of the children Mr. Heron brought home. A pity they don't know any English yet."

She had led him to the car; she stood back to watch him go and Robert and Paul, coming up, sprang forward politely to open the car door for him.

"Oh—merci," smiled the inspector. "Merci beaucoup."

It was, murmured the surprised Robert in French, rien. Rien du tout.

The inspector got into the car. He was gone. Mrs. Belchamber marched toward the kitchen and Scotty, coming out of the stable, called a question.

"Was that a car?"

"Yes." Mrs. Belchamber did not pause.

"Who was it?"

"He was selling brushes," said Mrs. Belchamber. "They're always selling brushes. Now, you two boys, where've you been?"

"To the big house." Robert waved a hand in the direction of Greensleeves. "We saw Cressida's father—Monsieur Gray—and he showed all the inside to us."

"Oh—he's down here again, is he?"

"Yes—he is here."

If Major Gray drew any conclusions from Christopher's frequent appearances at Greensleeves, he gave no sign. He was to be seen on most afternoons standing in his attitude

Save 8 Hours Every Week V

Hotpoint All-E Kitc

WORLD'S MOST CONVENIENT REFRIGERATOR!

● ● Out front with everything—that's the new 1951 Hotpoint "Super-Stor" Refrigerator! 72% of all storage space is in finger-tip reach! Your choice of single-door models or 2-door combination Refrigerator-Freezers.

Gain Extra Time For All Your

YOU'LL DISCOVER wonderful new freedom in a magic Hotpoint All-Electric Kitchen . . . find that it actually saves you over an hour every day, a full working day every single week! You'll feel fresher and have extra time for your family as well as the many added duties you're called on to shoulder these days—because your Hotpoint Kitchen does nearly all of your most tiring, most time-consuming tasks automatically!

● ● Just set the controls and your Hotpoint Pushbutton Range cooks dinner while you're out shopping!...Twist a dial and your Hotpoint Electric Dishwasher washes, rinses and dries the dishes! . . . Turn on the water and food waste magically disappears through your Hotpoint Disposall! . . . Special work-saving cabinet arrangements put foods and utensils right at your finger tips! . . .

And you nee roomy refrige combination F

● ● A Hotp necessity thes one—on con
Send today f
"Your Next
Hotpoint, In
Dept., 5650 W
44, or see yo
For dealers' names,

Everybody'

H

Q

Look To Hotpoint For The Finest . . . FIRST!

RANGES ■ REFRIGERATORS ■ DISHWASHERS
FREEZERS ■ AUTOMATIC WASHERS ■ CLOT

Christopher was scarcely at arm's length. It would have taken a harder heart than Cressida's to resist the warmth and charm of his wooing. He brought all the weight of his personality and charm to bear, and Cressida knew that she was giving way before it.

Scotty knew, too, and since he had never had any real hope that Cressida could love him, was content to see her loving, he explained to her, the next-best fellow.

There was no sign, as yet, that any steps were being taken to trace Mrs. Belchamber, but Christopher thought it unlikely that those who felt themselves responsible for her would allow her to disappear without making any efforts to find her. There was, as Scotty pointed out, a slender thread reaching back to the world she had left. Mrs. Garcia was a talker and, if inquiries were made, Mrs. Belchamber's whereabouts would not long remain a secret.

"And then," he ended, "our troubles'll be over."

"Yours will," corrected Christopher.

"Mine will. Tonight's my bath night, and something tells me that the old lady's going to glue her ear to the door to hear me step in and splash."

"You'll step in and splash," promised Christopher. "I'll see to it personally."

"The skin," said Scotty, "has a natural grease, and boiling it off too frequently does the system no good at all. Oh, and I forgot to tell you. There was a telegram for you."

"Who from?"

"It was from that place in France. And it was signed Ursule Desmoulins. Who's she?"

"Children's nurse. What did she say?"

"Well, I don't want to worry you. She said her daughter's still ill, and you can guess what she's got."

"No!" exclaimed Christopher.

"Yeah!" said Scotty. "Measles!"

"'The gallery,'" read Mrs. Belchamber, seated by the window in the sickroom, "'consists of two rooms. In the Salle Chanzy can be found various relics of the Defense Nationale in 1870–1871.'" She paused to peer over her spectacles. "Do you know about this Defense Nationale?"

"No," said Josette.

"Oh. Well, I can't enlighten you, but you ought to know your own history. 'The Salle Ney comprises the ——'"

Josette lay contentedly in the big bed, listening and looking. When Mrs. Belchamber was tired of reading, she sewed. Scotty's table linen—what there was of it—was in shreds. Her comments to Cressida on the rapid decline and fall of Scotty's living standards grew even more terse and uncomplimentary.

"It's a matter of soft rearing," she said, pushing the needle through a patch in a tablecloth. "No discipline. Take this Mr. Scott"—she jerked her head in the direction of her host, now crossing the stackyard below. "His own cowman, if he had one, would have more pride. I don't like shiftlessness. What are you showing that child?"

"It's your pincushion," explained Cressida, who was sitting at the head of Josette's bed. "We're making a spell."

Cressida and Josette were holding the pincushion between them, and Cressida was making a new pattern with the pins.

"What sort of nonsense is this?" demanded Mrs. Belchamber.

Cressida looked up for a second, eyes mischievous, lips curled in amusement. "Oh, it isn't nonsense, is it, Josette? We made a spell yesterday for the spots to go away, and—look—the ones on her arms are going. Now we're making a spell so's she can eat a custard tomorrow." Her head bent close to Josette's. "We make this pattern—see?"

"Yes, I see." Josette took the pincushion and studied it. "Where shall we put it?" she asked.

"You can put it back in my workbasket," said Mrs. Belchamber. "The spells can work just as well in there, and I'll still have a pincushion. Now then, you boys"—she glared at Robert and Paul, who had clattered up-of quiet welcome at the great door. Cars drove in, waited for their owners and drove away. The tourist season—Major Gray's season—was at its height, and Christopher saw with unwilling admiration that the warmth of the welcome, the thoroughness of the tour, never slackened. Though Cressida never appeared, Christopher sometimes waited for her, and Major Gray showed always the same lack of self-consciousness in going through the familiar routine.

He tried, sometimes, to talk of her father to Cressida, but while she answered freely questions relating to the major's career, her replies were merely factual. Christopher did not try to probe her feelings. He was content, for the moment, to leave things as they were. His one fear—that Mrs. Belchamber would express, with her usual freedom, her views upon a suitable wife for him—seemed unfounded. He was relieved, but somewhat surprised; sparing people's feelings was no part of the old lady's make-up.

Mrs. Belchamber, however, had problems of her own. Her dismissal of the inspector was not likely to end the investigations. The police, having poked so far, would want to poke farther.

NEXT MONTH

And where was pride, Elizabeth asked herself, gone into hiding? That she could love a man who was chained to another man's wife!

THE "other man's wife" was Elizabeth Burke's sister, Anna, an invalid whose bright, gay charm defied her fate, whose insatiable thirst for life touched upon all Lakeville, ferreting out secrets better concealed. Elizabeth knew the danger of Anna's discovering her love for Huxley Reals—but it seemed inevitable.

Woman at the Window

By Nelia Gardner White

complete in the August JOURNAL, condensed from the novel soon to be published by The Viking Press.

The same thought had occurred to Scotty. "When they track her down," he told Christopher, "she'll have to show her hand. At this moment it looks as though she's settled here for life. Wouldn't you say?"

"No, I wouldn't when I think about it reasonably," said Christopher. "She dislikes you and me, and Mrs. Garcia, and the farm. She misses hot water and indoor comforts."

"Funny, her passion for cleanliness," observed Scotty. "I'm all for being clean, naturally, but on a place like this you don't have to observe all the rules. You can't take off your boots, for example, every time you go into and out of the house. You can't help a slight—a very slight—odor of toil."

"For the last eight or ten years," said Christopher, "you've been sliding rapidly down the chute from gentleman farmer to hind. Mrs. Belchamber's quite right; you look terrible, you smell terrible and you'd be mistaken, anywhere, for your own cowman."

"But I am my own cowman!"

"But why? You started out as manager and you're ending up as office boy—is that progress?"

"In one direction. It's no use, Chris—I've never been able to come out on the right side financially. I do everything that the other farmers do, and more. Nothing ever pays. I've run through practically what I started it with, one way and another. But I like his place, and if I can hang on just making ends meet, I'd like to hang on. Even if Gray did see me coming, and doubled the price, I'm glad to be here. It's got good air, good water and a first-rate view. I own a nice bit of shooting and a stretch of river. What more can a man want?"

"Money. Profit. A return for his work. A sense of achievement. Something to hand on to his sons."

"Sons?" Scotty shook his head. "No. The only time I ever thought of sons was when I saw Cress. And I can't have Cress."

"No," agreed Christopher. "But we'll find you someone, someday."

"You'll have to look a long way, and it'll take a long time, and by then I'll be too old to appreciate her. I'm a good four years older than you are, remember."

The words seemed to strike Christopher, and he looked at the speaker with brows knitted thoughtfully.

"Scotty—I've got an idea."

"It'll have to be a good one. I like them slim and ——"

"Listen—it's my birthday soon. If we've got the Belchamber off our hands by then, or even if we haven't, let's have a party."

"A party always sounds a good idea," said Scotty. "And there's another thing."

"Well?"

"It's Cressida's birthday about now."

"Then that makes a party imperative."

"What do I have to do?" inquired Scotty.

"Nothing. I'll do it all."

"Oh. Well, in that case, count me in. There's a cakeshop near the Pig and Whistle where they'll make you a cake with pink icing and all the trimmings. Don't forget the candles and ices. I'm fond of ices. You'll have to do things pretty well if it's going to be a double event."

"Double event?"

"Well—yes. If it's to be your birthday and Cressida's joined. It is going to be a double event, isn't it?"

"Ye-es." Christopher's tone was thoughtful, his gaze fixed absently on space.

It could, perhaps, be a double event. If he could persuade her—if he could make her see that he wasn't, after all, so precipitate. Love's arrows flew swiftly. She knew that he loved her; he had but to find out whether she loved him.

A double event. He would ask her, and, if she was kind, their engagement and his birthday could be celebrated at one and the same time.

"Why does not Cressida come?" inquired Josette.

"H'm?" Mrs. Belchamber peered over her reading glasses. "How do I know? Ask your cousin Christopher there"—she threw a glance at him as he half sat, half lay on Josette's pillow, one of her hands held in his. "Ask him; he saw her last, when he took her home last night."

"Is she sick?" Josette asked, turning to look at him.

"I don't know, Josette," said Christopher.

"Then ask her," directed Josette, with the imperiousness of a pampered convalescent. "I would like that Cressida should come."

"Not 'that Cressida should come.' I—would—like—Cressida—to—come. Now say that slowly."

"I—would—like—Cressida—to—come."

Christopher's lips did not move, but his heart echoed the words. She had not come. Perhaps she would not come again. He had rushed his fences, and he had come down, as he deserved. He had been mad to imagine that because her beauty, her calm sweetness, her aloofness had captivated him, he could look for as swift response in her. He was a fool, a vain, blundering madman.

But she loved him. She had said so. If he had not been sure that that was all that mattered, he would not have persisted so long, so hotly.

"But if you love me, Cressida, why—why not? There's nothing to stand in the way. I love you, and you love me—you've said so. Then why won't you marry me?"

She had been white and still. She had freed herself, gently, from his arms. "I've told you, Chris. I love you, but . . . it was like this before. I loved him too."

"Well, you were young—it was four years ago. Every beautiful girl is in love at eighteen. What does it matter? You loved a fellow and forgot him, poor devil—but that was yesterday. This is now! Cressida—let me kiss you . . . Cressida . . . Cressida."

"But you don't understand, Ch Listen—please, darling, listen! You see wasn't eighteen. I was twenty-two, an loved him very much, Chris. He was t like you, and young and good-looking a gentle and kind—like you—and there nothing in the way then, either. His pare liked me; I liked them. There was eve thing. . . . And then he went away—fo year. We could have married before he l but we talked it over, and decided to w We wrote, we planned, we lived for the he'd come back. . . . And before he ca back, I knew that—that, as far as I was c cerned, it was . . . dead. I tried to write, I I was—I was trapped. I prayed that whe saw him again, everything would be right. I thought that when I saw him aga I'd get back whatever it was that was los "Cressida, my darling, don't cry. Ple don't cry."

"He came back. He was as much in l as he'd been when he went away. But no ing I could do—nothing, Chris—could br back the magic. It was gone. I liked him admired him, but I couldn't love him. Y see—in a year, in just a year, it had di And now, when I'm in love again, I can't can't help remembering. I love you, Ch but you've got to wait. If you'll be patien if you'll just wait."

"A year!"

"Yes. Try to understand, please. If been eighteen, or nineteen, or twenty— at twenty-two, it's different. People exp you to know what you're doing. If you'll w Chris, and let me prove to myself that I trust my feelings, that they'll stand up, t time, to any test ——"

She would not give in. He had not, in end, been gentle, and he had left her, at l shaken and trembling. He had come back the farm and roamed restlessly round dark buildings until, in a remote shed, had found Scotty and sought his sympat

"But I told you, Chris!"

"You didn't. You never mentioned

"Well, I thought I did. This is a thing can't help. The burnt child and the fire. Y don't know what she went through whe on the eve of the marriage—she handed poor wight back his ring. He was a nice g He took it as well as could be expected, his parents went through a series of unple ant phases, each more vindictive than last. Cress might have stood up to it bet if she'd had anybody at home to back her but her father went over to the enem

"Why was he ——"

"Money. It's his ruling passion—or been since his wife died. Cress says he different when she was alive. Well, there have it. Cressida was called capricious, hea less, cruel—and worse. A lot of that n stuck. You won't argue her out of this, Ch Be patient with her—it only needs patienc

Christopher came to himself to find Jose shaking his arm gently.

"You are not listening," she said.

"No. I'm sorry," said Christopher. "' me again."

"What she's been trying to tell you, c you've been off on some dream of your o is that she's made a spell."

"Oh." With an effort, Christopher brou his mind to bear on the pincushion Jose was holding. "This is the spell, is it?"

"It's for Cressida," Josette told him. ' come back."

Mrs. Belchamber laid down the book took off her glasses. "If you're going to spells," she said to Josette, "you'd better one for Mrs. Garcia to come back too."

"She is not here?" asked Josette.

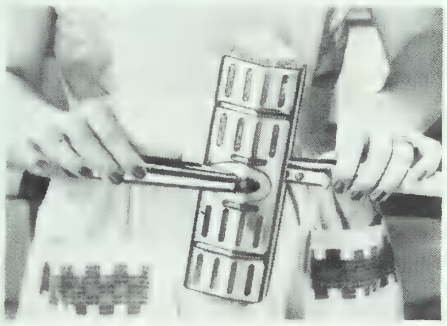
"She is not. You usually find that w one support goes, the others collapse t

Christopher rose abruptly. "I'll go acro he said, "and see what's keeping Cressic

He went downstairs and was halfw across the stackyard when he heard his na called. He turned and found Scotty com toward him.

"Hey—Chris! You going over to Gr sleeves?"

"Yes. Cressida hasn't come, and I w to find out—I'd like to know why."



(Continued on Page 94)

3 million women now mop without getting their han

Thanks to the new O-Cedar Sponge Mop that keeps

No more wringing! Your hands need never touch scrub water again. With a new O-Cedar Sponge Mop, you press the water out with the handy built-in squeezer.

Your hands stay softer, smoother, lovelier because you keep them out of hot soapy scrub water with the new O-Cedar Sponge Mop. Your hands stay dry.

The O-Cedar Sponge Mop has already pro itself in use to 3

- Gleaming, rust-resistant metal hea
- Handy, practical built-in squeezer
- Detachable sponge head of best q
- Full 4 foot handle—reaches high
- Proved extra uses like waxing floo

To be sure you get a genuine O-Ced familiar O-Cedar trade mark stamped c

O-Cedar Spon

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money if not as advertised therein

O cedar

O-Cedar Corp'n
Chicago, Illinois

O-Cedar of Canada, Ltd.
Toronto, Canada

Christopher was scarcely at arm's length. It would have taken a harder heart than Cressida's to resist the warmth and charm of his wooing. He brought all the weight of his personality and charm to bear, and Cressida knew that she was giving way before it.

Scotty knew, too, and since he had never had any real hope that Cressida could love him, was content to see her loving, he explained to her, the next-best fellow.

There was no sign, as yet, that any steps were being taken to trace Mrs. Belchamber, but Christopher thought it unlikely that those who felt themselves responsible for her would allow her to disappear without making any efforts to find her. There was, as Scotty pointed out, a slender thread reaching back to the world she had left. Mrs. Garcia was a talker and, if inquiries were made, Mrs. Belchamber's whereabouts would not long remain a secret.

"And then," he ended, "our troubles'll be over."

"Yours will," corrected Christopher.

"Mine will. Tonight's my bath night, and something tells me that the old lady's going to glue her ear to the door to hear me step in and splash."

"You'll step in and splash," promised Christopher. "I'll see to it personally."

"The skin," said Scotty, "has a natural grease, and boiling it off too frequently does the system no good at all. Oh, and I forgot to tell you. There was a telegram for you."

"Who from?"

"It was from that place in France. And it was signed Ursule Desmoulins. Who's she?"

"Children's nurse. What did she say?"

"Well, I don't want to worry you. She said her daughter's still ill, and you can guess what she's got."

"No!" exclaimed Christopher.

"Yeah!" said Scotty. "Measles!"

"'The gallery,'" read Mrs. Belchamber, seated by the window in the sickroom, "'consists of two rooms. In the Salle Chanzy can be found various relics of the Defense Nationale in 1870–1871.'" She paused to peer over her spectacles. "Do you know about this Defense Nationale?"

"No," said Josette.

"Oh. Well, I can't enlighten you, but you ought to know your own history. 'The Salle Ney comprises the ——.'"

Josette lay contentedly in the big bed, listening and looking. When Mrs. Belchamber was tired of reading, she sewed. Scotty's table linen—what there was of it—was in shreds. Her comments to Cressida on the rapid decline and fall of Scotty's living standards grew even more terse and uncomplimentary.

"It's a matter of soft rearing," she said, pushing the needle through a patch in a tablecloth. "No discipline. Take this Mr. Scott"—she jerked her head in the direction of her host, now crossing the stackyard below. "His own cowman, if he had one, would have more pride. I don't like shiftlessness. What are you showing that child?"

"It's your pincushion," explained Cressida, who was sitting at the head of Josette's bed. "We're making a spell."

CRESSIDA and Josette were holding the pincushion between them, and Cressida was making a new pattern with the pins.

"What sort of nonsense is this?" demanded Mrs. Belchamber.

Cressida looked up for a second, eyes mischievous, lips curled in amusement. "Oh, it isn't nonsense, is it, Josette? We made a spell yesterday for the spots to go away, and—look—the ones on her arms are going. Now we're making a spell so's she can eat a custard tomorrow." Her head bent close to Josette's. "We make this pattern—see?"

"Yes, I see." Josette took the pincushion and studied it. "Where shall we put it?" she asked.

"You can put it back in my workbasket," said Mrs. Belchamber. "The spells can work just as well in there, and I'll still have a pincushion. Now then, you boys"—she glared at Robert and Paul, who had clattered up-

(Continued from Page 92)

"I think I know why." Scotty sent a troubled glance toward the wooded hill. "I think there's a bit of bother up there. I'm not sure that you ought to barge in."

"What are you talking about?"

"Her father. He's down here, and there are signs that he's staying down. The caretaker's just been along for milk and eggs. She said the major came down early this morning—with luggage. If that's true, it's the first time he's had his things here for four years. Why would he leave London when the tourists are packing it? I have an idea he's in trouble."

"Well, there's only one way to find out," said Christopher, "and that's to go over and ask."

"Wouldn't it be better to wait for Cress? If he's in trouble, she won't want you to know."

"If I'm going to marry her, which I am, sooner or later," said Christopher, "I'll have to marry her father too. So the more I know about him, the better for everybody concerned."

He went quickly across the fields, deep in thought. The first object his mind registered was Major Gray's black sports car, gleaming in its accustomed place in the garage.

The big door was closed; after a moment's hesitation, he turned the heavy handle. If he was not yet past the knocking stage, he reflected, then it was time he was. He pushed open the door and stepped into the hall.

The two figures were standing before an empty fireplace. Cressida and her father turned as Christopher entered, and Major Gray raised one eyebrow expressively.

"Sorry not to knock," said Christopher. "I was worried about Cressida."

"Cressida," said her father evenly, "is very well—as you see."

"We were worried because you hadn't come," said Christopher, looking beyond Major Gray into Cressida's pale, set face.

"I—I was coming," she said. "My father came down unexpectedly, and we—we were talking."

"Yes. We don't often see each other . . . alone" said the major smoothly.

Christopher spoke as smoothly. "This isn't perhaps quite the intrusion it seems. One of these days, when Cressida and I have argued over one or two minor matters, I hope she'll marry me."

"I shall be delighted," said Major Gray, "to place her in such good hands."

There was a pause. Christopher saw that the man was watching him; he knew from the amusement in the gray eyes that he would get no help in whatever he was going to say. It would be better, thought Christopher, to take advantage of the moment and have this thing out.

"Scotty didn't want me to come up just now," he explained, "because he thought the fact of your being here meant that you were . . . worried about something."

"Oh, I'm not worried," smiled Major Gray.

"That's fine. I'm glad." Christopher's tone was firmer. "But if we're to be related, I'd like to feel that Cressida and you place enough reliance on me to let me in on anything that did happen to—to come up. Perhaps I should have talked to you before—about wanting to marry Cressida, that is."

"I DON'T see why," said Major Gray. "Young people arrange these things for themselves nowadays, and the responsibility of the parents seems to have narrowed down to seeing that the wedding arrangements go off to everybody's credit. I hope, Cressida, you'll have a white wedding. A white bride—white velvet. Velvet is so much softer than brocade."

He was not, then, going to meet Christopher halfway. Christopher looked into the calm, handsome face and decided that no word could come of pressing the matter. Cressida, apparently, had come to the same conclusion.

"If you wait," she said, "I'll come back with you."

While he waited, Major Gray talked of matters so trivial that Christopher knew that he was being mocked for his impetuous visit. Then he was out of the house and walking back with Cressida to the farm.

They walked in silence for some way; Cressida was deep in thought, and Christopher said nothing to disturb her.

"Chris," she said at last.

"Well?"

"It was . . . I was thinking about your coming over just now."

"I barged in," said Christopher. "I didn't mean to be overcurious, but if you're going to marry a girl, you like to be there if you feel you can do anything to help her." He hesitated and added, "Or to help her father."

"Father," said Cressida, "is a very difficult person to help."

"Nobody's difficult to help. If they need something, you've just got to find out what they need, and what form they'll take it in."

"THE only form my father will take it in," said Cressida, "is in a form which makes it appear that he's doing the giving."

"Well, I don't mind that," said Christopher. "The long-term object is not to please him, but to please you. You're not a girl who tells a man much. All I know is that your father—for reasons best known to himself—uses Greensleeves as a means of exercising his histrionic talents and bringing in some money. I gather that you earn for yourself all the money you handle. . . . There must have been some money once, Cressida."

"Yes, there was," said Cressida. "My father had a certain amount of money when they married, and my mother had rather more. My mother was a good manager, and they could have lived very comfortably—but not at the level at which my father wanted to live."

"Who told you all this?"

"He did. Father was brought up with expectations that never came to anything. He didn't know he was going to get Greensleeves, but he thought he'd get some money. Well, he didn't, and you can see that the house, without the money, was a heavy burden. I don't like my father's way of—of solving the problem, because it seemed to me that—I can't explain this properly—it changed him from what I suppose most people would call a pleasant wastrel into—into something less pleasant. He may be worthless, or graceless, but he isn't—he isn't really dishonest. Only—if you've seen some of the people who've come down lately, and if you knew how far his sales have come from the small things he used to deal in—you'd know why I'm frightened."

"Why did he come—why's he staying down here?"

"He won't tell me. But I know he's in trouble; I know he is, Chris!"

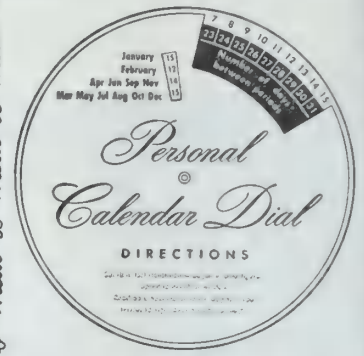
"Well, steady," said Christopher gently. He took her in his arms, aware of Mrs. Belchamber's black hat at a window, and held her in a steady grasp. "You've nothing to worry about, Cressida. I'm in this as much as you are, you know. If you'd wash out all those silly ideas about not marrying me until you've found you're not in love with me any more ——"

He felt, rather than saw, the little shake of her head. "Give me time, Chris," she begged.

"I'll give you a little time. We'll shelve the wedding argument for the moment. But I'd hoped to bring off a double event—our engagement and my birthday party. Well, we can still have the birthday party. Scotty says you've got a birthday this month too. When?"

"The twenty-seventh," said Cressida.

Christopher stared down at her. "But that's my birthday too. And if you're going to be twenty-six, and I'm going to be twenty-six, then we're ——"



Cressida, for the first time that afternoon, smiled. "We're twins," she agreed.

Arrangements for the party proceeded. Josette was to be allowed to put on a dress for the occasion; the festivities were, for her convenience, to be held in a room upstairs; Robert and Paul were to have new gray flannel suits.

"Are there to be two cakes?" Paul asked Cressida anxiously.

Meds Meds Meds Meds

FREE to tampon users

STOP EMBARRASSING SURPRISES!

This handy Dial tells you exactly when to expect your monthly period! It's easy to use, 3 inches wide, fits any purse, ends guesswork and uncertainty.

On calendar days, smart girls and women use Meds tampons—and swim, shower, dance with perfect safety, perfect poise. Meds protect you invisibly, comfortably, without pads, pins or bulk. Improved applicator makes Meds quick, easy to use.

Send Meds box top for your free Dial to Miss Crenning, Nursing Consultant, Dept. LH-7, Personal Products Corp., Milltown, N. J. U. S. only.

Meds Meds Meds Meds

For complete removal of superfluous hair use ZiP Epilator
ZiP - IT'S OFF because IT'S OUT
Safe fo face, arms, legs. Good store or send $1.10 to Jordeau, Box G-11 South Orange, N. J.

METALLIC Christmas Cards
YOU MAKE $40.00 CASH
You make 80c on every box of Metal Foil name-imprinted Christmas Cards you sell friends and others. They buy this new sensation on sight . . . Over 50 other Christmas and Everyday assortments. Name-imprinted Christmas cards, 40 for $1, up. FREE Personal Samples. Assortments on approval. Write now.
On Only 50 Boxes
CHAS. C. SCHWER CO., 37C Elm St., Westfield, Mass

INGROWN NAIL
Hurting You?
Immediate Relief!
A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

NEW, DIFFERENT, EXCLUSIVE Sell CHRISTMAS CARDS $1.25
50 WITH NAME IMPRINTED
Pen-'n-Brush STUDIOS
FREE SAMPLE
EARN EXTRA $$ BIG BONUS PLAN EARN UP TO AND OVER 100% PROFIT
SEND NO MONEY Write for Samples
Deal with a Leader. Earn BIG EXTRA MONEY in full or spare time.
$50 & MORE Yours for selling only 10 starting NEW boxes. Other AMAZING profits with greatest of ease.
You take NO RISK send postal card today for box assortment samples on approval. You also get FREE samples easy-to-sell personal Christmas cards, stationery, napkins. It costs nothing to try. Write TODAY.
PEN-'N-BRUSH, Dept. L-7, 139 Duane St., N.Y.13, N.Y.

Now Many Wear
FALSE TEETH
With Little Worry
Eat, talk, laugh or sneeze without fear of insecure false teeth dropping, slipping or wobbling. FASTEETH holds plates firmer and more comfortably. This pleasant powder has no gummy, gooey, pasty taste or feeling. Doesn't cause nausea. It's alkaline (non-acid). Checks "plate odor" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH at any drug store.
When mouth tissues change—see your dentist

"There'll be two," promised Cressida.
"With twenty-six candles each?"
"That'll take some blowing out," commented Mrs. Garcia.
"Two cakes, each with twenty-six candles. There will be things to eat."
"Lots of things to eat!" corroborated Robert.
This attitude of eager anticipation was not shared by everybody at the farm. There was nothing else on Christopher's mind, and he took a day or two to come to a decision. When he had reached one, he waited until Cressida was upstairs with Josette, then he went swiftly across the fields.

CHRISTOPHER found Major Gray in the great hall. There were a notebook and a pencil in his hand; he was obviously making a list of his effects.

"You must have had a hot walk," he said. "There's a storm coming, I think."

"It's close," admitted Christopher, and then, without further preamble: "I walked across to talk to you. Perhaps you could spare me a few minutes."

"Why, of course. Sit down, won't you?" Christopher sat down and then rose, with the feeling that he could say what he had come to say more clearly if he were on his feet.

"It's chiefly about Cressida," he began. "I'd like to be married at once, but Cressida's decided to ——"

"I know." The major's voice was sympathetic. "She's got this fantastic idea that that little affair of four years ago ——"

"She prefers to wait," said Christopher, "and so," he lied, "it's all right as far as I'm concerned. That isn't what I came to see you about."

"No?"

"Last time I was here," said Christopher, "you'd just come down—not as you usually come, but in a way that made me feel that things might not"—he had rehearsed the words—"might not be well with you. It would be unpardonable of me to pry into your affairs, but I think you know that Cressida . . . worries about you. She doesn't know why you've left town, why you're not bringing people here any more, what—since that's your only source of income—you'll do about money. I feel that you've—this is awfully difficult to say, but I'd like to get it out, sir—I feel that you've run into trouble, and while that wouldn't particularly concern me, in itself, it's bound to affect Cressida—and if I'm taking over her worries, I'd like to take over this one."

He stopped. He had plunged, finally, and he had no idea whether he had said too much or too little. He stood waiting, but it was some time before Major Gray spoke.

"Trouble," he said at last, "is something that doesn't weigh very heavily on me. And my trouble is a common one—the commonest one, perhaps, of all—and it has been with me all my life. Lack of money. Lack, that is, of enough money. I was brought up to expect it, and it didn't come; but the habits were ingrained, and they were such pleasant habits that I saw no reason to change them. Greensleeves seemed the answer—but getting money out of people, however you do it, turns out to be a sordid sort of business. But I was doing well—as perhaps you saw. I thought I could go on doing it for a few years and then, when the markets looked healthier, sell Greensleeves and invest the proceeds more profitably than I could do now. But the business—and it was, after all, a business—packed up suddenly, dramatically and, I'm afraid, finally the other day. And this is how it happened. Won't you sit down?"

"No, thank you."

"Well, I was introduced by a very, very important person to a South American. The South American heard about Greensleeves, asked if he could come down, and came, bringing his charming English wife. It was a profitable afternoon. They bought a Saxon pantern. It was genuine, and one of the most lovely things I ever handled. I bought it in Germany, from an old, old English lady, who told me that it had been in her family for generations. I paid handsomely for it, but I sold it for exactly ten times what I gave. I was very pleased. Then a lot of unpleasant things came about: the charming English wife wanted to see as many relations as possible before going back to South America. The old lady crossed the Channel to see her grandniece. . . . I needn't, perhaps, go on. Taken item by item, it wasn't so bad, but piled, villainy upon villainy like that, I couldn't survive it. I had robbed an old lady; I had robbed a young lady; I had grossly deceived the South American, and humiliated the extremely important person. You can't do that in the kind of club I belong—belonged—to. What I couldn't stand up to was a blow right at the heart of my credit. It was my credit, after all, that I drew on. While I was well thought of by those who could provide good contacts, I was all right. Now I must either work from a different center—which wouldn't amuse me, since I'm most at home in London—or I must bring the business down to a more obviously businesslike level—and that wouldn't amuse me either. I came here hoping that the storm would blow over, but I can see now that it won't. I've had to leave the club, and I shan't find myself welcome on the topmost levels any more. And I'm really only at home at the topmost level. So you see, my dear Christopher, that there's nothing for Cressida to worry about. I shall either commercialize Greensleeves—how, I can't yet say—or I shall sell it and live abroad."

"I thought ——" began Christopher.

"You thought a timely loan might come in handy, and it was good of you. But the time is not yet. I don't doubt I'll come to it. You've got a disarmingly generous look. All I need is thinking time—and I get a lot of that here."

There was silence, and after a time Major Gray rose. There seemed nothing more to say, and Christopher found himself being led to the door. Major Gray came out a little way, and the two men stood looking up at the beautiful house.

"Well, there it is," said the major affectionately. "History in stone. The first time I saw it, it revived a longing I hadn't felt for over twenty years—a wish you wouldn't have shared with me."

"What wish?" asked Christopher.

"That Cressida had been a boy."

First the man takes a drink, then the drink takes a drink, then the drink takes the man. —JAPANESE PROVERB.

Christopher was wakened at dawn on his birthday by two small pajama-clad figures bringing offerings to his bedside. He sat up, shook the sleep from his eyes, made an effort to appear enchanted, and looked for suitable phrases in which to give thanks for a leather photograph frame and a box of linen handkerchiefs.

"YOU can put a photograph into the frame," pointed out Paul, the donor. "You can put Cressida."

"She is your fiancée now, no?" inquired Robert.

"Yes. We won't be married yet awhile, though."

"Will she live with us?"

"Yes, when we're married. We'll all find a nice house in the country, and a couple of ponies."

"If there are three, it will be better," suggested Robert delicately. "Then there will be one for me, and one for ——"

"Yes, yes, of course. Three. What lovely presents—thank you so much! Are you going out to find Scotty now?"

"No. First you must come to see Josette."

"Oh—we mustn't wake her yet," protested Christopher.

"But she is awake—she has something for your birthday. You must come and see."

It was clear that he must. Stifling a series of yawns, Christopher put on a pair of slippers and shuffled in the wake of the two eager figures. Josette was sitting up in bed, her eyes shining, and a large parcel clasped to her chest.

"Ah—Bonne fête!" she cried. "Bonne fête!" Josette held out her parcel, and Christopher, bending, kissed her.

fresh from the English countryside

. . . the lilting fragrance of Lavender is brought to you by Yardley. Subtly blended with precious oils, there is only one Yardley Lavender. Though it's luxurious beyond compare, you will want to use it as generously as toilet water. It's right for all your doings. Enjoy this unique fragrance, too, in creamy-lathering Lavender Soap.

Yardley English Lavender, from $1.75, plus tax

Dusting Powder, $1.65, plus tax

Lavender Soap, $1.35 (box of three)
Bath size, 75c a tablet

YARDLEY
English Lavender

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U.S.A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

In the Spring... or Summer a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of... MOR

RANCHBURGERS AND MOR BURGERS

- For lunch-time, munch-time or a yummy square meal, try MOR 'n' cheese with mustard or chili sauce.
- Tasteful MOR 'n' slaw made with mayonnaise and relish. Good eating!
- Thrifty MOR cut in strips — — bacon wrapped and broil!

SQUARE MEAL SANDWICH PLATE

- Tender, thrifty pork shoulder MOR, tasty jelly or preserves, with lettuce, is dee-li-cious!
- Meaty MOR with lettuce and crumbled fried bacon—superb!
- Hot barbecued MOR or cold MOR with onion and chili sauce. Um-m-m!

MOR MAKES DAINTY SANDWICHES, TOO

- No trouble, no work, better eating.
- Versatile MOR meat with lettuce, tomato, pickles or cucumbers tastes wonderful.
- Always-ready MOR, minced with hard-cooked eggs, celery and radishes or pickles is grand.

So easy, so quick and mighty delicious!

Around the year, housewives' thoughts turn to Wilson's MOR. Tender, sugar-cured, pure pork shoulder meat, delicately seasoned, it's the handy meat of many uses. Everyone loves sandwiches with MOR meat in the middle. And, fried or baked, MOR makes hearty main dishes that satisfy the lustiest appetites. Buy Wilson's MOR at your favorite store.

A thrifty Meat— so good to Eat!

WILSON & CO. INC.

The Wilson label protects your table

"Thank you, Josette. Can I open it now?"

"Oh, yes. It is for that."

Christopher undid the wrappings. Inside was a pair of felt carpet slippers of a pattern he had thought obsolete: they were, moreover, several sizes too large for him and of a shade of yellow that made him feel slightly sick.

"By Jove!" he said, with as much enthusiasm as he could muster. "My goodness, these are smart!"

Josette gave a laugh of purest joy. "I made them! I made them!" she cried. "Madame showed me, and gave me the things to make them, because she did not want them."

Christopher could quite understand that. If they had been intended for the late Mr. Belchamber, he reflected, that gentleman must have had a large foot. Two large feet, he decided, lifting out the slippers with every appearance of eagerness.

"You will be able to wear them every day. We shall see them when you put them on," pointed out Paul.

Yes, there was that. He wondered what his man Merrow would say when he saw them. They would have to be kept on with string or elastic.

"They're lovely—everything's lovely," he said. "Thank you all very much. I'm going to have a lovely birthday."

The children, at any rate, were prepared to enjoy it. In spite of the heat, the boys made several journeys up the lane to see whether the van from the baker's, bringing the two birthday cakes, was on the way. They offered to help with the preparations for the party, but were found to be so much in the way that Mrs. Belchamber finally sent them out to Scotty with a message that he was to keep them out.

Soon the room upstairs began to assume a festive air. As the afternoon drew near, plates filled with delectable home-baked cakes were carried up and placed on the big, round table, the center being left free for the two birthday cakes. The room was closed during lunch, but after lunch Mrs. Belchamber permitted everybody a peep into the room. Josette, carried pickaback by Christopher, viewed the scene with crows of delight.

"Now back to bed," he commanded, "and a good sleep, or no party! Tuck up, now. Eyes shut!"

Josette shut one eye; Mrs. Belchamber drew the blanket across the window.

"The telephone is ringing," announced Robert. "Please, may I go to it?"

"Go ahead," said Scotty. "If it's the doctor, say the party's at four, and tell him not to be late. If it's the baker and there's any hitch about the cakes, call me and I'll deal with the monster. I hope they've got initials on. Have they?" he asked.

"Yes. They asked, and we told them," said Paul. "Why are you C. P.?" he asked Christopher. "Is it for Paul, like me?"

"Right," said Christopher. "Christopher Paul. I was going to be Christopher St. Armand Robert Paul—but your father stepped in and saved me."

"Who was telephoning?" Scotty inquired of Robert, who had come upstairs, a little breathless.

"I DO not know." Robert frowned with a touch of uneasiness. "A lady said 'Is that Green Farm?' and I said 'Yes,' and she said 'Can you say if Mrs. Belchamber is there?' and I said 'Yes, she is here; shall I call her to speak?'"

"Who was it?" inquired Mrs. Belchamber sharply.

"She—she did not say," faltered Robert. "She said that she is coming to see you this afternoon. She is coming in the train, and then she will get a taxi, she says."

"Didn't you tell her there was a party?" demanded Mrs. Belchamber.

"I—I — There was not time," said Robert. "She went away."

There was a short silence, and an odd air of tension in the room.

"What is she coming for?" The question came from Josette. She was sitting up in bed, her cheeks pale, her eyes fixed upon Mrs. Belchamber.

"She thinks she's coming to take me away," said Mrs. Belchamber brusquely.

The words, short and sharp, had an extraordinary effect on the three children. Robert was silent, the color draining out of his face: Paul, too, was silent, but his cheeks grew redder and redder. From Josette's eyes fell one, two tears and then a steady stream. Cressida sat on the bed and took her gently in her arms, murmuring soothing little phrases.

"You—you will not go?" faltered Robert.

"No!" It was a shout from Paul. "No!" He stared at Mrs. Belchamber and advanced, step by step, toward her. "I know who this is. She is the one who came before on the station—no?"

"Yes, that's the one," admitted Mrs. Belchamber. "But ——"

"Then she shall not come," said Paul fiercely. "You will see." He looked rapidly from side to side, seized the pincushion from the table beside Josette's bed, and tore the pins out of it passionately. "She will—not-come—to-take-you," he ground out, stabbing the velvet anew. See!" He held the pincushion in a sweeping, dramatic gesture. "I have made a charm! A bad charm!"

"Steady," said Christopher.

"THERE'S no need for spells, thank you," said Mrs. Belchamber. "Put that thing down and try to behave like an English boy instead of Sarah Bernhardt. She won't come today, if she's got any sense. When this storm breaks it'll wash all the trains off the lines. Go on—outside, all of you—look what you've done to that child, who's supposed to be convalescent. Go on—out." She swept out everybody but Cressida.

The party began punctually at four, the first excitement being provided by Josette's appearance in a pretty little white frock; the next by Mrs. Belchamber's entrance in a dove-gray creation beneath the usual black hat. She assumed command of the proceedings, welcoming the doctor with an attempt at graciousness, running a keen eye over Scotty's best suit and refusing to allow anybody to get a close view of the cakes which—raised above the lesser fare—waited for their candles to be lit, a ceremony which was not to be performed until the end of the party. She kept a keen eye on Christopher; it was clear that she was going to allow no adult enjoyment to mar what had become, somehow, a purely juvenile entertainment.

There were occasional rumbles of thunder, occasional flashes of lightning, but the company was too merry to notice them. The rain fell, fast and then faster, but the storm brought blessed relief from the day's closeness, and everybody felt glad of the coolness that now filled the room. The heaviness of the downpour went unheeded as chairs were drawn up to the table and the serious business of eating began.

The ample tea was disposed of and the remains removed; the two birthday cakes still stood, pink-iced, rose-bedecked. It was time for Josette to be going back to bed, and Mrs. Belchamber called a halt in the proceedings: she and Cressida would bring up the ices, the candles would be lit, and the ceremony of cake cutting would begin.

Scotty accompanied the two ladies downstairs—not from gallantry, but in response to Mrs. Belchamber's request to "come and make himself useful for a change." Christopher settled down to play host, and had organized a game of hunt the slipper with one of his birthday slippers, when the door opened and Scotty's head appeared round it. Something in his expression made Christopher uneasy; he left the others to play, and made his way to the door. Scotty drew him out onto the landing.

"You'd better come down," he said.

"What for?"

"Well—someone's come. Don't know who, but I've got an idea it might be Lucy Locket, the jailer's daughter—you know, the one who wants to whisk the old girl off."

"You mean she came through this storm?" Christopher asked.

"Yes, and she looks it too. I've put her in the big front room."

"But she doesn't want me," protested Christopher. "She'll want to talk to Mr. Belchamber."

ell, she can't—not just at this mo-," said Scotty. "In the first place, she n't fit to talk to anybody—and you can't troduce her into the party at this stage of he proceedings. Look, Chris," he went on, a eritus note in his voice, "go down and tell er you'll produce the Belchamber as soon as e get the doctor off and the kids out of the ay. She can't object to that."
f you saw her, how is it that Mrs. Bel-ber didn't?"
was going along the passage to the t on when I saw something at the front oor, so I went to investigate. And out there, nough, trying to get in, was this she.
I'd gathered who she was, I took her the big room and asked her to wait."
Christopher had no doubt that it would be oman who had borne down upon them eir arrival in England. The search had long, but it was at an end. They had Mrs. Belchamber.
l right. I'll go down," he said. He d toward the stairs, but Scotty, putting hand, grasped his arm.
ome with me—wait a minute."
went into Josette's room and took from le a small glass. Holding this, he took topher's arm and led him along the lor.
Where're we going?" inquired Christoalways keep a bottle of the best, against gencies." Scotty took a bottle of brandy the cupboard and poured a stiff drink he glass. "There! Get that down her."

re you out of your mind?" asked topher, staring. "Do you expect me to in with a drink and ——"
Chris, don't argue. That woman down needs it. If she doesn't drink it, she'll go with a fine dose of monia—she's soaked
le skin and her teeth making noises like nets. Go on—get that her, ask her to wait, then leave the brandy
o its beneficial work.
there's one more thing. I found out she's called."
Well?"
Her name," said Scotty, "is Miss itt."
hristopher went reluctantly toward the s, passing on the way the overexcited l, who, tiring of hunting the slipper, was g up surplus energy by running up to the floor, poising on the broad, polished sters and sliding down with outtched arms and terrifying swiftness. It a sport normally forbidden, but rules
e relaxed today.
See," shouted Paul, having climbed to top once more. "I can fly!" he chanted.
took off in a swift downward rush, an sting and dramatic figure. He landed precision and prepared for another nt. "Look!"
hristopher was not looking. He was rying, as fast as he could, down to the , where a woman stood at the door of the room. She was deathly pale. Christopher ed the glass of brandy on the floor and, ping forward, was just in time to receive s Cubitt's crumpling form in his arms.

carry her into the room and lay her on sofa was the work of a moment. Chris-er went back for the brandy, shut the r carefully, and knelt beside her. He held glass to her lips and Miss Cubitt, with a dder and a gasp, opened her eyes.
Don't try to talk," said Christopher ly. "Just drink this and you'll be all
t."
I don't . . . thank you, no . . . I ——"
You're wet and cold, and it's better to e yourself a severe chill," urged Christo-
r. "Please drink this."
e held the glass and, gulp by gulp, Miss itt drank its contents. He watched a e color come to her cheeks.
I'm—I'm ——You must forgive me," murmured presently.
You must forgive us," corrected Chris-er gently. "We've given you a lot of ble, one way and another."

"No . . . no." Miss Cubitt closed her eyes and in a moment was asleep.

Christopher walked to the door. He closed it behind him so that the sounds from upstairs should not disturb the sleeper. He went upstairs.

The company had been assembled round the table; the three children, eager and breathless, were watching Mrs. Belchamber as she drew the two birthday cakes forward to be cut.

"Two knives," she said. "Cressida, there's yours. Here's the other one—now come and stand here," she ordered Christopher.

He stood where she pointed, side by side with Cressida. Before them, on the table, stood the two birthday cakes. Icing, decorations, candles . . . and initials. He studied his own, over which Paul was tracing a careful finger.

Scotty waited until the pieces of cake had been taken round. Then he came up to Christopher. "You were a long time," he said. "Did you have trouble persuading her to wait down there?"

"No. She's asleep."

"Asleep? That'll be the drink you gave her. The next thing'll be to tell the old lady she's here."

"Who's here?" demanded Mrs. Belchamber.

"Visitor for you," said Scotty. "Name of Cubitt."

"Oh—that detestable creature? Did you tell her to go away?"

"How could we do that?" asked Scotty. "You've been playing a nice game of come-and-get-me, and now she's come."

"Well, tell her to go away again."

"You tell her," invited Scotty.

"Certainly I'll tell her. Where is she?"

"She's in the big front room," said Scotty. "She's asleep."

"Asleep!" Mrs. Belchamber's mouth dropped open in astonishment. "Are you joking?"

"Would I dare?" asked Scotty. "She was a bit washed out when she arrived."

"Did she ask for me?"

"Yes, but I thought we'd give you time to get the cake-cutting ceremony over—by which time she'd have pulled herself together."

Mrs. Belchamber gave up the attempt to visualize the situation. "I shall go down. I don't understand a word you're saying."

"If I were you," said Christopher, "I'd take the doctor down with you. I think she must have stumbled coming up the lane—I saw a bruise on her head, and she didn't seem herself."

The doctor, hastily eating the last morsels of his cake, announced himself ready to accompany Mrs. Belchamber and examine the visitor. He made his farewells, congratulated his host and hostess on the success of the party, thanked them and bowed Mrs. Belchamber out.

"Who's the visitor?" asked Cressida. "Is she the one ——"

"Is she that one?" Paul had come up and was looking up at Scotty eagerly. "I put a spell for her—a bad spell."

"No more spells," said Cressida. She bent over the sleepy Josette and swung her into her arms. "Bed," she said. "Bed for a tired girl."

Josette made no protest; she allowed herself to be removed, and Robert and Paul followed her, armed with the remainder of the crackers.

"Well, that's over," said Scotty, viewing the littered table. "Funny about Miss Cubitt," he said reflectively. "Would you have believed, when I first set eyes on—you know who I mean—that I would have felt a pang at the thought of her leaving? But I do. I get a very, very funny feeling—and it isn't relief. It isn't even—well, what is it?" he stopped to inquire of Paul.

"There is a man with a car. An automobile—outside."

"Did he say he'd come for Miss Cubitt?"

Children should have their times of being off duty, like soldiers.
—RUSKIN.

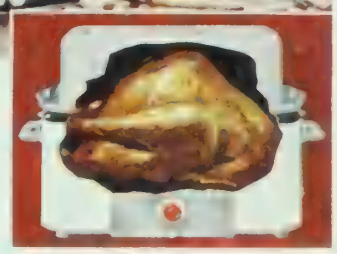
Perfect Results... Every time!

It's no trick at all with a Westinghouse

America's Leading Roaster

Meats stay juicy . . . tender . . . hold their flavor when cooked in the Westinghouse Roaster-Oven. And there's no work to it. Thanks to accurate thermostat control this Roaster roasts and bakes with no attention at all.

Already more than a million happy owners call it "2 sq. ft. of Cooking Magic, cooks everything, plugs in anywhere."



It's portable. You can move it out on the porch . . . by the kitchen window . . . take it with you on picnics to keep food warm. Has set of glass ovenware dishes, exclusive Look-In lid, Lift-Out rack, Time-Temp Shelf . . . all at no extra cost.

See this grand Roaster at your Westinghouse retailer's. The Westinghouse Electric Corporation, Electric Appliance Division, Mansfield, Ohio.

ROASTER-OVEN ONLY $39.95

Accessories: Broiler-Grid, $7.95; Cabinet, $18.95; Timer, $10.95 plus tax
Fair Trade Prices subject to change

Give Electric Housewares . . First Choice for every Gift Occasion

Extra Capacity for large turkeys, using inset pan as cover.

Fries, Grills, Broils, Toasts, with convenient Broiler-Grid.

Convenient Cabinet, also Timer, Broiler-Grid . . . optional.

See TV's New Dramatic Show . . . WESTINGHOUSE "SUMMER THEATER" . . . Every Week

YOU CAN BE SURE..IF IT'S Westinghouse

"Miss Cubitt—yes."

"All right, Paul—go down and tell him we'll let her know."

Mrs. Belchamber entered the room, dressed in her long tweed coat. "I'm going to the station," she announced. "I shall put Miss Cubitt on her train, and then come back in the taxi."

"Did the doctor see Miss Cubitt?"

"He did. He said her nerves were shaky—he put it down to the storm and the bump she gave her head on the gate. I didn't disabuse him."

"Disabuse him?" Scotty stared at her, uncomprehending.

Mrs. Belchamber drew on a pair of neat black gloves, and then spoke. "I knew, when I saw her, that there was something peculiar about her. When I saw her first, I mean to say. I didn't like her manner at all. But now I know what's the matter with her."

"Well—what?" inquired Scotty.

"Drink. You might have been taken in with that cow-and-bull story about this and that making her feel queer, but as soon as I got into the room, I knew what was the matter with her. The doctor asked her a few questions, and found that she couldn't remember anything from the time she'd opened the gate until the moment she found herself lying on the sofa. I didn't say a word, but I used my nose, and it never deceives me. That woman had been drinking."

"But look here ——" began Scotty anxiously.

Mrs. Belchamber held up an arresting hand. "You needn't fear," she said acidly. "I shall say nothing to anybody. I shall put her on the train with a message to the effect that I've changed my mind about living at Melhampton. The house is no longer mine, and I've no wish to interfere with the way in which they run it. If they want to employ women who can't get through a gate when they see one, it isn't my affair. I don't think this creature is fit to get herself into a train without help, and I don't want it known that somebody who came to visit me went away in a state of intoxication. I shall be back within the hour."

The door closed firmly behind her.

Christopher lay that night, sleepless. The night wore on, and dawn found him tossing and still sleepless. He let the morning grow older and lay where he was, thinking. The sound of movements came to his ears, but nobody disturbed him. He heard cautious footsteps outside his room, and closed his eyes until Robert and Paul, peeping in, had closed the door softly and gone away again.

Presently, when all was quiet, he rose and dressed. He found the kitchen empty; his coffee and a dish of bacon and eggs were being kept warm on the stove. He drank the coffee and made his way outside and went in the direction of the lane. He drew aside to allow a milk van to pass, and heard Scotty's voice hailing him.

He stopped, but did not go back. "I'm going for a walk," he said.

Scotty came toward him and jerked his chin in the direction in which the van had disappeared.

"That chap told me some news," he said.

"Well?" Christopher's tone was short, but Scotty did not notice the brusqueness.

"About Greensleeves. It's up for sale."

Christopher raised his head and stared past Scotty at the wooded hill, at the chimneys of Greensleeves seen through the trees. He heard himself speaking. "How did he know?"

"It's in the agent's hands," said Scotty. "The council made him an offer, but he turned it down a few days ago. Now they think he might have changed his mind—or lowered his limit. They think he might —— Chris—hey!"

Scotty's cry went unheard. Christopher had begun to run; he had cleared the gate; he was in the road, and gaining impetus; he was speeding through the grounds and making for the house.

There was no sign of Cressida, and—for once—Christopher was thankful. He went into the hall and stood still to recover his breath; when Major Gray came in he was breathing fast, but evenly.

"You're an early visitor." The major's voice had all its usual quiet pleasantness. "Are you looking for Cressida?"

"No." Christopher plunged without preamble. "Scotty tells me you're selling Greensleeves."

The major shrugged. "I am. Grenton Council made me an offer—at last. They will give me a quarter of what it's worth, but who else'll buy it?"

"I will," said Christopher.

He saw, as he said the words, the first unrehearsed expression he had ever seen on Major Gray's face.

Major Gray recovered from his surprise. "Why you?" he asked.

"Why not me?" countered Christopher.

Major Gray spoke slowly. "I thought—once—that first time, that you might make an offer, I knew you had the money. Then, when I decided to sell, I thought your attitude had changed—you didn't look to me as keen as you'd been."

"Why have you decided to sell?"

"For the reasons I gave you the other day. I thought I could go on for a bit longer, but my credit's gone. I'm not sorry it's over, but I'm sorry the house is to go. If things had been different, I might have had a shot at keeping it—somehow, in some way. If I'd had a son, there might have been some point in it—but Cressida will marry and go away." He paused. "And that, in effect, is what I shall do. Only in reverse order."

"What?"

"I shall go away, and marry."

"Marry?"

Major Gray smiled. "I don't know why I tell you. I've never mentioned it to Cressida, and you can tell her or keep it to yourself—just as you like. There's been a strong attraction taking me abroad for the last few years. To Cape Town. I don't often look into the future—it doesn't do—but, oddly enough, whenever I did give a glance ahead, I saw nothing about remarrying. But I met another Annette—Cressida's mother, you know, was Annette—and one way and another, I began to see a good deal of her. I tried to persuade her to marry me and come to England, but she's a good businesswoman, and she didn't see any future for us at Greensleeves. She was right. So when the sale goes through, I shall go and settle out there and hand my capital over to her to look after. I like South Africa—as much as I like any place for long. But one's views change. My feet are getting heavier than they were.

"I'm glad Cressida's going to marry you. If you'll take a word of advice, you'll have one more go at trying to get her to marry you without that delay she's determined to impose—but if she won't, your best plan would be to keep out of the way a bit and see what absence does to make her change her mind. She doesn't like London, and, in spite of what she says, she doesn't much like that job she's doing. I have a feeling you'll find her coming round sooner than you know."

"I hope so," said Christopher. "And now—hadn't we better talk about Greensleeves?"

"You're quite certain you want it?"

"Quite."

"I'm glad. But I want a good price, you know."

"Name it," said Christopher.

Mrs. Belchamber settled Josette more comfortably on the sofa and tidied away some of the toys that had accumulated during her convalescence. Josette watched with her usual calm complacency.

"Please do not take the little doll," she said. "I am talking to her."

"Oh. Well, there you are, then." Mrs. Belchamber handed it over. "Now who," she demanded, "broke this nice little paintbox?"

"Nobody broke it," said Josette.

"Nobody?"

"No. By mistake, Robert fell onto it when he was fighting."

"You mean fighting with Paul? What were they fighting about?"

"They were fighting because Robert said he had more spots, and Paul said no, he had more."

"But they haven't got any spots! I looked this morning."

"Not now. Not this time," said Josette. "The other time when they had spots like me."

Mrs. Belchamber stared at her. "You mean, they had —— Are you trying to say that they had measles before? When you were in France?"

"Yes."

"Well, why didn't they say so? Why didn't they tell us? We've all been waiting for them to get them."

"You can twice," said Josette. "That is what you said. They can have more?"

"They ——" Mrs. Belchamber gave an exasperated sound. "They're not likely to get them a second time at their age. If you'd told me, I should have known."

With this obvious truth, she swept the surplus toys into a neat pile and went downstairs, still making sounds of annoyance.

Over lunch, Christopher said, "I've got some news."

"I knew you had," said Cressida. "You look . . . different."

"Well, come on," demanded Mrs. Belchamber.

"I've bought Greensleeves."

"You've what?" Scotty rose from his chair and gave Christopher a tremendous thump on the shoulder. "Chris, my old son, say that again!"

"All right. I've bought Greensleeves," Christopher repeated.

"That isn't for sale, that's the one I sit in."

"Oh . . . Chris!" Cressida's eyes were his, but he could not read her expression.

"You have bought that house?" ask Paul. "For us to live in?"

"Yes."

"Shall we all live in it?" asked Robert.

"Yes. Are you glad?"

"I am glad," said Robert without hesit tion. "I shall be happy."

There were exclamations, explanatio suggestions, and a general chorus of congr ulation. Cressida's eyes, at first unreadab began to shine and glisten, and Christoph did not have to wait for her words. She, li Robert, was happy.

Only Mrs. Belchamber made no commer and Christopher, after waiting for one of h usual caustic remarks and hearing no found himself left with a curious feeli which he interpreted as pity for her homel state. He wondered whether she had ma any plans, and, if so, what they were.

He was not left long in doubt. Mrs. B chamber put up a scraggy forefinger as prepared to follow Scotty outside after lun and beckoned him to her side.

"About Greensleeves," she began at on "I'll make you an offer for the west tow I'll rent it on a yearly basis."

"I'm very sorry," said Christoph "but ——"

"We shan't meet, never fear," swept Mrs. Belchamber. "I don't want those c dren all over my part of the house. I sh keep myself to myself, and I hope you'll the same."

"As a matter of ——"

"I don't want to go back to Switzerla even if I could get there," proceeded M Belchamber. "I like Greensleeves; it's what very few houses have: style."

"Yes, but you see, I ——"

"About servants. I've thought that out," said Mrs. Belchamber. "There's a c ple there already—Émile and his wif that's two. I shall get Mrs. Garcia to co Shall you be keeping your flat in Londo

"For the present. But ——"

"Well, then, your man won't be availa I shall send for my two Swiss maids, an shall keep one and give you the other. children will presumably be at board school soon, and you'll go up to town ev day, or stay up in town during the week there won't be a great deal except during holidays."

"I wonder if you'd let me say a few ——"

"The only thing that remains to be sett is the figure for the rent. We can walk o to the house together and decide upon exact number of rooms I'm to have, and t we shall know where we are."

"My dear Mrs. ——"

"I'm glad to have it settled," decla Mrs. Belchamber, beginning to clear the ble. "I wonder if you'd mind going out while I get on with this? I shall work be if you're not here chatting. Take that jug out with you, will you, and leave it in dairy."

Major Gray left England the day be Christopher began the move to Greensle The leave-taking ceremony was brief; C sida went up to London to see her father and returned the following day to pack things preparatory to returning to her w No argument from Scotty, no plea Christopher had been able to wring from more than a promise to do all she coul shake herself free of her fears and m Christopher at once as he wanted her Scotty, like Major Gray, felt that abs would prove a better weapon than argum Greensleeves, the children and her love Christopher would all combine to mak irresistible magnet to draw her back.

"I wish I'd rented this farm, instea buying it," he complained to Christop "Then you'd have had to do all the rep at no expense to me. You'll buy butter eggs and cream and cheese from me, a top prices?"

"I suppose so," said Christopher. "W are you going to use the bath for when w gone?"

(Continued on Page 100)

LAY TOGETHER . . . BE GAY TOGETHER!

"fresh up" with Seven-Up!

BE A "FRESH UP" FAMILY!

When the sun's high and you're dry—"fresh up" with 7-Up! What a perfect thirst chaser it is, with or without a cooling ice cream "float"!* But, more than that, you'll see how 7-Up fits right in with your family fun—how it adds its own lively sparkle and cheer to whatever your family is doing together.

And, because 7-Up is so pure . . . so good . . . so wholesome . . . even your youngest children can enjoy it often. That's why crystal-clear 7-Up is the all-family drink. Try chilled 7-Up today! You can get it wherever you see those bright 7-Up signs.

*Put a big scoop of ice cream in a tall glass and add 7-Up—tilting the glass and pouring gently down the side.

ADVERTISED IN AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION PUBLICATIONS

You like it... it likes you!

Copyright 1951 by The Seven-Up Company

FAMILY GAME BOOKLET. Family fun suggestions for youngsters and grownups! Send 20¢ in coin to FAMILY FUN, 1523 S. 10th Street, St. Louis (4), Missouri, or your local Seven-Up Bottling Company.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

NEW! a liquid 'LIPSTICK'

Can't Melt!

Can't Smear!

MARY ELLEN KAY—in Rodeo King & the Senorita, a Republic Picture

. . . Beautiful Swim-proof Lips

Romance-hued liquid colors that take to your lips with the idea of staying. Liquid Liptone, the miracle 'lipstick' at last, that can't smear—and that really won't rub off! Makes lips beautiful and keeps them beautiful for an extra long time. And the shades are lovelier—much lovelier than you have ever hoped for!

Now you can make up your lips before you go out—and no matter what you do—or whether it be in sunlight or in moonlight—they'll stay divinely red until long after you are home again. Sounds impossible, doesn't it? But it is so true. Obviously, this miracle couldn't be performed by lipstick made of grease, and it isn't.

A LIQUID DOES IT:

a heavenly new liquid, which instantly imparts glamorous color . . . in the most romantic shades ever! And if your lips are given to parching in the summer sun, Liquid Liptone will prevent that, too. All the best stores feature Liptone. Get yours today.

liquid liptone

SEND COUPON for generous Trial Sizes

PRINCESS PAT, Dept. 187
2709 S. Wells St., Chicago 16, Ill.

I enclose 25c, which includes Fed. tax, for each shade checked below:

☐ Medium—Natural true red—very flattering.
☐ Gypsy—Vibrant deep red—ravishing.
☐ Regal—Glamorous rich burgundy.
☐ Orchid—Exotic pink—romantic for evening.
☐ English Tint—Inviting coral-pink.
☐ Clear (colorless)—Use over lipstick, smearproofs.
CHEEKTONE—"Magic" natural color for cheeks.
☐ 1 English Tint ☐ 2 Coral ☐ 3 Deep Cherry

Miss
Mrs._____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

(Continued from Page 98)

"I need an extra trough. But I have a feeling that she'll come over here on bath nights, just to ——"

"No, she won't."

Scotty's face cleared.

"But I tell you what she will do," went on Christopher blandly. "She's been consulting me—professionally—about putting in a bathroom and etceteras."

"A —— In my house?"

"Yes."

"She can't," declared Scotty. "She can't do it."

"Why not? All she needs is money."

"And my consent."

"All she needs," reaffirmed Christopher, "is money."

The gloom that descended upon Scotty lasted until the next day, and was still about him when Cressida came over to say good-by. He kissed her mournfully and watched her go into the house to say good-by to Mrs. Belchamber. Christopher sat at the wheel of the car; he was to drive her up to London. Scotty's eyes fell on Cressida's suitcases at the back of the car, and he sighed. "We'll just have to pray, Chris, old son. Or these two fellows"—he nodded toward Robert and Paul, who were approaching the car—"these two fellows might try a spell."

"A spell for what?" inquired Robert.

"To bring Cressida back."

"If she does not come back soon, then we will put a spell," promised Paul. "Can we come up the lane in the car, Chris-topher?"

"Yes, if you like. What's Cressida doing?"

"She has said good-by to Josette, and she is saying it now to madame."

Mrs. Belchamber glanced up somewhat impatiently as Cressida came downstairs after saying good-by to Josette. "I don't see why you're wasting all this time in saying good-bys," she said. "You'll be back here in a week or two, to arrange about your wedding. I don't see why you have to go away at all. You could have sent word to those people you work for, and told them you're being married at once."

"But I'm not," said Cressida. "I'm not going to be married for a year."

If she had suddenly produced an extra head, Mrs. Belchamber could not have stared at her with greater astonishment.

"What's the delay? I thought it was to be soon, from what your fiancé said. What does he want to wait a year for?"

"He doesn't. I mean—I asked him to."

"And why?" demanded Mrs. Belchamber. "I don't believe in long engagements. A lot can happen in a year."

"I know, but I'd rather wait."

"Oh. And that young man out there—is he content to wait?"

"He—he's agreed to wait."

MRS. BELCHAMBER gave a sound between a sneer and a snort. It breathed such open contempt blood came to Cressida's cheeks.

"Good-by," she said. "I hope we'll ——"

"A year!" snorted Mrs. Belchamber. "That'll make you twenty-seven."

"Yes."

"An age at which most girls show sense, if they're ever going to have any. Who's going to keep an eye on your fiancé during the twelve months? Have you thought of that?"

"There's no need to keep an eye on him. He ——"

It was Mrs. Belchamber's turn to redden with anger. "Don't stand there making childish remarks," she requested. "I put you down as a girl with a headpiece, and I don't like to find that you're like all the other flutterheads. When you get a man—a young man, a clean-living man, a man with background and money—you don't wait a year. In a year, let me tell you, my overconfident young woman, you'll be looking round for him so diligently that you'll wear yourself out in the process—but you won't find him. You won't, but somebody else will. In a month—in a week—your faithful young man will be off."

"That's a matter for ——"

"OFF. And I'll tell you exactly where he'll be off to. He'll be off to his Maisie."

"Maisie?"

"Ha. I suppose this is the first you've heard of any Maisie?"

"I ——"

"I thought so. I don't suppose you know he was engaged to her? I'll tell you her full name, if you'll give me a moment. Dobson. Hobson. No—Robson. Maisie Robson. Now go out there and ask him about Maisie Robson and watch his face."

"I ——"

"And I suppose he never mentioned the other one? What did you think he did until he was twenty-six? Don't you know anything about men? He wouldn't mention Elinor to you, naturally."

"El——"

"Elinor something to do with a gate. Gatesby. Gateson. Yes, Gateson. I could have told you he wasn't a man to waste any time when there were women about. Now good-by. I'm sorry for you, and if I know where to write to you, I'll send you a line the first time he brings either of his women down to Greensleeves. I can't do more. Good-by."

"Good-by," said Cressida.

Mrs. Belchamber adjusted her hat, which had been a little tossed about during her speech, and went into the big front room. Cressida stood where she had left her, in the middle of the kitchen, and stared down at the scrubbed, shining table. After a while, a faint, amused smile touched her lips. She turned and walked slowly upstairs to Josette's room, rumpled Josette's hair absently, and walked to the window. She looked out onto the yard and saw the car, with the two boys standing near it and Scotty leaning against it. As she stood, Scotty looked up and saw her, and raised a hand.

"Hi there, Cress," he called.

Christopher got out of the car and looked up at her. "Ready?" he asked.

Cressida looked down at him. She saw his tall, strong figure in flannels and a tweed jacket; she smiled at him and saw the expression in his eyes as he stood looking up at her. He was twenty-six, and she was twenty-six and their house—she glanced for a moment toward Greensleeves—was there, waiting for them. Here was all she wanted in the world—and she was leaving it calmly, deliberately, for a reason that seemed, suddenly, to be no reason at all.

"Coming?" said Christopher.

She saw him growing hazy, and then disappearing; she shook her head, whether in answer to Christopher's question, or to shake the tears out of her eyes, she never afterward knew. When she could see again, there was only Scotty looking up at her, a puzzled expression on his face.

"What's up, Cress? Changed your mind?"

She might have answered, but an arm—an arm in a tweed sleeve—came round her and swung her out of sight. Scotty, staring, saw Christopher's face at the window, and the expression on it brought a yelp from his lips.

"Chris—isn't she going?"

"No," said Christopher.

"Has she said so?"

"No," said Christopher. "But you can always tell." THE END

Tide Talk

By H. H. GRENVILLE

All night we heard the dialogue
Between the ocean and the stones,
A tireless talking, like the speech
Of men with sorrow in their bones;
But whether we who lay awake
And our dark world were their concern,
Or if they simply talk to pass
The centuries, we could not learn.

Is Dry Skin making you feel too o for pretty make-up?

Do you long to wear becomin complexion tints...bright, exci ing lipsticks—but feel that the never look the same on you a on other women?

It's a terrible disappointment but you don't have to have it. Fo often it's just a dry skin tha causes pretty make-up to lool unflattering.

For such skin, Woodbury ha created a new Dry Skin Crean with a wonder-working ingredi ent called Penaten! A gloriou new miracle, Penaten penetrate deeper into the important cor neum layers of the skin . . . car ries the rich benefits of lanoli and 4 other special skin soften ers deeper than ever before!

Little dry skin lines and harsh ness seem to melt away with Woodbury Dry Skin Cream. You skin feels and looks softer, fresh er, younger! Make-up goes on s smoothly—looks wonderfully be coming! Try it! 25¢ to 97¢ (plu tax).

WOODBURY DRY SKIN CREAM

penetrates deeper because of Penaten

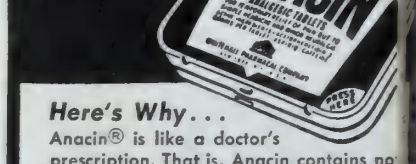
MAKE $27.50 A DAY
Even beginners sell 50 Christmas Boxes a day and make $27.50. Up to 100% profit with Imprint Cards, Stationery, Napkins and Gifts.
FREE PACKAGE CHRISTMAS GIFT CARDS
32 PAGE MONEY-MAKING CATALOG
Write for best-selling boxes on aproval
ORGANIZATIONS: Write for Fund-Raising Plan
FANMOUR Corp. Dept. JJ-4 200 Fifth Ave. N.Y.C.
FREE SAMPLES 40 IMPRINT CARD STATION



BEWARE INSE BITE

May Cause Infection As Well As Torr

Neglected bites from non-poisonous insects may dangerous infection! Oil-O-Sol soothes, cools, co —acts instantly to ease pain, itch, smarting. At the time Oil-O-Sol serves to help control infection, swelling, speed healing. A wonderful germ-ar antiseptic for simple cuts, burns, scratches. Oil at your drug store.

JUST OUT!! NEW THRILLING SENSATION IN CHRISTMAS CARDS
Lustre Foils, Satins, Brilliants
MAKE BIG MONEY
Amazing values bring you easy orders! Earn dollars fast. Christmas Cards with Name 50 for $1.25 up. Imprinted Book Matches, Stationery. 30 FREE Imprint Samples; several $1 Boxes on Approval. Write JOY GREET 507 N. CARDINAL, DEPT. J-4. ST. LOUIS

RELIEVES HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS PAIN FAST

Here's Why...
Anacin® is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains no one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. Anacin is specially com pounded to give FAST, LONG LASTING relief. Don't wait. Buy Anacin today.

A TICKET FOR THADDEUS

(Continued from Page 44)

"You heard him," the man said to Mr. ssup. "You'll remember that?"

"I heard him," the old man answered. You summer folks up here?"

"Yes," the man replied, "we have a place the lake. My name is Rogers. The car is is year's model."

"Nice little job," said Mr. Jessup. "Too d you smashed it."

"He smashed it," Rogers answered roughly.

"Reckon that's the state police now," the d man answered as the sound of an approaching car reached their ears. "They sure ake time."

Thaddeus watched the car come to a halt. is tongue grew dry in his mouth as two olice officers stepped out. Blue uniforms ith shoulder insignia, brass buttons, black uttees, belts, and guns in holsters. They ere tall, head and shoulders over him; muscle and sinew were packed into their heavy oulders. His eyes wandered to their hands.

"What's happened here?" The senior offier's blue eyes were as hard as the line of his rm jaw.

"This man ran into me with his truck as e rounded the curve. He offered to pay for he damage. He didn't want us to call you."

The officer's eyes traveled coldly over haddeus. "We'll take a look at the cars."

With his aide, he examined the damaged ar, making notes in a book. Thaddeus stood y, wordlessly. The two men were talking reely, easily to the officers. There was no ear in their voices; they were assured, secure, almost comradely. Comradely. That vas it. They belonged. The officers asked hort questions and nodded at the replies. They didn't seem friendly, but it was the discipline of officers not to seem friendly.

"Now, let's take a look at your truck," the lder officer said.

They examined the broken headlight and wisted fender, again making notes. The younger officer made a chalk mark on the oad in front of the truck. Again the man alled Rogers talked volubly.

"The first I knew what was coming was when I heard a shout," he said.

"That was me," Mr. Jessup confirmed. "I saw them heading toward each other and knew there was goin' to be trouble."

"What's your story?" The officer looked at Thaddeus through narrowed eyes.

The question twisted his heart. What could he say? "I was riding along the road. Inside of me was a song I was going to sing to my child. One minute I was happy—the next minute ——" He moistened his dry lips with his tongue.

"Well, what is it?" the officer repeated.

Thaddeus forced himself to speak. "I do not see the car. I hear somebody say something loud. And it happens."

"How fast were you going?"

AGAIN Thaddeus moistened his lips. "I do not know. Not fast. I do not drive fast."

"That's true," declared Mr. Jessup. "I see him go by every day. He drives pretty slow."

The unexpected words fell like balm on the ears of Thaddeus.

"But why didn't you stop when you heard the crash?"

That was another question he couldn't answer in words they could understand. He could say that when he was frightened, he wanted to run; that the only escape from danger was flight. Better to keep quiet than to say that.

"I stop," he said, "I stop after a minute."

"Let's see your license and registration card." It seemed to Thaddeus that there was threat as well as command in the order.

"I have them." He reached eagerly into his pocket. "All my papers are in order. My passport is at home. I will get it for you."

The man in uniform looked sharply at him. "Let's just have your license and registration."

With trembling fingers, Thaddeus pulled out his wallet. Besides his money and the papers for the car, it held two snapshots, one of Kathi and one of Jan. Kathi, his wife. And Jan, his brother. Jan, whom he loved and tried to save. His eyes fell on the black holster in the belt of the officer and he closed them to shut out the sight as he held out the wallet. When he opened them, he saw the officer making notes in his book.

"They are in order? Yes?"

"They're O. K.," the man replied crisply. He took out a pad of forms and wrote something on it. He tore off the first sheet and wrote something on the second, which he also tore off. "I'm giving each of you a ticket," he said to Thaddeus and to Rogers. "You'll appear at the traffic court in the town hall tomorrow evening at eight o'clock." He turned to Thaddeus, speaking slowly, "Do you understand? Eight o'clock tomorrow."

"You're not giving me a ticket?" Rogers demanded in surprise. "He's the one who was at fault. He admits it. He offered to pay."

"I want you both there," the officer replied.

THE curt command had meaning to Thaddeus. Both there, of course. The accuser and accused. That's the way it was done. That was the pattern that preceded the nightmare. Surely Rogers must know the part he would play? The confident informer who would weave the net of guilt around his victim. The officer knew the rules, just as those others in uniform, in belts and holsters and puttees, had known the rules.

"O. K., officer, if that's the way you want it," Rogers declared with ill humor. He turned to Mr. Jessup. "Can I count on you as a witness? You saw the whole thing."

"Sure"—the old man rubbed his grizzled jaw—"if you'll come by and get me."

Thaddeus looked at him. How little it seemed to matter to him that he was going to help to destroy a human being.

"Now, can I go?" Thaddeus said to the officer.

"You can go, but don't forget tomorrow night."

"I do not forget," Thaddeus answered. He mounted the truck, but had to wait a few minutes to still the trembling of his hands before he could drive.

Arrived home, he parked the car in the shed which also served as his workshop. Carefully he lifted off the chest of drawers and placed it next to his workbench. He had promised to return it on Thursday. Now he must have it done before tomorrow night. He must leave nothing undone.

The kitchen of his house was sunny and fragrant with the cleanliness of Kathi's loving hands. There was coffee on the stove. Kathi had left lunch for him. The clock on the shelf was ticking away. He had always liked its sound; it had said words of peace and safety to him. Now each tick formed the word "fear."

He sat down at the table and buried his face in his hands. He was glad Kathi was out working. At four, he would go and get her.

He had wanted her to stop working at once, when they knew she was going to have a child, but she argued that she was strong. The money she earned would buy things for the baby—clothes, a crib, a play pen, all the things she saw in the American homes she worked in. A groan escaped him as he ruffled his thinning hair with his fingers. It was over. Everything was over. Why? It had been so good here. They had felt so safe.

Safety was a mockery and men were fools to believe in it. He had felt safe when he married Kathi fifteen years ago. They had been good, those first few years; without those memories he couldn't have survived what happened later.

Suddenly he wanted to scream. If Kathi were here, she would help him. She would talk to him, softly, gently, and bring him coffee. It had been a long time since it had happened, more than a year. A cup of coffee would help.

He pulled himself to his feet and walked to the stove with the shambling steps of an old man. He waited for the pot to boil, refusing to think, refusing to remember. But he

Truly a Miracle of Mildness!

New, Improved VEL*
now brings you the safest way of all to wash fine fabrics

New Vel bursts into suds in cooler, safer water than even the finest soap flakes . . . and every woman knows the cooler the water, the safer it is! Yes, even delicate washable colors stay lovely up to 10 times as long.

New VEL is mild enough for heirloom laces . . . the softest skin. Even after washing dishes, your hands will prove how unbelievably mild new Vel is.

Stockings stay sheerer looking, lovelier longer — no soap scum . . . no soap fading . . . no alkali.

*Vel is the trade-mark of the Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co.

New VEL is unbelievably Mild!

couldn't blot out the images that passed like a blur before his eyes. Jan, the knock on the door, the men in uniform . . . and what came later.

He took out his wallet and looked at the faces of the two people he loved most in the world. Only one was left to him now. Kathi. Jan was dead.

Jan, younger than he by five years, was a reader, a thinker. When the enemy took over their land, Thaddeus had accepted the new order, the new rules and regulations. But Jan had not. His clever mind and hands had fashioned the texts of revolt and action. He tried to convert Thaddeus, but Thaddeus was not a rebel. He had his home, his work, his Kathi. It was hard to live under the heel of the enemy, but he was not made of the stuff of heroes.

Then Jan came to him late one night to say good-by. "They've discovered our press," he said. "But we prepared for discovery. In three days, if nothing goes wrong, I shall be in France."

"God keep you safe," Thaddeus whispered and Jan replied, "You too, Tadi."

Thaddeus locked the door after him and he and Kathi went to bed. For a while they talked in fearful whispers and then it came, the loud knocking on the door.

"Open up! Police!"

Thaddeus opened the door and saw them, in black uniforms, black puttees, belts that carried guns. Their faces were hard, their eyes stony.

"Where is your brother, Jan Kubaczik?" a voice demanded.

"I do not know," he replied.

"Search the place," the voice ordered and two others in uniform searched, while he and Kathi looked on with terrified eyes. They found nothing; there was nothing to find.

"Get into your clothes," the voice ordered him. "You're going with us."

"No!" Kathi cried. "No! He knows nothing."

"We'll see about that."

Shaken with sobs, Kathi helped him into his clothes. They shoved him out of the room and into a car. Above the roar of the starting motor, he heard Kathi sobbingly calling his name, "Tadi! Tadi!"

They took him to headquarters, and a man who lived on the same street declared on oath that he had seen Jan entering Thaddeus' house that evening.

For two nights, always at night, they questioned Thaddeus.

"Where is he? Speak!"

"I do not know."

They tried to make him remember, and sometimes he had screamed. But they could not make him remember, for he did not know. He thanked God that Jan had not told him his plans in detail. In pain, he might have betrayed him.

THE third night, he spoke. It was safe now. Jan would be in France. He told them of Jan's visit, the few words he had spoken. They did not believe him at first; they tried to make him tell them the names of Jan's comrades. But they seemed convinced at last that he did not know.

"Can I go home now?" he asked.

The man in uniform laughed a sardonic, brutal laugh. "Home? Sure, you're going home. To a fine, comfortable place where you'll find a lot of traitors like yourself."

He had been a young man when they came for him; he was an old man with white hair and frightened eyes when liberation came after three years. Painfully he made his way home, not knowing what he would find.

Kathi did not know him at first. "Tadi," she whispered, and her hands reached out to him. "Tadi, you've come back."

"They did not hurt you?" he asked, holding her close.

"Only to tell me I would never see you again."

"Jan?" he asked. "Has there been word of Jan?"

Her tears fell. "Jan is dead. He died fighting with the maquis in France. He was shot."

"Thank God," he whispered. A man's death, clean, decent, quick, not a slow death by tortured inches.

Later he had said, "We will leave this country, Kathi. We will go to America."

It had taken them two years to manage it. There were letters to write to his relatives in America, papers to fill out. Finally they had all the documents stamped, signed, sealed, safe conduct to the new world.

They landed in New York and their relatives came to meet them, and helped them settle in the country, in the little house where Thaddeus could have his workshop and Kathi could go out working for neighbors.

When all arrangements had been made, Thaddeus had said to his cousin, "Stefan, will you take me to the police to report we are here? To get our papers so we can stay?"

Stefan laughed. "You need no papers in America, Thaddeus. You have nothing to do with the police."

"So?" he had answered, unbelieving, and a knot of fear had untied itself in his stomach.

The bad dreams had started soon after he came back to Kathi from that place and they had followed him across the ocean. He would go to sleep feeling secure and at peace and then they would come. He was there again; they were coming at him; he cringed again from men clothed in uniforms of black or gray or brown. He would scream and then there was Kathi, standing over him, trying to still his trembling.

"Wake up, Tadi. Wake up."

He would sit up in bed, shaken with fear, and slowly it would pass. Kathi would make coffee for him and they would talk for a while.

"We are in America, Tadi. We are safe."

America was the magic that had finally exorcised the nightmares. And then this miracle of peace was crowned by Kathi's news that she was going to have a child.

Now it was gone, the peace, the security, the fulfillment. He looked at the paper the man in uniform had given him. They did it differently here. They didn't knock at your door at night. They gave you a paper. But the rest would be the same, a place with walls where uniformed men were the masters.

He thought Kathi must not know until after it had happened. The first thing to do was to get the car fixed so that she would ask no questions when he came to call for her that afternoon.

He went to the garage in the village and waited while they fixed the headlight and fender. He paid for the job and drove home. Then he went into the workshop and began working on the chest. He must finish it before tomorrow night.

At four, he called for Kathi. She sat beside him, chattering about things that had happened while she was at work, but it was her voice he heard, not the words.

At supper, he forced himself to eat, talk, act as if all were well. He was glad when they turned off the light and went to bed. He lay still and tense, listening to Kathi's quiet breathing, listening, he suddenly realized, for another sound, a loud knocking on the door.

He must have fallen asleep, for the next thing he knew they were coming at him and this time they all wore blue uniforms and their faces were those of the one who had given him the ticket. He screamed and woke to the touch of Kathi's hand.

"Tadi, Tadi," she was saying, "wake up. You are in America, Tadi. You are safe."

A sob of hysterical laughter rose in his throat, but with enormous control he managed to still it.

Kathi made him some coffee. She knelt by his side, murmuring endearments, as he drank it.

"I do not understand," she said. "So long you do not dream and now it comes again. Did something frighten you today?"

"No. No," he denied. "It just came. But it is over now."

HE would not let himself fall into sleep, into darkness again. He got up and dressed at dawn, went into the shed and started working on the chest. A few hours later Kathi came out to him.

"But this is crazy, Tadi," she said to him. "To start work so early. I was frightened when I woke and you were gone."

"I am sorry," he told her. "But I must deliver the chest tonight."

He was grateful for the inspiration which gave him that excuse to leave her when he had to start on his journey to the terror that faced him. He would drive her to her day's work and then he would come back and make his preparations.

"Good-by, Tadi," she called to him as he left her. "You come back for me at four."

"At four," he answered.

Quietly, he let himself into the house. He found a small, battered suitcase and packed some clean underwear, shirts, socks, a comb and brush, a toothbrush and some soap. Perhaps they would let him keep these things. Part of the horror he so vividly remembered were the filth, the vermin, the self-hatred of physical uncleanliness.

The last thing he put in with trembling hands was his razor. There was a man, he remembered, who, expecting to be taken, had hidden a razor blade under the lining of his shoe and he had used it. Others had envied him when he was dragged out of the cell, safe from further onslaughts. Thaddeus did not think he could bring himself to this deliberate action, but it would help to know he had a razor with him. He took a blade out of the package on the shelf and, taking off his shoe, lifted the lining and placed it underneath.

A letter to Kathi was the next thing. He sat down with pencil and paper, forming the words to tell her of his crime, of his arrest, of his love. She must get in touch with his relatives; they would keep her and the child until she was strong enough to work again. She must be brave and take care of herself and the child until he came back to them.

He stopped as these words wrote themselves without his will or intention. Until he came back. That's what he had written.

He stood up and began pacing the room, feeling the touch of the blade against his foot. Then he sat down, took off his shoe and removed the sliver of steel. He went outside the kitchen door and heeled it into the earth. He was coming back. Whatever happened, whatever they did to him, he was coming back someday to Kathi and his child.

He emptied his wallet of the few bills it held and put them with the letter on the pillow under the counterpane where she would find them that night.

He picked up the suitcase and carried it out to the truck. Then he went to work on the chest of drawers. He worked steadily and when he finished it, he placed it, too, in the truck.

At four, he brought Kathi home. As she went about preparing their evening meal, he filled his eyes with her, with things to remember in the days and nights to come. He could swallow little of the food she placed before him.

"You are sick, Tadi," she said, her face soft with concern. "It is better you do not go out tonight. You can deliver the chest tomorrow."

"It must be tonight," he declared. "It is important. I have promised."

"I do not like it," she said. "Never before do you leave me at night."

"You are not afraid to be alone?" he asked her without thinking.

"Afraid? Here?" she replied. The question, so confident, was an answer in itself.

He started the car and remembered the starting of another car, on another night. "Good-by, Kathi," he whispered to himself. "Good-by, my dearest."

He stopped at Mrs. Preston's and left the chest. Then, carefully, he made his way along the darkening road to keep his appointment.

There were several cars in front of the town hall and he parked behind them. He got down, removed his suitcase from the truck and, carrying it, went up the steps of the building. A man directed him to the courtroom. He heard voices as he neared the open door, confident, assured, the sound of men who knew no fear. With thudding heart he walked in. They were all there: Rogers and his friend, handsomely clothed; Mr. Jessup; and three men with familiar faces whom he could not place by name. No, they weren't all there. The one, the important one in uniform, was missing.

It seemed to him that a hush fell as he came forward. He said to one of the men whose faces were familiar, "I am Thaddeus Kubaczik."

The man smiled. "Yes, Mr. Kubaczik," he said. "We're all here now, except Sergeant Reynolds. He should be here any minute."

He motioned to a chair and Thaddeus sank into it, placing his suitcase on the floor beside him. There was the sound of footsteps at the door and he, in blue, with brass buttons, with black puttees, with belt and gun, entered. Thaddeus felt the cold sweat pour over him, and he took out his handkerchief and wiped his brow.

"We can start now," the man who had spoken to Thaddeus said. "Mr. Rogers, will you sit down, please, next to Mr. Kubaczik."

Rogers smiled confidently.

The three men sat down behind a table on a platform.

"Mr. Rogers, Mr. Kubaczik, you are now before the court," the one who seemed to be in command said. He addressed himself to Mr. Rogers. "This is a small town. We have no police department. We depend on the state police to take care of us. The judges in this court are members of the community, appointed to this office—Mr. Howe, Mr. Nelson and myself. We administer the law."

"That's O.K. by me," said Rogers, settling down comfortably in his chair.

"Fine. We'll begin with you. Will you please take the oath. Do you swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?"

"I do."

"Tell us what happened."

Sitting tense in his chair, Thaddeus heard the story again. The man was telling the truth; they were coming around a curve, there was a crash, he, Thaddeus, didn't stop and when he did, he admitted his guilt and offered to pay for the damage. The man spoke easily, fluently. Sometimes in words meaningless to Thaddeus in sound, but not in sense. When he finished, the judge turned.

"Mr. Kubaczik, will you please take the oath. Do you swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?"

"I do," he whispered between dry lips.

"Now tell us your version of the accident."

The word "version" confused him. He hesitated, not daring to ask to have it explained.

"Do you plead guilty to the charges made by Mr. Rogers?" he heard the judge say.

THAT was it. They were asking him to confess. He should have recognized the pattern. He answered without raising his eyes to the speaker.

"Yes. I am guilty. I confess."

Rogers gave a short laugh.

"That being the case," he heard the judge say . . . and then there was an interruption. He, in uniform, who had been sitting at the side of the room, strode forward. Thaddeus could feel the gun pressing against his shoulder, the blue sleeve brushing his cheek. I

(Continued on Page 104)

BOMBAST

Wide interest in Paris fashions is not new. As early as the time of Queen Elizabeth, craftsmen in the French city were setting the pace for European dress designers. Among the innovations they devised was that of stuffing shoulders—sometimes other points—with cotton padding. Such padding took its name from bombace, Old French for "waste cotton." English designers soon copied the padding, and adapted its name as bombast. In that form, it came into wide use. Then some wit noticed the similarity between the rhetorical padding in a political speech and the cotton padding in fashionable gowns of the period. As a result, bombast came to be applied to all inflated talk.

—WEBB B. GARRISON.

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE BRECK SHAMPOOS FOR THREE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDITIONS

There are three different Breck Shampoos for three different hair conditions. One Breck Shampoo is for dry hair. Another Breck Shampoo is for oily hair. A third Breck Shampoo is for normal hair. When you are buying a shampoo, ask for one of the three Breck Shampoos – for dry, oily or normal hair. A Breck Shampoo will leave your hair clean, fragrant and lustrous. Another Breck Preparation is Breck Hairdress. It adds lustre and helps keep the hair in place. It does not leave an oily appearance. Breck Hairdress may be used daily for the care of the hair.

The Three Breck Shampoos are available at Beauty Shops and wherever cosmetics are sold.

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

"I was so proud of my figure until the second baby came"

Before—sagging breasts, flabby flesh, "tired" back following the second baby upset this woman—until a friend suggested a SPENCER.

After—SPENCER Breast and Body Supports (designed especially for her) improved her posture, and so helped relieve fatigue, sag and bulges.

Before your baby—after your baby—and for the rest of your life—SPENCER helps provide the figure health and beauty every woman wants!

As a woman's figure changes over the years, Spencer is able to give her the healthful, lovely posture support her body demands—because her Spencers are individually designed to meet her particular figure needs.

For example, if you're having a baby and your doctor suggests support, (as doctors do in many cases), your Spencers will give you the comfort and protection needed. Your exquisitely-made Spencers are so economical too, because they help restore the normal figure and give long wear after the baby is born.

Whatever your needs, Spencer Individual Designing will satisfy them

If you want an airy mesh fabric—a different fastening—an extra bit of boning—your local Spencer corsetiere and our skilled designers work together to please you. A truly economical way to buy your all-important foundation—because all the benefits of better posture last the life of the garment. Spencer is THE support guaranteed to keep its shape!

ASK YOUR DOCTOR!

Many doctors prescribe Spencer Supports to improve health by improving posture; to aid treatment of back disorders—arthritis and other chronic diseases—displaced abdominal organs—breast problems—maternity—post-operative and other conditions. Don't diagnose yourself, see your doctor about troublesome symptoms.

Write or phone for FREE information

MAIL valuable coupon below for booklet showing how Spencer can help you, personally. Or PHONE your Spencer dealer, (look in yellow pages under "Corsets", white pages under "Spencer Corsetiere" or "Spencer Support Shop"). Never sold in department stores.

Lordosis Backline ☐ Breast Problem ☐ Fatigue Posture ☐

Please send me your FREE booklet.
I have marked my figure problem at left.
(Print name and address)

MRS.
MISS_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY ■ STATE_____

Mail to SPENCER DESIGNERS, 141 Derby Ave., New Haven 7, Conn. 7/51

Want to Make Money? No experience needed for this professional type of business—we train you. Profitable, interesting. Check for information. ☐

Canadian Address: Rock Island, Quebec

individually designed® SPENCER SUPPORTS

(Continued from Page 102)

was coming now, the thing of his nightmares. He braced himself for what was to happen.

"Your honor, Mr. Martin, I wish to present my testimony."

"It doesn't seem necessary, Sergeant Reynolds. Mr. Kubaczik admits he's guilty. What more is there to say?"

"Plenty," he answered, and Thaddeus held his breath as he saw the hand rise and come to rest on the holster of his gun. "This man, Kubaczik, is guilty of not stopping, but he was not responsible for the accident. It was Rogers' car which was not keeping to its side of the road. It was Rogers who was speeding."

"I protest, your honor," Rogers called out. "This man admits his guilt. I have a witness here who heard him offer to pay." He turned to Mr. Jessup, who was sitting in a chair behind him. "You did hear him say that, Mr. Jessup, didn't you?"

"That I did," Thaddeus heard the old man say. "Downright foolish, I call it. The accident frightened him clear out of his wits."

Thaddeus was swept by a confusion of emotions as the holster again brushed his shoulder.

"Your honor," the man in uniform said, "I wish to continue my testimony."

"Proceed."

"We examined the tire marks of the two cars approaching the spot where the accident occurred, and going from it. Rogers' car was well over the center of the road before it hit the truck and when it hit the truck. It was going at a speed of over forty miles an hour around a dangerous curve."

"How do you figure that out? You weren't there to clock it," Rogers demanded angrily.

"I presume you put the brakes on when the crash came?" the officer asked.

"Certainly I did. He didn't. He kept on going."

"That's right," said he in uniform. "It took you over a hundred and fifty feet to come to a stop when you braked. We measured it. That means you were going over forty miles an hour. I don't know if you realize it, but we can tell the speed of a car by the distance it takes to come to a stop after the brakes are put on. Mr. Kubaczik, here," the voice went on, "did not brake the car at once. Nevertheless, he was only a hundred and ten feet away from the spot of the crash when he stopped. I should judge he was going about twenty miles an hour and he was well on his side of the road."

"This is preposterous!" Rogers declared. "You can see by the damage done ——"

"In addition," the voice in uniform continued, "let me say that we have looked up the driving records of both these men. Mr. Rogers has had three convictions for speeding during the past year. There are convictions of any kind for Mr. Kubacz

Thaddeus reached out in a blind mo ment as the officer stepped back. Everyth that was happening was against all rem bered rule and regulation. Mr. Martin speaking, and this time Thaddeus raised head the better to hear and understand.

"Gentlemen," Mr. Martin was say "according to the testimony of Serge Reynolds, you were both guilty of traffic lations: Mr. Rogers for speeding and driv in the center of the road; Mr. Kubaczik not stopping. I fine Mr. Rogers ten doll Mr. Kubaczik, two."

Rogers started to protest, thought be of it, paid his fine and marched out of room. Thaddeus, his heart surging w unbelievable happiness, reached for his c money and then he remembered. He had it all for Kathi. He turned and his eyes those of Mr. Jessup, who was watching with a pleased grin.

"Please, Mr. Jessup, do you have dollars? I leave my money at home."

"Sure." The old man brought ou crumpled dollar bill and counted out the in change. "I was waitin' to ask you to me a lift home."

"With pleasure," said Thaddeus. "Th you," he said to the three men as he han over the money. He wanted to say mor them, but where could he find the word any language to tell them what he wish "Thank you," he repeated.

Picking up his suitcase, he followed Jessup out of the room.

"You figurin' on taking a trip?" the man asked him as he looked down at grip.

"No," said Thaddeus, "I take no n trips. I stay here always."

They walked down the wide steps of town hall together. At the curb, next to car, stood Sergeant Reynolds, the ma uniform, the man in brass buttons and and holster. Thaddeus straightened shoulders and a long sigh, freeing him of and terror and evil dreams, escaped his He walked over to him and touched hin the arm.

"Sergeant Reynolds," he said, and voice was husky with grateful tears uns "I must thank you. I do not know ho thank you."

"That's O.K., Kubaczik," he replied, there was a smile on his face, a boyish s that showed embarrassment at being than "But don't ever run again. There's not to be afraid of."

"No," said Thaddeus tremulously, fi his eyes with the strength and power of man, with his marks of office, of protect "No. There is nothing to be afraid

TELL ME DOCTOR

(Continued from Page 31)

but is not expelled. A missed labor is where the pregnancy goes on to term and then the fetus dies. In both cases there are likely to be some contractions which cease after a time, and nothing happens. A missed abortion may be retained for weeks, or even months."

"I should think the woman herself would realize that something was wrong."

"She might, but sometimes the mother will carry on for a considerable period of time, believing that all is well. I remember a few years ago, a case came to me which had been admitted to a small private hospital, believing she was in labor. There someone in attendance claimed to have counted the rate of the fetal heart—at least he charted it along with the rest of an examination which purported to produce normal findings. When nothing happened after three days this patient discharged her doctor and left the hospital, and it was shortly after that when she came under my attention. Examination showed the uterus to be barely the size of a three months' pregnancy. I had difficulty in making her believe it, but with the aid of X-ray pictures it was done."

"And her baby was dead then?" Mrs. Doe asked.

"It had died sometime during the t month, but so strong was the faculty of a suggestion in this patient that she had ir ined feeling the baby move over a perio six months, while her entire uterus scarcely the size of my fist. Of course was a most unusual incident. Most cas missed abortion present some symptom fever and malaise, due to the absorptio the degenerating products of concep These symptoms are even more likel occur in the event that the accident hap when pregnancy is further advanced."

"How can you tell you are dealing such a case? I should think it would be ha

"Sometimes it is. It may be necessar observe the patient over a consider period in order to make certain that uterus is not growing. The symptoms of and malaise are significant. When it com late pregnancy, absence of heart soun suggestive of death of the fetus. A nega A-Z test is the same, but is not absol diagnostic, since a positive reaction persist for some time after the death o fetus. X ray is the best evidence, for it show certain signs in the bones of the which are unmistakable."

What can you do for such a patient?"

When we are satisfied of the correctness ir diagnosis, the treatment is obvious—ty the uterus before the patient becomes toxic from absorptive products. The danger is from hemorrhage and infec- and this may be considerable. Up to the l month it is much easier to accomplish afterward. An early pregnancy of this is handled something like an incomplete tion. When it comes to one more ad- ced, the proposition becomes much more cult. I'll give you some idea of what we ld do because it will answer the question asked a few minutes ago in regard to g overdue a matter of weeks with no s of labor impending. The two conditions ld be handled in much the same manner the treatment would consist of inducing r. Of course, the first step would be to you in the hospital—that goes without ng."

Naturally."

The next thing would be to try to bring abor without the use of instruments, be- se by so doing the chance of infection ld be lessened. There are a number of gs that might be effectual in accomplish- this, though certain of them might be vned upon because of ill effects upon the s. Naturally, if the fetus were dead, that ction could be forgotten. There are some y powerful medicaments which may be n only in infinitesimal, frequently re- ted doses. We'd make more than one empt by one of these methods, if the first e unsuccessful.

If medical means of induction failed, n we'd have to try something more radical. rely rupturing the sac might do the trick, in the event of its failure, there would be reasing danger of infection with every day t delivery was not consummated. Intro- ing packing into the cervix might start rine contractions in due course of time, then there would be even more danger of ction. A sterile rubber tube the size of 's finger introduced between the sac and uterine wall would be a particularly good nt. Then there are rubber balloons in a es of various sizes devised for this pur- e, and these may be pumped full of sterile er after their introduction."

Doctors seem to think of everything. t suppose all the things you've mentioned ed?"

Well, we'd be up against it, but not mped. A certain vaginal operation has n devised for just such a contingency. We uld resort to this, if necessary."

It does me good to hear you say that. I n't believe there is any emergency in the rld that can stump a modern doctor."

It does me good to hear you say that, but re have been times when I felt pretty nble, and I think any honest doctor would the same thing. Did I ever tell you what mbroise Paré once said when complimented upon a surgical cure? 'I only dressed his wounds, God cured him.' Well, we ought to have some craftsmanship—we have the accumulated knowledge of the ages in our libraries, plus the facilities of modern research. However, no more patting on the back, please. Let's get down to cases. I hope I haven't made a mistake, all these months, in packing you so full of information that you will have misgivings over the significance of every gas pain you might experience, as well as make a nuisance of yourself to your doctor, your nurses and your family."

"No, Doctor, I'm awfully glad I was able to persuade you to talk to me the way you have. Doctor! What are you laughing at?"

"I didn't mean to laugh. It was what you just said."

"What did I say? That I was glad I had been able to persuade—oh, you mean I didn't persuade you? That you were just leading me on?"

"Something like that. You see, I have a theory that if we could remove some of the mystery of childbirth—do away with the old wives' tales and substitute facts—we would succeed in eliminating most of the fear as well, at least in the minds of intelligent women. Having removed the fear, the approaching adventure, entered upon with a tranquil and confident mind, should be infinitely easier and the physical results equally beneficial."

"Why, of course. I'm not a bit afraid, now that I have an idea of what I have to go through. I know I'm going to be watched and supervised and coached every minute of the time. I know my pains are going to be soothed, and when I go to sleep it will be with confidence because I shall know just what is going to happen until I wake."

"You're making a pretty good case of it, Mrs. Doe. Now remember, call my office as soon as you are satisfied that your pains are lasting and not imaginary, and go to the hospital immediately."

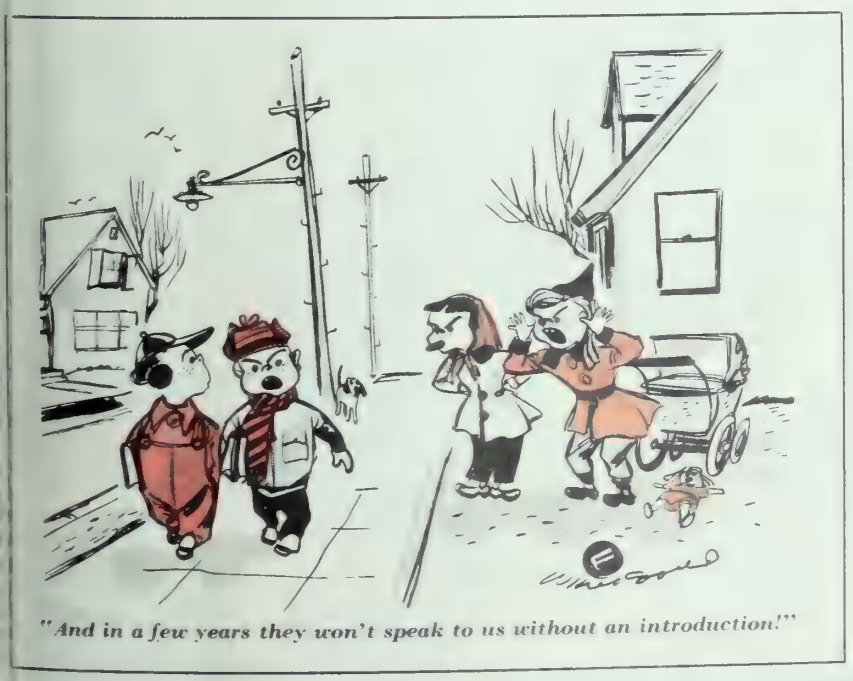
"I will. Are there any special things I should take with me?"

"Just your toilet articles, slippers and dressing gown."

"Nightgowns, Doctor?"

"You can have them brought afterward. They'll prefer you to wear the hospital gowns the first day or two, anyhow."

"How about the baby's things?"



"You can have them brought later too."

"And you want me here next week, if I haven't called you before that?"

"By all means."

"All right, then. Good-by, Doctor. Oh—and do you know one thing, Doctor? I think someone ought to write all those things you've told me into a book, so other women can read about them and become reassured, the way I have."

"Um! I've thought of that. I'll take it under consideration, and sometime in the future—perhaps I will." THE END

"And in a few years they won't speak to us without an introduction!"

You, too, could be more charming, attractive, popular

Know This Secret of Summer Charm:

- Odo-Ro-No is the only deodorant guaranteed to stop perspiration and odor for 24 hours or double your money back.
- No other deodorant is so harmless to fabrics.
- No other deodorant is safer for skin.

Double your money back if you aren't satisfied that new Odo-Ro-No is the best deodorant you've ever used. Just return unused portion to Northam Warren, New York.*

New

ODO·RO·NO

CREAM or SPRAY

GUARANTEED Full 24 Hour Protection

SEND FOR 7 Secrets of Popularity

written under the direction of

Laraine Day

Get this wonderful book now—prepared for you under the direction of lovely Laraine Day, star of screen, radio, and TV. Regular $1.00 edition, it's yours for only 15¢ (to cover postage and handling) . . . see the coupon. It gives dozens of valuable tips that will help fill up your date book, make you happier, more popular—all in one book for the first time! Clip the coupon now!

Find Tips Like These In This Amazing Book:

12 questions to ask yourself about your charm

How to be your real self

How to talk to a date

Some tricks for forgetting self-consciousness

Northam Warren, Box No. 1500, Dept. A, Grand Central Station, New York 17, N. Y.

I enclose 15¢ in coin (to cover postage and handling) and the word "Odo-Ro-No" from the cardboard container of an Odo-Ro-No Spray or Cream package, for which send me the new book—"7 Secrets of Popularity." (Offer good for limited time only.)

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

Midsummer dream-cakes—a breeze with Swans Down Cake Mixes!

Sunday drivers drop in? Dazzle 'em with "peaches 'n cream" cake! (Upper left.) Whisk up a feather-light yellow cake,* tender and high, the way Swans Down "high-ratio" Instant Mix makes it! Heap individual squares with ice cream and fresh peaches!

"Mom says I c'n have a party!" Festive fare—"double feature" cupcakes* with tinted frosting plus gaily-striped pep'mint candies! (Upper right.) Swans Down Mixes make every cake a party for mothers, they're so easy!

"Snow White and Rose Red." Fairest of all, superfine white cake* from the magic-making new "high-ratio" Swans Down Instant Mix! (Center.) Add fluffy white frosting and rosy berries to set off its luxurious loveliness.

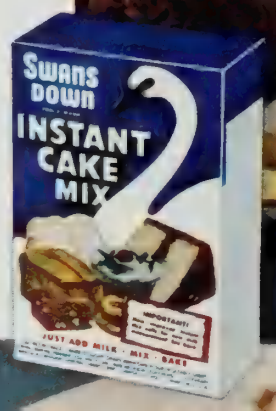
*See easy recipe on box

"Tall, dark and handsome!" That's the kind of layer cake* you get every time from Swans Down Devil's Food Mix! (Left center.) Extra-delicious, that lush, chocolaty flavor! Try it with rich mocha frosting. You'll thank your lucky stars for such a wonder-mix!

"Let's Have a Picnic!" Let's bring along a cake everyone will "oh" and "ah" about!—a spice cake,* good as only Swans Down Instant Cake Mix could make it! (Lower left.) Bake in 9x9x2-inch pan. Final fillip—lemon-tangy butter frosting! Better double this recipe!

"The good ol' summertime." Essence of summer, ice cream and cake! (Lower right.) A treat to remember, fudge nut cake,* made from Swans Down Devil's Food Mix! It really rates raves! Cut man-size squares—everyone loves Swans Down's deep, rich chocolaty flavor!

*See easy recipe on box



Swans Down Cake Mixes

The only mixes that make cakes "Swans Down good"!

INSTANT CAKE MIX— the new "high-ratio" mix for higher, finer cakes!

DEVIL'S FOOD MIX— with that super chocolate richness!

Products of General Foods

"What makes them act like such little demons?" At times Algy's daily struggle with 3 small supercharged dynamos seems practically hopeless.

"[P]t of the problem," in the opinion of ex-pe[rt] Dr. Leslie B. Hohman, "is that there are th[ere] such active children between two and fi[ve] years of age—a handful even with well-di[s]plined children, which these are not!"

Meet the baffled mother of three under-five-year-olds, Annie Lee (Algy) Peterson, of Akron, Ohio.

HELP WANTED!

By Betty Hannah Hoffman

Dear Ladies' Home Journal: I have been watching your How America Lives articles for years to see if you've ever come across another family like ours. So far, I don't believe you have.

I seem to have everything that anyone would want (with the exception of freedom from money worries) and yet I'm tense and cranky and a good example of everything a mother shouldn't be. Instead of enjoying each day and each event, I find myself looking forward to evening, the peace and quiet and freedom to pursue pleasures of my own choosing, although even in the evening there seems to be enough work left over that I can't do with the children around in the daytime that it's bedtime before I can have any fun—fun being reading, knitting, making a scrapbook of seldom-used recipes, or a garden scrapbook, or painting.

The children are two, three and five years old, require constant watching, and get what seems to me an unfair amount of nagging, scolding, spanking and shouting from me—and they shout right back. After a certain length of time I simply go to pieces for a few minutes—then the cycle begins again. Does a girl just simply live through this horrible stage when her children are shouting, destructive, disobedient aborigines and finally become a calm, mature individual, or does she remain a shrew? Is it something temporary or permanent? A psychiatrist might help, but would be too much of a luxury.

I can see now why marriage courses should be urged so strongly. I was prepared for many things in school, but not for the idiosyncrasies of small children. I was never taught how to get along with them or how to sacrifice so much of my time and so many of my desires, willingly, for them. I was not taught how to do everything that must be done for both children and a home without becoming frustrated and cross about the insuperable quantity of work and thought involved.

Of course my children are ideal—healthy, beautiful and smart—and I love and enjoy them, but wish I had time to be a nicer mommy and didn't let them get under my skin. The oldest is a girl; the two others are boys.

Those are some of my burdens. One of my largest worries is that my attitudes will be reflected in the children as they grow.

Sincerely,
MRS. A. J. PETERSON

INTO the JOURNAL mailbox recently came letters from two mothers who do all their own housework and child care. The first letter, quoted above, was a cry for help from an Akron, Ohio, housewife who finds herself "frustrated by the insuperable amount of work and thought involved" in raising a family; the second housewife claims, "My work is always caught up, and my house is always spick-and-span."

This month the JOURNAL brings you the story of the harassed housewife who never has a minute to herself; next month we will visit the young mother who says she has "lots of time to read all the latest books and magazines, see all the good movies, gallivant about in the car, and take an hour's nap every afternoon."

The JOURNAL presents these two families with the hope of striking a sympathetic response in millions of young mothers who are doing their best to play a variety of conflicting roles—wife, mother, housemaid, civic doer, and loving companion to their husbands—and above all, to instill attitudes of confidence and well-being in their children in these bewildering and deeply fearful times.

The first letter came from Mrs. Andrew Peterson, of 227 North Revere Road, Akron, Ohio, mother of three.

Annie Lee (Algy) Peterson, twenty-nine years old, is a rangy brunette with a shy, attractive smile. She is far from being a sharp-tongued shrew; her gentle nature cringes from the constant fighting and bickering which fill her day.

HOW AMERICA LIVES

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MYRON DAVIS

To a question, "Does everything around here have to be broken?" five-year-old Winkie's cheerful answer—"Either broken or spilled."

Child-guidance clinic confirmed Winkie's belligerence as "a bid for attention, jealousy of younger brothers." Kindergarten teacher reports her "eager, co-operative, enthusiastic."

A paper bag becomes prize of battle between Frankie and Larry. "What I want most is for them to be tolerant, normal, well-adjusted little people."

"Do you just 'live through' this destructive, disobedient stage?"

35-year-old Andrew Peterson works for Goodyear Aircraft in a job that calls for a lot of travel—he's home only 3 nights out of 7. "I love my job," he says, "But it's a tough one."

Algy (a childhood nickname derived from her initials, A. L. G., for Annie Lee Guinther) is a daughter of one of Ohio's prominent attorneys, Robert Guinther, whose big Tudor house is only five minutes' drive from the Petersons' home in the attractive Akron suburb of Fairlawn. Algy and her younger sister Kitty both showed creative tendencies at an early age, and these were lovingly encouraged by their parents. (Kitty is now Woman's Program Director for station WAKR, an ABC affiliate in Akron.) Mrs. Guinther, a softly pretty, bright blue-eyed woman with a music degree from Lexington Ladies' College, Missouri, was a church organist for many years and is a leader of Akron's Tuesday Musical Club.

Algy has always loved poetry, music, painting and literature; lessons in tennis, riding and swimming never succeeded in getting her nose away from a book or a paint board for very long. In an autobiography she wrote in high school she remarked about summer camp in Michigan, "I liked to be in the water but was not

In charge of his company's business relationships with all branches of defense. Andy's in Washington a good deal, but job has taken him to Alaska, Key West—plus a B-29 flight over the North Pole.

Hobbies: squash, w on the house or la
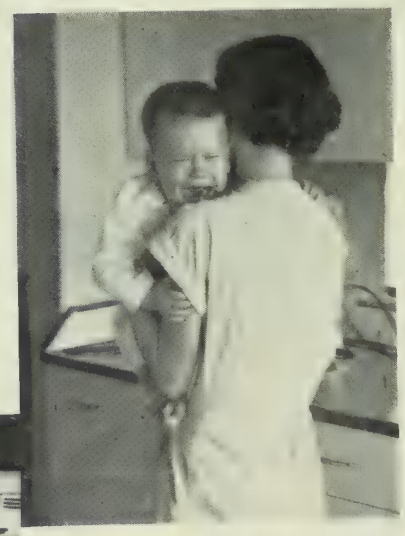
First job (age 12) a

hy ("an inferiority complex conquered me at 11"), soft-poken by nature, Algy's deepest concern is the effect constant bickering may have on children's future attitude.

A favorite toy gets tossed into the fire—result, explosive tears. "At least we don't have silent, withdrawn children. I shout, they shout right back."

The Petersons' modern 6-room, 2-bath house "gives us the space we need," is being finished "bit by bit" in spare time.



Frankie, 3("a wonder with mechanical gadgets"), is currently most destructive of the children, heads for the horizon if let out alone.

very proficient in swimming and had a fear of the diving board. I was somewhat afraid of riding because a camp horse ran away with me." A few pages later she wrote, "I should like better than anything to design stage and screen costumes. If I fail to reach that goal, I should like to establish a smart dress shop in the suburb of an important city. Meanwhile I shall be eternally working and practicing so that whatever I do will be well done."

Algy graduated ninth in her class of over two hundred from West High School, and continued to get honor grades throughout her college years at Wooster College, Ohio, and Syracuse University, where she was sufficiently outstanding in fine arts to be invited back as a member of the faculty. Instead, she went to work for one of Akron's biggest department stores, first doing fashion art work, then copy writing and editing the store's magazine for servicemen. Six years ago she married Andrew Peterson.

Andy works in the sales-and-research department of Goodyear Aircraft in Akron. He is a clean-cut, solidly built, rather earnest person of 35, who first demonstrated his business acumen in running a paper route in Columbus, Ohio, his home town,

"A psychiatrist might help." Dr. Hohman: "I found the problem in no sense abnormal—active children poorly trained."

oute—meant rising 30 A.M. "It was good ie," Andy says now.

Algy feels the children miss a warm, close relationship with their father, also wishes he might take a hand with the discipline. But Andy believes "I'm away so much, bringing up the kids has to be her job."

Wide-windowed house overlooks a country club. Andy may play golf after work or, if it's late, try a few practice shots.

"Happiness is based on service," Andy feels. "When you take on a family you really have a chance to be happy." He lauds Algy's success at managing house-heavy (payments $190 a month) budget.

"I was never attracted to the cocktail-lounge type," Andy says. "Algy's loyal, companionable, has an excellent disposition. Looks may or may not last, but you live with a disposition forever."

A hectic period — but "probably temporary."

at the age of 12. Since it was a morning paper, and the rule of the outfit was that papers had to be on the subscribers' doorsteps by 6 A.M., Andy was forced to rise at 4:30 A.M. His father, who is manager of the engineering division of Jeffrey Manufacturing Co., considered the Sunday papers too heavy for young Andy to lug about, so uncomplainingly sacrificed his only morning of leisure to drive Andy about his route. He also did this on rainy days. Finally, Andy's father relates with a chuckle, his son would frequently appear at his bedside at 4:30 saying, "Dad, it looks like rain today."

On Saturdays, young Andy collected his week's pay at the newspaper office. "This was the day," he relates. "First I would go over to the Y for a swim, then, with a gang, eat a lunch of root beer and wieners at the five-and-ten. I always bought a new ten-cent tie for the following week. (Continued on Page 116)

Firecracker serving dish created in San Diego especially for Breast-O'-Chicken tuna.

LOOK IN – it's loaded with the best o' eatin'... a delicious sandwich spread made o' Breast-O'-Chicken tuna ...and your grocer's good, crisp, garden-fresh vegetables. Breast-O'-Chicken is young, tenda' tuna – light in color, delicate in flavor, solid in texture – premium tuna... yet it costs you no more. Tomorrow – reach for that handsome Breast-O'-Chicken label. Do it and celebrate!

BREAST O' CHICKEN

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

the brand that brings you only the best o' tuna

FREE: for the best o' tuna dishes use your favorite recipe and Breast-O'-Chicken. Write for our FREE recipe book, too. Westgate-Sun Harbor Company, Dept. J 16 3595 Bay Front, San Diego 12, California.

©1951 by Westgate-Sun Harbor Company

Something a lady appreciates!

Another TEXACO DEALER service

"My Children Won't Obey"

Children—and parents—can be taught how to behave. Andy and Algy Peterson find they are not quite the same parent after learning to discipline their children wisely.

By LESLIE B. HOHMAN, M.D.

Professor of Neuropsychiatry, Duke University School of Medicine

ANDY PETERSON, age 35, and his wife, Algy, age 29, should have a most desirable life. They have a modern newly built, well-equipped house in a good neighborhood, and three intelligent, healthy children.

Andy has an excellent, interesting and important job, and Algy, an intelligent, attractive woman, loves her husband and her children. The Petersons can manage everything successfully—job, budgeting, cooking, food, friends, church—except their lives with their children.

Algy Peterson says the children—her daughter, Winkie (age 5), and her two sons, Frankie (age 3½) and Larry (age 2)—get an unfair amount of nagging, scolding and screaming from her. The children scream right back and then Algy goes to pieces. The children are apparently as untamed as young wildcats and almost as destructive. Their dispositions react violently on one another, for each child is out for himself and no one else. From morn to night there are fighting, temper tantrums and scenes precipitated by one or another of the youngsters, usually because someone has snatched another's toy. They have no interest span in anything beyond a few minutes.

Algy is baffled, unhappy and frustrated. She feels she must be wrong in handling the children. She has wanted free, untrammeled children who were not silent and repressed. She has had a fear that if she used any strict discipline, the children would develop "inferiority complexes." So awful are the children that Algy and others have even wondered if the children might be abnormal. With all her good intentions and child-training reading and trying to follow what Algy calls progressive books, her children have developed such bad qualities that nobody seems to like the children—not even the parents. (Of course they love them.) Andy is away from home all day and actually out of town for two or three days a week. He's baffled and puzzled by the children. He worries about them and worries what to do.

A child-guidance clinic was consulted about Winkie. The clinic decided perhaps there was some disharmony between Andy and Algy—but after several interviews with both, the clinic decided that the marriage was good. Then Andy and Algy were right back where they started. Of course they knew that Winkie wanted attention. Everybody was normal, but the trouble went on.

I first saw the children at 8:30 Easter morning. They were all in the living room, with the floor covered with candy Easter eggs, baskets, bunnies and artificial grass. It took only a few minutes of quiet observation to be certain that these were just ordinary, everyday varieties of bright, normal children. They made friends at once, and were easily obedient at that time. Frankie, the 3½-year-older, was quite willing to pick up the Easter eggs from the floor, put them in some miniature egg trays and then in refrigerator for safekeeping.

I had my difficulties in making a g personal contact with either Frankie Larry. Winkie was omnipresent, answe all questions and taking the lead from boys. She was, and is, very talkative, all the talk is fresh and smart-alecky. It easy to observe that all the children v easily smiling and likable.

Breakfast began, but nobody was h gry. The obvious reason was that all young fry had already eaten more t their share of candy Easter eggs b eight o'clock. Throughout the mor until time for departure for church 10:15, there was no silence or quiet or constructive play.

As soon as Winkie, her father ar started for church, Winkie behaved well. She was not smarty in her talk, w to Sunday school without fussing, joined us again after the service wit bad behavior. On the way home, Wi decided we were not to buy sweet roll lunch, but only doughnuts. We fir bought both, but Winkie would h thwarted the sweet-roll buying if she co (Wait for the end of the sweet-roll sto She tried to beg for candy in the store, Andy nipped that in the bud at once.

As soon as we arrived home, tro started. Winkie stole two pieces of ba and had a tantrum when her mother she was to have no more—only her sc bled eggs. She flounced into the living r and said she wouldn't eat lunch. If I not held Algy, she would have gone in a Winkie. As soon as it became apparent nobody was paying any attention, Wi returned to the table, but tried to get b by accusing Frank of having taken or the pieces of bacon. Then she b dawdling over food. Winkie promptly a doughnut, would drink only half of chocolate milk, tried to refuse the eggs, then wanted, of all things, one of the s rolls. I would have refused it, but her fa was getting tense and was quietly, sile but firmly, backing Winkie—she got sweet roll. She ate only part of it and b complaining nastily about the bacon. then began to demand chocolate cand

FINALLY, Algy cleared the table Winkie went into the living room search for candy in the Easter-egg bask (The candy Easter eggs and bunnies in the meantime, been put in a tin bo out of reach.) When no candy was fo everything was thrown on the floor. I a Winkie if she would like to learn to and write. She was eager, but after she done two short sentences, her attention distracted and she was off to somet else. In a few minutes she was again manding candy. When her mother sai she lay on the floor, screamed and kic and said she was going to get her dirty so her mother would have to char before we went out to dinner. (We were

HOW AMERICA LIVES

WILL YOU INVEST $15. THAT WILL SPARE YOUR CHILD SUFFERING?

● A reliable vaporizer is truly an investment in the health and well-being of your child. The thinking parent is prepared for that middle-of-the-night crisis.

No home should be without as fine a vaporizer as you can buy—a DeVilbiss No. 149! Ask your druggist for it by name and number!

The DeVilbiss No. 149 produces more medicated vapor per hour than any vaporizer we have ever seen. Operates all night long and is automatically safe. It's the finest investment in your child's well-being you can make! The DeVilbiss Company, Toledo 1, Ohio, and Windsor, Ontario.

DE VILBISS
VAPORIZERS

THE NAME YOU KNOW BEST IN ATOMIZERS, NEBULIZERS AND VAPORIZERS

aster dinner with Mrs. Peterson's re s.)

At hat point, I suggested that Winkie s to her room for a half hour.

Le e interrupt the story to give simple ne principles of child training:

I an easily be demonstrated that a child holds onto any pattern of h avior that is rewarded.

Fusal to reward a pattern of be- h ior causes that kind of behavior t disappear.

C ldren are happy and exuberantly a ve when they know what the b ndaries of conduct are. They will r pect the boundaries if it is made c r that going out of bounds will r er be rewarded.

T e chief rewards that children's n ure demands besides food and l ythings are attention, affection, a l playing a dramatic part in a g scene," be it good or bad.

C dren will go to almost any lengths these rewards. Winkie had all her r's attention until Frankie arrived, d en she lost even more attention when r came. However, that is only part ex- ion for Winkie's behavior. Plenty of l hildren have an insatiable desire for ion and even resent the other parent e n mother's necessity to take time to housework or see friends.

I must be recognized that children vary y from the beginning of their lives. r want and need and demand more at- n and affection than others. I'm sure ie would have been demanding if ers had not complicated her life. In ss to Andy and Algy, it must be nized that these three children differ many children in that they are ex- ly active and have very strong wills. are in no sense the placid type.

e best way I know of robbing a bad rn of reward is to isolate the child in om with the door closed—hooked if hild won't stay in. If the parent is enough, he need not lose his temper, se he has only to keep his mouth d (I advise parents to try imaginary sive tape to keep them from talking to children), let the child have his um or tearfulness by himself. In that the child does not get attention, and s are empty and hollow if they must ted out alone. Obviously, no affection ing given when the child is alone.

RONGLY advise against corporal pun- ent for several reasons: 1—The child, physically hurt, can whip up much unhappiness or rage than the issue ants; 2—The child, in its anger, is y to defend itself with kicking or vio- talk—"I hate you," "I wish you were "; and then, 3—The parent gets more y, makes a lot of threats he is not y to live up to, and, 4—He finally pun- more severely than he wishes, but then, he parent feels guilty and sorry for child and is likely, in the immediate re, to yield all that he made a stand or, 6—The parent has to prolong his r consciously to prevent himself from ling and giving the child a "reward- scene.

ow let us return to Winkie, who is t to enter her room. Her mother has physical struggle to get her into her n. Fortunately, the floors are polished Winkie's sixty pounds can be dragged e refuses to walk. As soon as Winkie convinced she was going to her room, d-curdling shrieks came forth; the door not kicked down, but it sounded as if ere going to be. I talked to Algy as con- ingly as I knew how, to keep her at- ion off the screaming. At that point y came in, and as soon as he heard the aming, he asked what it was all about. an extraordinarily polite, controlled on, but one could see he was terribly e and emotionally disapproving. With nind he was anxious to try to get the fic problem of these wild children set- tled, but it was only with his mind that he gave consent. He said, "She's climbing out of the window—the screen isn't fastened and I'm afraid she'll catch cold." Winkie was smarter than her father. We found her on the porch with a coat and hood on. Under my insistence, Andy and I went out to fasten the screen, Winkie screaming, "I'll be good, I'll be good." But back into the room went Winkie. On the way back, she told her father her throat was sore and he came back panicky that she might be getting sick. I assured him that ten minutes wouldn't matter and I was willing to examine her throat later. Winkie then settled down to quiet and we heard nothing more until we went to release her. She came out tear-stained and soiled, but friendly, if subdued. I told her to sit in a chair and look at a new book that a friend had brought in. Winkie obeyed and sat quietly while her parents and I talked. After ten minutes of good behavior, I asked her if she would like to have me read the book to her. She came over to the couch and we had fun reading the book, letting her fill in obvious words and then retell me the story.

HER father was at that point convinced. He saw this little girl become friendly and affectionate with me, although she knew it was I who had ordered the isolation. I had ordered isolation to refuse to reward her temper tantrum, and then I gave her the reward of attention and affectionate interest as soon as she had been well behaved.

By this time, we had to ready ourselves for dinner. Winkie promptly obeyed the command to wash her face and hands and bring out her dress. She said she didn't like the dress, but I pointed out that grandma would like to see her in a dress she had bought for Winkie. There were no more scenes, and excellent behavior during dinner. She retold the story of the rabbit with pink wings and brought along the paper on which we had been learning to read and write. (I thought I had discarded the paper.) Several times during dinner, Winkie came up to see me to hold my hand or snuggle up. I repeat this evidence that children do not harbor grudges and resentment, but are able to turn rapidly to happiness and are willing to substitute good behavior to get attention and affection.

We know that Winkie has plenty of ability to use good patterns of behavior, because she got along beautifully at kindergarten—as soon as she learned what the rules were by which you could get legitimate attention and affection.

Now for Frankie, our 3½-year-old lad, chockful of charm and mechanical skill. As soon as the toaster was put on the table, he got out the screw driver, unscrewed the covering plate in the floor, and plugged in the toaster. At lunch, he dawdled over his food and demanded a doughnut before he had eaten his eggs. His father is so indulgent that he gave him the doughnut against Algy's direction. Frankie promised not to eat it until he had finished his other food. He lived up to his promise for a short time and then started on the doughnut.

Incidentally, the Petersons make the same mistake that many parents make. They allow children to fill up on sweets—jelly bread, milk chocolate or cakes—before they start their regular food, and then nag and coax jaded appetites to eat meat and vegetables. Why not use dessert as adults do—as the satisfying end of a meal?

Immediately after lunch, Frankie started after Larry and knocked him down. He was taken to his room screaming. After a few minutes, the screaming stopped. When we went for him later, every dresser drawer was emptied and the drawers were on the floor. He was standing stark naked in the center of the floor. I said quietly, "Put the things back, Frank." He asked for help to get the drawers back. We gave it and left for another ten minutes. We returned then and found all clothes folded in the drawers, but no clothes on. I said, "Put on your clothes." Ten minutes later, we opened the door and Frank was properly dressed.

(Continued on Page 123)

THE ORIGINAL—ALL FINE HAM—ZESTFULLY SEASONED

For 86 years America's favorite spread

Before you choose your Venetians, discover...

Eastern

PRE-FAB* ONE-PIECE BOTTOM RAIL

Makes Your Blinds So Easy . . . So Quick to Clean!

Custom-made PRE-FAB is the ideal venetian blind. Extra flexible, all-metal. Enclosed head and the marvelous one-piece Metal Bottom Rail . . . snap off the tape clamp, lift out the cord, your blind is ready to clean. Choose from many colors, all DuPont Plastic finish. See your Rolla-Head manufacturer today!

Pre-Fab blinds are custom-made with the equipment and products made by EASTERN MACHINE PRODUCTS CO., Baltimore 30, Md.

Take a flavor from 1 to 6

...they're all yours in

KAUKAUNA KLUB Cheese foods

SIX DIFFERENT FLAVORS
- American
- Hickory Smoked
- Onion
- Garlic
- Appetizer
- Port Wine

Always in the refrigerator, always fresh, at your favorite food store.

NEW "SERIES 2" RECIPE BOOK!

Send for Mary Irene Hart's new edition of the famous Kaukauna Klub Recipe Book.

KAUKAUNA DAIRY CO.
280 SOUTH ST., KAUKAUNA, WIS.

The Nation's Cheese Treat from America's Dairyland

WILL YOU INVEST $15. THAT WILL SPARE YOUR CHILD SUFFERING?

● A reliable vaporizer is truly an investment in the health and well-being of your child. The thinking parent is prepared for that middle-of-the-night crisis.

No home should be without as fine a vaporizer as you can buy—a DeVilbiss No. 149! Ask your druggist for it by name and number!

The DeVilbiss No. 149 produces more medicated vapor per hour than any vaporizer we have ever seen. Operates all night long and is automatically safe. It's the finest investment in your child's well-being you can make! The DeVilbiss Company, Toledo 1, Ohio, and Windsor, Ontario.

DE VILBISS
VAPORIZERS

THE NAME YOU KNOW BEST IN ATOMIZERS, NEBULIZERS AND VAPORIZERS

thrifty summer dinners

HOW AMERICA LIVES

By LOUELLA G. SHI

At heart, Algy Peterson is a creative artist. She looks forward t day when she will have the time and money to spend trying out wonderful recipes she's collected in her now bulging scrapboo

"Though my youngsters' tastes aren't educated enough to appreciate the flavors of herbs and special seasonings, they do like their hamburgers fixed up with onion and garlic as I do them for Andy." As any mother knows, it doesn't take much coaxing to get children to eat broiled hamburgers, but good seasoning makes them taste better.

This is the season when you can buy young carrots or, better still, pull them from the garden when they are no bigger around at the top than a nickel. Wash and cook them whole and unscraped in very little water. Butter and season them, and you may change your mind—about carrots, at least.

Applesauce is something special in the simple-dessert department, when it's made with green, tart apples, sweetened, and sprinkled with a becoming coat of cinnamon. "And serve it warm," Algy says, "with thin, crisp, salty oatmeal cookies." If you doubt that sprinkling salt on a cooky before baking is the thing to do, you'll have to try them and taste for yourself. You'll be surprised!

Onion Hamburgers

Baby Carrots

Sliced Tomatoes

Warm Green-Apple Sauce

Salty Oatmeal Cookies

ONION HAMBURGERS

Season the ground beef with salt and pepper. Shape into patties. Put a teaspoon of chopped onion in the center of each patty and shape the meat around the onion. Rub the broiler pan with garlic and broil the hamburgers. The onions still have a little crunch this way, yet still flavor the meat.

SALTY OATMEAL COOKIES

Cream 1 cup shortening with 1 cup sugar. Add 1 egg and beat well. Sift together 1½ cups flour, ½ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon baking powd ½ teaspoon baking soda. Add creamed mixture and flavor teaspoon vanilla. Stir in 3 cups cooking oatmeal and mix wel dough out thin on slightly board or pastry cloth. On a war dough is easier to handle if Cut out with your favorite cool ter, or mark out the dough in s to save time. Sprinkle tops with salt—and I mean lightl aren't seasoning the soup. Bake minutes on greased cooky shee moderately hot oven, 375° F. all there is to it—so easy, so Makes 4–5 dozen, not counti ones eaten hot off the pan you've even had a chance to them.

★ ★ ★

As a change of pace from a and-vegetable kind of dinner, warm night, Algy makes a pot o hearty soup—enough so the cl can have seconds. With this, salad and prune- or nut-bread wiches.

She bakes all her own cookies and quick breads, su muffins, or the prune bread. because she uses her mixer fo tically everything that has stirred—or whipped. It fascina children too. "Since I can't kee out of the kitchen, I might teach them to really help me." not? Kitchen doings are as fasci to little folks as to big ones.

Chipped-Beef-and-Potato S

Fruit Salad

Prune-Bread Sandwiche

CHIPPED-BEEF-AN POTATO SOUP

Peel 4 medium potatoes (a mately 1½ pounds) and cut in cubes. Add 1 teaspoon salt, boiling water and cook, covere til potatoes are just tender. I

When Algy bakes a cake, Larry and Frankie are usually in the gallery.

leat 3 tablespoons butter or ne in a skillet and cook ¼ pped onions in it until they set yellow. Tear ¼ pound beef (you may call it dried your neighborhood) into small Cook the beef in with the until it looks frizzled and curly.
e with the potatoes. Add 2
ilk. ⅛ teaspoon pepper, and about 10 minutes. Don't let Reseason to taste. Some beef is saltier than others and ay not need to add any more rve in deep bowls, and don't a sprinkle of parsley. Serves 6.

PRUNE BREAD

out 20 cooked prunes—enough e 1 cup. Cut into pieces. Dredge ¼ cup flour. Mix 1 cup whole-flour, ¾ cup flour, ¾ teaspoon teaspoons baking powder and sugar together. Beat 1 egg and ne with ½ cup milk, ½ cup rom cooked prunes and 2 tables melted shortening or salad oil.
is into the dry ingredients. Add ured prunes. Pour into a greased an, 8½"x4½"x2½". Bake in a ate oven, 350° F., about 1 hour.
ve from pan and cool. Wrap in aper and it will keep moist and r bread-and-butter sandwiches, with salads or as afternoon s for the children.

★ ★ ★

at better recommendation could have than praise from the chil-Algy makes a meat loaf pracevery week—not only because good budget bet, but because the en are so fond of it, particularly ie, who says, "Mummie, you the best meat loaf." And good it oist and juicy. Bacon and chili do the trick. Mashed-potato s and green beans taste good this. For dessert, fudge ice
—a reward for clean plates.

inkie's Favorite Meat Loaf
Potato Patties
Green Beans
Fudge Ice Cream

INKIE'S FAVORITE MEAT LOAF

ogether 1 pound ground beef, 1 ½ cup chili sauce, 1 teaspoon estershire sauce, 1 teaspoon salt,
¼ teaspoon pepper, 10 saltine crackers, crushed, and 1 large onion, chopped. Grease a bread-loaf pan and pack the meat-loaf mixture into it. Crush 3 more saltines and sprinkle over the top. Lay 2 or 3 strips of bacon over that. Bake 1 hour in moderate oven, 350° F. Serve hot or cold. Serves 4–6.

★ ★ ★

"We aren't great fish fans, but we do like halibut. I get a thick slice, brush it with bacon fat to keep it moist and juicy, and broil it until it has a golden glint. A snip of chives and a squeeze of lemon and it really looks professional and tastes better. There will be peas from the garden this month. A garden is extra work, but it's surely worth it for the fresh flavor, to say nothing of the saving it makes in our grocery bill.

"With the fish and peas we'll have Andy's favorite creamed onion potatoes. He never gets enough of onions. I put them in practically everything. For instance, I cook chopped onions with the potatoes, drain and cream them. I save the onion-potato water for soups." (An idea worth copying.) "I'll often make buttermilk sherbet for dessert when we're going to have fish. Such will be a dinner that we find good for a summer night."

Broiled Halibut
Creamed Onion Potatoes
Peas
[from the garden]
Buttermilk Sherbet

BUTTERMILK SHERBET

Beat 2 eggs until light and thick, adding ½ cup sugar, little by little, as you beat. Add ½ cup light corn sirup, 2 cups buttermilk, ¼ cup lemon juice and 1 teaspoon grated lemon peel. Pour mixture in freezing tray. Set refrigerator indicator to coldest position. Freeze until almost but not quite firm. (Algy usually starts such works in the afternoon while the children are napping.) Last step—scrape the sherbet into a chilled bowl. Break it up with a spoon. Beat quickly with a rotary or electric beater and return to the refrigerator tray and let it freeze firm. Serves 6–8.

THE END

THE ORIGINAL—ALL FINE HAM—ZESTFULLY SEASONED
For 86 years America's favorite spread

Custom-made PRE-FAB is the ideal venetian blind. Extra flexible, all-metal. Enclosed head and the marvelous one-piece Metal Bottom Rail . . . snap off the tape clamp, lift out the cord, your blind is ready to clean. Choose from many colors, all DuPont Plastic finish. See your Rolla-Head manufacturer today!

Pre-Fab blinds are custom-made with the equipment and products made by EASTERN MACHINE PRODUCTS CO., Baltimore 30, Md.

...they're all yours in

KAUKAUNA KLUB Cheese foods

SIX DIFFERENT FLAVORS
- American
- Hickory Smoked
- Onion
- Garlic
- Appetizer
- Port Wine

Always in the refrigerator, always fresh, at your favorite food store.

NEW "SERIES 2" RECIPE BOOK!

Send for Mary Irene Hart's new edition of the famous Kaukauna Klub Recipe Book.

KAUKAUNA DAIRY CO.
280 SOUTH ST., KAUKAUNA, WIS.

The Nation's Cheese Treat from America's Dairyland

NEW PILL NULLO KILLS BODY ODORS AND BAD BREATH!

Absolutely Harmless! Take it like a vitamin!

What a pleasant, relaxed, secure feeling you have when you take Nullo daily. This harmless little chlorophyll tablet not only stops underarm perspiration odor, it controls all body odors from head to foot all day long. Take 1 or 2 Nullo tablets every day and no matter how hot the day, how stuffy the room, what time of the month, you can welcome the closest contact in the sure knowledge that you're as fresh as though you'd stepped right out of a shower.

There's never been anything like Nullo before. This one pill controls all body odors including odors of the breath. Even onions, tobacco, and alcohol are no match for Nullo. Just chew a Nullo tablet and your breath is clean. You can be sure you won't offend over the conference table, in conversation, even in contact as intimate as a kiss.

Try Nullo in the 29c Pocket size today. Money back if not delighted. Take Nullo as directed every day to be sure you don't offend anyone . . . anywhere . . . in any way!

Made by a doctor's formula

Nullo is safe as a lettuce leaf! It contains only an ingredient you eat every day in healthful green vegetables—nature's chlorophyll. But Nullo is concentrated chlorophyll! It really works . . . it's really safe. Nullo is the only advertised chlorophyll tablet made by Dr. F. Howard Westcott's exclusive formula.

The De Pree Company
Holland, Michigan
Established 1906—Manufacturers of Nurse Brand Drugs and Wheatamin Vitamins

30 day supply $1.25.
Economical family size (100 tablets) $2.95.

NEW POCKET SIZE 29¢

nullo® CHLOROPHYLL TABLETS

The original chlorophyll tablet featured in Reader's Digest!

©1951

HELP WANTED!

(Continued from Page 110)

Then off to the movies for a double feature and a vaudeville show. Boy, I really felt like a big operator."

At home, because Andy's mother was not well (she died of cancer when he was 16), Andy was expected to dry the dishes, sweep the porch, help with the dusting and run the flat pieces through the mangle. "Andy must have got his fill of housework then," Algy smiles. "He never does any now."

Andy first met Algy on a blind date while he was living at the Y in Akron and working for Goodyear Aircraft after finishing a five-year mechanical-engineering course at Ohio University. Andy throughout his school years dated "constantly," according to his father. ("At least enough so you never had the car," grins Andy.) Algy, on the other hand, always felt shy and uncertain in the presence of boys. "At the age of eleven an inferiority complex conquered me," she confided in her autobiography. "It was caused by complexion trouble and spectacles. At my age mother was usually able to get her man, but I inherited daddy's tendencies which used to be just the opposite." Algy is here referring to the fact that her mother was one of six beautiful and popular sisters who lived just off the campus of Wentworth Military Academy in Lexington, Missouri. Mr. Guinther first met her there while he was a member of the faculty teaching chemistry and physics to earn enough money to put himself through the University of Chicago Law School.

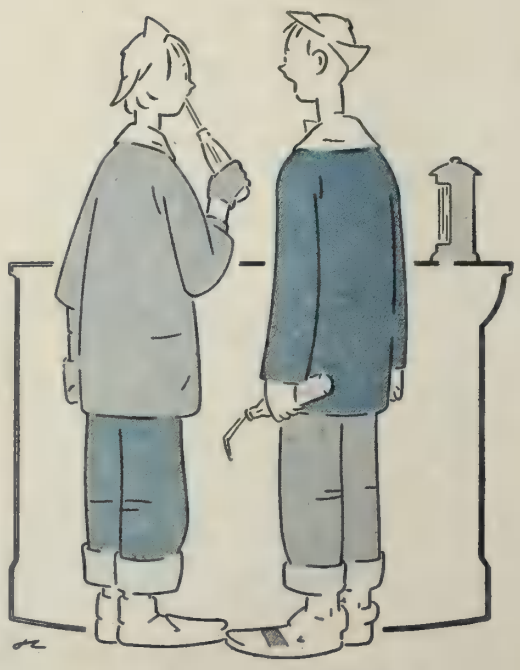
Algy's first date with Andy was an outdoor picnic. They hit it off very well, and Algy invited him and the other couple over to her house for bridge. Before the bridge night arrived, Andy took her to the circus. "One thing I liked so much about Andy was that we did such interesting things. We never sat around night clubs. We'd walk, or play golf, or picnic, or drive up to Cleveland for the twilight symphonies, with dinner afterward. Andy had a solid character, was good to look at, and well liked—still is."

"I was never attracted to the cocktail-lounge type," says Andy. "I'm strictly for the sweater-and-skirt girl. Algy struck me as an extremely loyal, companionable person, with an excellent disposition. Looks may or may not last, but you live with a disposition forever."

A year after they met, Andy and Algy were married on a beautiful September day at her parents' home, with 250 gue miring the bride's bouffant white sati and the great banks of white chry mums the gardener had planted to central aisle and altar on the terrace The newlyweds planned to spend th night together at the Statler, in Cle then continue to the Homestead Springs, Virginia, the next day.

Andy, who was an experienced t for Goodyear Aircraft by this time, w ribly anxious that all the arrang should go smoothly. Several times bef wedding day he checked with the Sta make sure the right room had been re When they finally arrived at the ho nervous groom was only with great di preserving his sang-froid. The clerk t he was sorry, but there was no reser Andy exploded. When the matter length straightened out, Andy reach the register and with a great flourish "A. J. Peterson."

The clerk studied it for a momen looked up. "Is that woman your wif asked, indicating Algy, who in an a embarrassment was standing to one s



Andy was flabbergasted. "Of cou is!" he shouted.

The clerk smiled. "Well, then, wh you sign her name to the register? A ashamed of her?"

"Boy, did that deflate me," said perienced traveler and inexperienced

Back in Akron, the young couple down in a small apartment, and righ the beginning Algy proved herself a lent housekeeper and good cook, alt with three servants in the Guinther h she had never so much as made her o Two evenings every week she spen her laundry in the Guinthers' washi chine with the help of her mother, w as mystified as Algy at the workings contraption, but finally unraveled it teries. The bride insisted upon washi ironing everything herself, refusing the family laundress with more work

After the birth of their first child t year, Mr. Guinther, a handsome and man, a good personal friend of t Wendell Willkie, and past president Ohio State Bar, the Akron Cham Commerce, Board of Education, the Business Bureau and the Portage C Club, took his son-in-law for a wa

"You've been on my mind a lot lately, Marian—I think you're the most attractive girl I've seen in over a week."

out an empty half-acre lot across ie Fairlawn Country Club. "There's rest lot left within city limits," he ndy. "It's yours if you want it."
y and Algy were delighted to accept, gh it was four years and two children fore their house was built. The Peter-e extremely proud of their L-shaped, ry modern home. Andy feels that f their neighbors, all of them in con-nal white Cape Cod houses, in the ) to $35,000 class, tend to look askance Petersons' flat-topped concrete-block ok at it this way," explains Andy, an ly practical person. "For the money

l to spend, which was around $20,000, ld have built a two-bedroom house all finished with plaster and all. Instead up just the bare shell of a house—chen, big living room, big master bed-three other bedrooms and two baths.
there isn't any plaster on the inside set doors or molding or baseboards.
e can finish it ourselves, bit by bit, it spending great chunks of money.
meantime, we have the space we would be hard to find a house better ed for streamlined housekeeping than etersons'. The are all cement radiantly l, which elim-dust-catching ors. In the big quare kitchen ts bright dafyellow walls reen floor and , Algy has about every to the home-— automatic asher, clothes

er, clothes mangle, gar-disposal, new nge and elec-refrigerator.
y may not be mantic type," nd remarked.
loesn't go in for imes and flowanniversaries that sort of
, but just look at kitchen he is wife. That's houghtfulness."
e 22′ living room, with two huge plate-picture windows facing east and west, tarkly bare room with its unplastered painted cerise red and dark green. The has no pictures, no bric-a-brac, no ins or rugs at the present time. The en play all day in this bare cement-d room which boasts one rather di-ated couch, one armchair, a TV set and nograph. During the day, all the other s in the house, including the bathrooms, ept locked.

began locking her children out of s shortly after the arrival of the second, s now in the position of a person who 't dare let the jinni out of the bottle. If ie, their precocious 5-year-old, gets er mother's room, she makes a beeline e perfumes and nail polish, or pulls all oes out of the closet. Frankie, 3, when ed into the bathroom by himself, takes e soiled diapers out of the can and them into the toilet, or flushes down ys. (They recently had a plumber's bill nting to $20 in two weeks.) The chil-are now so wildly unmanageable that cannot cope with both boys in the bath-at once, and bathes them in the laun-ubs in the kitchen.
u might expect a 3-year-old to be fairly ied when sick with the flu and threat-with pneumonia. Not Frankie! While nother's back was turned, he mixed a e of aureomycin with cough medicine,
d in a bottle of sulfa and lapped it up.
two stiff doses of ipecac and two hours of gagging, only his mother's nerves were damaged.

Algy's day starts at 6:30 A.M., when Frankie generally bursts into the room yelling, "Winkie's hurting me!" (Frankie has not yet mastered many consonants—only his parents can guess that "dee dubble" means "steam shovel," for instance.) Algy's back is apt to be full of kinks and aches at this hour, but she hustles out of bed to fix the coffee, first unlocking the padlock on the kitchen gate. Frankie, however, has usually already wriggled through the pass window from living room to kitchen. Sometimes he has the coffee out and is busily mixing the grounds with water "to help mommy," or has assembled the mixer and is messily breaking eggs, or, in attempting to put the milk into the refrigerator, has broken a quart on the floor.

ONE of Algy's first chores is to clean out the fire grate in the living room thoroughly if there has been a fire the night before. Otherwise, the children will spread handfuls of gritty ashes and charred sticks everywhere.

This done, she toilets and dresses the children while her husband gulps down orange juice and coffee and hurries off to work. Dressing chubby 2-year-old Larry generally means chasing him about the house until he finally consents to clothes; often as not, he will strip them off in another ten minutes. Frankie is more cooperative, but Winkie stubbornly remains in her pajamas until after lunch, when it is time for her to go to kindergarten, and even then, she puts up a terrific argument.

Breakfast for the children is generally fruit juice, dry cereal and milk, since none of them likes eggs except Larry. Algy puts the food on the table and attempts to get them to eat it. Winkie is busy with her coloring books, but finally consents to come. Larry runs about the kitchen banging cabinet doors. Algy grabs him and lifts 33 pounds of struggling and kicking child into the play pen. Frankie impishly turns on the clothes washer. Algy runs over, turns off the dial, and gets the youngest's bib. Frankie spins the dial on the clothes drier. His mother turns off the drier and lifts Frankie into the high chair. She goes to get Larry's egg from the stove and Frankie slips down and turns on the gas jets.

This time he gets slapped. Yelling lustily, he dives for the lower cabinets and gets out the soap. Algy puts it back and again lifts him into his high chair. The phone rings and both Frankie and Winkie race to answer it. Loud howls and screams come from the loser. Algy finally gets the phone away from them. While she is talking, Winkie pushes over Frankie. Frankie, howling, climbs up on top of the breakfast table, picks up his glass of milk and deliberately pours it over everything. Then he picks up his mother's lighted cigarette from the ash tray and takes a long puff before Algy can rush over from the phone.

Breakfast finally over (Frankie has eaten next to nothing), Algy shoos the children out, padlocks the gate, and gets busy with the clothes washer, cleaning up the dishes, and mopping up spilled food from the floor. The children, locked out of all the other rooms, move aimlessly about the bare living room. But not for long.

Frankie has a dust mop and is cleaning the floor. Winkie walks up aggressively and

NEXT MONTH

"I read about harassed housewives who work from morning till night and never seem to get caught up—then I know how lucky I am."

ROSE OCCHIALINO has two sons, 8 and 3½, does all her own work, "has lots of time for books, magazines, movies," handles the family budget so thriftily her husband says "a man's never wealthy until he marries."

Meet the Mario Occhialinos, of Poughkeepsie, New York, in

UNHARRIED HOUSEWIFE

By Betty Hannah Hoffman

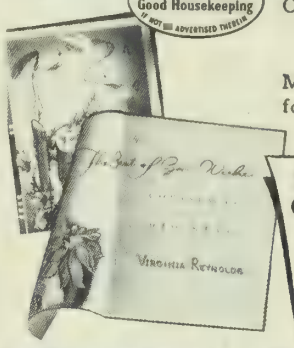
How America Lives in the August LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Make Your Christmas Extra-Merry!

Earn Extra Money

This Easy Way—In Spare Time!

Show ARTISTIC Christmas Cards To Friends!



Make money now till Christmas. It's easy . . . and friendly, too. We supply you with actual samples and proven plan that starts you earning at once. Just show your samples to folks you know. They'll buy fast because ARTISTIC Christmas Cards are beauties and values supreme. Just a few extra hours a week can bring you $50.00, $100.00 and more for Christmas!

NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED!

It's amazing! You offer 50 large, richly EMBOSSED Christmas Cards WITH NAME IMPRINTED, all for only $1.25. Luxurious new 21-Card $1 Christmas Assortments, Popular Comics, Gift Wraps, All-Occasion, Religious, other fast-sellers pay you up to 50¢ profit on each box! You need no experience. Orders mount quickly . . . so do your earnings.

ACT NOW . . . GET SAMPLES TODAY!

Make money for yourself, your club or group. Mail coupon for FREE Imprint Samples and Assortments on approval.

$2500.00 IN CASH PRIZES! Get free details of our fabulous $2500 Prize Contest.

ARTISTIC CARD CO., INC.
314 WAY STREET, ELMIRA, NEW YORK

MAIL COUPON NOW!

ARTISTIC CARD CO., INC.
314 WAY ST., ELMIRA, NEW YORK

Rush FREE Imprint Samples and Assortments on approval. Also $2500 PRIZE CONTEST Entry Blank.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone____ State_____

Want a Sweet refrigerator?

CLEAN WITH SODA!

Soda cleans in half the time...no rubbing, no scrubbing

Arm & Hammer and Cow Brand Baking Soda are pure Bicarbonate of Soda, U.S.P.

● Soda sweetens as it cleans—whisks away all odors with the spots and spills. And without scrubbing! Just sprinkle soda on damp cloth and wipe inner surfaces. Soda quickly emulsifies greasy film . . . removes even sour musty odors that adhere to enamel. And there are no suds, no grit to rinse away. Wash ice trays in soda solution. Arm & Hammer or Cow Brand Baking Soda couldn't be safer and costs less than ½¢ a week. Recommended by 22 leading refrigerator manufacturers!

Write for FREE COOKBOOK. Church & Dwight Co., Inc., 70 Pine Street, New York 5, New York.

MOSQUITOES HATE SKAT

You'll like it!

New Improved formula—pleasant to use... safe for nail polish, fabrics, all plastics

Just smooth on Skat—say good-bye to horrid mosquitoes, biting flies and chiggers. New Skat is a delight to use. Pleasantly fragrant . . . never any stickiness! And don't worry about your nail polish or clothes. New Skat positively will not harm anything but insects. Proved effective in the South Pacific . . . use it freely and garden, fish or sun-bathe IN COMFORT.

NEW SKAT INSECT REPELLENT

BASED ON A FORMULA USED BY THE UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES

Which Hair Problems Do You Have?

Try this new Glamour-Treatment!

Used by professionals for problem hair! A creamy lotion—not sticky or greasy—to make your wave behave! ★ Rich in Lanolin to soften dry hair or stiff, fuzzy permanents. ★ Ends loose dandruff worries. ★ Deodorizes for between-shampoos freshness, fragrance.

RICH IN LANOLIN!

50¢ and $1.00 plus tax

new LUSTRE-CREME Hair Dressing

"I had so much vacation pleasure for so little money!"

—says Miss Genevieve Taylor, Detroit, Mich.

"I enjoyed every minute of my 8-day New Orleans Mardi Gras Conducted Greyhound Tour. This delightful trip included seven nights hotel accommodations, several meals at famous restaurants, wonderful sightseeing, side trips, and all transportation for only $126.43.

"Planned by a Greyhound Tour expert, my trip couldn't have been more smoothly arranged."

GREYHOUND

A LOT MORE TRAVEL FOR A LOT LESS MONEY!

A QUICK and EASY $37.50

FOR SELLING ONLY 50 BOXES CHRISTMAS CARDS

To your friends and fellow-workers, at for $1 and 50 for $1.25 with name on. Other money makers. Selling Plan and Samples on approval. Costs nothing to try.

JEWEL 366 PLANE ST. Dept. 29, Newark, N. J.

tears the mop out of his hands. Their mother watches silently through the pass window. Frankie, screaming in rage, runs over to the coffee table and with one mighty heave sends the whole thing over backward on the concrete floor. Now 2-year-old Larry gets into the melee. His prize puzzle, all carefully put together, was on the coffee table. With injured yells he toddles over and attempts to rescue the pieces under the upturned table.

Algy sighs, gets the key off the top of the refrigerator, unlocks the gate, locking it behind her, and goes into the living room. She and Winkie struggle in a mad tug of war over the mop. Finally she gets it away. "I'm going to kick you!" threatens Winkie, and does. Algy starts to drag her along the floor to her room, but Winkie's kicking 60-pound frame proves too much for her. Winkie promises to be good, and Algy again locks herself in the kitchen. Winkie begs to come in. Algy gets out Winkie's clay, puts it on a clean piece of paper on the kitchen table, and returns to the sink. Frankie yells to come in too. Algy ignores him. When she next looks through the pass window, Frankie has lighted some matches and is burning up his paper books. Algy rushes out, first unlocking the door, and spanks him. Frankie runs to the armchair and pushes it over.

"Whenever I punish Frankie, he takes it out on me by attacking something he knows I cherish," says Algy.

After a few minutes of peace, Frankie goes over to Larry, who is laboriously reassembling his puzzle, and sinks his teeth into him, a fairly frequent occurrence, as the scars on that fat little back testify. Exasperated beyond endurance, Algy picks up Frankie and locks him in his room. When she goes back in ten minutes, suspicious of the silence, he has torn every article out of his bureau drawers, strewn them about the room and wet them.

"This is one of their bad days," sighs Algy. "They're not always as naughty as this."

Although 3-year-old Frankie, the smallest physically of the three children, is by far the most destructive, it is Winkie who currently riles her mother the most. "She never lets me be," complains Algy. "All day long it's talk, talk, talk, clinging to me every minute. And no matter what I want her to do, just simple routine things like washing her face or combing her hair, it takes forever to do it." Algy took Winkie to the local child-guidance clinic, but discovered only what she already knew. Winkie's behavior was a bid for attention. She was jealous of her younger brothers.

"It's hard for a first child when the other children arrive," says Algy. "Especially when they arrive sooner than expected."

In kindergarten, Winkie has made an excellent adjustment, according to her teacher. "At first Winkie refused to take direction. When asked to do something, she would brandish her fist and talk back. Now she is eager, co-operative and enthusiastic. She is popular with the other children and never aggressive. Winkie is a bright and imaginative child and we all enjoy her." Algy shakes her head in wonderment at this glowing description.

Now the morning approaches its full crescendo as the children fight over their toys or vent their separate furies upon the furniture or bang with their fists upon the locked doors leading outdoors until the glass seems certain to shatter in their faces. Algy doggedly proceeds with her work. Monday, wash and ironing. Tuesday, vacuum and dust and do the weekly diapers. Wednesday, "extra jobs" like the range or refrigerator. Thursday, scrub the linoleum, on her hands and knees. Friday, pick up and clean house. Saturday, marketing for the week while Andy works at the office and her mother baby-sits. Sunday the whole family attends the First Congregational Church, where Andy is chairman of the board of trustees. Afterward, they may have dinner at the Guinther home, not the relaxing experience it might be, since while they eat Frankie is generally scouting among the fragile antiques and precious bric-a-brac in the living room.

For lunch, Algy invariably fixes a b soup, crackers and milk, and a pot of for herself. The breakfast scene is repeated. Frankie eats some cracker milk between forays. After lunch, if V is attending kindergarten in the afte Algy has a few blessed hours of peace the boys sleep. She uses this time to s and change from slacks into a dress, to the beds, and put on fresh lipstic powder.

When Winkie is returned by a nei after school, bursting with renewed after a few hours of restriction, the zer of the day commences. In the summe the boys can be put out in a small f area with their sandbox. However, Fra constant attacks upon Larry, announc loud squawks from the latter, keep Algy ping. Frankie, who was kept in a pla until he was 2, despite his protests, has been allowed outdoors without supervi Once free, he streaks for the farthest ho In the wintertime, or in muddy weathe children are practically never outdoors. no outdoor girl herself, gives a varie reasons—their outdoor clothes aren't w proof, they are too much trouble to p their half-acre lot is rather low and we Andy doesn't like the yard to get messe

About 4 o'clock, Winkie turns o television and sits straddling a chair in of it, her eyes six inches from the s biting her nails. Frankie teases to he favorite record, so the phonograph i corner gets turned on too. He stands chair with his head cocked directly ov machine, listening and sucking his t intently. Algy locks herself in the kitch start supper with the radio tuned in c favorite program. Larry stands unh and bewildered-looking in the midst terrific din, his little face drawn with ness.

Neither Andy nor Algy likes to se house strewn with toys, so they are locked in the master bedroom and brings out a few at a time. Larry plays happily with a wooden puzzle; Winki paint for hours. Frankie, however, be terribly bored. "He's a wonder wit chanical gadgets," says Algy, who d ered to her surprise the other day th could start the car. "But if I get some out especially for him, the other two ge the act and take it away."

Frankie settles the matter by cra through the pass window and lying c counter while his mother attempts to fi per around his prone body.

"Sometimes I just sit down and b admits Algy. "That seems to help tle. . . . At least we don't have silent, drawn children," she adds. "Even little stands up for his rights."

"Algy has so much to do that she l the strength left to cope properly with little crisis," says her mother, who is a visitor at the house and does her best t Algy's load by baby-sitting, running er and occasionally taking Winkie home night.

"The whole business of discipline hausting," believes Algy, "because it down to jumping up and down at dropping your work a hundred times and screaming 'Stop!' until you're h and breathless."

She feels that her father did a perfe of discipline. "He had such patience never raised his voice. But talking d help with my kids—you have to scre know I spank them too much, but what do? I know I'm inconsistent about r like one child taking something away another. But I simply can't get my done and be supervising them every mi

Algy is still a first-rate housekeeper, sparkling range and shelves and floors onstrate. The children's clothes are im late, their faces and hands as clean as s keep them. She is an excellent organiz would be, if it weren't for the interru "If we're having some people in for di says Andy, "three hours before the everything is half done and the place a But somehow, by the time they arrive, neat and tidy, including Algy, and a ner ready."

feels that Andy should take a hand lining. She also feels that the chiliss a warm, close relationship with her because he is away so much, and he never volunteers to help her with ike bathing or dressing the children, ng to them.
', who is in charge of Goodyear Airusiness relationships with all branches nse in Washington (except lighter-r activity), travels to the nation's every week and is home only three out of seven. Occasionally he is away veek at a time. While on a trip to in 1948 to see Goodyear Aircraft prod-action, he took the opportunity to fly ie North Pole in a B-29. He spent ays as a guest of the Navy on the new submarines off Key West, and cruised he southern coast of California in the t carrier Valley Forge. A trip to Pearl is now in the offing. Andy's high-e job (he frequently has thirty to projects all going at the same time) excitement, variety, and ample opporfor him to use his talents for getting done efficiently and in a hurry.
n Andy is in Akron, he likes to stop he Y for a game of squash after leavoffice. Once home, he goes directly to aster bedroom, locks the door and here reading the paper until dinner is table. After dinner, he busies himself working on the house or doing office work while Algy, having cleaned up tchen, gets the children into pajamas, to them, and finally collapses in front television.
ly admits freely that he's not much vith the children. "When I get home ht, I'm pretty fagged out. I love my ut it's a tough one. As far as discipline
I tried to interfere in the beginning, but always said, 'No, that's not the way to according to the books.' Well, I figure ad the books and ought to know what talking about. It isn't fair to the kids to two different methods of discipline.
way so much that bringing up the kids be her job." He pauses and surveys the room, strewn with papers and broken flotsam of the day's small hurricanes.
, could those kids be any worse?"
dy is very proud of his wife's creative ies and feels it's a shame she has so lit-me for the things she wants to do. "I telling her to get a baby-sitter during
ay. She says she'd rather stay home."
nat Algy really means is that she would o stay home with the house free of chil-
She no longer wants to be a career girl, e once did, but still has creative desires n are largely unsatisfied. In the past few she has given up her art classes at the n Art Institute and the art class she nt at the Y. Her poems and stories in the n Junior League magazine were very lar, but she has dropped out of League too.
st summer she and Andy spent his van at home, farming the children out at grandparents'. "It was heaven," Algy recalls. "Wonderful to have the doors unlocked and not worry about what the children were up to." They ate only breakfast at home, slept late, saw all their friends, and according to both of them were far more relaxed than they would have been in some hotel or cottage somewhere.

Both Andy and Algy frequently worry about money. The house cost them $23,000, and they are paying off an $18,500 mortgage in ten years, before the children's expenses become heavy. Andy earns between $5000 and $7000 a year (he did not care to be more specific) and spends $2280 a year ($190 a month) on mortgage payments. This means their budget is definitely house-heavy. House taxes are $150 a year, heating another $240. The Petersons contribute $100 to the church, spend another $170 a year on club dues, and $600 for insurance. When all their fixed costs are met, the amounts left for clothing, food and recreation are comparatively small.

Andy thinks Algy does a magnificent job of handling money. For the whole family, she spends no more than $150 a year for clothes (Mrs. Guinther helps out considerably with the children's things). She feeds the five of them on $15 a week, not including milk. Her weekly meat bills seldom run over $3, and consist mainly of wieners and hamburger. Of course it helps the food budget to have Andy away four nights a week. "Once in a while, I do yearn for a steak," Algy confesses. "I don't believe I've bought one in two years." She rarely buys roasts, or much fresh fruit.

For recreation, the Petersons spend about $6 a month, which is the cost of a Saturday-night baby-sitter while they play cards with friends. Several times a year they attend the dinner dances at the City Club, where Andy is a member. When Algy has the car, she sometimes takes the children for a drive in the afternoon, but does no visiting. "Three of them are too much for me to cope with," she says, "and on week ends Andy is always too busy with the house or lawn for any family outings."

Algy feels that this hectic period she is living through is only temporary, and undoubtedly things will get far easier for her when the children are all in school (two and a half years from now). There are moments, though, when she is overwhelmed with a sense of guilt and inadequacy. She is aware, for instance, that her resentment toward the children breeds resentment in them.

"Look what you made me do!" she yells at Winkie.

"I didn't make you do anything!" Winkie yells back.

"You made me so nervous I spilled the Coke!" retorts Algy. "Now, get out of the kitchen!"

Winkie cries, and snatches something from Frankie, who attacks the furniture or Larry. The cycle begins again.

"Of course my children are ideal—healthy, beautiful and smart," Algy concluded her letter to the JOURNAL. "I love and enjoy them, but I wish I had time to be a nicer mommy and didn't let them get under my skin. . . . One of my largest worries is that my attitudes will be reflected in the children as they grow." THE END

WHAT WE BELIEVE IN

THE PETERSONS, who are stanch pillars of the Congregational Church, say, "We go to church every Sunday. We don't go as a duty. We like to go."

As Andy sees it, "Looking at it practically, it is simply good business practice to try to apply the Golden Rule to everyday living."

"Between fifteen and eighteen," Algy admits, "I went through a stage when I was practically an atheist. Now it seems to me wonderful the way God forgives our daily sins and is still willing to take us back in the fold."

"She's more religious than I am," Andy comments. "I don't read the Bible or pray a lot. I don't feel the need for a conscious prayer every day. But I have an unconscious, continuing prayer about what I want to do or to be. I think I believe in the creed and I guess I envision God as a real Father."

The Petersons agree, "There must be a guiding hand that moves the universe," and that, "if you believe in basic principles, you must believe there is a God. Such a faith guarantees immortality. We try to live by the general philosophy of 'Do the best you can and you are in.'"

ACCENT YOUR EYES—
YOUR MOST IMPORTANT FEATURE
WITH Maybelline
PREFERRED BY SMART WOMEN THE WORLD OVER EYE SHADOW • EYEBROW PENCIL • MASCARA

New . . . Cream Deodorant
Keeps Underarms
Dry and Odorless

■ Watch those intimate curves beneath your arms if you want to avoid perspiration embarrassment and save your clothes from stains. Used daily as directed, Arrid gives best results of any deodorant tested. Here's why more men and women use Arrid than any other deodorant in the world.

1. Prevents appearance of perspiration—keeps underarms dry.
2. Safe, saves clothes from stains. Does not rot dresses or men's shirts.
3. Removes odor from perspiration on contact. Keeps you shower-bath fresh.
4. Mild for skin. Antiseptic.
5. Today's Arrid with Creamogen stays smooth and creamy.

Don't be half-safe. Use Arrid to be sure. Buy Arrid today.

ARRID
America's Largest-Selling Deodorant

What a Helper you have in handy Velveeta!

Want something cool 'n' easy yet substantial? Toasted Velveeta-Tuna sandwiches are just the thing

How many times a week does somebody at your house want a snack? Just that many times golden Velveeta can help you out—with a good-eating "quickie" that gives 'em important food values from milk!

And Velveeta helps you with meals, too—gives you grand cheese sauce and hot sandwiches so easily. Pictured above are triangles of toast filled with tuna fish salad and topped with delicious Velveeta. A few seconds under low broiler heat melts the Velveeta beautifully for a tempting hot-day supper.

Get the 2-lb. Velveeta loaf so you'll have this finest of cheese foods on hand for snacks and hot dishes, too.

GOOD FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY...

- VELVEETA IS DIGESTIBLE AS MILK ITSELF!
- RICH IN FOOD VALUES FROM MILK THAT THE WHOLE FAMILY NEEDS.
- PROTECTED! From fresh milk to sealed package this pasteurized process cheese food is protected every step of the way by strict Kraft Quality Control.

VELVEETA IS THE QUALITY CHEESE FOOD...MADE ONLY BY KRAFT

WHEN COMP'NY COMES

(Continued from Page 46)

you know. Fold in the grapefruit sections. Chill until firm. Serve with fresh raspberries sprinkled over the top. Garnish with a sprig of fresh mint.

Plenty of time. Give yourself time. No great hurry, is there? A little leisure in getting a meal is worth as much as basil on the tomatoes. Look around and don't be scared. I never was scared by any receipt ever written. And don't you ever be either.

Now here is a very simple and a good stout dish. If your guests have had a longish drive and the folks a fairly strenuous day, they'll sniff and speak well of mom's cooking. And I'll bet you get plenty of repeat orders—encores, you know.

PINEAPPLE HAM PATTIES

If you happen to have baked a ham and have some left, you can use up the pieces and remnants. If not, grind or chop, not too fine, enough cooked or canned ham to make 4 cups. Use some of the fat for flavor. Add 1 slightly beaten egg, a little pepper and 1 teaspoon prepared mustard. Mix well. Taste the mixture: you might like to add a little salt if the ham is not salty. Shape into 8 round flat patties. With a sharp knife, split 8 slices pineapple (1 can) into 16 thin slices. Place a slice of pineapple either side of each patty and press them together carefully and not as if you were making concrete blocks. Bake the patties in a large shallow baking pan in a 350° F. oven for 1 hour, basting occasionally with the juice that accumulates in the pan. If it seems skimpy, go to town with some melted ham fat. Basting is as necessary to baked meats as basting a seam for the girl who never sewed one before.

Parents look outside the home—to the schools, for instance—for what belongs within the home. They want other people to do their work for them. They want their children to have character without themselves having character. They want their young people to receive in college what they should have had from their parents before they were ten years old: good habits of discipline, integrity, dependability—and almost everything else in the list of elementary values. There are too many parents who want to do anything and everything with their lives except use part of them to bring up their children. They serve all the right causes, help all the useful organizations, go around doing good from morning till night—to everyone but their own children. Then, what they don't do for their children they expect the schoolteacher to do, or the Scout leader, or the counselor at the summer camp—or, when it gets really bad, the psychiatrist.

—REV. A. POWELL DAVIES, D.D.

Once upon a time. Some noble, generous Italian, a grower of God-given genius, grew in his garden a weird, snub-nosed vegetable which he called zucchini. (I'd pronounce it for you, but I'm a poor speller and a worse hand at writing down a pronunciation.) Suffice it to say, as the lady novelists used to put it, that it doesn't matter; you can go to the market, point to the vegetable, which is now well known and much admired, and get yourself some of the cucumber-shaped little fellows and do any number of wonderful things with them. (And be grateful to the forgotten Italian who brought you the delicate fruit of his labor.) One way to take charge of them is this:

BUTTERED ZUCCHINI

Cut off the tops of 6 small zucchini. Wash them and cut them into ¼" slices. Place in a saucepan. Add 2 cups boiling water and 1 teaspoon salt. Cook, covered, 10 minutes or until the zucchini is tender and looks transparent—or nearly so. Don't have it too soft. It's a sensitive little number, and you may come out with a purée! Drain well. Melt ⅓ cup butter in a small pan; add 2 cloves garlic, crushed, and sauté slowly 5 minutes. Take out the garlic. Mix the flavored garlic butter with the zucchini. Use a fork and a light touch. Don't break it. Add pepper and a little more salt.

Salad? But of course. Everybody serves salads nowadays, and there are whole-meal salads that are so delicious that, with crusty rolls and cheese, they make a whole supper that company and even the small fry go for. Preceded by a fine hot soup and ing with a dessert of one's special ch And there are salads and salads to l the spell between the big business of a and the dessert. In case the main cours little on the light side, have a big h salad and plenty of rolls. The choice o salad often makes the perfect meal. So l one suggestion among hundreds for a that turned out to be an occasion:

TOMATO-AVOCADO SALAD

Peel 6 large ripe tomatoes. Remov seedy portions and cut into ¾" pieces. should be about 6 cups, and, if there a don't throw the whole thing out—get an tomato. Simple as that. Bet you though yourself. Add 2 onions, sliced thin, and diced green pepper. Season with salt pepper to taste and about ¾ cup French dressing. Mix well and let marin the refrigerator several hours. Taste fo soning. Arrange on lettuce, garnish wit ter cress and slices of avocado. And skimp on the avocado. Don't.

A lot of talk. You will talk of this that, but I must add a word or two what is really an elegant dessert. If guests open their and do a little ga they ought to b that this desser made yesterday, very special re The family don't every day, not ev ery Sunday. Bu special days, thi dessert not to sp family with, jus prise them—onc while. Things wo better that way—see.

CHOCOLAT POT DE CRÈ

In the top of a boiler over hot melt ½ pound bittersweet or sweet chocolate cup hot water. the chocolate is add gradually heavy cream an well. Heat a fe utes while you se 5 eggs. Beat th until thick and stir into the chocolat ture. Cook until the mixture thicken move from the hot water. Beat t whites until they just barely hold a not so stiff as for pie meringue. Fold whites into the chocolate mixture, re hot water and stir until the mixture ens—it takes only a little doing. Remov the heat and add 2 tablespoons butter spoon vanilla and a pinch of salt. M and pour into ⅓-cup-size pot de crèm or glass pudding dishes. Chill in the erator several hours or overnight u and cold.

A few last words. When July c find myself rereading a book abou Revere, my favorite Revolutionary They've tried to debunk George W ton and the Founding Fathers have take it on the button, and now I he some people say that Paul didn't have and never was in Lexington in his life the old North Church—well, that was d up by Longfellow. I don't believe it ride with Paul. I see the lanterns ——

One if by land and two if by sea.

Yes, sir, I'm there, melting bulle I love to read:

Listen, my children, and you shal
Of the midnight ride of Paul Rever

By the way, you haven't got on silver teapots, have you?

TH

"The recipe for my French Dressing? My dear, it's made by Kraft!"

"I JUST NEVER MAKE MY OWN ANY MORE, NOW THAT I'VE FOUND KRAFT'S FRENCH DRESSINGS. BOTH KINDS, KRAFT FRENCH AND MIRACLE FRENCH, ARE SEASONED PERFECTLY. AND THE SEASONING'S EXACTLY THE SAME EVERY TIME, WHICH IS SOMETHING I NEVER COULD MANAGE! THEY'RE WONDERFUL TIME-SAVERS, TOO!"

Tossed Salad DeLuxe

Head lettuce
Bibb lettuce
Tomato wedges
Scored cucumber slices
Radish slices
French endive
Watercress
Kraft or Miracle French Dressing

Break the head lettuce into pieces and place in a salad bowl with the Bibb lettuce separated into leaves, and the tomato wedges, cucumber and radish slices, and the French endive broken into pieces. Garnish with watercress and toss with Kraft or Miracle French Dressing.

America's Favorites!

Far and away more popular than any other French Dressing . . . used by more people, even, than all of those who make their own . . . that's the success story of Kraft's French Dressings.

Don't you think this story indicates that you would like these dressings, too? There really must be something rather special about Kraft French and Miracle French or they wouldn't out-sell all other brands combined!

Deftly seasoned with onion and garlic

Miracle French has a "Parisian accent" that gourmets praise. If you like onion and garlic in French Dressing—a deft touch, just the right touch—you'll share the enthusiasm for Miracle French Dressing.

Creamy-thick, smooth yet zippy flavor

Kraft French is the most widely popular French Dressing ever offered for sale! A creamy-thick dressing that the whole family loves, famous Kraft French is mild enough for children, zippy enough to please grown-ups.

For baby-soft skin...

use baby-safe JOHNSON'S COTTON TIPS

Only Johnson's Cotton Tips give you all these advantages!

- Baby-soft—made of finest, purest absorbent cotton.
- Baby-safe—sterilized right in the box—guaranteed by the famous Johnson and Johnson quality-control method.
- Cotton firmly anchored—spun directly on the sticks. Stays firm, doesn't twist in use.
- Double tips—both ends of stick are cotton-tipped for extra convenience and economy.
- Handy drawer box—easy to open. Fits on narrow shelf. Protects cotton tips till the last one is used.
- The Johnson & Johnson trade-mark—your guarantee of unvarying quality and dependability from America's largest, most trusted maker of baby products.

Don't just ask for cotton tips...ASK FOR...

JOHNSON'S COTTON TIPS

29¢ and 49¢ sizes

Johnson & Johnson

Youngsters who are indulged in eating whims, or whose diet has been neglected, often have to pay the price in anemia.

Anemia in Children—More Common Than We Think

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

"ANEMIC? My Billy? Why, doctor, how can that be possible? Just look at his color! I admit he isn't as peppy as he used to be, but I certainly wouldn't call him listless. Besides, I thought older people got anemia, not children."

This mother expresses several misconceptions that are generally held, and that should be cleared up. Children do get anemia. In fact, I believe it is more prevalent than we have realized. Skin color is not a reliable indication. The child who is pale is not necessarily anemic, and some children who look perfectly healthy may be anemia victims. Finally, while the end result of anemia is listlessness and languor, in the early stages these symptoms may not be marked.

It is not hard to understand why the majority of anemia cases in children go undetected in the early stages, while the disease is easy to cure. But it is a pity that this is so. Few need contract it at all. And most of those who do can be made well quickly and easily if parents are alert to the symptoms, and call the doctor in at the beginning.

As you probably know, anemia is a condition in which the number of red corpuscles in the blood is below normal, or the amount of hemoglobin in the red cells is too small. In some severe anemias, both the number of red cells and the amount of hemoglobin are below normal. This is called primary anemia.

Until recently, pernicious anemia, a deadly form of the disease occurring in adults, was often fatal. Now we can control it by liver extract, folic acid and vitamin B_{12}, and these same materials are used to combat the serious anemias of infancy and childhood. In rare instances, surgery of the spleen, which is one of the blood-forming organs, may help to overcome the anemia. In a few cases, however, the outlook still remains unfavorable.

But the condition of the blood may also be a symptom of some other disorder or deficiency in the body, and this is called secondary anemia. Fortunately, most children who are anemic have this secondary kind. If caught early, secondary anemia can usually be corrected quite easily by diet and medication. The earlier it is detected and treated, the more successful the treatment is likely to be.

What are the symptoms you should look for in your youngster? Facial pallor does not always betoken anemia. Nevertheless, the child who is continually pale should be examined to find out whether anemia is present. Lack of normal color in the lips and fingernails may be significant too. In anemia, moreover, the tongue and membrane lining of the mouth are likely to have a grayish cast instead of the normal pink tones, and the insides of the eyelids are pale. Frequent and chronic fatigue is another sign that should make mothers think of anemia.

DOCTOR BUNDESEN'S booklets, used by many thousands of enthusiastic mothers, cover all phases of baby care. They are:

BEFORE THE BABY COMES (prenatal months), No. 2383, 50c.

First series of booklets, covering first eight months, 50c.

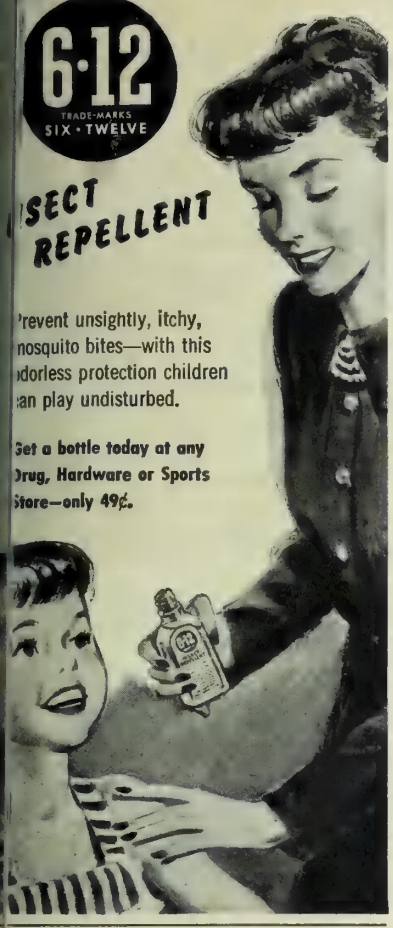
Second series of booklets, covering nine months to two years, 50c.

A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER (breast-feeding helps), No. 1346, 6c.

OUR BABIES (complete book and invaluable supplement to the monthly booklets), No. 1345, 50c.

Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Protect your child



AGAINST MOSQUITOES

USE

6-12

TRADE-MARKS SIX · TWELVE

SECT REPELLENT

Prevent unsightly, itchy, mosquito bites—with this odorless protection children can play undisturbed.

Get a bottle today at any Drug, Hardware or Sports Store—only 49¢.

Here's A Merry Way To MAKE BIG MONEY!

Sell MIDWEST Christmas Cards

Show friends Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards, low as 50 for $1.25. 21-Card $1 Christmas Assortment sells fast; your profit up to 50c. Also Exclusive Secret Pal. Stationery, $1 Gifts, Gold-Stamped Playing Cards, Children's Books, others. Plan for organizations. Party Plan. Send for FREE Imprint Samples, Assortments on Approval.

Cards 1¢ WITH NAME

MIDWEST CARD CO., Dept. L-5, 1113 Washington Ave., St. Louis 1, Mo.

Mom! Grandma! Everyone... Everywhere!

ALWAYS A BED FOR BABY . . .

when you have a "Carry-Crib"

T.M. REG. PAT. PENDING

by Bunny Bear

COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE

complete with mattress

Blessed Event! A lightweight crib that you can take anywhere . . . use 365 days a year. All plastic — even the screening, the comfortable mattress. Cleans with damp cloth. Frame is tubular steel. Zipper at top for easy opening. Two sizes, 18" x 36", or 23" x 45". Green or Blue. Get the original "Carry-Crib".

FREE booklet. 20 pages of nursery usefuls for baby's care. Write Dept. 83

Sole Makers: Bunny Bear, INC. EVERETT 49, MASS.

Manufacturers of the "Car Baby" Convertible crib mattress with the Bonded Guarantee.

These are fairly early signs of the disease. As anemia becomes more serious, the youngster may suffer from shortness of breath, so that even a slight exertion, such as walking upstairs, leaves him breathing in short, hard gasps. Other symptoms are heart palpitations or flutter. This is hard for mothers to detect, but the doctor, with his stethoscope and his practiced finger on the pulse, will notice it immediately. Sometimes there is an elevated temperature too.

If your youngster has the above symptoms, or any one of them, do take him to the doctor at once for a complete examination. When a diagnosis of anemia has been established, the next step is to find out what has caused it. The most obvious cause is loss of blood, either as a result of an accident or from some other cause, such as frequent nosebleeds. In teen-age girls, excessive menstruation may result in a reduced volume of blood, and hence in anemia. Small babies sometimes suffer from anemia because the cord is cut too soon after birth.

In healthy youngsters, losses such as the foregoing are usually restored quickly by activity of the blood-forming organs. For in the healthy body, red cells are manufactured as needed in the marrow of the large bones. But when the body is not getting enough of the blood-forming elements, the red-cell factories in the bones cannot make up the loss. The indication then is for a plentiful supply of foods rich in iron and protein—the elements needed to make red cells. Proteins are found in meat, eggs, milk, cheese, and to some extent in beans and other vegetables. Iron is found mainly in meat, particularly liver, but small amounts are contributed by spinach, whole-wheat bread, eggs and milk. In mild cases of anemia, just eating heartily of these foods is enough to effect a cure.

Another frequent cause of anemia in children is an illness caused by germs or viruses. Diseases of the upper respiratory tract are special offenders in this respect, but any infection can damage the blood-forming organs and leave anemia in its wake. After severe infection, your child's blood should be examined to see if this has happened.

A third main cause of anemia is improper eating. In older people, serious anemia is often due to long-continued diet lack, because in childhood these individuals never learned to eat the foods needed to make good blood. Youngsters who are indulged in eating whims, or whose diet has been neglected, often have to pay the price of anemia in childhood, with perhaps a severe form of it in adulthood. This is by no means a matter of money alone. I have seen children from highly privileged homes who had anemia because they refused to eat meat or vegetables or eggs or cheese, or who refused to drink milk. Here psychology must enter in. While the doctor builds the blood with extracts and medications, the child must be re-educated in his attitudes toward food.

In a limited number of cases, anemia is due to the destruction of the red cells after they have been formed. The destruction may be caused by infection or poisoning. In these rare instances, the doctor must find and treat the cause, while treating the anemia by diet and, if necessary, medication.

The child with anemia, from whatever cause and however mild, should be examined regularly by the doctor until the hemoglobin count has been normal for some time. After that, routine physical examination at the beginning of each school year should be sufficient.

The best measure against anemia is to prevent its becoming established. After an illness, or an accident that causes loss of blood, the child should be encouraged to eat larger amounts of the blood-building foods. I realize that rising food prices make it harder for many parents to do this. Yet only an ounce or two of liver, or slightly larger amounts of other meats, served every day, will keep most forms of anemia away from small children. If it is impossible to give your child meat of some kind every day, larger quantities of meat substitutes should be eaten.

A blood test should be a part of every routine physical examination. And if you detect any of the signs of anemia, take your child to the doctor at once. There is no longer any reason why children should be allowed to suffer the loss of strength and energy that is bound to result when anemia is neglected.

"MY CHILDREN WON'T OBEY"

(Continued from Page 113)

Finally, Larry had a tantrum. He took the cocktail table and banged it up and down so hard I thought it would certainly crash, but it is sturdily built. I understand if the tantrum is permitted to go on, he'll begin to use the table as a battering ram against the wall. As soon as he got to his room after screaming, he urinated on the floor. Algy said, "What shall I do?" I told her, "Let him stay with his wetting." He promptly went to bed and to sleep with no more screaming.

Algy and Andy and I had a long talk after the children were in bed at 8:30. Their bedtime is 7:30, but it's usually 8:30 before all reasons for delaying bed are disposed of. Frankie had to be locked in to get him to stay in his room. He had had too long a nap in the middle of the day. Algy was so relieved to have him quiet that she had let him sleep 2½ hours. But even with the long nap, after two minutes of screaming, he went to sleep.

The children have caused some minor friction between Algy and Andy. Each got some relief talking about his complaints against the other. Andy doesn't devote enough time to the children in the evening when he gets home from work. Algy is right about that. He could relieve her of some strain after a long day by taking charge of the children while she is preparing dinner. His excuse is fatigue and wanting to look at the paper and get cleaned up. He complains that during and after dinner, the family doesn't have her interest and attention. She likes to read with her coffee and have a breather before the struggle of getting the kids to bed. Of course the problem of handling three children all between 2 and 5 is a big one, and even under the best circumstances, it's no easy job.

There is no real lack of affection and admiration between this father and mother, and I'm sure that as soon as we have the children under good control, everybody is going to be much happier.

I asked Algy to keep a diary of her new method of handling the children. Her letter arrived, saying, "Thanks so much for your letter and for your book which came yesterday. I wish I had read it at least five years ago, but I did not realize until I was beset with these behavior problems that there was so much more to raising children than just feeding them and keeping them clean. . . .

"Now for the diary of last week—here's who was isolated, when and why:

MONDAY—

7:00 A.M. Frank—a fuss about dressing—10 minutes.

7:15 Winkie—sneaked into kitchen for candy—30 minutes.

7:50 Frank—tantrum about my choice for cereal—15 minutes. (I had been giving them their choice of cereal, but that led to a certain amount of indecision and mind-changing, so from here on in I will plan all menus. Frank came back to the table and ate his cereal.)

9:00 Winkie—dawdled over dressing—45 minutes. She finally dressed and picked up mess she had made in her room.

11:10 Winkie—disobedience—30 minutes. (Between these times she had gone with me to store. Had a tantrum there about candy. She did not succeed in getting any.)

11:30 Frank—teased Larry and wouldn't stop when told—10 minutes. After

SPIEGEL

SERVING AMERICAN FAMILIES

SINCE 1865

MAIL COUPON BELOW AND GET THIS BIG CATALOG Now!

Yours on FREE TRIAL

Saves Money For Home And Family

Send for your FREE TRIAL copy of Spiegel's big new Fall and Winter Catalog for 1951. Shop by mail from the vast selection of thousands and thousands of items for home and family. All dependable quality at low mail order prices with satisfaction guaranteed or your money back. 596 PAGES jam-packed from cover to cover featuring women's fashions, children's clothing, men's wear, home furnishings, hardware, farm and auto supplies.

NEW CUSTOMERS usually pay $1 deposit for this Catalog, but now for this limited time you can save this $1! Mail the coupon below and . .

SEE IT ON FREE TRIAL! Now, while the supply lasts, you can get this Catalog for 10-day free trial. Shop through it leisurely. Compare our selection . . . our low prices. Prove to your own complete satisfaction that we can save you money on all your needs. If you order within 10 days the Catalog is yours to keep at no cost. If not, return the Catalog to us—without any obligation to you.

Mail the coupon today! Supply limited.

SPIEGEL, INC., CHICAGO 9

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY!

Spiegel, Chicago 9, Ill. Please send me the Spiegel Catalog. I will look it over and order within 10 days, or return it.

Name.....
(PLEASE PRINT)

Street Address.....

Route No.....Box No.....
Give route & box number on rural route

Post Office (Town).....State.....County....
Please specify delivery unit number, if any.

(Note: If after 10 days' free trial, I am not ready to send an order, but still wish to keep the big catalog, I will send you a $1 deposit, in return for which you will mail me a $1 Certificate, good on any Spiegel mail order of $10 or more).

W-20-12

Most make-ups shout: "Made-up!"— Magic Touch whispers: "Natural beauty"

Replace that heavy "made-up" look with natural-looking loveliness by using Magic Touch. No puff, no sponge.

Magic Touch is NEW . . . a tinted cream make-up so sheer your skin glows through! . . . yet it hides each tiny blemish while it smooths and softens and adds glorious color . . . Apply with fingertips (with or without powder)—so quick, so easy, so naturally lovely!

43c and 1.00—6 magic shades . . . a CAMPANA product that he came out and washed and had lunch.

Larry was fussy at lunch and was put to bed without any, but this was due to the fact that his chicken pox was a more severe case than the other children had and he did not feel well Monday or Tuesday morning.

2:45 P.M. Larry—tantrum about dressing—back to bed for about 15 minutes.

5:00 Frank—teased Larry again (which I don't like when someone's ill)—15 minutes. He urinated on floor so time was extended.

TUESDAY—

7:30 A.M. Frank—kicking a door in tantrum—20 minutes.

7:55 Winkie—being smart—35 minutes. Still unpleasant and stubborn, so back to room at 9:15 for another half hour.

9:15 Frank—disobedience (wouldn't put his blankets away)—15 minutes.

10:00 Larry—disobedience (wouldn't leave sweeper alone when told to stop)—20 minutes.

3:00 P.M. Frank—dawdled about dressing—10 minutes.

5:30 Larry—poured water on floor—10 minutes. (This is an old habit of his which he has gotten away with until now.)

7:30 Winkie—had dinner at grandma's, came home in belligerent mood, said "I hate you" to grandma—locked in until she threatened to vomit, so was taken to bathroom. She washed and got ready for bed, but had no bedtime story."

She closes the letter by saying, "To date, I still find myself being too permissive and too slow to punish—too ready to give the kids another chance, and also too chatty. I think my reflexes are conditioned too. However, the tantrums are on the decline and the children are following orders more readily. No one has been spanked, which is pleasant experience for everyone. Fra been staying at the table at mealtim out the former jumping up and Winkie, I fear, needs a little more measures than I have given her, bu trying and she has improved althou still seems to feel that she can pull s the strings around here."

I wrote Mrs. Peterson that Winkie longer time in her room—perhaps an two. Interestingly, Winkie tries to esc claiming she has to go to the toilet or is going to vomit. She managed to get transferred to the bathroom. I am that as soon as Winkie has learn boundaries of behavior, she'll beha home as well as she has been behav kindergarten.

It will be pleasant to see how Al find her children fun and a pleasure as she has suppressed their bad behav released their emotional energy to goo pose and away from the malevolen selfishness and willfulness.

After Andy and Algy have gained of the situation with their children, th need to sit themselves down to a serio to themselves. They will need to chang thinking and feeling attitudes and s be more interested and understanding their children's needs and wants. Th have to live a larger part of their live instead of around their children. Cl are quick to recognize the real sharin the sham and the perfunctory. Specifi of building a family life will be discu a separate article which will appea month, based on a family who learn secret early and have succeeded.

We will get intolerably bad childre reward the bad. If we reward the goo get happy, exuberant children who have so that they can be given good att and affection and can learn to play to get their play-acting desire satisfi can love and like children when w made them into lovable people.

ABOUT TWO NICE PEOPLE

(Continued from Page 48)

hatred of the world. She was—her friends were right—a sweet girl.

On the other hand, even if you would not have called Walter Nesmith sweet, you would very readily have thought of him as a "nice" fellow, or an "agreeable" person, or even—if you happened to be a little old white-haired lady—a "dear boy." There was a subtle resemblance between Ellen Webster and Walter Nesmith. Both of them were the first resort of their friends in trouble, for instance. Walter's ambitions, which included the rest of his life, were refreshingly similar to Ellen's: Walter thought that someday he might meet some sweet girl, and would then devote himself wholeheartedly to coming home of an evening to read his paper and perhaps work in the garden on Sundays.

Walter thought that he would like to have two children, a boy and a girl. Ellen thought that she would like to have three children, a boy and two girls. Walter was very fond of cherry pie, Ellen preferred Boston cream. Ellen enjoyed romantic movies, Walter preferred Westerns. They read almost exactly the same books.

In the ordinary course of events, the friction between Ellen and Walter would have been very slight. But—and what could cause a thing like this?—the ordinary course of events was shattered by a trifle like a telephone call.

Ellen's telephone number was 3—4126. Walter's telephone number was 3—4216. Ellen lived in apartment 3-A and Walter lived in apartment 3-B; these apartments were across the hall from each other and very often Ellen, opening her door at precisely quarter of nine in the morning and going toward the elevator, met Walter, who opened his door at precisely quarter of nine in the morning and went toward the elevator. On these occasions Ellen customarily said "Good morning" and looked steadfastly the other way. Walter usually answered "Good ing," and avoided looking in her dir Ellen thought that a girl who allowed to be informal with strangers created impression, and Walter thought that who took advantage of living in the building to strike up an acquaintance girl was a man of little principle. On ticularly fine morning he said to Ellen elevator "Lovely day," and she "Yes, isn't it?" and both of them felt s that they had been bold. How this mut spect for each other's dignity could degenerated into fury is a mystery not understood.

It happened that one evening—and her strict justice, Ellen had had a har she was coming down with a cold, rained steadily for a week, her stocking unwashed, and she had broken a finger the phone which had the number 3- rang. Ellen had been opening a can of c soup in the kitchenette, and she ha hands full; she said "Darn," and ma to drop and break a cup in her hu answer the phone.

"Hello?" she said, thinking, This is to be something cheerful.

"Hello, is Walter there?"

"Walter?"

"Walter Nesmith. I want to spe Walter, please."

"This is the wrong number," Ellen thinking with the self-pity that come the first stages of a head cold that ever called her.

"Is this three—four two one six?"

"This is three—four one two six," said, and hung up.

At that time, although she knew th person in the apartment across the ha named Walter Nesmith, she could no told the color of his hair or even of th side of his apartment door. She went b

Lasdome

Tweedies®

the smooth way to pleasant summer living.

There is a dealer near you.

TWEEDIE FOOTWEAR CORPORATION • JEFFERSON CITY • MISSOURI

…up and had a match in her hand to light …ove when the phone rang again.

"Hello?" Ellen said without enthusiasm; …could be someone cheerful, she was …ing.

"Hello, is Walter there?"

"This is the wrong number again," Ellen … if she had not been such a very sweet … he might have let more irritation show …r voice.

"… want to speak to Walter Nesmith, …e."

"This is three—four one two six again," … said patiently. "You want three—four …one six."

"What?" said the voice.

"This," said Ellen, "is number three—four …wo six. The number you want is three—two one six." Like anyone who has tried …y a series of numbers several times, she …d her anger growing. Surely anyone of …ral intelligence, she was thinking, surely …ne ought to be able to dial a phone, any- … who can't dial a phone shouldn't be …ved to have a nickel.

…e had got all the way back into the …nenette and was reaching out for the can …up before the phone rang again. This … when she answered she said "Hello?" …er sharply for Ellen, and with no illu- …s about who it was going to be.

"Hello, may I please speak to Walter?" …t that point it started. Ellen had a head- … and it was raining and she was tired and … was apparently not going to get any …ken soup until this annoyance was …ped.

"Just a minute," she said into the phone. …he put the phone down with an under- …dable bang on the table, and marched, …out taking time to …k, out of her apart- …t and up to the door …ss the hall. "Walter …mith" said a small …l at the doorbell. Ellen …g the doorbell with …t was, for her, a vicious …e. When the door opened she said im- …liately, without looking at him:

"Are you Walter Nesmith?"

"…low Walter had had a hard day, too, and …vas coming down with a cold, and he had …n trying ineffectually to make himself a … of hot tea in which he intended to put a …onful of honey to ease his throat, that …g a remedy his aunt had always recom- …ded for the first onslaught of a cold. If …re had been one fraction less irritation in …n's voice, or if Walter had not taken off … shoes when he came home that night, it …ht very probably have turned out to be a …sant introduction, with Walter and …n dining together on chicken soup and … tea, and perhaps even sharing a bottle of …gh medicine. But when Walter opened … door and heard Ellen's voice, he was un- …e to answer her cordially, and so he said …fly:

"I am. Why?"

"Will you please come and answer my …ne?" said Ellen, too annoyed to realize …t this request might perhaps bewilder …lter.

"Answer your phone?" said Walter stu- …ly.

"ANSWER my phone," said Ellen firmly. … turned and went back across the hall, … Walter stood in his doorway in his …cking feet and watched her numbly. …ome on," she said sharply, as she went …o her own apartment, and Walter, won- …ing briefly if they allowed harmless …atics to live alone as though they were …t like other people, hesitated for an instant … then followed her, on the theory that it …uld be wiser to do what she said when she …med so cross, and reassuring himself that … could leave the door open and yell for …p if necessary. Ellen stamped into her …artment and pointed at the phone where …ay on the table. "There. Answer it."

Eying her sideways, Walter edged over to … phone and picked it up. "Hello," he said …rously. Then, "Hello? Hello?" Looking … her over the top of the phone, he said, "What do you want me to do now?"

"Do you mean to say," said Ellen ominously, "that that terrible terrible person has hung up?"

"I guess so," said Walter, and fled back to his own apartment.

The door had only just closed behind him when the phone rang again, and Ellen, answering it, heard, "May I speak to Walter, please?"

Not a very serious mischance, surely. But the next morning Walter pointedly avoided going down in the elevator with Ellen, and sometime during that day the deliveryman left a package addressed to Ellen at Walter's door.

WHEN Walter found the package he took it manfully under his arm and went boldly across the hall, and rang Ellen's doorbell. When Ellen opened her door she thought at first—and she may have been justified—that Walter had come to apologize for the phone call the evening before, and she even thought that the package under his arm might contain something delightfully unexpected, like a box of candy. They lost another chance then; if Walter had not held out the package and said "Here," Ellen would not have gone on thinking that he was trying to apologize in his own shy way, and she would certainly not have smiled warmly, and said, "You shouldn't have bothered."

Walter, who regarded transporting a misdelivered parcel across the hall as relatively little bother, said blankly, "No bother at all," and Ellen, still deceived, said, "But it really wasn't that important."

Walter went back into his own apartment convinced that this was a very odd girl indeed, and Ellen, finding that the package had been mailed to her and contained a wool scarf knitted by a cousin, was as much angry as embarrassed because, once having imagined that an apology is forthcoming, it is very annoying not to have one after all, and particularly to have a wool scarf instead of a box of candy.

Clean your finger before you point at my spots.
—B. FRANKLIN.

How this situation disintegrated into the white-hot fury which rose between these two is a puzzle, except for the basic fact that when once a series of misadventures has begun between two people, everything tends to contribute further to a state of misunderstanding. Thus, Ellen opened a letter of Walter's by mistake, and Walter dropped a bottle of milk—he was still trying to cure his cold, and thought that perhaps milk toast was the thing—directly outside Ellen's door, so that even after his nervous attempts to clear it up, the floor was still littered with fragments of glass, and puddled with milk.

Then Ellen—who believed by now that Walter had thrown the bottle of milk against her door—allowed herself to become so far confused by this succession of small annoyances that she actually wrote and mailed a letter to Walter, asking politely that he try to turn down his radio a little in the late evenings. Walter replied with a frigid letter to the effect that certainly if he had known that she was bothered by his radio, he should surely never have dreamed ——

That evening, perhaps by accident, his radio was so loud that Ellen's canary woke up and chirped hysterically, and Ellen, pacing her floor in incoherent fury, might have been heard—if there had been anyone to hear her, and if Walter's radio had not been so loud—to say, "I'll get even with him!" A phrase, it must be said, which Ellen had never used before in her life.

Ellen made her preparations with a sort of loving care that might well have been lavished on some more worthy object. When the alarm went off she turned in her sleep and smiled before quite waking up, and, once awake and the alarm turned off, she almost laughed out loud. In her slippers and gown, the clock in her hand, she went across her small apartment to the phone; the number was one she was not soon apt to forget. The dial tone sounded amazingly loud, and for a minute she was almost frightened out of her resolution. Then, setting her teeth, she dialed

(Continued on Page 127)

YOU Can Have A Lovelier Complexion in 14 Days with Palmolive Soap, Doctors Prove!

NOT JUST A PROMISE . . . but actual proof from 36 leading skin specialists that Palmolive Soap facials can bring new complexion beauty to 2 out of 3 women Never before these tests has there been proof of such sensational beauty results! Yes, scientific tests on 1285 women—supervised by 36 leading skin specialists—proved conclusively that in 14 days regular facials with Palmolive Soap—using nothing but Palmolive—bring lovelier complexions to 2 out of 3 women.

Here's the easy method:

1. Wash your face three times daily with Palmolive Soap—each time massaging its beautifying lather onto your skin for sixty seconds.
2. Now rinse and dry—that's all.

Remarkable results were proved on women of all ages, with all types of skin. Proof that Palmolive facials really work to bring you a lovelier complexion. Start your Palmolive facials tonight!

Look For These Complexion Improvements in 14 days!

- Fresher, Brighter Complexions!
- Less oiliness!
- Added softness, smoothness—even for dry skin!
- Complexions clearer, more radiant!
- Fewer tiny blemishes—incipient blackheads!

For Tub or Shower
Get Big Bath Size Palmolive!

DOCTORS PROVE PALMOLIVE'S BEAUTY RESULTS!

Anyone can solve this puzzle...

No matter where you buy your cottons, no matter what you pay...

They can't shrink out of fit—if they are trade-marked "Sanforized."

So in these times above all others, insist on seeing "Sanforized" on the label. Before you buy, make even your favorite sales clerk show you "Sanforized" on the label.

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing t trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

(Continued from Page 125)

nber, her hand steady. After a sec- terminable wait, the ringing began. one at the other end rang three times, nes, with what seemed interminable etween, as though even the mechani- ne system hesitated at this act. Then, there was an irritable crash at the nd of the line, and a voice said, "

d morning," said Ellen brightly. "I'm bly sorry to disturb you at this hour." h?"

is is Ellen Webster," said Ellen, still y. "I called to tell you that my clock pped ——"

h?"

– and I wonder if you could tell me me it is?"

e was a short pause at the other end line. Then, after a minute, his voice ack: "Tenny minna fah."

eg your pardon?"

was another short pause at the other the line, as of someone opening his ith a shock. "Twenty minutes after he said. "Twenty minutes after four." e reason I thought of asking you," said sweetly, "was that you were so bliging before. About the radio, I – calling a person at ——"

anks so much," said Ellen. "Good-by." felt fairly certain that he would not r back, but she sat on her bed and a little before she went back to sleep. ter's response to this was miserably he contacted a neighboring delicatessen or so later, and had an assortment of nelling cheeses left in Ellen's apart- while she was out. This, which required ding the superintendent to open apartment so that the package might inside, was a poor revenge but a mon- exercise of imagination upon Walter's o that, in one sense, Ellen was already ng out in him qualities he never knew l. The cheese, it turned out, more than d the score: the apartment was small, ay was warm, and Ellen did not get until late, and long after most of the tenants on the floor had gone to the ntendent with their complaints about hing dead in the woodwork.

ce breaking and entering had thus be- one of the rules of their game, Ellen rivileged to retaliate in kind upon r. It was with great joy, some evenings that Ellen, sitting in her odorous ment, heard Walter's scream of pure when he put his feet into his slippers und a raw egg in each.

lter had another weapon, however, he had been so far reluctant to use; s a howitzer of such proportions that r felt its use would end warfare utterly. the raw eggs he felt no compunc- whatever in bringing out his heavy ry.

eemed to Ellen, at first, as though peace een declared. For almost a week things along smoothly; Walter kept his radio down almost to inaudibility, so that got plenty of sleep. She was over her the sun had come out, and on Saturday ing she spent three hours shopping, and exactly the dress she wanted at less she expected to pay.

out Saturday noon she stepped out of levator, her packages under her arm, walked briskly down the hall to her ment, making, as usual, a wide half to avoid coming into contact with the around Walter's door.

r apartment door, to her surprise was but before she had time to phrase a ion in her own mind, she had stepped and come face to face with a lady –not to make any more mysteries— Walter Nesmith's aunt, and a wicked dy in her own way, possessing none of er's timidity and none of his tact

Who?" said Ellen weakly, standing in oorway.

ome in and close the door," said the dy darkly. "I don't think you'll want neighbors to hear what I have to say. I," she continued as Ellen obeyed mechanically, "am Mrs. Harold Vongarten Nesmith. Walter Nesmith, young woman, is my nephew."

"Then you are in the wrong apartment," said Ellen, quite politely considering the reaction which Walter Nesmith's name was beginning by now to arouse in her. "You want Apartment Three-B, across the hall."

"I do not," said the old lady firmly. "I came here to see the designing young woman who has been shamelessly pursuing my nephew, and to warn her"—the old lady shook her gloves menacingly—"to warn her that not one cent shall she have from me if she marries Walter Nesmith."

"Marries?" said Ellen, thoughts too great for words in her heart.

"It has long been my opinion that some young woman would be after Walter Nesmith for his money," said Walter's aunt with satisfaction.

"Believe me," said Ellen wholeheartedly, "there is not that much money in the world."

"You deny it?" The old lady leaned back and smiled triumphantly. "I expected something of the sort. Walter," she called suddenly, and then, putting her head back and howling, "Wal-l-l-l-l-ter."

"Sh-h-h," said Ellen fearfully. "They'll hear you all over."

"I expect them to," said the old lady. "Wal-l-l-l-l —— Oh, there you are."

Ellen turned, and saw Walter Nesmith, with triumph in his eyes, peering around the edge of the door. "Did it work?" he asked.

"She denies everything," said his aunt.

In 1848 Lord Shaftsbury said: "Nothing can save the British Empire from shipwreck." In 1849 Disraeli said: "In industry, commerce and agriculture there is no hope." In 1852 the dying Duke of Wellington said: "I thank God I shall be spared from seeing the consummation of ruin that is gathering about us." In 1801 Wilberforce said: "I dare not marry—the future is so unsettled." In 1806 William Pitt said: "There is scarcely anything around us but ruin and despair."

—HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK: Living Under Tension (Harper & Brothers).

"About the eggs?" Walter said, confused. "You mean, she denies about the eggs and the phone call and ——"

"Look," Ellen said to Walter, stamping across the floor to look him straight in the eye, "of all the insufferable, conceited, rude, self-satisfied ——"

"What?" said Walter.

"I wouldn't want to marry you," said Ellen, "if—if ——" She stopped for a word, helpless.

"If he were the last man on earth," Walter's aunt supplied obligingly. "I think she's really after your money, Walter."

Walter stared at his aunt. "I didn't tell you to tell her ——" he began. He gasped, and tried again. "I mean," he said, "I never thought ——" He appealed to Ellen. "I don't want to marry you, either," he said, and then gasped again, and said, "I mean, I told my aunt to come and tell you ——"

"If this is a proposal," Ellen said coldly, "I decline."

"All I wanted her to do was scare you," Walter said finally.

"It's a good way," his aunt said complacently. "Turned out to be the only way with your Uncle Charles and a Hungarian adventuress."

"I mean," Walter said desperately to Ellen, "she owns this building. I mean, I wanted her to tell you that if you didn't stop—I mean, I wanted her to scare you ——"

"Apartments are too hard to get these days," his aunt said. "That would have been too unkind."

"That's how I got my apartment at all, you see," Walter said to Ellen, still under the impression he was explaining something Ellen wanted to understand.

"Since you have got an apartment," Ellen said, with restraint, "may I suggest that you take your aunt and the both of you ——"

The phone rang.

"Excuse me," said Ellen mechanically, moving to answer it. "Hello?" she said.

"Hello, may I speak to Walter, please?"

Ellen smiled rather in the manner that Lady Macbeth might have smiled if she found a run in her stocking.

"It's for you," she said, holding the phone out to Walter.

"For me?" he said, surprised. "Who is it?"

"I really could not say," said Ellen sweetly. "Since you have so many friends that one phone is not adequate to answer all their calls ——"

Since Walter made no move to take the phone, she put it gently back on the hook.

"They'll call again," she assured him, still smiling in that terrible fashion.

"I ought to turn you both out," said Walter's aunt. She turned to Ellen. "Young woman," she said, "do you deny that all this nonsense with eggs and telephone calls is an attempt to entangle my nephew into matrimony?"

"Certainly not," Ellen said. "I mean, I do deny it."

"Walter Nesmith," said his aunt, "do you admit that all your finagling with cheeses and radios is an attempt to strike up an acquaintance with this young woman?"

"Certainly," said Walter. "I mean, I do not admit it."

"Good," said Walter's aunt. "You are precisely the pair of silly fools I would have picked out for each other." She rose with great dignity, motioned Walter away from her, and started for the door. "Remember," she said, shaking her gloves again at Ellen, "not one cent."

She opened the door and started down the hall, her handkerchief over her eyes, and—a sorry thing in such an old lady—laughing until she had to stop and lean against the wall near the elevator.

"I'm sorry," Walter was saying to Ellen, almost babbling, "I'm really sorry this time—please believe me, I had no idea—I wouldn't for the world—nothing but the most profound respect—a joke, you know—hope you didn't really think ——"

"I understand perfectly," Ellen said icily. "It is all perfectly clear. It only goes to show what I have always believed about young men who think that all they have to do is ——"

The phone rang.

Ellen waited a minute before she spoke. Then she said, "You might as well answer it."

"I'm terribly sorry," Walter said, not moving toward the phone. "I mean, I'm terribly sorry." He waved his hands in the air. "About what she said about what she thought about what you wanted me to do ——" His voice trailed off miserably.

Suddenly Ellen began to giggle.

Anger is certainly a problem that will bear much analysis. It is hardly surprising that one person may be angry at another, particularly if these are two people who are gentle, usually, and rarely angry, whose emotions tend to be mild and who would rather be friends with everyone than be enemies with anyone. Such an anger argues a situation so acute that only the most drastic readjustment can remedy it.

EITHER Walter Nesmith or Ellen Webster could have moved, of course. But, as Walter's aunt had pointed out, apartments are not that easy to come by, and their motives and their telephone numbers were by now so inextricably mixed that on the whole it seemed more reasonable not to bother.

Moreover, Walter's aunt, who still snickers when her nephew's name is mentioned, did not keep them long in suspense, after all. She was not lavish, certainly, but she wrote them a letter which both of them found completely confusing and which enclosed a check adequate for a down payment on the extremely modest house in the country they decided upon without disagreement. They even compromised and had four children—two boys and two girls. THE END

DO YOU NEED MONEY?

$35.00 IS YOURS

for selling only 50 boxes of our 300 Christmas card line. And this can be done in a single day. Free samples. Other leading boxes on approval. Many surprise items. It costs nothing to try. Mail coupon below today.

CHEERFUL CARD CO.
Dept. G-4, White Plains, N. Y.

Mail This Coupon Today

CHEERFUL CARD CO.
Dept. G-4, White Plains, N. Y.
Please rush samples and full details of your money-making plan.
Name .....
Address .....
City ..... State .....

It's jelly-making season all year 'round-thanks to

THE NEW 15-MINUTE JELLY MIRACLE!

RECIPE

ORANGE JUICE JELLY

Yield: about 6 six-ounce glasses

1 box Sure-Jell
2 cups water
¾ cup (6-ounce can) concentrated Birds Eye Orange Juice
3½ cups (1½ lbs.) sugar

Measure Sure-Jell and water into large saucepan; mix well. Place over high heat, bring to a full rolling boil; boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Reduce heat to low. Add orange juice, sugar. Stir until both are completely dissolved. (Do not boil.) Remove from heat, skim, and pour quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once.

FREE! For more new miracle-quick recipes like this one, write to Frances Barton, Dept. A7, General Foods Corp., 250 Park Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

Brand-New! Frozen Orange Juice and Sure-Jell make thrilling orange jelly in just 15 minutes!

SO EASY!

Try a new Sure-Jell short-boil recipe—with bottled or frozen juice, or frozen fruit—and you'll say it's a miracle, too! No fuss or bother of preparing fruit. Just mix the ingredients and heat! That's all there is to it!

SO THRIFTY!

Costs less than jams or jellies you buy! Yields 50% more jars than the old-fashioned long-boil method. And most important, Sure-Jell is the concentrated natural fruit pectin product that helps all fruits to jell just right!

Powdered fruit pectin for easy jelly making

Product of General Foods

SO DELICIOUS!

The marvelous short-boil method captures all the fragrance and flavor of your fruit or juice. With Sure-Jell they can't boil away, as they can with the long-boil method! (And, of course, Sure-Jell will work its same jelling wonders with fresh fruit! Look for the dozens of recipes for fruits and berries in every Sure-Jell package.)

HOMEMADE Jams and Jellies can't be beat, can't be bought!

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

This month is our real summer. The corn grows while you watch it, the ch redden on the trees and poison ivy, the wicked, "flourishes like a green bay t

THE Farmer's Almanac says "Days are hot, nights are not." This about sums up July in New England, for this month is our real summer, no indecision in the weather. It is bound to be hot, and also humid. But the country is green, the corn grows while you watch it, the cherries redden on the trees, the vegetables are "in."

Cicely, my daughter, is home on her vacation, and she goes currant picking with me. The currants are shining, redder than any maharajah's rubies, and much more useful. I pick the lazy way; I carry a lawn chair to the bushes and sit while Cicely skips around. It was nice of the Lord to invent a fruit that can be picked without standing on your head, I think.

Currant jelly, made the minute we carry the little pails in, is about perfection as jelly goes. It seems to catch the light and keep it, and the rich, slightly spicy smell is wonderful. Cicely makes toast to spread with the leftover frothy part, and I eat the testing drops as fast as they get in the cool saucer. Comes a winter night, how good that essence of summer will taste with roast duckling or pink slices of ham.

The raspberries grow in the upper field, trailing casual canes along the swamp edge. It is hotter there than anyplace on the farm, and has a kind of quiet wildness that is very satisfying. The dogs love to go raspberrying, with side sniffs after woodchucks.

Raspberry shortcake was mamma's favorite, and is mine. Slightly mashed, warmed a little, sugared lightly, a bowlful makes enough for a big, crusty, tender shortcake. Add a blue pitcher filled with heavy cream, or a bowl of whipped cream, and there is the best supper of all. But the shortcake must be a rich biscuit dough, not a dessert cake. You can have a very nice dessert with a spongecake base, but why waste the berries on it, when a real shortcake can be made so easily?

The edible podded peas are ready to pick when the pods begin to plump out. All peas should be picked just before they seem to be ready. It is especially important when freezing vegetables to get them put up at the first blush of ripening. We le this the hard way, by freezing som tronly beans one year. The edible p peas do a marathon from the vines boiling water, then, salted and pe and drenched with sweet fresh butter go to the table and then go fast!

Jill never seems to appear witho spray can slung over her shoulder deaux mixture for the cucumbers, po and tomatoes, spray for the roses, d the squash. When she is resting, s spray the poison ivory, as we call cally. It's strange that the ivory nev eaten up by all the pests that devour thing else. Like the wicked, "it flo like a green bay tree."

Poison ivy should be our state p feel. And I do think a state-finance paign to kill it out would save mo fering than any other single thing. W tle it endlessly, but down the road it every fence post and tree for miles.

Maeve won her Tracking Degree trials at World's End in Hingham, wish everyone who loves or owns could have been there. At present four dogs in Connecticut have r this peak in dog and owner training

We had to get up at five and d the trial, for tracking begins early morning while the ground is fresh. dog has a course a quarter of a mil laid out first on a chart, which loo the plan for a jigsaw puzzle.

The track layers follow the chart, ing two white flags at the beginning trail. They wear leather shoes or boo walk up hill and down to the end quarter-mile stretch, where they small leather wallet or pad. Then th on galoshes and leap away, the the ing the dog does not scent the rubb track is let "cool off" for an agonizi hour while you get butterflies in you ach and your knees knock togeth your Irish looks interested as a Samoyed drives up. The gallery the first flag, but nobody is allowe the track.

he wind blows hard, and you just know blowing those footprints. It's miles long, way, and Maeve never practiced except nd the hayfield at home. Finally, years
, the two judges lift their arms, and it is to go!

watched Jill and Maeve over the rise of hill, Jill already tangling the sixty-foot which would go on Maeve's harness at irst flag. It's no small trick to keep sixty of rope clear unless you happen to be a oy. I saw Jill bend over and poke ve's velvet nose near the flag and knew was fiercely whispering, "Go find!"

f they went, the Irish shining in the sun, her tail like a banner for victory, eager nose flat to the field. Jill flew after

I sat down on the grassy bank.

he rest of the gallery followed along the of the hill; suddenly they broke into ring, and waved their arms. The stew-blew the big horn. Maeve had won! I gered up, feeling as if I had been an ind for months. Three minutes flat, almost cord for the quarter mile, they told me.

Jill came along with a green rosette the of a watermelon, a happy red dog purling de her.

ll panted for ten minutes, speechless. I to figuring that if she could run a quarter mile in three minutes, she could do a in twelve, and that was good running a middle-aged housewife, in anybody's guage. She said Maeve would have ken the speed record, but she couldn't.

he club served hot coffee, the white noyed and his owner went off, we got the l glasses and watched, we talked dogs the dogs and with the owners; it was of those hours when you suddenly know good life is, how precious is a country t still has room for companionship with ple and dogs. And what I like best is lking that it doesn't matter whether the comes up in a Cadillac or a '31 station gon, whether the humans wear custom-de clothes or worn jeans, or what race y were born into; the spirit of warm ndliness is there.

All the hours and hours Jill had worked being over, I was not really surprised as we turned down the long road home to hear her thoughtfully say, "Now which cocker should get the tracking degree?"

"Well," I said, "better teach Maeve to drive the car first. She can do all the errands for us. Just build a pedal in that she can reach with her back paws."

When the evening sun goes down, the neighbors drop in and we go down by the pond for supper. Something hot, something cold is my recipe.

I like to begin with Smiley Burnette's famous remolade sauce and a big bowl of chilled shrimp. If I use canned, I try to get the big ones. There are shrimp and shrimp. For the sauce, I take 1 cup mayonnaise, 1 cup catchup, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce (we call it "woostr"), 1 teaspoon sharp prepared mustard, ½ teaspoon salt, a dash of Tabasco, half a small onion. I dump this in the blender (what a friend a blender is in summer!). Then the shrimp can be dipped in the sauce at will.

This remolade is wonderful in deviled eggs with a bit of crisp bacon. With sour cream (which I never should eat and do adore) added to mayonnaise it is an elegant dressing. Good spread on bread for sandwiches. It's really a kind of all-purpose sauce and keeps beautifully.

Tall, cold drinks go with the shrimp; spiced tomato juice is very good. Then for the hot dish, I either bring down a casserole or a meat pie or we fire up the barbecue and let everyone grill his own frankfurters. Top off with cool raspberries and cream, and add rolls for the franks, and everybody gets rid of the garden aches.

Afterward we wander up to the quiet garden where the delphinium is still blooming, the pinkish-blues that have such a serene twilight color. The thyme between the flagstones smells sweet when you step on it, and the air is cool now and soft as a dream. The night is an island in time.

A happy island in time is the moonlit garden in summer!

SCHWEITZER VS. STALIN

(Continued from Page 37)

shevik Party. Then in October, 1917, on very eve of the Bolshevik Revolution, lin was elected to the Communist Polit-o, which at that time had only seven mbers. With the revolution a success, in next appointed him People's Com-ssar of Nationalities, from which position slowly consolidated his power, and on ril 3, 1922, he was elected General Secre-y of the Central Committee of the Com-nist Party.

When Lenin died on January 21, 1924, a umvirate consisting of Stalin, Kamenev d Zinoviev took over. But Stalin gradually placed Kamenev and Zinoviev, and finally, the purge trials of the 30's, both of them were uidated at his com-nd. In the spring of 35 nearly forty men of own bodyguard were ed in secret. Two were ecuted and the rest re sentenced to long son terms. Toward close of 1935 the mingly endless purge trials began, during course of which nearly all Stalin's earliest sociates in the Communist movement were ecuted, among them one former prime nister, several vice prime ministers, two chiefs of the Communist International, chief of the trade-unions, the chief of the neral Staff, the chief political commissar the army, the supreme commanders of all portant military districts, nearly all the viet ambassadors in Europe and Asia, and o chiefs of the political police. One of these s Yagoda, who had provided the evidence the trials of some of the first purgees, and shov, who gathered the evidence for the er major trials.

DESTINY, n. A tyrant's authority for crime and a fool's excuse for failure.

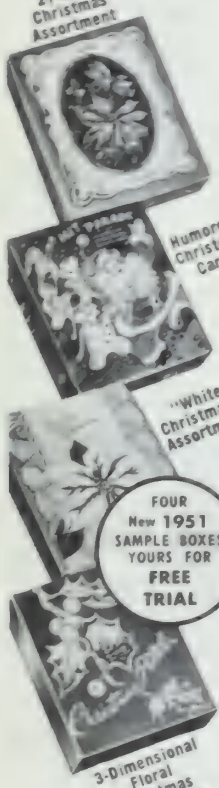
—AMBROSE BIERCE:
The Devil's Dictionary
(Albert & Charles Boni, Inc.).

Stalin's face mirrors a personality that combines hardness, cynicism, deception, strength of will and utter ruthlessness.

Albert Schweitzer is the son of a Lutheran minister. He began his study of the piano at five and the organ at eight. By the time he was nine he was able to substitute for the parish organist at the church services. He attended primary school at Gunsbach, secondary school at Münster, and in 1893 entered the Theological College of St. Thomas at the University of Strasbourg and soon thereafter began the study of the organ under Charles Widor in Paris. In 1898, at the Sorbonne, he began to write his dissertation on the religious philosophy of Kant. That completed, he was a preacher at the Church of St. Nicholas in Strasbourg, and in 1901, then twenty-six years old, he became the acting principal of the Theological College at Strasbourg.

But because works as well as faith seemed important to him at the age of thirty, he decided on an entirely new career. He would study medicine in order that he might go to Africa as a doctor for the natives. Eight years later he was a doctor of medicine, and had become a master in four major fields of learning and a skillful writer as well. He was a Doctor of Philosophy at the age of twenty-four, with an important study of Kant's religious philosophy as his main work; at twenty-six he published a book on the Last Supper, which won him the degree of Licentiate in Theology and gave him the right to serve as a Privatdocent at the University of Strasbourg; when he was thirty-one, he published his celebrated book on Bach and a re-

REWARD!



EXTRA MONEY and FREE GIFT OFFERS

C. L. EVANS says:
Let me send you for FREE TRIAL everything you need to make money easily.

FREE SELLING GUIDE
Young or old—you don't need experience to make money and friends. My 48-page book shows you how.

SHOW YOUR FRIENDS AMERICA'S OUTSTANDING VALUES IN LOVELY GREETING CARDS, GIFT WRAPPINGS AND STATIONERY

It's easy – profitable – fun! Take orders for complete low cost–high profit line. Extra cash bonus. FREE Gift Offers. Raise money quickly for yourself, your Club or Church through neighborly Party Plans and Extra Money Clubs.

MRS. FISHER says:
". . . a pleasure to show and sell your beautiful line . . . helped me support our family."—
Mrs. L. Fisher
Evansville, Ind.

MRS. EARL says:
"Received my bonus check for $40.01 . . . thank you for being so prompt."
Mrs. O. N. Earl
Los Angeles, Cal.

RUSH COUPON
for FREE TRIAL outfit of actual samples and FREE Surprise Gift Offer. If outfit does not make money for you quickly, return it at our expense.

also FREE
60-Page Illustrated Catalog of 144 Different Greeting Card, Home and Gift Items.

New England ART [illegible]
NORTH ABINGTON 514, MASS.

Our 25th Year of Friendly Service

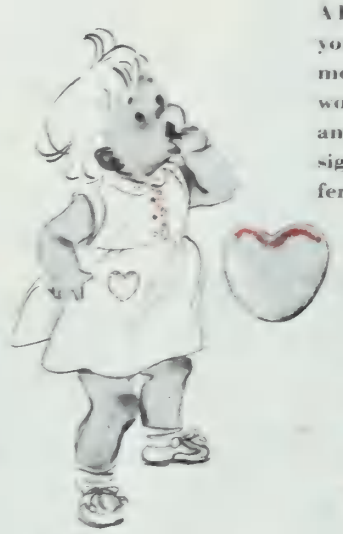
Send No Money—Mail Coupon Now To:
C. L. EVANS
NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS
North Abington 514, Mass.
Please rush me your money-making outfit for FREE TRIAL approval and all details of your plan.
Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____
You Take No Risk

markable volume on organ construction. In 1913 he and his wife left for the station of the Paris Missionary Society at Lambaréne in French Equatorial Africa, and there he built this jungle hospital on the edge of the primeval forest, which now for thirty-six years he has operated.

Albert Schweitzer's face reflects kindness, sensitivity of feeling, sympathy, deep moral strength and genuine humility.

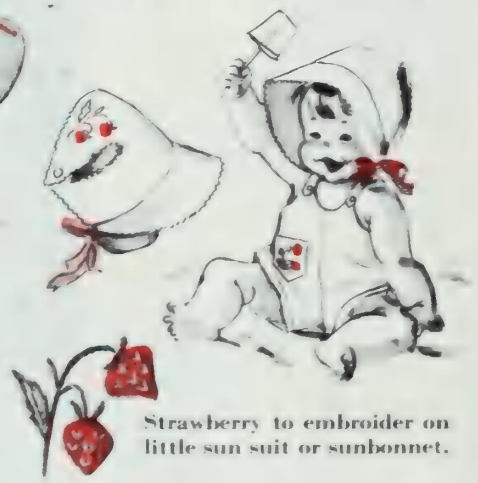
The ideas of the two men have the deepest significance. During his years in Africa, Albert Schweitzer, to a greater degree than any other man, has thought through to the means of translating into action and conduct the ideas that for centuries have formed the stream of philosophic thought behind our Western way of life, and what Doctor Schweitzer has found he has set down as a guide for civilization.

His philosophy appears principally in two volumes, The Decay and Restoration of Civilization, and Civilization and Ethics, which are Parts 1 and 2 of his projected four-volume Philosophy of Civilization. The core of his ethical concepts is expressed in his phrase "reverence for life." He discusses the will of each to live, and the nature of an existence in which each is surrounded by others with a will to live. These words express his belief in life itself better than any others that I can quote:



"True philosophy must start from the most immediate and comprehensive fact of consciousness which says, 'I am life which wills to live in the midst of life which wills to live!' . . . Ethics consists, therefore, in my experiencing the compulsion to show to all will to live the same reverence as I do to my own. . . . It is good to maintain and to encourage life; it is bad to destroy life or to obstruct it."

Thus he insists on "reverence for life" as the guiding principle by which all social, economic and political systems should be developed. The clear and close similarity between his concept and the belief in inherent human rights that characterizes our way of life in America, between his ideals and ours, whereby we respect the dignity of fellow men and recognize their brotherhood with us, is at once apparent. His entire personal life is a reflection of his own deep "reverence for life!"



My talks with Doctor Schweitzer occurred in three sessions. The first took place shortly after our arrival. We had been taken to the main staff dining hall, which is a room approximately fifteen by twenty feet, constructed on a platform raised about five feet

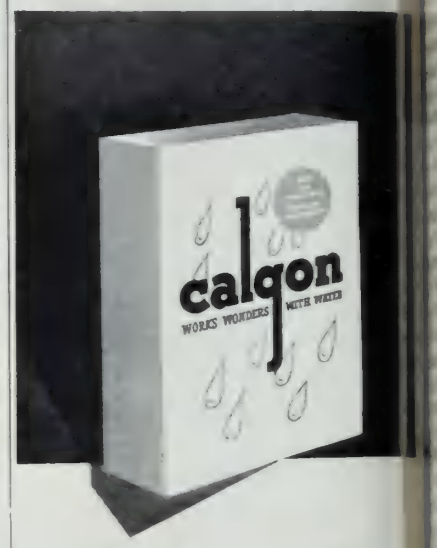
Transfer Designs for Children's Clothes

A hot-iron transfer sheet with designs for your children's clothes. Not just for summer, but also for challis and lightweight wools later. Includes strawberry, acorn and cherries. The lazy-daisy all-over design has many uses. 2574. 25c. The transfer pattern gives you the transfers only!

Single French knots outline scallops and other details.

Strawberry to embroider on little sun suit or sunbonnet.

All-over lazy-daisy pattern for baby set in white piqué.



"I am a good boy" (or girl) in easy cross-stitch design.

Turn to Page 24 for information on how to order this pattern.

it's a miracle that any water conditioner can be so easy on your hands and so hard on dirt!

Calgon® makes any soap or detergent wash anything cleaner in hard or soft water

Calgon, Inc.
PITTSBURGH, PA.

COMMENDED PARENTS' MAGAZINE
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CASH MONEY!
MEN and WOMEN wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Holiday, Jack and Jill, Country Gentleman and other popular publications. Big cash commissions. Devote spare time or full time.
For details write to CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, Independence Square, Phila.

CARPET TACK MARKS ARE FASHION
ADD BEAUTY to wall-to-wall carpet by specifying SMOOTHEDGE Tackless Installation—no ugly tack marks or dust-catching scallops. Easier to keep clean. Write today for free color book "New Carpet Beauty"
Insist on Smoothedge
1532-D N. Indiana St., Los Angeles 63, Calif.

LOOK FOR THIS SEAL OF SATISFACTION
INNER-SPRING Rymland
IN FINE BEDDING AND FURNITURE

Make Money
WITH EXCITING AMAZING EASY WAY CHRISTMAS CARDS
Show friends, others, lovely PRICED Name-Imprinted Personal Cards—shipped direct to customer—and big Album De Luxe, higher Personals. PLUS 40 Christmas and Everyday Asst's, including sensational 21-card "Feature" Assortment. Sells $1—your profit up to 50¢. Religious, Humorous, Etchtone, Gift Wrapping, Red Velvet Asst't., Currier & Ives Asst't., gift Ribbon Assortment, (80 yards for $1), Stationery and others. Fast-selling Gift Items. FREE Sample Personal Cards: "Feature" Assortment on approval. Rush Coupon TODAY! WALLACE BROWN
225 Fifth Ave., Dept. A-9, New York 10
Mail COUPON FOR Samples TODAY!
NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____ STATE_____

...e ground on timbers, to protect it ...s and other vermin. Screened open... two sides face toward the hospital ...ard the river, and it has a long cen... ...ble, adequate for seating approxi... ...wenty-five people, and plain wooden ...An old piano in one corner, and a few ...and extra chairs and small tables in ...osite end of the room from the en... ...complete the furniture. Lighting is by ...of kerosene lamps. Here we had tea ...n we were taken to our rooms.

...shown to a room which one of the ...had temporarily vacated. Its furnish... ...re a simple and reasonably comfort... ...completely protected with mosquito ...a washstand with washbowl and a ...of water, a chair, a stool, a bench, a ...cot and a small table. The walls were ...ashed and all was neat and clean.

...ly after I reached my room, Doctor ...zer, accompanied by Nurse Hauss... ...who acted as interpreter, came to ...there. Robert Matteson also came in ...began an earnest discussion which ...ted for close to two hours.

...or Schweitzer next took us on a tour ...hospital, accompanied by Dr. Emeric ...a twenty-eight-year-old Hungarian ...rgeon who had met Doctor Schweit... ...Switzerland, ...r. Jean Pierre ...e, a thirty... ...d Alsatian doc... ...o was a gen... ...actitioner.

...four hundred ...patients were ...being cared for ...hospital. The ...wards were for ...y, accidents, ...ery, tuberculo... ...leprosy. One ...well-filled nurs... ...surgical ward ...ecially active. ...9 over five hun... ...major opera... ...were performed. ...patients were ...pally of two ...—the Galoas, a ...tribe, and the ...or Pahouins, ...nterior tribe. ...had traveled ...gh the jungle ...eeks to reach ...spital, and most ...m were accom... ...d by some of ...embers of their ...es, who lived in a temporary village ...rt distance from the hospital. Dur... ...e day these families of the patients and ...patients strong enough to help gathered ...broke up rocks for future hospital con... ...ion, gathered firewood, and assisted in ...for the patients, cooking food for ...on small fires near the various wards ...n other ways helping out as they could. ...le to make other payment, they give ...services to the hospital.

...hospital itself stands in a grove of ...gany, okume and oil-palm trees, and off ...north is a plantation of mango, orange, ...n, avocado, pomme de cythre, banana ...ther fruit trees. The hospital also main... ...a garden in which are grown maize, ...oc, tomatoes, beans, cabbage, lettuce ...even coffee. In addition, the natives ...fish in the river for the hospital, and ...f the great delicacies is the tail of the ...dile. Over one hundred goats roam ...t the hillside and are a bountiful source ...ilk.

...llowing the hospital tour, we all ...ered for dinner when the gong rang at ...-thirty o'clock. Doctor Schweitzer ...d a blessing and then about twenty-five ...le sat down to a meal of vegetable soup, ...and cheese and gravy, bread, a large ...d banana, and a compote of fruit made ...f mangoes and bananas. After the meal ...or Schweitzer sat down at the piano and ...he group in the singing of Abide With Me, in French, and then pronounced a benediction.

My second discussion with Doctor Schweitzer followed. Drawing us all to the far corner of the room, he sat down on a bench behind a small table and invited me to sit next to him. Tea was served, and then for two hours Doctor Schweitzer answered my questions on a wide range of subjects, with Governor Pelieu and Nurse Haussknecht acting as interpreters and the entire staff and visitors seated in a semicircle listening. In the midst of the dialogue, Doctor Schweitzer commented with a chuckle that our talk reminded him of the salons of Paris in years gone by.

THE following morning, after breakfast, I accompanied Doctor Schweitzer to his office. Here we had our final discussion. It lasted about an hour and a half and came to an end only because it was time to take the launch back to the airport. During this final talk I referred to a copy of his book, Civilization and Ethics, which I had carried with me, and he thoughtfully autographed it in French, "To the students of the University of Pennsylvania with best wishes for their future studies. Albert Schweitzer."

The range of his knowledge of what was happening in the world was amazing, and his constant interpretation of the world's problems by relating them to his basic philosophy of "reverence for life" was very stimulating.

"History is a stream of events shaped by the human mind," Doctor Schweitzer said to me as we sat there in the office of his jungle hospital, "and not by forces over which man has no control. The solution of our present problems lies in combining again, as was done in the eighteenth century, analytical thought with affirmative religious concepts based on humanitarianism. There is a great need," he continued, "for rational humanitarian and morally responsible individuals."

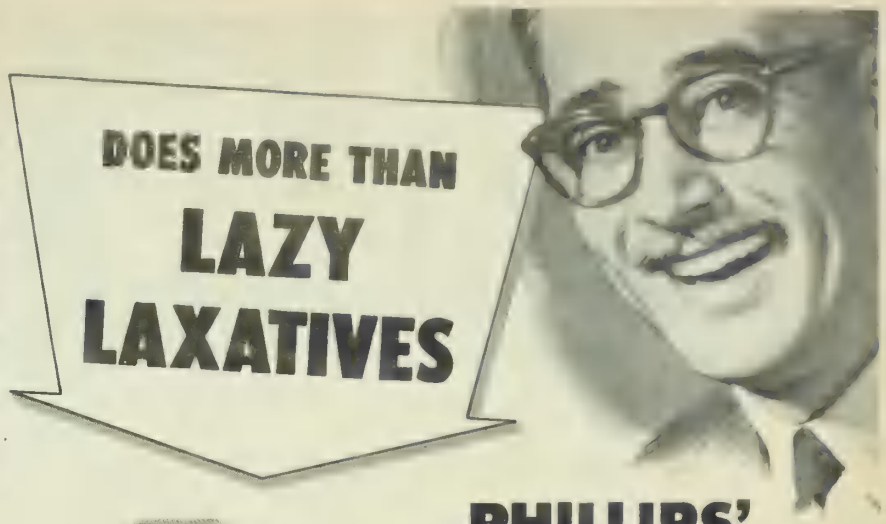
"And do you think that such a need will be filled?" I asked.

Doctor Schweitzer looked out over the river before answering. Then he said, simply but firmly, "I look to the future with hope."

Quite obviously, Doctor Schweitzer does not believe that freedom alone should be the goal of mankind. He earnestly emphasized this point in his conversations with me, and the same warning runs through his writings. Liberty without moral responsibility can lead only to individual excesses, to the use of force by one free man against his fellow men and the ultimate destruction of freedom. Thus he emphasized the need for combining a personal ethic with freedom; or, in other words, of submitting to the restraints of a civilized freedom.

Perhaps another way to express it is that if the individual has complete freedom but lacks a sense of moral and ethical values, the absence of self-restraint will produce social chaos as it did in the French Revolution. Then the only method of restoring stability to a society shot through with utter licentiousness will be for a tyranny to prescribe conduct, with rules and laws down to the most minute detail, and to enforce those rules and laws by ruthless power.

It is only with a humanitarian code of conduct, such as that which springs from the basic religious background of our country and which causes the vast majority of people to conduct themselves with respect and consideration for their fellow men, regardless of



Fifteen

By POLLY TOLAND

Why does love not begin when life does
So that youth still pliant and green
Could bear its fruit in its springtime,
Before brief summer had been?

For then the heart that is rich and tender
Need not dread September's frost,
Having borne its heavy harvest
Before it was injured or lost.

How long must I wait, oh, how long
For the moment which should be now—
Till my heart is withered experience
And the leaves dry red on the bough?

PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA not only relieves constipation, but accompanying acid indigestion, too!

Three tablespoonfuls for constipation and accompanying acid indigestion! If you're troubled by irregularity, what you need is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. You need Phillips' because it gives more complete relief than lazy laxatives which relieve only constipation. The reason for this is that Phillips' also relieves the acid indigestion which often accompanies constipation!

One tablespoonful for stomach upset alone! Phillips' contains one of the fastest, most effective neutralizers of excess stomach acids known. Phillips' brings amazingly fast relief from gas, heartburn and other distressing symptoms of acid indigestion.

LIQUID PHILLIPS' AVAILABLE IN 75¢, 50¢ and 25¢ BOTTLES
PHILLIPS' TABLETS IN $1.00, 50¢ and 25¢ SIZES

CORNS
Removed by Mosco, also Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N.Y.
MOSCO ★CORN★ REMOVER

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW AND SENSATIONAL IN CHRISTMAS CARDS
MAKE Extra MONEY FAST
SUPERB SATIN VELOUR & METALLIC Show rich New Cards never before offered. Gets orders fast! Gorgeous Christmas Cards with Name 50 for $1.25 — 80 Assortments. Personalized Book Matches, Stationery, Gifts. Several $1 boxes on approval. IMPRINTS FREE. Write now!
50 for $1.25 With Name FREE Samples
PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 113-J, St. Louis 3, Mo.

TO KEEP WHAT YOU OWN... Put a CASH'S WOVEN NAME on it!
A MUST FOR SCHOOL & COLLEGE
Replacements are expensive and harder to get. Mark your things with your own name, woven to order by Cash's, and prevent most losses. Cash's are a favorite identification with the Services, travelers and students, as well as at home. Ask your Dept. Store, or write us.
Send for FREE folder "101 Ways To Use Cash's Woven Names".
CASH'S, South Norwalk 4, Conn.
PRICES 1 doz. $2.25 9 Doz. $3.25 6 doz. $2.75 12 Doz. $3.75 NO-SO CEMENT 25¢ a Tube

AMAZING CREAM REMOVES UNSIGHTLY HAIR QUICKLY, SAFELY
Acts Below "Razor Line" Without Cutting or Scraping Legs
The modern way to remove ugly hair from your legs is with Neet® Cream Hair Remover. It works deeper than a razor, below the surface of the skin. Safer too from razor cuts and scratches. Neet leaves tender skin soft and smooth, free from razor stubble. Just apply Neet like any cream, then rinse off and hair disappears like magic.

If your skin can't take the sun
Use new Sun Allergy cream
You can't burn . . . you can't blister
● Sensitive to sun? Use new Skolex Sun-Allergy Cream! It's an exclusive new formula that screens out all the harmful ultra-violet rays; you can't burn or blister.
Not for tanning. Skolex is many times more effective than any sun-tan product. It has been scientifically developed for people who are allergic to the sun's rays. Completely protects even the most sun-sensitive skin. Skolex is pleasant to use, goes on smoothly, easily. Get a tube from your druggist and enjoy the sun.
SKOLEX SUN ALLERGY CREAM

The Genuine
Vornado® IS UNEXCELLED

★ IN BEAUTY
★ IN PERFORMANCE
★ IN ENGINEERING PRINCIPLES

There's always one leader. Vornado, the World's Finest Air Circulator, brings you new beauty, better performance and new principles of air circulation that make it unexcelled in the field of air circulation.

Vornado will give you more cooling comfort because it has a deep pitched propeller . . . exclusive twin air injector cones and a special designed outer cowling.

Over 5 million satisfied users are convinced that Vornado will move more air . . . will move it farther in a gentle swirling motion . . . than old fashioned fans.

Get a demonstration from your Vornado Dealer Today!

See Why Vornado is Unexcelled!

Vornado must be good to be imitated!

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES SHOW WHY!

DEEP PITCHED PROPELLER

EXCLUSIVE TWIN CONE DESIGN

☆ THE WORLD'S FINEST AIR CIRCULATOR

A PRODUCT OF THE O. A. SUTTON CORPORATION
1810 W. 2nd ST. WICHITA, KANSAS

what the laws may be or even without knowledge of the laws, that a free society can successfully function. When such a code is generally accepted and is passed on from generation to generation, only a minimum of restrictive laws is needed to interpret that code of ethics to the people as a whole and to enforce it upon the small minority who do not by their own understanding and nature respond to it. In short, with such a code a free society can function successfully.

If Doctor Schweitzer is correct—and no one who has felt the spell of his personality can doubt it—the realization of the truth of his beliefs should result in much greater stress upon moral and ethical and spiritual values among the free nations of the world. It should also result in a clearer realization that the ruthless cruelty of the Communist imperialism is the almost inevitable consequence of the lack of a humanitarian code of conduct and a lack of respect for the lives and welfare of our fellow men.

If one phrase could be used to characterize Stalin's philosophy, it would be "disdain for life." The ruthless sacrifice of the lives of others, the cruel oppression, the use of might to force other men to conform, are all the exact antithesis of what Albert Schweitzer stands for. The advocacy of godlessness by Stalin is at the opposite pole from the devout worship of God by that great-souled man with whom I talked in the hospital that he had built in the African jungle.

If you think it through, you cannot escape the conclusion that if men do not adopt an ethic which carries with it a respect for the dignity of others and hence the submission to a personal moral restraint, then the only two other alternatives are anarchy with inevitable chaos and demoralization, and rule by might with decrees and an order established by ruthlessness, as is done by the Communists. Thus Stalin, by attempting to destroy religion, perpetuates in his totalitarian system the need for terror as the principal tool of government.

Schweitzer's emphasis on "reverence for life" leads to a truer definition of liberalism than the outright materialist will accept. By this definition, liberalism is the endeavor to win for each person the enjoyment of the maximum freedom of a social, economic, civil and religious nature consistent with the enjoyment of the same degree of freedom by his fellow men. "In a society imbued with true liberalism," Doctor Schweitzer remarked near the close of our last conversation, "a highly developed state of civi tion occurs and can be maintained. A n ability to be a pioneer of progress dep therefore, on his being a thinker and o being free. And he must be free if he launch his ideals out into general life, added with evident conviction. His looked earnestly and directly into mine said, "A genuine state of civilization supposes that free men and material spiritual freedom are closely bound up one another."

Schweitzer, a man who has enjoyed little of material wealth, living with an the ill and injured natives in his cro hospital, is the one eminent man of the n with whom I have talked in foreign lands expressed a sympathy for America an understanding of the difficulties and p lems and responsibilities which Am faces in its position of wealth and leade and success. He understands the prob and burdens which come to Americ the wake of, and as an essential part o success in attaining high production, terial welfare and an eminent world posi

Stalin, on the other hand, in personal mand of infinitely greater wealth and sessed of dictatorial powers over the of more people than any other individu the history of the world, revealed to jealousy of America's position, an envy accomplishment, and the hopeful exp tion that an economic crash would t both it and the capitalist system.

Stalin adheres to Lenin, and it was I who said, "But I can't listen to musi often. It affects your nerves, and make want to say stupid, nice things, and s the heads of people who could create beauty. . . . And now you mustn't s anyone's head . . . you might get your bitten off. You have to hit them on the h

But Schweitzer said, "Music is an worship," and speaking particularl Bach's music, "It belongs not to the c but to religious humanity."

Which concept will ultimately prev our world of conflicting ideologies—di for life or reverence for life? The answ that lies in the question: What is the n of man and how was he meant to live?

I believe man was meant to be free. lieve man was intended to respect other I believe there is a God. I believe that half century ahead the philosophy of A Schweitzer will be victorious and th Joseph Stalin will fade. THE

"I can feel that woman staring at my hat—look back and describe her expression for me."

An appreciative family says...

"Mother knows best"

She keeps

Kool-Aid in the Ice Box

by the Pitcher Full-

A 5¢ package makes 2 Quarts!

AT GROCERS

YOUR FAMILY will say you know best how to refresh them when you keep a pitcher full of Kool-Aid in your ice box. It's easy on the family budget . . . a 5¢ package makes 2 full quarts. It saves ice box space, especially in one of the new, space-saving pitchers. It's so easy to make . . . simply dissolve a package of Kool-Aid in 2 quarts water and sweeten to taste. Always chilled and fully blended, it's the easiest and quickest beverage to serve. Your children will love it all year 'round. Six delicious flavors. Keep a pitcher of refreshing Kool-Aid in your ice box ready for your family. They'll say again, "Mother knows best."

Makes 20 Frozen Suckers

"KOOL-AID" IS A REGISTERED TRADEMARK OF PERKINS PRODUCTS CO.

© 1951 PERKINS PRODUCTS CO.

A time-out with a cooling drink,
A shady place to rest,
At times like these a smoke goes good-
And Luckies taste the best!
(Luckies taste better than any other cigarette!)

Be Happy-Go Lucky!

LUCKIES TASTE BETTE
THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETT

Fine tobacco—and only fine tobacco—can give a better-tasting cigarette. And L.S./M.F.
Lucky Strike means fine tobacco. That's why yo find that Luckies taste better than any other ci rette. So, Be Happy—Go Lucky! Get a carton too

Now here's a tip from me to you,
It's one you ought to try—
Support our boys, buy U.S. Bonds;
Like Luckies, they're a buy!
(Luckies taste better than any other cigarette!)

LUCKIES TASTE BETTER THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETTE because...

L.S./M.F.T.-Lucky Strike Means Fine Tobacc

COPR., THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO

AUGUST 1951 LADIES' HOME 25 CENTS

JOURNAL

THE MAGAZINE WOMEN BELIEVE IN

BURLINGAME PUBLIC LIBRARY

Undiscovered
AMERICAN BEAUTIES

CHRISTINE REED
North Hollywood, California

WOMAN AT THE WINDOW
w could she love a man chained to another man's wife?
NELIA GARDNER WHITE'S novel complete in this issue

HOW—ON WHAT SHE EARNS can she look like that?
See FASHIONS

H HE EARNS that?
S VES

"A SENSE OF BELONGING" can unite a nation's women. INTERVIEW WITH LADY RE ow Sparkling can you be?

makes her teeth parkling bright?.. The answer is IPANA!

really cleansing eeth and mouth, the answer is IPANA!

The answer is IPANA

for cleaner, healthier teeth!

Your charm is magnetic when your smile truly sparkles! And that's what happens when you use Ipana. It gets teeth cleaner, reveals the hidden sparkle of your smile—and helps prevent tooth decay. You'll love Ipana's sparkling taste and tingle, too—leaves your mouth fresher, breath sweeter. Get Ipana today for your Smile of Beauty!

She's always swamped with dates!.. The answer is IPANA!

What makes her mouth so Sparkling fresh?.. The answer is IPANA!

A Product of Bristol-Myers

Remember—to reduce tooth decay—no other tooth paste (ammoniated or regular) has been proved more effective than Ipana!

No rice but pre-cooked Minute Rice can do these startling tricks!

BUSY-DAY DINNER . . . IN 15 MINUTES!

Cubed Steak Dinner Plate. Start dinner late, and serve it on time! Wonderful, speedy Minute Rice will help you. Like this: Prepare 1⅓ cups (5-oz. package) Minute Rice as directed. While the rice is getting ready, cook julienne carrots, and pan-broil cubed steak. (For extra dash, season the carrots with chopped mint or chives in melted butter.) All done—and delicious! Minute Rice turns out white and fluffy with no trouble for you!

SOUTHLAND SUPPER . . . IN 24 MINUTES!

Hopping John (Minute Rice style). Combine ⅓ cup chopped onions, 2 teaspoons salt, dash of pepper, 2½ cups water in saucepan; bring to boil. Add 1 box (12 oz.) Birds Eye Lima Beans; bring again to boil, cover, cook 5 minutes. Add 1⅓ cups (5-oz. package) Minute Rice, cook 5 minutes longer, cover, remove from heat, let stand 10 minutes. Fry 8 slices bacon, diced. Add bacon and 3 tablespoons bacon drippings to rice mixture. Serves 6—with a wonderful surprise! You can taste the full flavor in every grain of rice.

Put it in water, bring to a boil. No more cooking's needed! With Minute Rice you get fluffy, snow-white perfect rice every single time!

GLAMOUR LUNCH . . . IN 27 MINUTES!

Rosy Rice Ring. Spectacular to look at, heavenly to eat, and very easy! Just combine 1⅓ cups (5-oz. package) Minute Rice, 1¾ cups tomato juice, ½ teaspoon salt in saucepan. Bring to boil. Reduce heat and simmer 2 minutes. Cover, remove from heat, let stand 10 minutes. Sauté ¼ cup chopped onion in 2 tablespoons butter 5 minutes; add to rice. Pack firmly in well-greased 7-inch ring mold. Let stand 10 minutes. Unmold; fill with creamed peas to which grated sharp cheese has been added. Makes 6 servings.

Fix Minute Rice with vegetables, meat, or fish. And taste that heavenly rice—with the full flavor of the other foods in every single grain.

Fix it with tomato juice in[stead] of water—see the rosy-red[dish] you get! Try Minute Rice [in] consommé, with fruit juice—[it] takes on color—as no regular rice can do.

For festive company dishes, for glorious ways with leftovers—keep the big, economy size of Minute Rice on hand! This fancy, long-grained, pre-cooked rice makes marvelous dishes in a wink!

★ NO WASHING! ★ NO RINSING! ★ NO DRAINING! ★ NO STEAMING!

For perfect rice without the work ★★★ pre-cooked

MINUTE BRAND RICE

A Product of General Foods

Journal Contents

KVIII NO. 8 August 1951

Journalities

Memo from LAURA RENDINA: "My ›n, Gigi, says (hedging for five more inutes before bed), 'Tell me the story of ›ur life.' One word sums it up: family. I ›ve five children, from twenty-four to seven years old, two boys and three girls. When adolescence attacked the family I began writing in order to preserve my sanity and sense of humor. Adolescence is wonderful and tragic and preposterous—and almost impossible to live with." (See The Biggest Flounder, Page 42.) • The ›an who did the cheery nun for Dorothy Black's Let the Secret Die (Page 34) is ROBERT G. HARRIS, whose home and tudio is in Westport, Connecticut. First ›n his life are his wife and their two children, Craig and Marcia; second is an English bulldog, who growls that the "bulldog" whose photo appeared recently in this column was in fact a boxer. Artist Harris sometimes escapes conversations with the dog and children by dallying around in he sky in his own airplane. ▪ Readers—lso writers—who suspect editors of be-ng ogres will be pleasantly surprised to ›eet our ANNE EINSELEN, Assistant)gre in charge of discovering and de-eloping new writers. In the past five years her "discoveries" have averaged six a year for fiction, plus twenty-two articles and many miscellaneous items. Anne takes tender interest in every manuscript submitted—and an intense personal delight in every purchase. She herself is the uthor (under the name Anne Paterson) f three novels, Queen Street Story, Sleepless Candle and Take These Hands. And she is just about the sweetest irl we know.

aura Rendina

bert G. Harris

nne Einselen

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

Woman at the Window . . . . . Nelia Gardner White 36

Fiction

Let the Secret Die . . . . . Dorothy Black 34
Melville Goodwin USA (Fourth part of seven) John P. Marquand 38
The Biggest Flounder . . . . . Laura Cooper Rendina 42
This is Your Home . . . . . Anne Homer Warner 56

Special Features

Divorces are Not Crimes: They are Tragedies . Dorothy Thompson 11
You, the American Wife 11
There's a Man in the House . . . . . Harlan Miller 23
We Must Pay for Our Own Room on Earth . . Margaret Hickey 40
Our Own Young Marrieds 44
Baby Killer: Could Your Hospital be Guilty? . . . . Alice Lake 52
How America Lives: Unharried Housewife Betty Hannah Hoffman 119

General Features

Our Readers Write Us 5
Under-Cover Stuff . . . . . Bernardine Kielty 14
Reference Library 24
Making Marriage Work . . . . . Clifford R. Adams 26
I Need Some Help! (The Sub-Deb) . . . . . Edited by Jan Weyl 28
Diary of Domesticity . . . . . Gladys Taber 31
Fifty Years Ago in the Journal ▪ Journal About Town 33
Ask Any Woman . . . . . Marcelene Cox 79
"Leaflets Three, Leave it Be!" . . . . Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 106 Life is ▪ Picnic . . . . . Cornelia McCook 136

Fashions and Beauty

How Does She Do it on What She Earns? . . . Wilhela Cushman 46
The Timeless Fashion of Black . . . . . Ruth Mary Packard 48
First Fall Dresses . . . . . Nora O'Leary 50
Train Appliqué 105
Sound Yourself Out . . . . . Dawn Crowell Norman 126

Food

Blowing Hot and Cold . . . . . Ann Batchelder 54
Line a Day . . . . . Ann Batchelder 58
Best I Ever Ate . . . . . Gertrude B. Crum 97
Delicious Money Savers . . . . . Louella G. Shouer 124
Conversation Piece . . . . . Ruth Mills Teague 140

Interior Decoration

Teapot Treasures . . . . . Henrietta Murdock 112

Poetry

Transfiguration . . . . . Robert P. Tristram Coffin 73
Letter . . . . . Raymond Kresensky 82
Summer Love . . . . . Eva Tuttle Walsh 93
A Girl's Prayer . . . . . Elizabeth Abbot 102
Straw in an Ill Wind . . . . . Georgie Starbuck Galbraith 117
Lullaby . . . . . Elizabeth McFarland 143

Cover Photograph by Eve and Edwin Bower Hesser

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address:
LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1951 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries, 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Traysser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Vice-President and Director of Research; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

H, No WIPE

r! New DREFT does both and dishes SHINE

Self-Washing Dreft Means No Work Left No Wash, No Wipe Tonight!

OU do is RINSE! nd pans glisten!

d of k in Dreft way. ater. shes, ded,

elf- ilm. ean,

pots reft's nder rinses

ds ds

It's magic...sheer magic ...it's self-washing!

No rice but the Eating

Chilled Wesson Salad and Stir-N-Roll Refrigerator Pie

These two summer-tempters prove you save time and beat the heat when Wesson Oil is your helper.

Folks cool off just looking at this lovely Wesson Salad. And your homemade Wesson Dressing takes only a small minute—gives a big, BIG sparkle to salad flavor. Reason: Wesson is so mild...Wesson is so delicate. It never adds strong oily flavor as some other oils do.

Fix a pie the sensational new way—STIR-N-ROLL. Easy does it! No cutting in shortening, no guessing about liquid. You measure Wesson and milk together. And you stir the dough, then roll between waxed paper. No muss!

Reach for Wesson Oil and start these happy summertime dishes now.

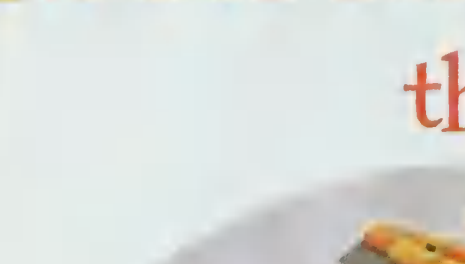
BUSY-DAY DINNER . . . IN 15 MINUTES

Cubed Steak Dinner Plate. Start dinner late, but get it on time! Wonderful, speedy Minute Rice helps you. Like this: Prepare 1⅓ cups (5-oz. package) Minute Rice as directed. While the rice is getting ready, julienne carrots, and pan-broil cubed steak. Add a dash, season the carrots with chopped mint and butter in melted butter.) All done—and delicious! Rice turns out white and fluffy with no trouble.

MAN-WINNER TOMATO SALAD...

Cut 6 red-ripe tomatoes into wedges or slices. Top with 1 mild onion chopped, parsley to taste, and 2 tablespoons capers (optional). Your dressing is 1-minute quick—and you can vary it so easily. So even this simple tomato salad has new surprise-flavor every day.

WESSON'S 1-MINUTE FRENCH DRESSING



½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. sugar
⅛ tsp. pepper
⅛ tsp. paprika
2 tbsp. vinegar (or lemon juice)
⅓ cup Wesson Oil

Shake together in a covered jar. Shake before serving. Makes ½ cup dressing.

EASY-DO VARIATIONS

Celery Seed Dressing: To ½ cup of Wesson Dressing (left), add 2 tsp. sugar, ¼ tsp. celery seed, and 1 tbsp. catsup. Rub 4 butter-type crackers with garlic and crumble into dressing. (For fruit or green salads, too.)

Chili Dressing: To ½ cup of Wesson Dressing, add ½ tsp. sugar, 2 tbsp. chili sauce. (For greens, meat or seafood salads.)

Put it in water, bring to a boil. No more cooking's needed! With Minute Rice you get fluffy, snow-white perfect rice every single time!

Fix Minute Rice with vegetables, meat, or fish. And taste that heavenly rice—with the full flavor of the other foods in every single grain.

★ NO WASHING! ★ NO RINSING!

For perfect rice without the work ★★★ pre-cooked

Pie

dal Flour

n der—ut lumps.

used...

in layers hour betes before ether):

n slightly.
. square).
of paper.
ry if table

aks, mend er...or by will cling an. Care-into pan.

rk to pren brown) lt in pas-

ift Co., Inc. l Mills, Inc.

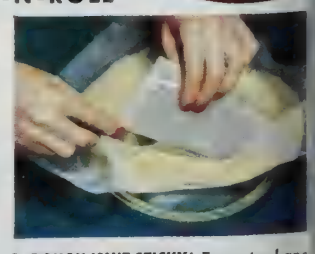
Wesson Oil

America's No. 1 Salad and Cooking Oil



SEE HOW EASY! EVEN BEGINNERS SUCCEED WITH STIR-N-ROLL

1. NO CUTTING IN SOLID SHORTENING! Pour Wesson Oil and cold milk together in measuring cup without mixing. Pour all at once into flour and stir lightly.

2. NO MESSY FLOURED BOARD! Place rounded dough between sheets of waxed paper. Gently roll out dough to edges of paper. Peel off top sheet.

3. DOUGH ISN'T STICKY! Easy to hand Hold paper over pan. Dough clings til you gently loosen it into pan. T near edge, fold under and flute.

Our Readers Write us

›im View of Motherhood

Chicago, Illinois

Dear Editors: Who says motherhood is › wonderful? I say "Nuts!" It's the ıost dreary, monotonous routine a woman ın have. My childless married friends ›ok at me with tears in their eyes—and I ›ok at them with the same feeling. No, I on't love my child. But he's here to be ıken care of. Sincerely,

MARY CUNNINGHAM

Editors take letters from readers seriusly—so seriously that we feel other readrs should share the* JOURNAL*'s answer to Mrs. Cunningham, which follows. ED.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Dear Mrs. Cunningham: We pick your ttter up and think about it. There is much ıat we wish we knew. We wish we knew hat made it so, and why you wrote it.

Let us begin by saying that you are not lone. More than one mother has disliked er child.

At least you face the facts. Your child ıay suffer less than one whose mother ıkes her own confusion out on him. But hat has made it so? Perhaps the way for ou has been a hard one—and now this ıdded burden.

It may be that you are young. It's all a art of growing up, you know, this thing changing focus. A child is centered all "I." But with the years come thoughts others. The same is true of nations too. Ve leave the problem in your hands. We ish something we could say would help. Ve only know there's little chance of hapıess within one's personal boundaries.

Sincerely,

ERMA W. KELLEY

Editorial Assistant,

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

ire-Trap Costumes

Downingtown, Pennsylvania

Dear Beatrice Gould: A seven-year-old rl, the daughter of a neighbor, came back om ballet class, pirouetted from living om to kitchen, did a triumphant whirl ext to the stove, and became a flaming rch. The lovely bouffant netting, which is ttle more than mosquito netting, sized and nted, burned like a wick, and the perfect ttle-girl body was all but consumed in the ame.

Hundreds of children will step into allet costumes made up of this theatrical uze. Will their mothers be sure to buy tting which won't go whoosh if someone cks a cigarette at it? The casual sale of aterials which could be impregnated so at they are flameproof, but just aren't, ıould be prohibited.

Sincerely yours,

SYLVIA L. DECKER

on't Mention It

Elizabeth, New Jersey

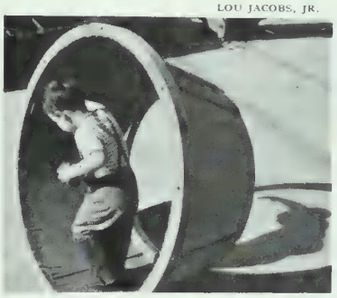
Dear Editors: Many of my friends in igh school have defective speech and we l have a common problem. Most adults, ven some teachers, feel that since we ren't babies there is no reason to overlook ır handicap. To them, constant remindrs about our stuttering, stammering and ast speech are the best and only cure. hese "reminders" in many cases make ıe situation worse.

For the most part we want others to rget our handicaps. We are aware of em. Most folks seem to think we aren't.

Sincerely,

EVELYN COSKEY

Toys From Junk



Los Angeles, California

Dear Editors: There are "toys" to be found in every junk yard, if parents will only use as much imagination in finding them as the children do in playing with them. Here are pictures of some of the "toys" children play with here at the Modern Play School. They come from war-surplus stores, lumber and junk yards, builders' supply houses.

Mrs. Phyllis Fleishman, the school's energetic founder, reports that the children prefer these toys. Play with real things is a constant challenge to their inventiveness. Sincerely,

LOU JACOBS, JR.

LOU JACOBS, JR.

Rolling a hoop from the inside is fun.

The real thing is cheaper than a toy.

A man likes a man-sized wheelbarrow.

Well—who expects them to keep clean?

No Wash, No Wipe Tonight!

New DREFT does both and dishes SHINE

. . . . . All YOU do is RINSE!
Even pots and pans glisten!

You don't wash . . . Instead of washing dishes just let them soak in warm Dreft suds for 2 minutes. Dreft floats grease and food particles away. Your hands barely touch the dishwater. All you have to do is rinse the dishes, giving a swish of the cloth where needed, and presto! They're done!

You don't wipe . . . New Self-Washing Dreft leaves no dishwater film. It washes dishes and glasses so clean, they shine—even without wiping.

You don't scour . . . Even pots and pans practically soak clean. Dreft's amazing "floataway" action gets under grease . . . lifts it off. Then grease rinses away . . . without hard scouring.

It's magic . . . sheer magic . . . it's self-washing!

BEAUTY TIP!

New Dreft is so mild, and your hands are in water so little, it leaves hands beautifully white and soft!

You, too, could be more charming, attractive, popular

Know This Secret of Summer Charm:

- Odo-Ro-No is the only deodorant guaranteed to stop perspiration and odor for 24 hours or double your money back.
- No other deodorant is so harmless to fabrics.
- No other deodorant is safer for skin.

Double your money back if you aren't satisfied that new Odo-Ro-No is the best deodorant you've ever used. Just return unused portion to Northam Warren, New York.*

New

ODO·RO·NO

CREAM or SPRAY

GUARANTEED Full 24 Hour Protection

SEND FOR

7 Secrets of Popularity

written under the direction of

Laraine Day

Get this wonderful book now – prepared for you under the direction of lovely Laraine Day, star of screen, radio, and TV. Regular $1.00 edition, it's yours for only 15c (to cover postage and handling) . . . see the coupon. It gives dozens of valuable tips that will help fill up your date book, make you happier, more popular—all in one book for the first time! Clip the coupon now!

Find Tips Like These In This Amazing Book:

12 questions to ask yourself about your charm

How to be your real self

How to talk to a date

Some tricks for forgetting self-consciousness

NORTHAM WARREN, Box No. 1500, Dept. A-1, Grand Central Station, New York 17, N. Y.

I enclose 15c in coin (to cover postage and handling) and the word "Odo-Ro-No" from the cardboard container of an Odo-Ro-No Spray or Cream package, for which send me the new book—"7 Secrets of Popularity."
(Offer good while supply lasts.)

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

Old Lovers Never Die

Kansas City, Missouri

Dear Editors: I can be on the brink of verbally tearing my patient spouse to pieces, but after reading your column, Ask Any Woman, my bad temper dissolves in a series of ever-increasing chuckles, till I find myself in love with him all over again. Yours truly,

MRS. FRED HARRIS

Good Neighbors First

McMinnville, Oregon

Dear Mrs. Bass: I am sorry Mary G. ever asked Dorothy Thompson the question, "What is a world citizen?" I am sorry in the same way that I am when I hear someone bluntly say to a child, "There is no Santa Claus."

I am just an average housewife with just an average education; however, I do have a daughter and this is what I would say to her if she asked me the question Mary G. asked:

"My dear, there are many, many world citizens. They are not easy to find because they wear no label; they may be white or black or yellow; they are members of all races and ideologies; they are loyal citizens of their own countries and they are good neighbors. World citizenship is a state of consciousness. A world government will appear, not as the result of a conflict between two world powers, but when the hearts and minds of mankind are ready for it. Achieve your own world citizenship by being true to your highest concept of equality and brotherhood."

Very sincerely,

USONA H. KNICKERBOCKER

Selling America—Out

Paris, France

Dear Editors: Some of the social stratifications among Americans working for the Government here would make wonderful material for Marquand to probe. Everyone is very, very social; the homes they live in are exquisite, help is cheap and hired and fired often. Most of the little children have nursemaids; the older ones go to private schools. The conversations about "personal wine merchants," the exactly right moment to eat Brie cheese, etc., is like a parody on a small-town country club on Saturday night.

In Germany, the new "American social class" was even more obvious. Many behave with grace and integrity. Others just go wild. The Army and occupation personnel have shipped home (also crated without charge) anything that can be classified as "household goods." In Berlin, one couple told us they were just completing their third set of Meissen china. A woman in Bavaria mentioned that she had already sent home nine crates of things she had bought—still waiting to be crated and shipped were the portraits of her three children, painted for about $25 each by a good, but very poor, German artist. We heard representatives of America say that one of the things they would miss in the States was "the little artisan that one can hire for the day for just nothing." A very frequent bit of patter is the phrase, "These people have no respect for the individual." But when an American hostess took us, with other women guests, to stare at the kitchen in her requisitioned house after a big party (the low sinks, bad lighting, etc., all put in twenty years ago, were presumably indicative of German philosophy), there were five German women still cleaning up at one o'clock at night. The impression some Americans make is bad, I'm afraid; the hate engendered, deep.

Sincerely,

(Name withheld by request)

For Helpers in Mental Hospitals

Minneapolis, Minnesota

Dear Editors: Along with the stepped-up volunteer activity in mental hospitals came a need for guidance in introducing the volunteer to his responsibilities and opportunities. For this reason, the University of Minnesota Press has published a practical, simply written booklet, Handbook for Volunteers in Mental Hospitals, by Ida J. Davies. Volunteer groups may order the booklet in quantity lots from the University of Minnesota Press.

Sincerely,

JANET SALISBURY

(Continued on Page 8)

Meds Meds Meds Meds

Like to swim?

IT'S SAFE ANY DAY WITH MEDS TAMPONS!

4 out of 5 doctors report it's safe to swim on "those days" (according to a recent national survey of 900 leading gynecologists and obstetricians). Naturally, the water should not be too cold . . . and you should use Meds, the sanitary protection that's worn internally. With Meds you can swim, bathe, dance in perfect comfort.

Can single girls use tampons?

YES! Hundreds of thousands of single girls use Meds every month. Each Meds has an improved applicator for easy, quick use. Meds eliminate pads, pins, belts and end chafing, odor. Three absorbency sizes for extra comfort . . . Regular, Junior, Super.

We're so sure you'll like Meds better, we want you to try them at our expense.

FREE! Send your name and address for a free sample package of Meds in plain wrapper. Write Miss Olive Crenning, Personal Products Corp., Dept. LH-8, Milltown, N. J. Check desired size: Regular ( ), Super ( ), Junior ( ). One package to a family. U. S. only.

Meds Meds Meds Meds

YOUR HAIR STAYS exactly the way you arrange it

Around the clock, around the calendar, and all around the country – Venida Hair Nets rule the waves. Hand made of finest human hair. Styles for every hairdo in perfectly matching shades.

Colors 20c 12 for $2.25 single or double mesh Grey, white 25c 12 for $2.75

At drug and dept. stores

VENIDA The Guaranteed HAIR NET rules the waves

TISTIC MRS. RALPH HAMMERAS SAYS:

"You shop Comfortably at Stanley Hostess Parties"

MRS. HAMMERAS, charming wife of a movie studio director of photography, and herself prominent in artistic circles in her city, is an enthusiastic STANLEY Party hostess. She has held many of these parties and says she intends to hold many more. "You can't match the comfort and convenience of shopping at your own STANLEY Party," Mrs. Hammeras declares. "Just imagine! No fighting through traffic! No elbowing through crowds! Instead, you enjoy a sociable hour or so with your guests right in your own living room. And, while you're having this fun, your friendly STANLEY Dealer demonstrates for your selection STANLEY'S many QUALITY PLUS Products! Products to improve personal grooming! Products to save time and work in practically every housekeeping task."

Mrs. Ralph Hammeras, in her beautiful, Spanish-type home, 1560 North Avenue 46, in the Eagle Rock section of Los Angeles, Calif.

It's Fun to Hold Your Own Stanley Hostess Party

You just invite in your STANLEY Dealer with a group of your friends and neighbors.

ur friendly Dealer, as one of ir guests, sees that every has fun, gets welcome gifts.

While your Dealer demonstrates STANLEY QUALITY PLUS Products, you all shop for those you need.

ur Dealer presents you, in urn for your cooperation, a endid Hostess Dividend Gift.

hy not learn for yourself right away why a STANLEY Hostess rty is so popular with guests and so rewarding for the ostess? In the United States and Canada, more than 10,000 these fun-filled shopping Parties take place each day. For formation about how to arrange for your own STANLEY ostess Party . . . or for any information about STANLEY . . . nply do this:—Phone or write your STANLEY Dealer, your arest STANLEY HOME PRODUCTS Branch Office, or communicate direct with STANLEY'S Home Office in Westfield, assachusetts.

STANHOME
A STANLEY HOME PRODUCT

Originators of the famous Stanley Hostess Party Plan

STANLEY HOME PRODUCTS, INC., WESTFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS
Stanley Home Products of Canada, Ltd., London, Ontario

STANLEY LEADS
with more than 150 QUALITY PLUS Products to save women time, work, money:— (1) Polishes and household cleaning preparations (2) Dusters, mops, brushes, etc. (3) Products to improve personal grooming.

Copr. Stanley Home Products, Inc., 1951

(Continued from Page 6)

Teaching That Counts

Cheney, Washington

Dear Editors: I have lived in the Southern States all of my life until recently, and it is my opinion that See How They Run, by Mary Elizabeth Vroman, is the most sincere, intelligent picture of the Negro problem in that section that I have seen. Many teachers, regardless of race, would do well to note Miss Richards' teaching methods in dealing with her "mice."

Sincerely,
MARY TAYLOR

Toward a Better World

Ishpeming, Michigan

Dear Editors: I am a white person, but I do think if more people in today's world would think and act as the Jane Richards and her pupils in the story, See How They Run, we would have a more secure and safe world to live in. Sincerely, MRS. S. P.

Talk's Cheap

Woodsville, New Hampshire

Dear Editors: There seem to be too many people willing to say American schools are no good, as did a reader from Albuquerque, New Mexico. If he is dissatisfied with the American school system, why doesn't he make a study of it—see its tremendous progress in the last one hundred years—and decide for himself what positive action he can take in his community to keep American education growing? Sniping and griping is an American privilege, but positive action is an American responsibility. Sincerely yours,
DORIS E. DEMICK

The Sun Stands Still

The Duke's Cottage
Rudgwick, England

Dear Bruce and Beatrice: On one of our fine days, I went to visit the South Bank Exhibition, which I am sure is all very imposing and a cross between a school classroom and Coney Island (but not so gay). The page that interested me most in the catalogue was the one that said How to Get Out. I am not exhibition-minded, and anyway I was frustrated because what I really went to see was the gardens, and a thing that showed you how the solar system worked. The gardens were not yet open, and the thing that showed the solar system was not working.

I thought the Festival Hall hideous, embodying all that is worst in contemporary art, but I did not like to say so, until Sir Thomas Beecham announced he considered it repellent also. However, to pluck some bright consolation from this curious undertaking, it has not made the South Bank of the Thames look any worse.

Here in the village we have celebrated the festival by opening, at long last, the War Memorial Hall. It has been in the building six long years, whilst we have battled with authorities, weathered endless frustrations from government departments, and driven off hordes of gypsies who filched our timber in the night watches. There was a lot of disagreement, too, about what sort of hall we would build. I wanted a black-and-white barn affair, that would cozy down on the landscape and fit in amongst the surrounding cottages, but in the end a truly amazing structure went up. It looks like a mésalliance between the village school and a rackets court, and could hardly be more hideous, but it is nice inside, with a good dance floor and a proper kitchen.

Another thing worthy of mention is that the committee brought this curious monster to birth without a single quarrel among themselves. I don't know how rare this is in America, but it is a state of things practically unique in an English village.

Any number of people have written me asking for the address of a reliable baby-sitter agency over here, with whom they can leave children while they go out nights. I did not think there was such a thing in England, but I went around and made a few inquiries, and have now unearthed a wonderful institution in London, calling themselves Universal Aunts, Ltd. They, it appears, are ready to go anywhere, and do anything, at any moment, for a quite reasonable fee, and it would be well worth the harried traveler contacting them. With love to you all.
DOROTHY BLACK

First luxurious complexion treatment for hands and body...

Revlon's new Aquamarine Lotion

A miraculous blend of balms scented with costly imported perfumes... smoothes you head to toe... wraps you in fragrance... keeps hands velvet-smooth. Never before a rich, creamy-blue lotion with such a genius for fondling every blessed inch of you!

NOW! Aquamarine Lotion-Soap

The only soap made with Aquamarine Lotion! Same skin-smoothing ingredients, same jewel-color, same fragrance, 3-in-a-box, in your choice of complexion-size or larger bath-size.

5 words of advice for the wife who worries when her husband travels

Ask him to Go Pullman

COMFORTABLE, DEPENDABLE, AND—ABOVE ALL—SAFE!

COPYRIGHT 1951, THE PULLMAN COMPAN

THE WEEKEND GUESTS

US CHUM (Jan. 7): "Hm, real luxury Don't mind spoiling yourself, do you?"

TER (Feb. 25): "G'wan! Honest—you ford to use Cannon Percales on every No! Honest?"

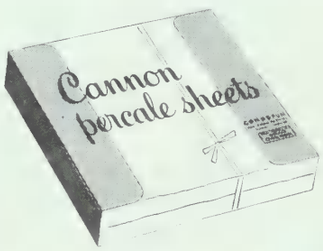
NG MAMA (May 6): "Ha-ha! They do annon Combspun Percales are lighter— to wash!"

GETTER (Aug. 4): "What's for today? Golf... ...swimming...and of course a shopping r my Cannon Combspun Percales!"

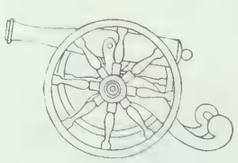
DOG LOVER (Jan. 21): "So these are Cannon Combspun* Percales! Fifi loves her comfort!"

MA-IN-LAW (Mar. 18): "My little boy's wifie is smart! Cannon Combspun Percale is today's best sheet buy!"

HELPFUL (June 3): "Pooh—bedmaking's nothing! These are so fine and lightweight!"



SOUTHERN COUSIN (Feb. 11): "Sho' 'nough, it's the combin' of the cotton that makes Cannon Combspun Percales so soft!"



NOSY TYPE (April 8): "Oh, 'scuse! Those sheets are so smooth, I knew they'd be Cannon Combspun Percales!"

DEMON NEPHEWS (July 15): "Gosh, our sheets at home aren't this strong!"

TRADE MARK CANNON

CANNON Combspun PERCALE SHEETS

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

CANNON TOWELS ▪ STOCKINGS ▪ BLANKETS ▪ BEDSPREADS ▪ CANNON MILLS, INC., N. Y. 13, N. Y. COPR. 1951, CANNON MILLS, INC.

There's never been such a charming, easy way to pretty up, anytime — anywhere!

Angel Face

by POND'S

Look! A mirror, puff and Angel Face! Everything for a glamorous, mat-smooth complexion. This is Angel Face in its adorable new Mirror Case!

"MIRROR CASE

— Velvety foundation and powder in-one . . . now in a sweet, slim case for your handbag

"This is for me!" That's what every girl knows the moment she spies Pond's Angel Face Mirror Case! Golden-etched . . . ivory-smooth . . . it holds the perfect take-it-with-you make-up!

Tuck it in your handbag—and you're carrying real beauty insurance! With just a touch of the Angel Face puff, your complexion is soft-tinted, smooth as velvet! Angel Face stays on much longer than powder—and can't spill!

"It's the most useful bit of prettiness I've ever owned!" says Mrs. Anthony Drexel Duke. Get your Pond's Angel Face Mirror Case today. 6 heavenly skin tones. Just $1*—the most successful beauty dollar you ever spent!

Also in the familiar blue-and-gold boxes—89¢, 59¢ plus tax*

Ladies' Home JOURNAL

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould Editors

FLOWERS AND BUTTERFLIES ON PAPER, CHINESE COURTESY METRO. MUS. OF ART

You, The American Wife

Generally speaking, it is not wise to generalize emotionally about women, especially married women in the United States. If it must be done, it had better be done from a good, safe distance, as the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company has done it, and then only in nice round figures.

In numbers, married women in the United States are gaining rapidly. There are now about 38,000,000 of you, an increase of some 8,000,000 since 1940. This is a record high, not only in absolute numbers but in relation to the adult population as well.

American wives are relatively young—two fifths of you are under 35 years of age and only one sixth are over 55 years. In three fourths of all families the typical wife is somewhat younger than her husband. In only one eighth is she older.

College women have always noted with chagrin that one of the factors influencing a girl's chances of becoming a wife is her educational attainment—the more schooling, the lower are her chances for marriage. This is hindsight, though. Statistics always are. In 1947 the proportion ever married among women at ages 35–40 was almost 95 per cent for those who had completed less than seven years of school—only 83 per cent for women with at least one year of college. But this does not prove the 95 per cent figure would be attained if no women attended college. Besides, the girls with higher education who do marry generally get the men with the greater amount of schooling, and their percentage is increasing.

You, the American wife, can look forward to many years of married life (barring divorce). When a woman 25 years of age marries a man of 30, their joint expectation of life is 36 years—substantially greater than the expected joint lifetime at the turn of the century. When a marriage is dissolved by death, it is the wife who is likely to survive; currently the odds are two to one that the wife will outlive her husband.

Divorces are Not Crimes: They are Tragedies

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

More American marriages end in divorce than any others in the Western world, and the dissolution of marriages contributes to a vicious circle. A majority of juvenile criminals are children of divorced parents; in 40 per cent of divorce cases the parties have had previous contacts with juvenile courts; a huge number of divorces occur among adults who are, themselves, the children of divorcees. Second and third divorces, sometimes with new families of children involved, often follow first ones. There is hardly a psychiatrist, judge or sociologist of experience or repute who does not realize the intimate connections between the broken home, mental and character disturbances, and emotionally immaturity—the accompaniments of crime.

Three years ago Judge Paul W. Alexander, of the Court of Common Pleas of Toledo, Ohio, presented to readers of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL a summary of the report of the Legal Section of the National Conference on Family Life, which had been held in the White House the previous May (1948).

We thought this report the most important analysis of what is, perhaps, America's leading domestic problem, to have been put out in our lifetime. Prepared by Reginald Heber Smith, distinguished Boston attorney, for a committee of the American Bar Association, it made revolutionary recommendations for an entirely new philosophical and legal approach to the divorce problem.

The most remarkable things about this report were, first, that it was prepared and endorsed by lawyers, many of whom receive a large part of their income from the operation of the existing divorce laws (or lawlessness), and, second, that it was welcomed and approved, as a whole or in part, by American groups who are often in sharp divergence. American Catholics, for instance, who hold that marriage is indissoluble, nevertheless greeted the recommendations as an improvement of existing practices and an approach which would diminish the number of divorces and contribute to the stability of American family life. The Tablet and The Catholic Mind, both distinguished Catholic publications, so commented, while practically all Protestant bodies greeted the report as a great step forward.

Following the White House conference, and the publication of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL article, the Interprofessional

Executive Editor, Mary Bass • Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman
Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Jan Weyl
Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd
Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray, Elizabeth Goetsch, Robert N. Taylor, Elizabeth McFarland, Charles Stryker Ingerman, Elizabeth Crawford
Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Iris Wilken, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Wilson, Victoria Harris, Helen Schmidt Kennedy, Cornelia S. McCook, Rosemary Jones, Virginia Carr, Sallie Eager Kubly, Lee Stowell Cullen, Jeanmarie Dunn, Elizabeth W. Graham, Isabel G. Phelps, Pauline Stieglitz, Erma W. Kelley, Janice H. Bauder, Dolores Knapp, Dorothy Robinson

Truly a Miracle of Mildness!

New, Improved VEL

now brings you the safest way of all to wash fine fabrics

New Vel bursts into suds in cooler, safer water than even the finest soap flakes... and every woman knows the cooler the water, the safer it is! Yes, even delicate washable colors stay lovely up to 10 times as long.

New Vel is mild enough for heirloom laces... the softest skin. Even after washing dishes, your hands will prove how unbelievably mild new Vel is.

Stockings stay sheerer looking, lovelier longer—no soap scum... no soap fading... no alkali.

*VEL is the trade-mark of the Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co.

New VEL is unbelievably Mild!

Commission on Marriage and Divorce Laws was set up under the chairmanship of Judge Alexander, with an advisory council composed of eminent lawyers, churchmen of the three leading faiths, psychiatrists and sociologists, to further this reform.

Among professional groups who are dealing directly with problems of family relations, the movement has been snowballing. But to reach the point where it will affect legislators, far wider public interest must be enlisted, and we think that the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL is again the place to appeal to public opinion, especially that of women, whose power we, like our publishers, never underestimate.

The forty-eight states have divorce laws that so differ among one another in important respects that a citizen may not know what his marital status in one or another state is. This fact is of concern to members of the Interprofessional Commission. They quote Justice Jackson, of the U. S. Supreme Court, who once remarked, "If there is one thing that the people are entitled to expect from their lawmakers it is rules of law that will enable individuals to tell whether they are married, and if so, to whom!"

But a uniform divorce law would not of itself contribute anything substantial toward achieving what must be a primary aim of any civilized society—the protection of the family, as its basic social unit.

The problem is much more fundamental. The trouble is the legal philosophy which characterizes the laws of all states, whether these be as "liberal" as those of Nevada, or as "reactionary" as those of New York. This philosophy assumes that one or the other of the parties is "innocent" or "guilty," and that the granting of a divorce is an award to the party wronged, thus making a divorce action a quasi-criminal proceeding. There is no premise in such laws that the end of a divorce action should be diagnosis and therapy to accomplish what is best for the family and hence for society.

And although 85 per cent of divorces are uncontested, the idea that divorce is an antagonistic proceeding demanding defenses and recriminations is upheld in law, while it does not exist in reality.

The concept of innocence or guilt opens the way for every sort of vilification, vindictiveness and outright perjury, all these being winked at by judges who fully realize that the law itself is unreal and even nonsensical, and the same concept opens the way to extortion and blackmail.

THE present divorce laws derive their premises from medieval ecclesiastical courts which once exclusively dealt with problems of marital relations. Our laws governing domestic relations spring from the canon (church) laws of England. The early English secular law was one of the few legal systems which forbade, without qualification, an absolute divorce. Until 1850 English couples desiring divorce had to get it by a special act of Parliament, and until about 1840 Americans had to apply to state legislatures. Not until then were divorce requests turned over to the juridical branches of state governments.

But these courts took over procedures which the medieval courts had employed in litigating cases for separation, not absolute divorce. They accepted the procedures of these earlier equity courts, but not their premise—that marriage is not dissoluble. Thus American civil action for divorce developed into an action both for breach of contract and for personal wrong, the plaintiff having to prove the defendant guilty of one or another form of misconduct, the defendant being able to bring countercharg The result: if each could prove the misco duct of the other, the court would have sustain the marriage—a final reductio absurdum! To that must be added the oth absurdity: that if both parties, witho charges of misconduct, desire a divorce whatever reasons, no court can grant For that is "collusion."

NOW, it must be said for the medie courts that they always operated on premise, not of punishing the guilty but upholding the family. They allowed sepa tions—of a suffering wife from an intole ble husband, or vice versa—because family could only thus survive. Most Am ican divorces are in fact granted today the sake of the real or imagined happin of the parties, without regard to the fam or community.

The Interprofessional Commission p poses to abolish the whole quasi-crimi nature of divorce proceedings and put th into entirely new courts, modeled on juvenile courts, whose purpose is not "punish" a "guilty" child, but to rest him as a normal member to the commun

The courts they propose would seek ascertain the cause of a broken marri For marriages are broken by divo divorce merely le izes a break w has already occur And the misbeha of one or the party, where it tually exists, is al invariably the r of the break, no cause.

The proposed Family Court, accurately descr as an Administr Tribunal, would talents outside legal system—ps atrists, clergy, t ers—in an att to conciliate ma couples before are permitted to file an action for div There would be no public charges countercharges of a quasi-criminal na The judge would have the complete f record before him. If he allowed a ma to be dissolved, it would be for th reasons, not trumped-up ones, reaso certained in private, and judgment with family welfare in mind.

The American Bar Association's also stresses that "the cure of marria does not lie in easy divorce, but in marriage." . . . Nothing will cure th resulting from broken homes "unle parties are inspired with a desire, a nial urge, to make a go of it." Th indeed much that should be acknowl (and copied) by non-Catholics, in th nuptial instructions and posting of required by the Catholic Church to p hasty marriages and to inspire the with a sober sense of the responsibilit are assuming.

"Marry in haste, repent at leisu no less true because it is an "old s but the saw suggests leisure in r ance as well as in decision to "Marry in haste, repent in haste" means rushing into legal action aft first few tiffs and disappointments. of American divorces occur before t ties have been married three yea marriage, in our opinion (and in Alexander's), should be legally anc lutely dissolved before it has existe certain number of years, and until "cooling off" period.

Divorce (like marriage) is a huma tional and psychological problem. only a few states set up family co the model recommended by the In fessional Commission, the results w most certainly lead to a nationwide A broken marriage is not a crime human and social tragedy. TH

Unless old men dream dreams, the young men who are their children will rarely see visions. The spiritual poverty of one generation often roots in the failure of the preceding generation to leave any great legacy of unfulfilled dreams. The venerable company at the Wailing Wall, who so loudly condemn the "lack of idealism" in the new breed of youngsters, also condemn themselves. When old men have not handed on to their children the disturbance of high dreams, it is hard for the children to discover the atmosphere in which seeing visions is natural. —HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK: from Today is Mine, compiled by Thomas Curtis Clark (Harper and Brothers, 1950, used by permission).

Schoolmates—Playmates
Avondale Corduroy and Plaids in

Companion Colors

Easy for you to make... fun for them to wear... these brother-sister change-abouts in Avondale Corduroy and Plaids. The sturdy, fine ribbed corduroy... in 29 wonderful colors... is a cinch to sew. The Sanforized* plaids, in 15 gay patterns that pair with the corduroy, come in classic tartans, rich overplaids and bright checks... and they're in stay-fast colors. Look for the Avondale label in ready-to-wear, and fabrics-by-the-yard.

AVONDALE

CHAMBRAYS • NOVELTY WEAVES
CORDUROYS • SEERSUCKERS
PLAIDS • DENIMS • TICKINGS
Sold through Southeastern Cottons, Inc.

58 Worth Street, New York 13

*Residual shrinkage less than 1%

Make jaunty little suits for school . . . overalls for play . . . in Avondale Corduroy. Add shirts . . . in perky Avondale Plaids. Boy's jacket, short pants, overalls and shirt . . . Advance Pattern, No. 5881. Girl's jacket, skirt, overalls and shirt . . . Advance Pattern, No. 5880. Both in sizes 2 to 8.

New Shasta Cream Shampoo

Sparks your hair with brighter, richer color

Blonde hair gleams with bright gold

Brunette hair dances with dark fire

Red hair takes on a burnished glory

Gray, White hair shines with silver

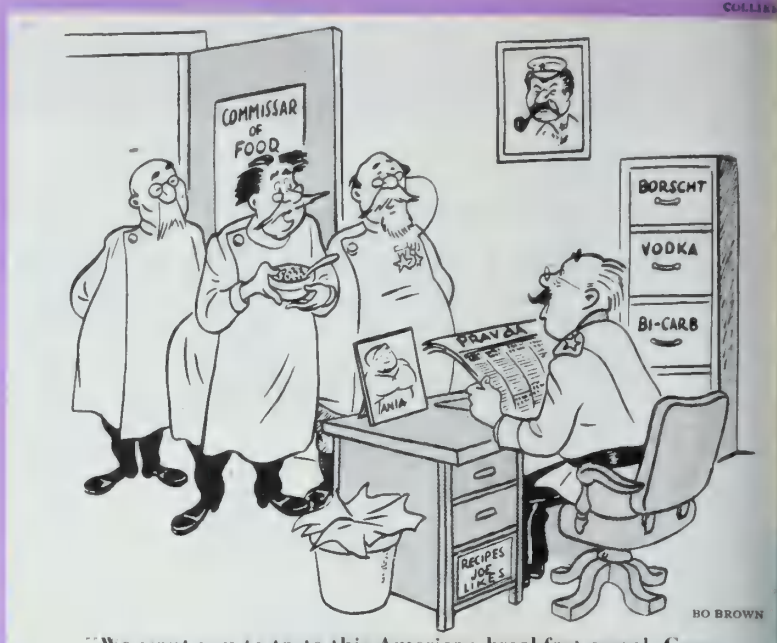
Not a tint! Not a dye! But a super cleansing shampoo that makes even dull-looking hair sing with brighter color

A DAZZLING LIFT! New lanolin-enriched Shasta Cream Shampoo glorifies your natural hair color. It does not add artificial color to your hair, but gives your own true color a dazzling lift.

"SUPER" CLEANS HAIR! New Shasta contains an amazing sparkle-giving cleanser that "super" cleans your hair. This super cleansing action is the secret of the shining, sparkling color after your Shasta shampoo. For Shasta leaves each strand so radiantly clean the natural color sparkles like sunshine streaming through a clean window pane.

SHASTA IS SAFE! Yet for all its color-sparkling magic, Shasta is safe. Lathers out color-dulling grime. Leaves in precious natural oils your hair needs to be soft, healthy, glamorous.

MAKE THIS CONVINCING TEST TODAY



BEFORE SHAMPOOING, snip off a lock of hair. Put this lock aside while you shampoo the rest of your hair with new Shasta.

AFTER SHAMPOOING, when hair is dry, compare the unwashed lock with your soft and radiant Shasta-washed hair. If not convinced that new Shasta sparks your hair with brighter, richer color, return the jar to Procter & Gamble and get your money back in full.

Big economy jar 4 full ounces 89¢
Regular size . . . 57¢

NEW COLOR-SPARKING Shasta "SUPER" CLEANS SAFELY
DOES NOT ROB HAIR OF NATURAL OILS

"We want you to taste this American breakfast cereal, Commissar, before we decide whether or not we invented it!"

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

AN excellent book that we got at late is JOURNEY FOR OUR TIME. This is made up of the journals of the Marquis de Custine, written during his travels in Russia in 1839, and so surprisingly like the accounts of reporters in Russia today in its estimate of the Russian people and what they will take, that it has profound significance. This really is a book not to be missed! Wrote De Custine:

"They wish to rule the world by conquest, they mean to seize by armed force the countries accessible to them, and thence to oppress the rest of the world by terror."

"The observer cannot visit places or look at anything without a guide."

"Here, to lie is to protect the social order, to speak truth to destroy the state."

"The diplomatic corps and Westerners in general have always been considered by this government, with its Byzantine spirit, and by Russia as a whole, as malevolent and jealous spies."

"Russia sees Europe as a prey which our dissensions will sooner or later deliver up to her; she foments anarchy among i in the hope of profiting by a corruptio she promotes because it is favorable to h view."

"I do not blame the Russians for bei what they are. I blame them for preten ing to be what we are."

It doesn't seem possible, does i that this was 1839! The book is ar fully translated by Phyllis Pen Kohler, and there is a good introduc tion by Gen. Walter Bedell Smith.

•

When we dropped out of the a onto the equator in East Africa, w expected to be dodging lions an expiring with the heat. But we wer never hot. We slept under two an sometimes three blankets every nigh And we never saw a lion.

Imagine a wide, wide plain, and out it a vast mountain rising to 19,590 fee eternally snow-covered on the equato The plain is Amboseli, and the mou tain is Kilimanjaro, the most beautif

(Continued on Page 16)

One of Africa's rare sights: a tribe of Pygmies deep in the forest.

An outstanding value in Living room luxury by KROEHLER

Exciting NEW fabrics
Glamorous NEW colors
Authentic NEW styling

sofa and chair ONLY $199.50
as featured in sculptured damask

Also available in luxurious mohair frieze at moderately higher prices.

New Divided Sofas

Only Kroehler...world's largest furniture manufacturer... can bring you a sofa and chair value like this. Note the graceful flowing lines, the fashionable fabrics and new colors, the corded pillow back and the heavy bullion fringe. Sit in it! Compare the soft, relaxing comfort. Bring new beauty and luxury to your living room now with Kroehler Cushionized* Furniture.

Buy on Liberal Terms
Low Monthly Payments

Luxurious Modern Styles

Now, during August, Authorized Kroehler Dealers all over America are featuring the very newest in furniture styles and colors at sensational value prices. Select yours now.

Crescent-shaped Designs

WORLD'S LARGEST FURNITURE MANUFACTURER

only KROEHLER furniture is Cushionized!

(Say KRAY-LER)

General Offices: Chicago 11, Illinois • In Canada: Stratford, Ontario

I dreamed I was a mermaid in my maidenform bra®

Hear the waves of applause, the oceans of compliments. I'm the luckiest mermaid ever—with a Maidenform bra to give nature a lift! The lure of the sea? Just look at me . . . the dream of young salts and ancient mariners in my beautiful Maidenform bra!

Shown: Maidenform's Maidenette in white satin; also available in broadcloth and nylon taffeta . . . from 1.50. Send for free style booklet, Maidenform, N. Y. 16.*

There is a maidenform for every type of figure.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. ©1951, Maiden Form Brassiere Co., Inc. Costume: Cacciola-Brouillet

(Continued from Page 14)

thing in Nature we have ever seen. Across the plain roam wild animals at large—the last reminder of what life was once like on all seven continents.

•

We didn't see a lion. No. But the grass waved not seven feet away, and through it walked a family of lions, seen by our sharp-eyed native spotter.

And we saw everything else: long, lanky, leaning giraffes; neat, tidy zebras prancing in herds; evil-looking black buffalo, the most dangerous animal in Africa; dik-diks, little antelopes a foot high; gazelles and topi and bushbuck; wart hogs; baboons; colobus monkeys wearing shaggy white shawls; a rhinoceros that stared at us too long for comfort; hippopotamuses by the hundreds standing in the shallow water, yawning; and elephants.

Everybody who knows elephants likes them. "I've been gouged by them more times than I'd like to say," an old-time hunter told us. "But I love 'em."

All the natives of East Africa that we saw were fine upstanding people and, from everything we heard about them, able, practical and independent. This is their country. They are not a problem. Maybe the whites are, but they didn't seem to be—in Uganda, Belgian Congo or Ruanda-Urundi.

In Kenya the whites have made inroads. The British have taken to Kenya like ducks to water. They don't want to leave and why should they? The land is spacious. The climate is delicious. Food is plentiful. Servants are cheap. This is the country of Isak Dinesen's beautiful OUT OF AFRICA, Elspeth Huxley's WHITE MAN'S COUNTRY. It's where King Solomon's Mines was filmed.

We saw many missionaries, and many natives that the missionaries never found. Government workers cadaverous from constant bouts of malaria (but not in Kenya). White hunters of fabled charm. Giant aristocratic Watusis, and Pygmies living in the deep forest. Live volcanoes smoking, and lakes in the craters of old volcanoes. Native women with babies on their backs bending over a hoe. And a Russian countess far away in the hinterland. . . . We could go on and on and on.

•

Churchill, like many a good man of his age, is a bit hard of hearing. So was Roosevelt, and so is Mrs. Roosevelt. The last time that Churchill was in Washington, Dick Rodgers (of the famous Hammerstein-Rodgers team) and Mrs. Rodgers found themselves in the same house with the illustrious ex-prime minister.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Richard Rodgers

"I'd give anything to meet Mr. Churchill," breathed Mrs. Rodgers, and was promptly told that nothing

(Continued on Page 18)

"I'm going to swim every day of my precious two-week vacation . . .

"and play tennis every day until the score is Love-Love . . .

"and dance every night until the stars are tired . . .

"but first, I'm going to buy me a brand-new girdle and a knockout new swimsuit — both of them made with

Lastex
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

the miracle yarn that makes things fit

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
Rockefeller Center • New York

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

RECK HAIRDRESS KEEPS HAIR SOFT AND IN PLACE

ck Hairdress leaves hair soft, lustrous and manageable. ck Hairdress is especially helpful if the ends of the hair ome dry and brittle. Used daily as a hairdressing, fragrant Breck Hairdress keeps hair in place without an oily appearance. Diluted and used as a final rinse after the shampoo, Breck Hairdress leaves hair smooth and silky – easy to arrange.

Breck Hairdress, in the 2½ ounce, 4 ounce and 16 ounce sizes, is available at Beauty Shops and wherever cosmetics are sold.

N H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 1 MASSACHUSETTS
W YORK · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

Clothes are washed with "Hand-done" perfection in the new G-E Activator-Automatic!

1. "You'd think my clothes were washed by a fine hand-laundress. White things gleam, colored things sparkle."

Yes, like gentle washing by hand, G-E Activator® Washing Action is thorough. Each piece is passed through 3 zones of washing action—vigorous, medium, light.

2. "General Electric thorough washing is just what the heavily soiled pieces in my wash need."

Each piece of your wash is dipped, flexed, and gently scrubbed individually—just as in hand laundering. NOT just sloshed around in a tangled mass.

3. "I get such a wonderfully fresh-smelling wash, each and every piece so sweet and clean."

G-E complete rinsing—a spray rinse to kill suds and then a deep rinse—removes loosened soil and hidden soap film, leaves clothes clean-looking, clean-smelling.

4. "Fluffy-dry! That's the way my clothes actually feel, they're spun so thoroughly in my new G-E."

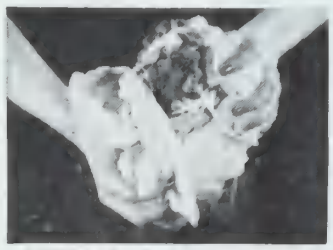
Spin-drying is most important. Unless rinse water is removed thoroughly, some dirt stays. The drier clothes are spun, the cleaner they are.



And all you do is set a dial!

HERE IS finest washing, finest spin-drying—the completely automatic way.

Set the dial of the G-E Activator-Automatic, just once. And it washes, rinses, and damp-dries your clothes automatically. But you can re-set it to shorten or repeat any cycle.

And when you take clothes out of this wonderful G-E, how pleased you'll be with the "hand-done" perfection of every piece.

NOT THE OLD WAY!

NEVER do clothes come out of this washer tangled, matted, soggy, dripping!

BUT THE NEW WAY!

CLOTHES are washed individually and many pieces come out dry enough to iron.

Your G-E dealer has the new Activator-Automatic now.

Go in and see him today or tomorrow, look it over thoroughly. And while you're looking, remember that there is one outstanding feature you can't see.

That is General Electric dependability!

You'll find your General Electric dealer listed under "Washing Machines" in your Classified Telephone Directory. General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

Model illustrated AW5B4. Trim and specifications subject to change without notice

1-YEAR WRITTEN WARRANTY ON ENTIRE WASHER • Never needs oiling • Water-temperature Selector automatically mixes hot and cold water • No bolting • Porcelain top, tub, and washbasket, baked-enamel front and sides • ALL THESE—PLUS 21 OTHER GREAT FEATURES.

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

(Continued from Page 18)

dangerous, all underlined with spying, suspense, sex.

THE FACE OF INNOCENCE, by William Sanson, a bit more psychological, less active physically, is about another dangerous young wife who is a pathological liar, making up romance, until, on the French Riviera, she finds the real thing.

BLOW HOT, BLOW COLD, by Gerald Butler, is more in the line of typical whodunits, but way ahead of most. Fast, plotty, glamorous. Again French Riviera. (And how is it that the Riviera always manages to get the bad eggs in literature? Why not Miami? Or occasionally Bermuda?)

•

"ALL THE LIES YOU HEAR ABOUT THE OZARKS ARE TRUE." (Sign in Eureka Springs, Arkansas.) "There's ghosts in Texas, an' maybe in Oklahoma, but not here. This country is just naturally too rough for ghosts." In the summer: "Even the rabbits was pickin' up their feet, an' blowin' on them. You know these big lizards we have down here. Well, every one of them lizards was carryin' a white-oak chip in his mouth. Why should a lizard carry a chip? To put under his tail, in case he wanted to set down."

All this, and more, you'll find in WE ALWAYS LIE TO STRANGERS: Tall Tales From the Ozarks, by Vance Randolph.

•

The British, bureaucratic to a degree, have their 1950 census all neatly tied up in a newly published Classification of Occupations. In it there are 983 occupation "codes," including Wuzzer, Plonking Machinist, Umbrella Translator, Getter's Helper, and ending, exhausted, with "X." "X" covers "Other Persons (no gainful occupation stated) like Baronets, Gypsies, Legislators, Pages of the Back Stairs, Paupers, Peers, and Vagrants."

•

Paul Gallico, author of* THE ABANDONED, *writes in that we were right about him. "I was indeed a cat," he says, "many generations ago."

WALTER CHANDOHA

Could this be Paul (The Abandoned) Gallico in an earlier incarnation?

The most alluring book about London, for armchair or transatlantic voyage, is IN SEARCH OF LONDON, by H. V. Morton. It is London today, yesterday, and through all the years of her long, slow, tremendously important growth. (H. V. Morton you will remember as author of IN THE STEPS OF THE MASTER.)

GENTLER BLEACHING
s only part of the CLOROX
story!

It's a 4 in 1 product!

1 AN extra-gentle BLEACH

Clorox gives you gentler bleaching, conserves costly linens, because it's free from caustic and other harsh substances . . . made by an exclusive formula developed by x and protected by U. S. patent!

2 A dependable STAIN REMOVER

Clorox is the favorite in millions of homes for removing stains from cottons and linens, and from various household surfaces. Let the Clorox label help with your stain problems.

3 AN effective DEODORIZER

It's so important that your routine cleaning leaves kitchen and bathroom fresh as well as clean. Clorox gives you this big benefit because it deodorizes... in cleaning... in laundering, too!

4 In addition CLOROX is one of the world's great DISINFECTANTS

In laundering, or in routine cleaning, Clorox provides added health protection for your family. It's the most efficient germ-killer of its kind . . . a of disinfectant recommended by hun- of Public Health Departments. See tions on the Clorox label.

u get all 4 in 1 with CLOROX

AMERICA'S FAVORITE

CLOROX BLEACHES
REMOVES STAINS DEODORIZES and Disinfects

CLOROX-CLEAN means
DED HEALTH PROTECTION!

America's proudest cooks...

WINS 52 AWARDS AT STATE FAIR

Mrs. Mabel Wermersen, 2000 S St., Sacramento, is rightly one of America's proudest cooks. Top prize winner in the Home Economics Exhibit at the 1950 California State Fair, Mrs. Wermersen always uses S. O. S. to clean her many pots and pans. Says she – it's faster and easier!

...always reach for S.O.S

use S.O.S for all your pots and pans easily removes BURNED-ON GREASE!

•

© The S.O.S. Co., Chicago, Illinois, U.S.A. • S.O.S. Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

When you've been in and had a swim,
A cigarette tastes great.
But Luckies taste the best of all,
So, friend — why hesitate?

(Luckies taste better than any other cigarette!)

Be Happy— Go Lucky!

LUCKIES TASTE BETTER THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETTE!

Fine tobacco—and only fine tobacco—can gi
you the enjoyment of a better-tasting cigaret
And L.S./M.F.T.—Lucky Strike means fi tobacco. That's why you'll find that Luck taste better than any other cigarette.
Be Happy—Go Lucky! Get a carton tod

At Anacostia Station, folks,
There is a favorite brand —
It's Lucky Strike that we all like,
The smoke that sure tastes grand!

(Luckies taste better than any other cigarette!)

LUCKIES TASTE BETTER THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETTE because...

COPR., THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMP

L.S./M.F.T.-Lucky Strike Means Fine Tobacc

there's a man in the house

By HARLAN MILLER

I half decided to install running water and washbowls in a couple of our bedrooms, to reduce the bathroom traffic. But when I examined plumbers' estimates I concluded that for the time being we'd better be content with old-fashioned water pitchers, and bowls to match. Cheap and picturesque too!

Our little group of deep thinkers agrees that snoring is less likely if you sleep face down. But there ought to be pillows and mattresses with holes in 'em so a man can breathe. . . . Anyhow, no gentleman ever admits to his wife that she snores.

After years of hesitation and delay we finally got part of the south wall of our house painted, under the sleeping-porch windows, where the sun hits it so fiercely all day. . . . And alas, it makes the rest of the old homestead look shabbier than ever.

Our neighbor in the white brick villa complains that almost the only women he sees at his house for dinner are wives of men who make quite a fuss about his wife.

June's newlyweds in our neighborhood are drifting back from their honeymoons, and wishing they'd funneled part of that money into a room cooler for at least one bedroom. On a hot summer day a clever girl can eat all her meals and do most of her work in a bedroom that's air-conditioned.

"One of the most baffling of modern types," broods Peter Comfort, whacking away at the ragweed near his rock garden, "is the bright little woman who wears herself to a frazzle being so nice to other people that she's too exhausted ever to smile with her own family."

This summer's mosquitoes have been the worst since the war. A few of us clear-eyed citizens chipped in $4.50 apiece to get our block sprayed against 'em, but then they flew right over from the next block. . . . Our city fathers seem to be immune to mosquito bites, but maybe not to votes.

My Dream Girl and I are rehearsing a new argument: I want to install a big "picture window" in my den, to eliminate three screens and three storm windows. "But it'll ruin your ventilation!" she argues. "I have four other windows to open," I reply. But I don't seem to be as convincing as I used to be.

If I were a newlywed I'd borrow money (on a twenty-year mortgage, if necessary) to buy at least an acre of land for my bride's dream house. . . . Our hikes around our town confirm my suspicion that houses on fifty-foot lots tend to become slums while your back's turned.

How excellent are the acoustics in our block! I can hear the tender words and tones of the girl across the street to her young man late on a deep summer night. And a few minutes later I can hear what she says to her mother, and what her mother tells her, not tenderly.

A few of our up-to-date friends who want to see everything (but clearly!) are already wearing trifocal glasses, while most of the others are still being coy and silly about bifocals. "Oh, I'm too young for bifocals!" one woman exclaims, and wonders why everything ten feet away looks fuzzy.

Another foible that vexes my ultramasculine neighbor in the enameled-steel house: his wife's ultrafeminine habit of strewing small useless pillows on their living-room couches. Guests surreptitiously toss 'em on the floor, but if he moves 'em it ignites a skirmish.

My gift to the 1951 crop of young husbands is merely a ten-word sliver of personal discovery: The less I say, the more family arguments I win.

Our neighborhood's fathers go to a lot of trouble to kidnap our small sons and take 'em to the pasture to play baseball. But we don't fool 'em; most of 'em, like their mothers, know we want to play ball more than they do.

My jubilant neighbor with the ball-bearing checkbook boasts that he has now concealed his record player, radio and TV sets in the bookshelves. (Except, of course, when, a little embarrassed, he has to expose the TV screen.) Why conceal 'em? They never hide the New York Symphony Orchestra, do they?

One of our town's most advanced thinkers has built a master bedroom in his house with four separate compartments for (1) his shower bath, (2) his tub, (3) his washbowl and medicine cabinet, and (4) his toilet; with four separate doors, too, arranged in a cluster. He claims it's the equivalent of two or three complete bathrooms.

Every time I visit New York I hear about more and more people (including taxicab drivers) paying $25 an hour to psychoanalysts. . . . What most of 'em really need is a pair of rocking chairs and a trusty confidante.

I've argued against glass tumblers in the tiled bathroom for years, without a dent on my Dream Girl. "Plastic cups won't break and cut our feet!" I roar with tender ire. She merely murmurs that when glasses break in the bathroom I'm the one who breaks 'em.

Recently I took Junior (who's eighteen) for a week-end whirl around New York, as a sort of refresher for myself. . . . A drizzly two days, and we went in rather heavily for indoor culture; almost set a world record by marching through the Whitney, Modern and Met galleries in one day. (But he liked Eddie Condon's better!)

After this summer's long motor trip I'm insisting again that we ought to paper a room with road maps. . . . In a singularly gracious and yielding moment my Lady Love agrees; she suggests I paper the basement storage room with 'em.

Some of the girls at the bridge table argue that if husband and wife sleep in one single bed it proves they love each other more than people who have two big double beds side by side. . . . Shucks, all it proves is that the double-bedders have more room and more money.

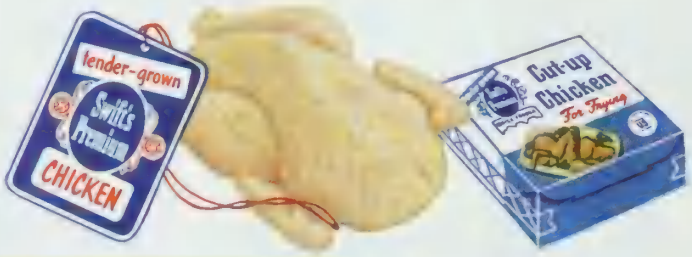
The man next door borrowed my stepladder and observed that henpecked husbands earn less money than dominant husbands. . . . But he isn't sure whether they're henpecked because they earn less or earn less because they're henpecked.

One of my well-informed friends knocked my hat off with the news that those two long low new "ranch houses" on the road to the airport cost more than $40,000 apiece. They look just as modest and unobtrusive as the $7000 bungalows did when we were newlyweds.

I'm lavishly rewarded for the complexities of family life ——

When my daughter volunteers that this summer she'll arrange and tidy up all four of my home desks and filing cabinets . . . and when Junior, without any particular urging, gives up a week-end dance at a girls' school for a week-end expedition with me . . . when our youngest, at age eleven, crosses our guest-filled living room in the middle of a hot argument and casually drops the wittiest opinion of all . . . and when my beloved wife ignores all my faults and in an inspired moment finds something still admirable in me ——

Then, in fact, my cup runneth over.



The dream chicken that came true!

It's tender-grown Swift's Premium

HERE is chicken at its finest—specially fed for quality meat, specially raised to give springtime flavor every month of the year.

Planned just for eating, this chicken is a sensational example of the research and development going on in the poultry industry today.

Look for fresh tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken with the tag on the wing or Quick-Frozen in the blue and white picture package.

"A Tisket, A Tasket," serve

CHICKEN-IN-A-BASKET

- 1 tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken, cut for frying
- 1 cup flour
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- ½ cup Swift's Brookfield Butter
- Shortening
- 2 teaspoons salt

Put flour and seasonings in paper sack. Shake 3 or 4 pieces of chicken at a time in sack to coat. Heat butter and enough shortening in a heavy skillet to make ½ inch layer. Brown chicken on both sides in hot fat. Cover tightly. Reduce heat and cook 30 to 40 minutes. Serve hot or cold in napkin-lined dinner basket.

Reference Library

For Sub-Debs, their fellows, and teachers too!

BACK TO SCHOOL

There is a new semester ahead; new fellows, new gals—and how about a new you?

START WITH YOUR APPEARANCE

2253. LET'S BE LOVELY. Good-grooming tips. . . . . 5c.
2268. GLAMOUR FOR GLASSES . . . . 5c.
2277. FACTS ABOUT FIGURES. Exercises for a prettier figure . . . 5c.
1378. THE WAY YOU WEAR YOUR HAIR 5c.
1207. MIRROR MAGIC. How to have a sparkling complexion . . . . 5c.
2324. COUNT YOUR CALORIES. Helps for gaining or losing weight. . 5c.
2322. CLOTHES CHECKUP. Be sure you're wearing the right colors 5c.

WHAT ABOUT YOUR PERSONALITY?

1022. HOW TO BE POPULAR . . . . . 5c.
1514. PERSONALITY REPORT CARD. A self-rating chart . . . . . 5c.
1658. DO BOYS LIKE YOU? . . . . . 5c.
2269. HOW ABOUT A DATE? How often do you hear this? . . . . . 5c.
1532. KNOW YOUR MAN. You can't treat all dates alike. . . . . 5c.
2270. NIX ON NECKING . . . . . 5c.
2306. SPEAK UP. Can you add your part to the conversation? . . . 5c.
1539. DO GIRLS LIKE YOU? . . . . 5c.
2275. DON'T SHY AWAY. Ways to overcome shyness . . . . . 5c.
1228. RATING FOR DATING. Do you have an A-1 rating? . . . . 5c.
1669. GOING STEADY. You'll have problems . . . . . 5c.
1344. ACT YOUR AGE. . . . . 5c.
2272. MEMO FOR MANNERS . . . . 5c.
2276. SUB-DEB CLUB HANDBOOK. How to run a successful club . . . 5c.

FOR MALES ONLY

1192. GENTLEMEN PREFERRED. Be at ease with the gals. Know your dating etiquette and gain confidence . . . . . 5c.
1668. KNOW YOUR GIRL. Every date is different. . . . . 5c.
1546. IF I WERE A MAN! A gal gives her viewpoint on dates. . . . 5c.

PARTY PERFECT?

2271. BANQUETS TO GIVE. . . . . 10c.
1377. GAMES TO PLAY. Keep the party lively . . . . . 10c.
1303. LET'S DANCE. Prom ideas . . . 5c.
1504. LET'S EAT. Party food . . . . 5c.
2254. IT'S A DATE FOR A PARTY. Twelve holiday parties. . . . 5c.
1376. PARTIES TO GIVE. . . . . 10c.
2210. LET'S HAVE A PARTY . . . . . 5c.
2307. DANCE DOIN'S . . . . . 5c.
1515. FUN OUTDOORS. Fresh-air stunts and parties . . . . . 5c.
1691. HALLOWEEN ANTICS. Parties for Halloween. . . . . 5c.

FUTURE IDEAS

All you want to know about different jobs. For teachers, for students, for Sub-Debs. You may order booklets in lots of 100 at $7.50 per hundred—for class or club use. Mixed or single titles.

2440. MODELING . . . . . 10c.
2441. HOME ECONOMICS . . . . . 10c.
2442. JOURNALISM . . . . . 10c.
2443. SECRETARIAL WORK . . . . . 10c.
2444. FASHION DESIGNING . . . . . 10c.
2445. TEACHING . . . . . 10c.
2446. NURSING . . . . . 10c.
2447. LIBRARY SCIENCE. . . . . 10c.
2448. LAW . . . . . 10c.
2449. FINE AND COMMERCIAL ARTS. . 10c.
2450. PHYSICAL THERAPY. . . . . 10c.
2451. THEATER . . . . . 10c.
2452. SOCIAL WORK . . . . . 10c.
2453. MEDICINE . . . . . 10c.
2454. AIRLINE HOSTESSING . . . . . 10c.
2455. DANCING . . . . . 10c.
2456. MUSIC . . . . . 10c.
2457. MERCHANDISING . . . . . 10c.
2458. PUBLIC RELATIONS . . . . . 10c.
2459. ADVERTISING. . . . . 10c.
2460. RADIO. . . . . 10c.

We will gladly send any of these booklets if you'll order by number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes. Allow two to three weeks for delivery. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

ORDER BLANK

BOOKLET NUMBERS

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone_____

State_____

Got your hat on?

Got your hat on, ready to go to the grocery store? While you're there, you may want to get a package or two of Pillsbury Cake Mix (White or Chocolate Fudge). By merely adding milk you can find yourself with a cake that's just as eye inspiring and taste tormenting as the one you see here. And what a grateful eye your family will give you. If you haven't got your hat on, it might be worth your while to put it on and go to the grocery, and bake one of these Pillsbury Cakes for tonight. Got your hat on yet?

Remember – You and Ann Pillsbury can make a great team

Pillsbury BEST XXXX Mixes

Pillsbury CAKE MIXES

Just add milk—

Milk is all you add—no eggs, flavoring or extras of any kind required. These are complete mixes.

FREE: Folder of 58 dessert ideas, easily made with Pillsbury Cake Mixes. Write Ann Pillsbury, Box 1191, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

Are wives more guilty than husbands of invading personal privacy? Here are four easy ways to alienate your husband.

Respecting His Privacy

"WHAT can you do with a woman who never lets you alone? Every night my wife cross-examines me about what I have done, whom I have seen, and how much money I have spent. She goes through my pockets, my wallet, even my mail, as though she were seeking proof that I had done something wrong. My very soul is no longer my own. To save what self-respect I have left, I ought to walk out on her."

Deep within every human being is an innate sense of his own special individuality, an awareness of the personal self which is unique in the world. Personality, integrity and self-respect depend on the protection of this inner self from interference and intrusion in even the most intimate relationship. That is why regard for personal privacy is vital in marriage.

In too many marriages, one mate deprives the other of all sense of privacy. While husbands are sometimes at fault, it is more often the wife who intrudes too far and too often in her husband's affairs. Her efforts to share his every thought, deed and emotion force him to retreat ever further.

Invasion of personal privacy takes many forms. But there are four major types which are especially irritating and harmful. Some wives are guilty of all.

Interference with personal belongings. Opening his mail, looking through his files or personal papers, examining his wallet, searching his pockets—all are intrusions which he has a right to resent, and probably does. Equally irritating are such things as borrowing his pen or other equipment without asking, rearranging his belongings, and using his stamps and loose change. Slight as these offenses may seem, they breed resentment because they reflect the wife's assumption that her husband's affairs and possessions are also hers.

Prying into his job or business. Almost any husband is annoyed if he gets frequent telephone calls from home, whether on business or personal matters, because they are unwarranted interruptions. He is sure to resent attempts to check up on him by questioning his fellow employees or—and especially—his superior. The wife who is an intelligent, sympathetic and attentive listener, and who can be trusted not to repeat what she has heard, will have no need to check up, for her husband will confide in her.

Supervision of personal behavior. Every man (and woman) has certain small mannerisms and preferences which seem valueless or even annoying to others, but which belong to him. Harmless peculiarities should be indulged. You may get tired of hearing him whistle the same tune—but aren't you glad he feels like whistling? Perhaps you think he spoils his cantaloupe by putting pepper on it—but it's his cantaloupe.

Monopolizing his time. Some wives feel they are entitled to share all their husbands' leisure. They resent and resist dates for bowling or poker with the boys. And should the husband succeed in getting an evening off, his pleasure is marred by the inquisition he must face when he gets home—who was there, what did they talk about, how much money did he spend, and on and on.

If you deny your husband privacy, you are denying your faith in him. Unless you know—and show—that you trust him, soon you may have reason not to.

His First Job

FOUR years ago, shortly before their graduation, two engaged couples came in to discuss the job each man should accept on the eve of marriage. This record of their problems and of each couple's decision is taken from our notes.

Couple 1, the man: "Although I have a technical degree and have been offered a junior-executive job at $70 a week, I'd like to start in a filling station and work up to managership of an automobile-supply store. But the salary is only $35 a week. Jean would have to work until I get my first promotion. I don't think it's fair to her, but she wants me to take the second job. What do you think I should do?"

Couple 2, the girl: "Bill's been offered a job at $40 a week in a business he thinks has a future. He likes the idea, but we'd have to postpone marriage. He can get another job more in line with his training at $65. He isn't keen on it, but it's with a good company and we could get married right away if he took it. Don't you think he should?"

It is not the counselor's function to answer such questions. Instead, we encouraged each couple to evaluate the facts, and then to make their own decisions. In the end, Hugh (Couple No. 1) took the job of grease monkey and car washer, and Jean went to work; while Bill took the better-paying but, to him, less-interesting of his two offers.

Now, four years later, Hugh is manager of an automobile-supply store at $8000 a year, and looks forward to the future with eagerness and confidence. He and Jean have two children and are very happy together.

Bill and Althea also have two children, and his income of $5000 is adequate for their needs. But Bill is restless and dissatisfied and wishes he had chosen the other job, where, like Hugh, he would have been a big figure in a small business instead of a small figure in a big business.

In time, Bill may catch up with Hugh in earning power. But Hugh has the priceless satisfaction of work he likes in the field he wanted. His wife encouraged his choice, even though it entailed hardship for her; whereas Bill sacrificed long-term prospects and his own preference for the sake of immediate benefits.

In both cases, the girl really made the decision—as she often does, whether consciously or unconsciously. If your husband, or fiancé, is faced with such a decision ——

- Think of the future as well as the present, and encourage him to do so.
- Whatever the job, make sure he likes it, or sees it as a necessary step toward work he will like.
- Once the minimum living standard is assured, immediate earnings should be a secondary consideration.
- Emphasize ultimate possibilities rather than present prestige.
- Try to decide the matter on its own merits, independent of temporary considerations, such as the wish to buy a house or change locality.

Much of your husband's success in his job depends on his attitude toward it. It is to your advantage, as well as his, that he choose work which appeals to him.

Are You a Creative Wife?

The zest of marriage largely depends on the understanding and imagination of a thoughtful, creative wife. Your answers to these questions may provide encouragement, a challenge—or a warning.

Within the past month, have you

1. Bought a little gift for your husband?
2. Checked and repaired his wearing apparel?
3. Served a new dish he liked?
4. In some way made home more comfortable for him?
5. Tried a new dinner arrangement?
6. Done anything to make your appearance more attractive?
7. Shared several new stories with him?
8. Given him several unexpected compliments?
9. Performed some unasked favor for him?
10. Told him how much you love him?

Within the past month, have you* two

11. Eaten out at least once?
12. Had some friends in for the evening?
13. Gone to one or two shows together?
14. Visited some new acquaintances both liked?

No one of these answers decisively influences married happiness, but the implications behind them do. If your score is 10 or less, review your daily routine to see how you and your husband can add variety and sparkle to your association.

Do You Agree?

My husband criticizes me for taking afternoon naps. Is he justified?

I don't know, though in general women need about a half hour's more sleep than men. His criticism may indicate that he gets too little sleep and feels you are responsible. Are you?

SCIENCE REPORT

The vision to duplicate nature

Science produces CORTISONE formerly made only by the body

The tiny adrenal gland —situated on top of each kidney—is shown in the magnified inset.

IT IS one of the miracles of modern science that physicians were able to start treating their patients with CORTONE® (Cortisone Merck) little more than a year after the first medical tests.

Accepting the challenge of duplicating nature by producing a substance formerly made only by the adrenal glands of the body, Merck chemists and engineers devised chemical manufacturing methods never before attempted. To convert the raw material, cattle bile, into precious quantities of Cortisone requires over thirty complicated and time-consuming steps.

Today, nothing is being overlooked to increase the output of CORTONE and hasten the day when physicians can explore on an even wider scale this new era in medicine.

This is but one of the many Merck endeavors in the relentless fight against disease. Vitamins, notably B_{12} against anemias—Streptomycin against tuberculosis—now Cortisone for arthritis and other diseases—are milestones in a continuing Merck research and production program to help physicians in their efforts to bring better health and longer life to mankind.

Research and Production for the Nation's Health

MERCK

MERCK & CO., INC.

Manufacturing Chemists

RAHWAY, NEW JERSEY

In Canada: Merck & Co. Limited—Montreal

New Value by Drexel... It's Bancroft House

It's wonderful to get such value as this! Drexel's new Bancroft House Suite offers you four rich-looking, hand-working pieces, including a spacious chest-on-chest, a 60" triple dresser with nine drawers, a cabinet, and a matching mirror, and your choice of double or single bed—at a price that's hard to believe!

Double-serpentine fronts, deeply-carved corner posts, handsomely figured mahogany, and splendid genuine brasses combine with all the Drexel cabinet-maker extras. Dust-proofing, center-guiding, truly sturdy construction, and a lustrous 28-step finish to give you unusual value for your furniture dollar!

4-PIECE BEDROOM FOR ONLY

$389.

(F.O.B., Drexel, N.C.) A modest charge will be made by dealer for freight between factory and his store.

Pieces included: Double or single bed, triple dresser, plate-glass mirror and chest-on-chest.

Triple Dresser, 60" wide, with large plate mirror — Chest-on-Chest, 52" high — Panel Bed, double or single Order by phone directly from this advertisement!

VISIT, PHONE, OR WRITE THE BANCROFT DEALER NEAREST YOU!

ALABAMA
Anniston — Haverty Furniture Company
Birmingham — T. D. Sadler Furniture Co.
Birmingham — Thurber Darnell Furniture Company
Dothan — Brannon Furniture Company
Gadsden — Alabama Furniture Co.
Montgomery — Haverty Furniture Co.
Tuscaloosa — Tuscaloosa Furniture Co.

ARKANSAS
Little Rock — Haverty Furniture Company

CALIFORNIA
Modesto — Glaser & Hoover
Fresno — Glaser & Hoover Company
Glendale — Lee Gingham
Hayward — Wheat
Long Beach (and) Pasadena — Gamble's
Los Angeles — The May Company
Oakland — H. Liebes & Co.
Oakland — Sherman, Clay & Co.
Oakland — Thurber Darnell Furniture Company
Oakland — W. E. Stevens
Redlands — Nelson-Knight
Sacramento — Weinstock, Lubin & Co.
San Diego — Marston's
San Francisco — The Emporium
Stockton — Stewart's
Visalia — Taylor & Berry
Watsonville — Calabasas Home Furnishers

CONNECTICUT
Bridgeport — George E. Hotchkiss
New Haven — W. R. Sullivan Company
Newington
Stamford — Harrison Furniture Corp.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA
Washington — Dalton Hoover
Washington — Hecht & Company

FLORIDA
Jacksonville — Cummings Furniture Co.
Jacksonville — Haverty Furniture Co.
Pensacola — Haverty Furniture Co.
Tampa — Haverty Furniture Co.
Tallahassee — Thomas Furniture Co.

GEORGIA
Albany — Albany Housefurnishing Co.
Atlanta — Atlantan Furniture Company
Atlanta — Haverty Furniture Co.
Atlanta — Rich's
Augusta — Haverty Furniture Company
Columbus — J. H. Kilbourn Company
Dalton — Hill Furniture Company
Gainesville, Virginia & Green Furniture Co.
Griffin — Spence-Nichols Furniture Co.
Macon — Whittle Homefurnishers
Rome — Shorter Furniture
Savannah — Maynard Furniture
Valdosta — Standard-Millstead

ILLINOIS
Belleville — Sansone Fine Grade Furniture
Chicago — Marshall Field & Company
Decatur — Harris Furniture Co.
Evanston — Marshall Field & Company

INDIANA
Anderson — Haverty Furniture Company
Fort Wayne — Schmitt Furniture Co.
Indianapolis — The Hub
Indianapolis — The William H. Block Co.
Kokomo — Wolf & Dreisbach Co.
Indianapolis — L. S. Ayres & Company
Muncie — C. Dave Gallup
Richmond — Starr, Leeman & Dove

IOWA
Dubuque — Rhomberg Brothers Co., Inc.

KENTUCKY
Jeffersontown — Dalgarno Furniture Co.
Louisville — Dalgarno Furniture Co.

LOUISIANA
Baton Rouge — The Kay Furniture Co.
Lafayette — Haverty Furniture Co.
Monroe — Haverty Furniture Co.
Shreveport — Dalton Furniture Co.
Shreveport — Shreveport Furniture Co.

MAINE
Portland — Bradley Furniture Co.

MARYLAND
Baltimore — Hamburger's
Baltimore — Hutzler Bros. Co.
Hagerstown — Zimmerman Furniture Co.

MASSACHUSETTS
Boston — Jordan Marsh Company
Cambridge — W. J. Sullivan, Inc.
Springfield — Forbes & Wallace
Worcester — Joseph Wragge, Inc.

MICHIGAN
Kalamazoo — Kalamazoo Furniture Co.
Port Huron
Saginaw — Thompson Furniture Shops

MINNESOTA
St. Paul — Mannheimer

MISSISSIPPI
Jackson — Rhoden, Inc.
Meridian — Avant Furniture Company

MISSOURI
Kansas City — Kroger Kann Furniture Co.
St. Louis — Ellis, Baer & Fuller

NEBRASKA
Lincoln — Gere & Company

NEW HAMPSHIRE
Manchester — E. W. Clarke Co., Inc.
Portsmouth — Wentworth's

NEW JERSEY
Elizabeth — Mohlenbrock Brothers
Hackensack — Fanwood Furniture Shoppe
Harrison — J. Plentzer Furniture Co.
Newark — Hahne & Company
New Brunswick
J. Outwater's Furniture Company
North Hackensack
Hoffman & Bowie Company, Inc.
Plainfield
Plainfield Furniture Showrooms
Princeton — Bayard Brothers
Rahway — G. De Ridder Furniture Co.
Ridgefield — Wyndham Furniture House
Ridgewood
Ridgewood Rug & Furniture Company
Springfield — Hoffman & Bowie Co., Inc.

NEW YORK
Albany — W. M. Whitney & Company
Amherst (L.I.) — Hamlin Furniture Co.
Binghamton — Binghamton Furniture Co.
Brooklyn — Ellis Brothers & Joseph Bergman — Fourteenth Corner & Co.
Buffalo — Eastman Furniture Company
Central Islip — Suffolk Manufacturers Shoppe
Elmira — Edgcomb's Furniture Co.
Francis — Finer Furniture Company
Hempstead — John A. Dohrwardt Co.
Hudson — W. Silver's Sons
Huntington — Kissam Furniture Company
Mineola — Hahn Furniture Co.
New Rochelle — Neighborhood Furniture Co.
New York City — Bamberger Brothers
New York City — W. A. Hoffmeyer Co.
Niagara Falls — Mittlen Furniture Co.
Oneonta — Eastman Furniture Company
Port Chester — Tunnicliff & Sons
Poughkeepsie — Lucas Platt & Co.
Rochester — H. H. Graves Company
Staten Island — Stapleton
J. Lobster & Sons
Syracuse — J. Fleischman & Son
Tarrytown — M. Dee & Son
Watertown — Hanchman Woolworth Co.

NORTH CAROLINA
Greensboro — Bridges Furniture Company
Charlotte — Haverty Furniture Company
Greensboro — Bridges Furniture Co.
Mission-Asheville — Haverty Furniture Co.

OHIO
Canton — Thorne's
Cincinnati — Kroehler & Brother Co.
Cleveland — Hollle Brothers
Cuyahoga Falls — Ilgora & Company
Dover — Euler & Johnston
Youngstown — D. M. McKelvey Co.

OREGON
Portland — Meier & Frank Company

PENNSYLVANIA
Allentown — S. A. Dorney Furniture Co., Inc.
Bethlehem — Furniture mart
Coatesville — Lukens Furniture
Downingtown — Schantz Furniture Co.
Easton — Wagner & Company
Gettysburg — Chapman Brothers, Inc.
Hazleton — Hazleton Furniture Mart
Jeannette — Power & Company
Johnstown — Penn Furniture Company
McKeesport — J. Hirshberg Co., Inc.
New Cumberland — J. Ambegast & Co.
Philadelphia — Simpel's
Philadelphia — John Wanamaker
Phoenixville — McClanahan Brothers
Pittsburgh — Boggs & Buhl
Pittsburgh — Kaufmann's
Pittsburgh — Mellon Furniture House
Pottsville — Hummel's
Scranton — Stevens & Foster
Sharon — J. W. Willson & Sons
Tamaqua — Bellisman & Company
Williamsport — Diefiet Furniture
York — Seitler's Clarker House

RHODE ISLAND
Providence — The Shepard Company

SOUTH CAROLINA
Columbia — Bridges Furniture Company
Columbia — Haverty Furniture Company
Greenville — Haverty Furniture Company

TENNESSEE
Chattanooga — Hodges Furniture Co.
Nashville — Beesley Furniture Company

TEXAS
Dallas — Haverty Furniture Company
Houston — Haverty Furniture Company

UTAH
Salt Lake City — H. Dinwoodey Furniture Company

VIRGINIA
Chase City — Chase City Department Store
Richmond — Hawkes Furniture Company
Richmond — Bernard Siegel Furniture Company
Richmond — Haverty Furniture Company
Roanoke — Haverty Furniture Company

WASHINGTON
Spokane — The Crescent

WISCONSIN
Madison — Freedacher's, Inc.
Milwaukee — Gimbel's

CANADA
Toronto — Robert Simpson Company, Ltd.

Write today for your "Portfolio of Fine Furniture"—color room scenes with decorating ideas on Drexel's Modern, Traditional, Early American, and French Provincial groups of furniture—80 pages long—all for 25c. Send coin only.

NEW! Drexel Cream Wax—cleans, polishes and renews the finish! At your Drexel dealer or send $1.00 for pint bottle to Drexel (sent prepaid).

Address: 272 Huffman Rd., Drexel, N.C.

by Drexel

Drexel FURNITURE COMPANY
DREXEL, NORTH CAROLINA

WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF QUALITY BEDROOM AND DINING ROOM FU

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

aphne pushes bolts aside with her paw. Maeve manages hooks and knobs. othing stops the wise Irishers from finding the softest spot on the sofa.

E pond is full of the sky—little white ouds float across it—the trees are so with leaves I wonder how the small- anches sustain them. The goldfinches like spilled bits of sunlight, the or- orioles wear their sunset color proudly. vrens are busier than anybody.

e whole edge of the pond is a dwelling for the bright green frogs. I have before been intimate with frogs, but in to think they have a good deal of They chunk into the water when the Irishers, Daphne and Maeve, circle around, but they come right out Daphne is always falling in when she to see just where that strange thing Then there is great scrabbling and ng and she rushes wildly to shake a mud on anyone near. She has a won- attitude toward life, so eager, so ful.

far we have not figured a way to keep the run when she should be. She s bolts aside with one paw. She opens with her mouth. Her nose does well hooks. The electrician watched her the screen door to the kitchen, turn nob on the main door, go in and close oor behind her. "How smart can a et?" he asked.

ntry life is always filled with sur- George has several young calves, pretty with their black-and-white ngs, and awkward leggy gait. They ust like other young calves, but they ot lie down in the out-of-doors. They up all day long and George has been ng with them; they should lie down nd then, he says. I hang out the win- o watch George persuading a calf to wn, and I ponder on the infinite mys- f life. They lie down in the barn at But outdoors, no. They are just ent!

d then a card came in the mail today the nice young man who was sup- to work yesterday helping in the n and with the lawn, which resembles ied hayfield at the moment. The card "Tried to call—line busy—company stayed late—car refused to start—and ducks caused accident—will be over Thursday." I feel we cannot wait until Thursday to find out about the ducks causing accident, we shall drive over.

This is the month of canning and freezing. We have finally used up all the old paper containers, and have moved into the glass ones. They pack so easily and stack neatly, and you can see what's in them. Then I like the aluminum boxes, they are light and can be heated with the contents right in them. Plastic bags are good for corn on the cob. Freezing is really fun, it goes so fast and the baskets heavy with filled containers have a comfortable look as they are carried down to the freezer.

We still can most of the tomato juice, all the tomatoes and a few mixed vegetables. Mixed vegetables are so good in stews in January! We process them by the time for the vegetable that takes the longest, usually potatoes. I like to fit in a handful of the small rosy potatoes that are really too small to be dug. Cabbage wedges, carrots, beans, little onions and tomatoes fill the jars.

We cook outdoors most of the time, which makes every meal a picnic. One of my favorites is broilers done in the grill and basted with barbecue sauce (Cicely's), fresh country sweet corn in season and scalloped potatoes (they keep hot while the chicken cooks). Fresh berry pie for dessert and coffee. If corn is not in, we may have scalloped broiled tomatoes or fresh green peas.

There are hundreds of ways to cook hamburgers. I like mine just well seasoned and grilled. A bowl of very finely chopped onion on the side, plus two or three kinds of mustard and a dish of sweet-pickle relish, and with very fresh flat rolls, that is about right.

I can remember when eating outdoors was not the fashion except for the church strawberry festival, when under the delicate papery glow of Chinese lanterns the congregation simply gorged. But now, I am thankful to say, there are few parts of the

(Continued on Page 116)

The Secret of Lovelier Hair for More Than a Century

Photograph by Horst
Hair Styled by Bergdorf Goodman Beauty Salon

Lovely hair crowns today's smart miss with shimmering glory, thanks to a secret her great grandmother knew—the magic softness of pure Castile shampoo.

Even in great grandmother's day it was the world's most highly recommended shampoo. She made it herself by dissolving Conti pure castile soap, imported since 1836.

Because of the demand by American women for this fine shampoo in liquid form, Conti developed today's famous Conti Castile Shampoo . . . containing pure imported olive oil to bring out full natural hair loveliness.

Perfect in cleansing action, it is the first choice of leading beauty authorities. Its natural oils guard the health of your scalp, leave hair silky-soft, lustrous and in better condition to take and hold its wave.

Safe for frequent use with every type of hair, Conti is recommended even for young children and for all the family. It will not streak grey or bleached hair, requires no conditioning agents and does not dry the scalp.

Try Conti—its regular use will protect your hair and make it lovelier.

Conti Shampoo

PURE CASTILE

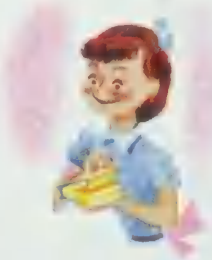
Now also available in Canada

Every slice is perfect ...every bite a thrill

New! KRAFT De Luxe SLICES

Women everywhere are cheering these handy slices made and packaged a wholly new way

4 REASONS WHY THEY'RE THE FINEST SLICES YOU'VE EVER HAD!



1 BETTER FLAVOR! PERFECT SLICES!

By a marvelous new Kraft-patented method the fine process cheese is formed into slices as it comes from the pasteurizers—with extra-good flavor sealed in every one. Every slice is perfect. (No slivers or "curling" dried edges.)

2 KRAFT-PROTECTED!

Immediately after pasteurization, 8 big, perfect slices are sealed in a neat ½-lb. package by Kraft—protected until you slit the wrapper in your own kitchen. Discover these fine slices and you'll never be without them!

3 HANDIER!

These slices separate so easily it's "almost like peeling a banana." And they keep beautifully—are always ready at a moment's notice for snacks, and cheese trays, and husky lunchtime sandwiches—either cold or toasted.

4 FIVE DELICIOUS VARIETIES!

Besides the extra-mellow Kraft Pasteurized Process American there's Pimento, Swiss, Brick and sharp Old English Brand. The neat packages are such space-savers, stack so easily, you'll keep several kinds on hand.

THE WORLD'S FAVORITE CHEESES ARE MADE OR IMPORTED BY KRAFT

Journal about Town

50 Years ago in the Journal

ugust, 1901, New York ran nd in size to London, but had legitimate theaters than any city in the world. Maude was capturing the heart of way as Napoleon's son in the 'Aiglon. The most popular dog in the United States was the aggy Newfoundland; the av- life expectancy of Americans rty-nine years.

ugust, 1901, JOURNAL gives ints for Keeping a House Cool Dog Days: "A gas student lamp ff less heat than any other kind o. Candles should be sufficient for room. Cover the window screens bet flannel. Spray the grounds des of the house with cold water nd morning."

ild's Food in Summer: It is o avoid meat and uncooked luring a child's second sum- Orange juice may be used little scraped baked apple if igestion is in good order."

ge wardrobe: "The short skirt, just brushes the shoe tops, is ensable for a rain skirt or golf or for attending classes."

eather menus: "Nuts may ed instead of meat, which is ult to keep in hot weather. l with rice or hominy, nuts ne mock chicken or mock

Boston Cooking School suggests llowing for the picnic basket: igeon pie, pressed chicken and baking-powder biscuits, ban- arts, and chocolate layer cake.

g in Canada: Some food costs family of five and one servant: 12c: lobsters, 50c: chicken.

on: "A great novelty is the ki- wrap, especially in sable."

Gossip about people you know Editors you like and what goes on in New York

Barbara Bel Geddes keeps cool in her air-conditioned dressing room.

THESE are days when a walk through the Workshop discloses how editors keep cool. Under a scarf, at the nape of her neck, one wears a neat flat little ice pack filled with powdered ice. Another in surreptitious moments goes and stands deliciously in front of an open freezer. Bottles of each one's own favorite toilet water, for dabbing on with ice-cold cotton, crowd the refrigerators. Editors who lunch here eat vichysoisse, borsch, Hungarian fruit soup, yoghurt. Dawn Norman, toward late afternoon, starts nibbling on iced grapes. . . . Personally, we've discovered nothing more delightful than dashing over to the Henry Miller Theatre to visit with Barbara Bel Geddes in her air-conditioned dressing room, and watching her play Patty O'Neill in The Moon Is Blue.

One of the fashion staff was scanning the elevator banks across in the RCA Building for pretty secretaries to interview for this month's Career Girl wardrobe article. She told the starter what she was doing. "Oh, you're in the wrong building," he advised. "You should look over there where the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL office is!"

Wilhela Cushman was describing a recent fashion opening held by Hattie Carnegie, the distinguished dress designer who has just been honored by the American Women of Achievement award. Seems that early editors at the opening, peeking behind the scenes, were astonished to find Miss Carnegie, who had been for hours directing the preparations, in a costume to which only she could have given such distinction. For there, giving the show its finishing touches, was the great couturière wearing no dress, but, fronting her slip, a faded old apron.

PHYFE

Hattie Carnegie—she dresses herself.

We have a friend at the Berlitz School here who keeps us up to date on the foreign-language situation. Quite a few new students coming in for Hindustani and Persian, and many more for Chinese; but the classes that are really zooming, he told us, are the ones for Russian—quadrupled in the past several months. Used to be a lot of people learning Korean, he said. Hardly any now. But no matter what happens to the world, he added reassuringly, the one steady all-time favorite is French—frankly for culture.

Vocabulary is the best-known single clue to thinking ability. . . . Tests made in the West Indies lead researchers to conclude that mosquitoes prefer to bite adult males, asleep, unwashed and wearing rough clothes. . . . A five-minute test for pregnancy that can be performed in any doctor's office was announced recently. . . . Between 1946 and 1949, 48 per cent of Americans never read a book and 17 per cent read fewer than four. Of these 99,000,000 people, 60 per cent never opened a magazine and 16 per cent never glanced at a newspaper. . . . U. S. money actually in circulation amounts to $177.29 per person. . . . Thoroughbred race-horse blood actually differs from that of ordinary horses. Red corpuscles in the Thoroughbred are smaller, more numerous and contain less hemoglobin. . . . Climatologists consider the most healthful zone one in which the average temperature varies at least three degrees from day to day in the summer and seven degrees in the winter. . . . A fresh orange has the same number of calories as a piece of angel-food cake.

Editors-are-human-too Department. . . . From an embarrassment of riches in our homemaking department a year or more ago, Mrs. Gould picked out what seemed to her the perfect coffee maker for her tiny personal kitchen here. Asked the other day how she was liking it, she confessed that the very first morning, something she did wrong had caused the pot to explode. "Had to have one whole wall of the kitchen redone," she remarked rather remorsefully. (She'd put the coffee where the water should go, and vice versa.)

From a search for new ideas for JOURNAL readers, Margaret Davidson came back the other day looking rather shaken. Seems she'd just heard a demonstration of a new kind of burglar alarm. It's a record that suddenly starts screaming for help. "Haven't I heard that voice before?" Margaret said she asked the man when the screams subsided. "Sure," he told her. "It's Dorothy Lamour."

Margaret Davidson.

A girl who has been visiting in Nigeria writes John Morris about an American doctor she met there who gets the* JOURNAL *every month. The minute it arrives, he turns first of all like a starving man to Ann Batchelder's food page; then rushes madly over to the servants' quarters. "This," he points out to his cook, "is what I want for chop tonight!"

Whenever she finds herself in a predicament of practically any kind, Henrietta Murdock looks for a policeman. Last time was in Detroit, at two one morning. Trying to finish painting a room for a picture that had to be taken a few hours later, she ran out of chrome yellow. Out on the strange dark streets with a cup in her hand, she finally found a cop; got him to open up a paint store. In fact, it was he with his flash who found the can of chrome yellow. Of course not just anyone can talk a policeman into unlocking stores. You've almost got to be Miss Murdock.

The reverend mother

ays had a soft pot in my heart for old ones, the naughty ones.
he thought.

By DOROTHY BLACK

Let the secret die

She was seventeen and had never met a man. He was thirty and had met too many girls . . . but never a girl like this one.

THE nursing home was kept by the Holy Sisters of St. Faith, a nursing order. It stood in a shady garden on a hilltop looking down over the town. In the cobbled streets beyond the gateway motor-busses roared, children shrieked, babies bawled in perambulators. Inside the big gates it was very quiet, as if suddenly a hush had fallen, and the querulous voice of people was somehow muted and stilled.

The big garden was overgrown and not so orderly as the reverend mother could have wished. The gardener was growing old, and had not, even in his younger days, been any real good at the job. But the flowers made a gay patch of color, the roses scented the air all summer. Two great chestnut trees made a pleasant shade where the sisters walked two and two at the day's end. They wore white clothes with flowing headdresses that gave them the appearance of busy angels. They were skilled in medicine and nursing.

The lay sisters did the housework and cooking, and lent a hand with the simpler nursing when the home was full. And as they worked, they chattered and sang in the big airy kitchen department, giving the place the air of a forest full of linnets.

Crystal helped everyone. Crystal was seventeen. She had never known any other life than the quiet, orderly one inside the convent walls. No one, except the reverend mother herself, knew the story, or where she had come from. Numerous children had been dumped in the convent during the war, by harassed air-raid wardens who did not know which way to turn and thanked God for the sisters who never said no to the homeless.

Crystal had not come with an air-raid warden. She had been brought in by the police. She was a terrified child of six, and the reverend mother took her on her knee and held her, soothing her, while the policeman told the dreadful story. Just what transpired in there, behind the big nail-studded oak door, nobody else ever knew.

"We will keep her here," the reverend mother had said.

Nobody asked questions. Nobody speculated. In the order it was forbidden. Nobody heard the paper boys crying the horrible news. The sisters rarely went outside the gates, and they read no newspapers.

The other children in the nursing home had parents who came to visit them. No one ever came to see Crystal save old Mr. Mallilieu. He would be closeted from time to time with the reverend mother in her office, and when he came out he would pat the little girl kindly on the head. But Mr. Mallilieu was no relation to her. He was merely a famous judge, and why he took an interest in her Crystal had no idea, and now he came no more.

(Continued on Page 134)

ILLUSTRATED BY ROBERT HARRIS

Woman

And where was pride, wondered Elizabeth, that she could love a man who was chained to another man's wife!

t the Window

By Nelia Gardner White

THE JOURNAL'S
COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE CONDENSED NOVEL

ELIZABETH BURKE, new job in the bookstore securely hers for Monday next, sat on the hassock in her cluttered room and celebrated future affluence by eating oyster stew. It was no special job, but in the six years since college it was the first job she had secured on her own, with no help from her sister Anna or a friend of a friend of Anna's. Lollie Parsons, the fat little teacher, sat on the day bed, scooping up stew in companionable silence. Lollie lived across the hall.

Elizabeth scraped the bottom of the bowl. "There, the seven lean kine have eaten up the seven fat kine," she said.

"Something wrong in that analogy," Lollie said.

And at that moment the phone rang. Elizabeth scrambled to her feet. "Hello!" she said in her brisk, sensible, slightly husky voice. When there was an answer, she dropped to the chair, sprawled out a little, her shaggy brown hair bobbing forward against the phone.

Lollie Parsons saw her face as she said. "Oh, hello—is anything wrong?" Then Lollie looked away. But she was not deaf and the one-sided conversation came to her with a strange ominousness. Then Lollie heard something that was like a sigh, and Elizabeth said. "Wait a minute. I'll come. Friday—there's a train gets in around six, isn't there? But don't forget I protested. . . . Tell Johnny hello for me. . . . Good-by, Adrian."

The phone being returned to its place was a slow sound, like the sigh of surrender.

"What's up?" Lollie said.

"She's never going to walk again. My sister."

"The one who had the accident? Good heavens!"

"The only one I've got," Elizabeth said. She picked up the bowls, carried them behind the screen where her small electric grill stood. When she came back she stood still in the middle of the floor. "Did I sound heartless?" she asked.

"Stubborn. Don't you like your sister?"

"Like her? Like Anna? I'd die for her. . . . But she wants me to take care of her. It isn't the new job—I suppose it isn't such a hot job, when it comes right down to it. It won't work, that's all. I rub her the wrong way and always have. She's out of another world. Anna. Oh, Lollie—I can't do it!"

"I gather you're going to," Lollie said dryly.

"How could I say no? He was so mad he almost hung up on me. . . . But I know what I do to Anna. What she does to me, for that matter. She tries to make me over—I get

(Continued on Page 71)

Copyright, 1951, by Nelia Gardner White. This is a condensation of the novel soon to be published by the Viking Press.

Adrian put the busybody up. "How enchanting!" Anna said. "I can know everything that goes on in town!"

In October, 1949, General Melville A. Goodwin became man-of-the-hour when news stories told of an incident in Berlin which could have brought war. I, Sidney Skelton, a "well-known commentator," was asked by Army Public Relations to help with Mel's publicity because I'd known him briefly during my Army days. I was the one, in fact, back in 1945, who introduced him to Dottie Peale, head of the Peale publishing house, when she toured the battle areas in France with a group of writers.

I invited Phil Bentley, magazine writer, his researcher, Miss Fineholt, the General and Mrs. Goodwin, and Colonel Flax all up to the new place which Helen and I had bought in Connecticut. There the interviewing could be done in comfort, and Gilbert Frary, my boss, hoped for good publicity for me. The General began to tell the story of his small-town background and military career. He married Muriel, his school-days sweetheart, the day after graduation from West Point, and left for France and World War I in two weeks. There in front-line combat he made an exceptionally good record.

I hated to miss any of Mel's story, but I had to drive Mrs. Goodwin to New York. Then I lunched with Dottie Peale. She was determined to see the General again, determined—in her words—to "help him." I was afraid catastrophe would be inevitable—Mel was a latter-day Samson, and Dottie just the Delilah for him.

IV WHEN I reached Savin Hill, they were still at it in the library. The General was still talking to Phil Bentley, and Miss Fineholt was at the desk with her notebooks, and Colonel Flax was listening.

"Hello, Sid," the General said. "It's a funny thing, isn't it, that Sid can bring himself to go away and see pretty widows in New York when they've been taking pictures of me all afternoon."

"I thought it was about time to call in the photographers, Sid," Phil Bentley said. "We're getting this thing pretty well cleaned up. We ought to be through by tomorrow."

Copyright, 1951, by John P. Marquand.

Melville Goodwin shook his head impatiently. "I don't know why anybody should be interested," he said, "in this stuff between two wars."

"It's very interesting to me," Phil Bentley answered. "Nobody ever knows anything about Army officers in peacetime. They all go underground."

"Listen, son," General Goodwin said, "we have our work and our wives and kids and problems, just like everybody else. How about it, Flax?"

"That's right, sir," Colonel Flax answered. "The General is absolutely right. I hope you'll remember to make that point in the profile, Mr. Bentley."

Melville Goodwin could not list offhand the places he had seen or the sequence of his duties. He had served in Hawaii, the Philippines, China and Panama. He could remember the temples and the blue robes of the Chinese in Tsingtao, but none of this mattered greatly in retrospect. It might be true that if you joined the Army you saw something of the world, and you learned, naturally, about sanitation and the care of troops in the tropics and about insect pests and dysentery, but most of the time you were concerned with a way of life. Most of the time you simply saw the Army. The Army was a closed corporation, and you had to learn its amenities and how to get on with difficult superiors and how not to stick your neck out. No matter how dull the duty was, there was usually someone you could discuss Clausewitz with, or some new idea, confidentially, without sticking your neck out.

Then, too, there was nothing more solid than an Army family. The boys had been a heavy expense at times, even with free doctoring, but he would not have missed having them for anything and neither would Muriel. He could remember Robert in his play pen at Bailey waiting on the square of lawn in front of the veranda. Charlie had come along later when they were out in Oregon just before they went to the Canal. It was always great to get back to the quarters and see Muriel and the kids, especially after someone had been chewing at you. Also there were horses to ride and the tennis (Continued on Page 60)

Illustrated by Al Parker

Melville Goodwin

By John P. Marquand

Sid," she said, "what's going to happen about him and Dottie Peale?"
She looked at me for a moment.
"Don't you know that Mrs. Goodwin knows all about it?"

USA

We must pay for our own room on earth

TOM BLAU

IT was a surprisingly balmy day and the members of the British Women's Voluntary Services paraded past the reviewing stand with more than their usual gusto. Prime Minister Churchill watched them in silence, his forehead wrinkled. Finally he turned to Lady Reading, standing at his side.

"But they've all got their hats on at different angles," he said.

"Yes," the WVS chairman said dryly, "they are all women—and therefore individualists."

The remark was typical of her. Like many other great leaders, Lady Reading makes no apologies for her original methods, nor does she have to—her success provides sufficient answer. The war and peace work of the WVS stands as an inspiring monument to what women can do in hours of need, what ingenuity they can summon up, what love of humanity they have to draw upon—but just how Lady Reading brought this organization to such heights she has never satisfactorily explained.

Now, with our own defense needs more critical, it seemed more important than ever to urge her to reveal the secret of success which she and the WVS had tapped. For these reasons, I made the proper arrangements and went to talk to her while I was on one of my periodic visits to England. We met first in the busy stream of activity at 21 Tothill Street, her

At Southease. "Through labors of love we pay for our room on earth—and I know today how many people feel the need to make this payment."

Queen Elizabeth, Princess Margaret with Lady Reading. "It's strange, but even now nobody thinks an organization like the WVS will work."

KEYSTONE

Never before has the security of our homes been in shadow as it is today. But the defense which lies in the heart and hands of every homemaker is the strongest defense of all. Here Lady Reading tells the inspiring story of England's experience: "Once the women learned what they could do, there was no stopping them!"

By Margaret Hickey

London headquarters. After a brisk question-and-answer session, Lady Reading decided that we needed a quieter setting and more time.

And so a few days later I found myself settled at Lewes, her country retreat at Southease, on the South Coast, tackling the question of how millions of women had been persuaded, organized and held on a program of hard service over a long period of years without one penny of the reward most of us are inclined to believe is the motivation of Western civilization, the long green.

Her house is tiny, her study large. On every table and stand were vases of flowers—big bunches, little ones, nosegays from her Elizabethan garden then rich with the purple of phlox, asters and even a bit of thistle, tall and colorful. The desk was strewn with papers; they spilled from the drawers, littered the top, flooded the wastebasket. By the radio lay a detective story; nearby was an open volume of philosophical essays. A sewing basket bulged with her own exquisitely executed needlework. There was an eloquent collection of photographs from family and friends. As candidly as if it spoke out loud, the room revealed its occupant, showing her up as a fond grandmother, an endless worker, an honored friend, a versatile reader, and a woman who never found twenty-four hours long enough to make a finished day.

She herself sat opposite me, her strong face warmed by the sunlight coming through the windows, her brown eyes warm and friendly. She wore a garden smock over a gray tweed suit, and her pepper-and-salt hair was drawn back from her face in soft waves. Her voice was resonant and she spoke quickly. She had that quality the theater calls "presence"—that force of personality and vitality that carries with it an almost electric attraction.

I pressed her to begin at the beginning of the WVS, and without a moment's hesitation she plunged back thirteen years to an April evening in 1938 when she and her maid had returned from a lecture on civil defense (which she had attended only out of a sense of duty) to find the cook grumbling that she was not hired to answer the demanding phone calls of cabinet secretaries.

"It was the Home Secretary calling," Lady Reading said, "and he came to see me the next day. It seemed rather a bother at the time. I was planning to leave to visit a friend in Bulgaria later in the week and I was nowhere near ready." (Continued on Page 66)

KEYSTONE

f the Marquess of Reading, formerly Lord hief Justice and Viceroy of India. Lady Reading ys, "He was a happy man, like my father."

The Journal's Mrs. Gould and Mrs. Bass accompany Lady Reading, witness an "incident" shortly after a V2 bomb fell in London, in 1945.

KEYSTONE

Civil Defense Begins at Home

THE best protection for people threatened by modern warfare is to face the danger honestly, with each individual ready to assume his personal responsibility in any emergency. Preparedness must start in every home. Each man, woman and child must be familiar with the part to play should disaster come. Then, backed by knowledge and sound organization, civil-defense plans can be effective.

Our grandmothers gathered their families into the storm cellars of their farm homes when cyclonelike clouds threatened. Just so today's housewife must be ready to act in a practical manner. She can see that safety plans are carefully worked out and thoroughly understood. She can take such simple steps as assembling emergency supplies of food, clothing and medicines. She can help others understand the importance of training in first aid and home nursing—against the day when community services may be disrupted. Most important of all, she can provide the members of her own family with an opportunity to air their fears, which, once faced, may be overcome.

In a knowledge of Lady Reading's work with the Women's Voluntary Services, we can profit by the lessons of Britain's wartime experience. When the existence of Britain's people was most seriously threatened, the WVS proved that every woman, with or without previous training, can work for defense. The WVS was a new organization born out of wartime need. We must ask ourselves if we, too, need a plan to cut across established organizational lines, to simplify the procedure of peacetime groups.

Following Lady Reading's recent visit to the United States, an Assembly of Women's Organizations for National Security was formed, to help through education to bring the leadership of women from the planning stage to actual preparedness for on-the-spot emergency action. Headed by Mrs. Hiram Houghton, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, this assembly will spearhead the national security work of approximately 30,000,000 women. The American Red Cross is now reorganizing its volunteer program to eliminate the formalities of training that prevent immediate service. Local Community Chests and volunteer committees which provide essential health and welfare services are being assisted by the Advisory Committee on Citizen Participation to plan for work under emergency conditions.

Some of the best public planning for civil defense so far has been done in the schools. Air-raid and fire drills have become routine in some of the coastal school systems, and the study of state and national plans for emergency is a requirement for teachers in many cities.

But as a nation we are far from prepared for large-scale disaster. Very few cities and no large centers of population are fully organized. We now have about 500,000 volunteers when 15,000,000 trained civil-defense workers are needed. A large and well-trained army of men and women familiar with the technique of defense is vital if tension is to be lessened and panic prevented.

The inner citadel of our safety still lies in the minds and hearts of our people. Let's all face our danger with understanding and with action.

THE END

The biggest flounder

Sis said he was conceited. Anne said nonse wasn't in the slightest but he had every r be, doing such important research at his a getting written to from South Africa and thing. Doug said if his hair waved like th get a crew cut, and Anne's brother Jim with him, and the girls told them not irrelevant. Mimi said he had no socia science, none at all—oh, he had beautifu ners, but he did the darnedest things. Bun nothing. She was only fifteen and wasn't supp have any opinion.

She sat in a corner of the porch swing, the dark that the light didn't reach, in proud and hurt is Not that she could have an opinion about Chri– hadn't even seen him. He was part of that other life ing to Sis and Sis' friends, separated from her by th
Curtain of her age.

Only a year ago her being left out of things mattered in the least. Last summer she'd gone fishi the younger boys, kids of ten or twelve, and she'd for hours on her diving, all alone, never minding

It wasn't love, perhaps. L

She was sure he was Chris.
And she knew he had heard the others call her The Chil e small summer colony there was no one else her

e. The past winter had made all the difference, d it wasn't just her sudden popularity at school
d the part she had in the play and her first formal. omething had happened to her. She was a different erson this summer. But not one of the others alized it or even stopped to notice how different e was. They had a fixed habit in thinking of her—d was it any use to say, "I'm not a child any longer;
m grown up"? She smiled a grim little smile.
Anne said that Chris would be arriving on one of e Friday-evening trains. They might all run up to asset for a while if he wasn't too awfully late, or ey might just hang around and dance.

"Why don't we come over here?" offered Sis.
It's the biggest space for dancing, with both the ing room and the porch."

"Oh, better make it my house," Anne said, very fhand, not even glancing at Bunny sitting in the rk on the porch swing, but Bunny knew she eant, Then we won't be bothered by the child.
After all," she added, "Chris is my house guest."

"Yes," Sis agreed with a gay little laugh, "you won that round, didn't you?"

Bunny touched the floor with the foot that hung over and put the swing into gentle motion. Were Sis and Anne scrapping over the famous Chris? It was too silly. Weren't there enough men in the world for two girls? Why did girls have to be so darn possessive, anyway? Why couldn't they just have a good time without saying, "He's mine!" or "He is, is he? That's what you think"? Why did people have to belong to other people?

Then the pendulum of the swing moved more and more slowly and stopped. She was thinking of herself tomorrow night watching Sis get ready to go out. She might even have gone to bed and be lying propped on one elbow, watching the infinitely careful preparations: each bit of grooming, the checkup in the mirror after each article of clothing was put on, the searching analyses—"Does this shade of powder ruin my tan, or does it make it look veiled? Oh, it's horrible," and she'd wipe it all off—and then the final (Continued on Page 108)

as something with a precious ache in it..... by Laura Cooper Rendina

ILLUSTRATED BY Jon Whitcomb

Doctor Hohman lunches with Ellie Simmons, who had weaning trouble; Marian Wilson, whose baby "doesn't like people!"; Dawn Norman, whose daughter refuses to eat; Betty Gray, whose two children are rivals.

JOE DI PIETRO

Diana Norma
"There's nothi
she likes to ea

Clem and Bruce Hoffman. "Should I ever spank them?"

SUZANNE SZASZ

Six young mothers in our young-married group join in an informal discussion with Dr. Leslie B. Hohman, child psychologist, about the problems of the newest—and youngest—members of the Journal family.

our own

CHILDREN'S behavior problems are like chicken pox," mused Betty Hannah Hoffman, settling one of the JOURNAL's Wedgwood coffee cups carefully in its saucer—"you never know at the time which ones are going to leave scars."

The six young mothers in our young-marrieds group who had gathered together for lunch and a round-table discussion of child-behavior problems with Dr. Leslie B. Hohman, noted child psychologist, were full of questions. Betty Hoffman, a JOURNAL free-lance writer, had come into New York from her farm in Bucks County, Pennsylvania. Ellie Simmons, also a JOURNAL free-lancer, had made the trip up from Philadelphia. Dawn Norman, our beauty editor, Nora O'Leary, our pattern editor, and Marian Wilson, her assistant, took the elevator upstairs from their offices on the twenty-ninth floor; Betty Gray, assistant editor in the JOURNAL's food department, had come in from the kitchen right next door, where she had been concocting the delicious shrimp mull that was our main course.

As we ate lunch, we had been discussing ways of establishing good behavior patterns in children.

"The theory of establishing habits is based on the principle of rewarding good behavior, and not rewarding bad," began Doctor Hohman. "If a child is rewarded with praise or approbation for good behavior, he will react with more good behavior. He will learn to avoid actions that result in punishment. The important thing to remember here is that the reward—praise or an added treat, for instance—should follow the action, never precede it as a bribe, or the habit will never be established, and your child will never learn.

"Since our group includes mothers of children of from four months to six years, let's go around the table and ask the girls individually about their particular problems," he said, looking around him.

Feeding a One-Year-Old

Dawn Norman began, "My daughter Diana is a year old—and, as my husband says, 'there's nothing wrong with Diana; there are only two things she doesn't like—eating and sleeping.'" We all laughed; it sounded like the old song about money isn't everything if you've got plenty of dough. "We have terrible trouble about feeding her," said Dawn, "and have to bribe her to get her to eat. Our pediatrician says it is all right to do this. She's underweight for her age—eighteen and a half pounds, and of course it worries us."

"She's about two pounds underweight," put in Doctor Hohman.

Stevie and Jennie Gray. "He pushes her around."

Peter Wilson almost too young for problems.

F. P. Simmons "was upset about being weaned."

TANA HOBAN

Stephen Smith. "What shall we do about television?"

young marrieds

There's nothing she likes to eat," said Dawn. "For breakfast she ereal, fruit, an egg—she has meat, a vegetable, fruit or custard at h, cereal and fruit for dinner. That is, we try to get her to have , but it doesn't always work, unfortunately."

How do you bribe her?"

By letting her play with her toys, then trying to feed her."

For how long a period has she gone without eating any food?" d Doctor Hohman.

For days," wailed Dawn. We all looked at her nervously. "With- olid food, that is," she said hastily. "She's gone for days on just and orange juice."

Well," said Doctor Hohman, "since your pediatrician says there's ing wrong physically, I'd suggest that when she dawdles, take all away from her. Don't try to bribe her, as what you are doing is rewarding bad rather than good behavior. Wait till her next time. Don't try to coax or force her to eat. If she dawdles over ood again, take it away from her again."

I've never tried that," said Dawn, "but ——"

Do the same at the next feeding," said Doctor Hohman. "In fact, it up for forty-eight hours. Don't show pleasure or displeasure, just remove the food when she is reluctant to eat. My guess is that she will be eating well inside of two or three days." We all must have looked dismayed. "I know it's an awfully hard thing to do," he said understandingly, "harder on the parents than the children, to sit back calmly, cheerfully, if possible, and watch them (seemingly) starving themselves. Don't coax, force, or act impatient or angry. You've got to convince yourself that it will not harm the child, and then have the guts to stick to it, no matter how difficult it is for you. Now, what about her not sleeping at night?" he asked.

"Well," said Dawn, "she goes to bed at six, and wakes up anywhere from three-thirty to five A.M. One of us always goes in to see if she is covered up and all right—my husband and I alternate. It's impossible to sleep if we don't."

As Doctor Hohman asked whether the baby's door was usually open or shut, his eyes had the gleam of a person who already knows the answer to his question.

"Open," said Dawn.

"Try keeping it closed," he said. "If she cries, you might look in on her once and speak to her reassuringly; then, after you're sure she's all right, steel yourself against going in

(Continued on Page 114)

How does she do it..

CAREER girls are notably well dressed. Why? Partly because "dress for the job." But also because they make it their business to f fashion and look for values. They seldom budget. They usually buy or at most two costumes at a time, but they do plan in terms of a robe. For fall and winter, they "put their money" into a good coat suit, and add other things as their pay checks allow.

"One good new suit every fall . . . I wear it two yea

This year: Oxford-gray flannel, brown leather bu sleeves to the wrist, $69.95, by Alan Graham. A with spice-brown—suède-and-calfskin pumps small heel. $9.95, suède beret by Mr. Alf,

"Separates make an extra outfit . . . for little mone

Straight plaid wool skirt with a new kind of p $14.95, wool jersey top in plum color, $10.9 Pembroke Squires. Wear a pin at the nec what she earns?

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

ersey dress goes anywhere . . . I love it in color."

Wool-and-rayon jersey in autumn gold, with a tucked top and fullness in the skirt, for office, after-office or country week ends, $39.95, by Kenneth Tischler.

coat that will go with everything . . . for two years."

In gray, naturally. An important-looking coat for day or night, fall and winter, fair or stormy weather (it's treated to resist rain or snow). Wear it belted or unbelted, $69.95, by Adele Lawrence. Velvet hat, $7.95.

HAVE asked career girls who make from $50 to $75 a week—working ng executives and secretaries in advertising agencies, radio, telebanks, bookshops, doctors' offices—and find that on an average, they around $300 during the fall-and-winter season for clothes and acces—prorating a winter coat over two years. The JOURNAL wardrobe shown se two pages totals $282.45, of which $52.80 is allowed for accessories.

"Something black, and covered up . . . for after five."

The fashion of accordion pleats in a rayon-taffeta skirt, with a high-necked wool jersey top, around $23.90, by Isabel Dobson. A velvet belt, a single pin.

the timeless fashion of BLACK

Once again there is the feeling of imp tance and necessity about a black dress will reflect the newest silhouette. It will a fresh change for late summer, and fill a need all fall and winter. This year, will wear it starkly unadorned—even its b tons (if any) are black. Look for fine acc dion pleats and flaring side panels in sk with new width, for simple high necklin and for the return of the long slim sle Daytime blacks will be in wool jers alpaca, wide-wale corduroy and ottoman afternoon blacks in moire, taffeta, vel

By RUTH MARY PACKA

● Wide-wale corduroy, cut on the horizontal, slim coat dress with new high neckline, l sleeves, by Mildred Orrick. Velvet hat by Mr.

GOLD BEADS BY MARKLE, BAGS BY RICHARD K

CARMEN SCHIAVONE

● Black alpaca—lightweight suit for late summer, early fall, by Leonard Arkin. Forward-pointing pillbox by John Frederics.

● Suit with satin touches—black rayon crepe with beige, by Florence Barrack. Side-tilted velvet hat by Braagaard.

● New divided skirt, soft yoke-neckline, rounded sleeves, in black silk faille, by Adele Simpson. Velvet beret by Braagaard.

● Wool crepe, shoulder-to-hemline drape, an Italian import, adapted by Hannah Troy. Pleated hat. Laddie Northridge.

First Fall Dresses

. . . in new and colorful fabrics

Fall sewing logically starts with a good wool dress. You are then prepared for the first cool day, and the dress later becomes an important part of your winter wardrobe. This year, fabrics have taken on new importance. There is much to tell about the new textured and fleecy-surface interests: the rayon and nylon blends in dark plaids and sharkskin weaves which are hardly distinguishable from wool; the novelty jerseys which look like tweed, others in gay Roman stripes. Color, too, is important. Gray is the number one flannel shade, but brown and blue are also good. Purples, golds and reds are new, especially in crisp dress-weight woolens. Co-ordinated fabrics, with checks and plaids matched to a plain color, are particularly nice for two-piece costumes. We purposely selected patterns that are classic in design but with a great variety of detail . . . and . . . a choice of a slim or a full skirt. • By Nora O'Leary

HAT BY MR. ALF, EMILY WETHERBY SCARF

Adaptable gray flannel. A slim sheath (a nice winter dinner dress) topped with a jacket lined in sparkling green. Dress, "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design 7441, 12 to 20. "Easy-to-Make" Jacket, No. 6999, 10 to 18.

PHOTOS BY LESLIE GILL

autiful Paisley wool skirt in stained-glass colors. eaterlike top has a choice of sleeve lengths. ouse, "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 7394, to 20. Skirt, Design No. 7333, 24 to 30 waist.

Lovely red wool classic. The skirt has soft unpressed pleats. Collar and cuffs are bound in shiny black braid. Add braid buttons and a novelty belt. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 7476, 12 to 20.

Miniature Black Watch plaid (rayon that looks like wool) tailored in a slim daytime dress. The white linen dickey with gold buttons is removable—the pockets optional. Vogue Design No. 7285, 12 to 18.

SUZY HAT, MATCHING GLOVES AND BAG BY RENEE MONTAGUE

Beige heather jersey matched to flannel in the same shade makes an effective blouse-and-skirt combination. The blouse has a pretty yoke-and-sleeve detail. The skirt can be pleated or not. A good costume to add your gayest accessories to! Blouse, Vogue Design No. 7198, 12 to 20. Skirt, Vogue Design No. 6994, 24 to 30 waist.

BEN KING BELT

MARGARET SOMMERFELD

VOGUE

SUZY HAT

Striped jersey cut on the bias is a pretty detail in itself. The skirt has soft fullness and the dress closes with small covered buttons. Linen collar and cuffs. Vogue Junior Design No. 3425, 11 to 17.

Purple comes in many shades, and this is one of the prettiest. This soft wool dress has a convertible neckline—with a white linen dickey accented with a jeweled pin. Vogue Design No. 7478, 12 to 20.

PIGSKIN GLOVES AND BAG BY RENEE MONTAGUE

Back and other views on Page 144

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order.* from Vogue Pattern Service, Greenwich, Conn.; in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont.
*(Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

BABY KILLER could your hospital be guilty?

by ALICE LAKE

If your baby is to be born in a hospital, you should take these precautions now.

MRS. STEVENS had a premature baby. There was nothing to be worried about in that. Science had developed incubators and the kind of care that would insure his growing up a healthy, lusty little boy. When Mrs. Stevens left the hospital she and her husband were happy parents, confident that they would return in a few weeks to bring the new arrival home. She took one last look at him before she left, and smiled when the nurse told her he was thriving, that she had never seen such a hungry baby.

But Mrs. Stevens never held her child in her arms. He died, needlessly, because a hospital was careless.

What happened is a lesson to all expectant mothers. The day Mrs. Stevens left the hospital, a new patient had arrived, a six-week-old infant suffering from diarrhea, and was admitted to the pediatrics ward. Although the sick baby and Mrs. Stevens' little boy never saw each other, their lives touched, through the hands of the nurse who tended them both. And a chain of death was started.

At night, when the hospital was short on staff, young student nurses moved wearily from duties in the pediatrics nursery to care of the premature babies. One sleepy nurse diapered the sick baby, then hurried down the corridor to feed the "preemies." Perhaps she forgot to wash her hands, perhaps she washed them carelessly (for she was very busy that night). No one knows exactly what occurred—but brokenhearted parents soon knew the result.

A few days later Mrs. Stevens' baby had several watery, explosive stools. He became listless, his tiny face ashen. He refused food. Within a few days he was dead. So were three other premature babies in the same nursery!

The epidemic moved on—silently. Soon Mrs. Brown, unaware of the trouble, entered the hospital and was delivered of a robust seven-pounder, a baby girl who roomed with forty-seven other infants close to the premature nursery.

At night there were only three nurses to care for the babies. One of them became mildly ill—just a slight case of diarrhea, not enough to keep her from her job. One of her duties was to place the sterilized nipples onto the bottles just before feeding the infants. Several times she had to interrupt the job for a trip to the bathroom. In her hurry, perhaps, she too forgot to wash her hands. It was hard to remember when the doctors asked her later.

Mrs. Brown's little girl had usually howled for her bottle, now she refused food when it was offered to her. She seemed lethargic and her cry was feeble. That day she had five watery stools; the next day it was seven. Her tiny belly was distended and she was seriously dehydrated.

Alerted by this time, the hospital opened an isolation nursery, where the little girl was soon joined by other babies with the same symptoms. But isolation was a farce. The same nurses continued to care for the sick infants and the well newborns. When the Brown child died, her bassinet in the isolation nursery was not long empty. The epidemic was gaining momentum.

Opportunities for the spread of infection were endless. The infants were all bathed on the same table and taken to their mothers in the same carriers. Their thermometers were stacked in a single container filled with a solution too weak to kill germs. Their nurses were overworked, undertrained, unaware that their hands, which cleaned the soiled buttocks of one infant just before (Continued on Page 143)

MYRON DAVIS

Here is a hospital nursery as it should be, clean, roomy, antiseptic. The nurses are not overworked. Will your child get equally good care? Or will he be crowded into small, insanitary quarters? Will his nurse be trained, careful, in good health herself?

A healthy baby being fed under proper conditions. Other babies are born healthy too. But suddenly they begin to refuse food, to sicken, and to die. What is the scourge? Diarrhea epidemic in infant nurseries!

WAYNE F. MILLER

MENU I

Corn-and-Celery Soup

Curried Chicken Salad
in Tomato Petals

Stuffed Eggs with Chicken Liver

Melba Toast

Watermelon Sticks

Iced Tea

(Planned for 6)

MENU III

Chicken Soup with Scallions

Salmon Mousse
Avocado Dressing in Lemon Cups

Cucumber Salad Latticed Potatoes

Croissants

Peach-Melba Meringues

Iced Tea

(Planned for 6)

Blowing hot and cold

By ANN BATCHELDER

NOW comes the loveliest month—maybe in all the year. Spring is a promise of beauty to be, but summer fulfills that promise with a lavish hand on the cosmetics. Like all beauties, August can be temperamental and she loves drama. So look out. From thunderstorms to sudden frost, she is likely to spring all kinds of weather on us.

But weather is another thing I'm prepared to offer help on—not only now but all the year round. All you have to do is watch the last Friday in the month. I've told you this before, and those of you who have remembered my advice have, I am sure, profited by it. Especially the farmers, the dealers in galoshes and the homekeepers who hang out the wash on Mondays. No matter what the evening paper prophesies, watch that last Friday. What the weather is on that fateful day sets the pattern for the following month. It is as inexorable as the laws of the Medes and the Persians, and as inflexible as the decision of a road commissioner in Vermont.

(Continued on Page 116)

STUART-FOWLER

MENU II

Tomato Soup

Cold Meats — Pickle Ring

French Bread — Pumpernickel

Fresh-Fruit Compote with Coconut

Iced Coffee

(Planned for 8)

This is your Home

By ANNE HOMER WARNER

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

ELLEN said to her baby daughter, "Any minute now, and Tony will be here!" The little girl threw some colored blocks out of her play pen onto the grass, and immediately started reaching for them. Seeing that, Ellen laughed and tried to relax. Now that the two months were over she could face more easily the dreadful strain of having Tony in France, visiting a father he scarcely remembered. It had seemed, on the surface, a matter-of-fact arrangement. But Bill had understood. Even before their marriage he had had that knack of understanding her. And so he had known how strange, and almost terrifying, it had been to send her child out into a world over which she had no control.

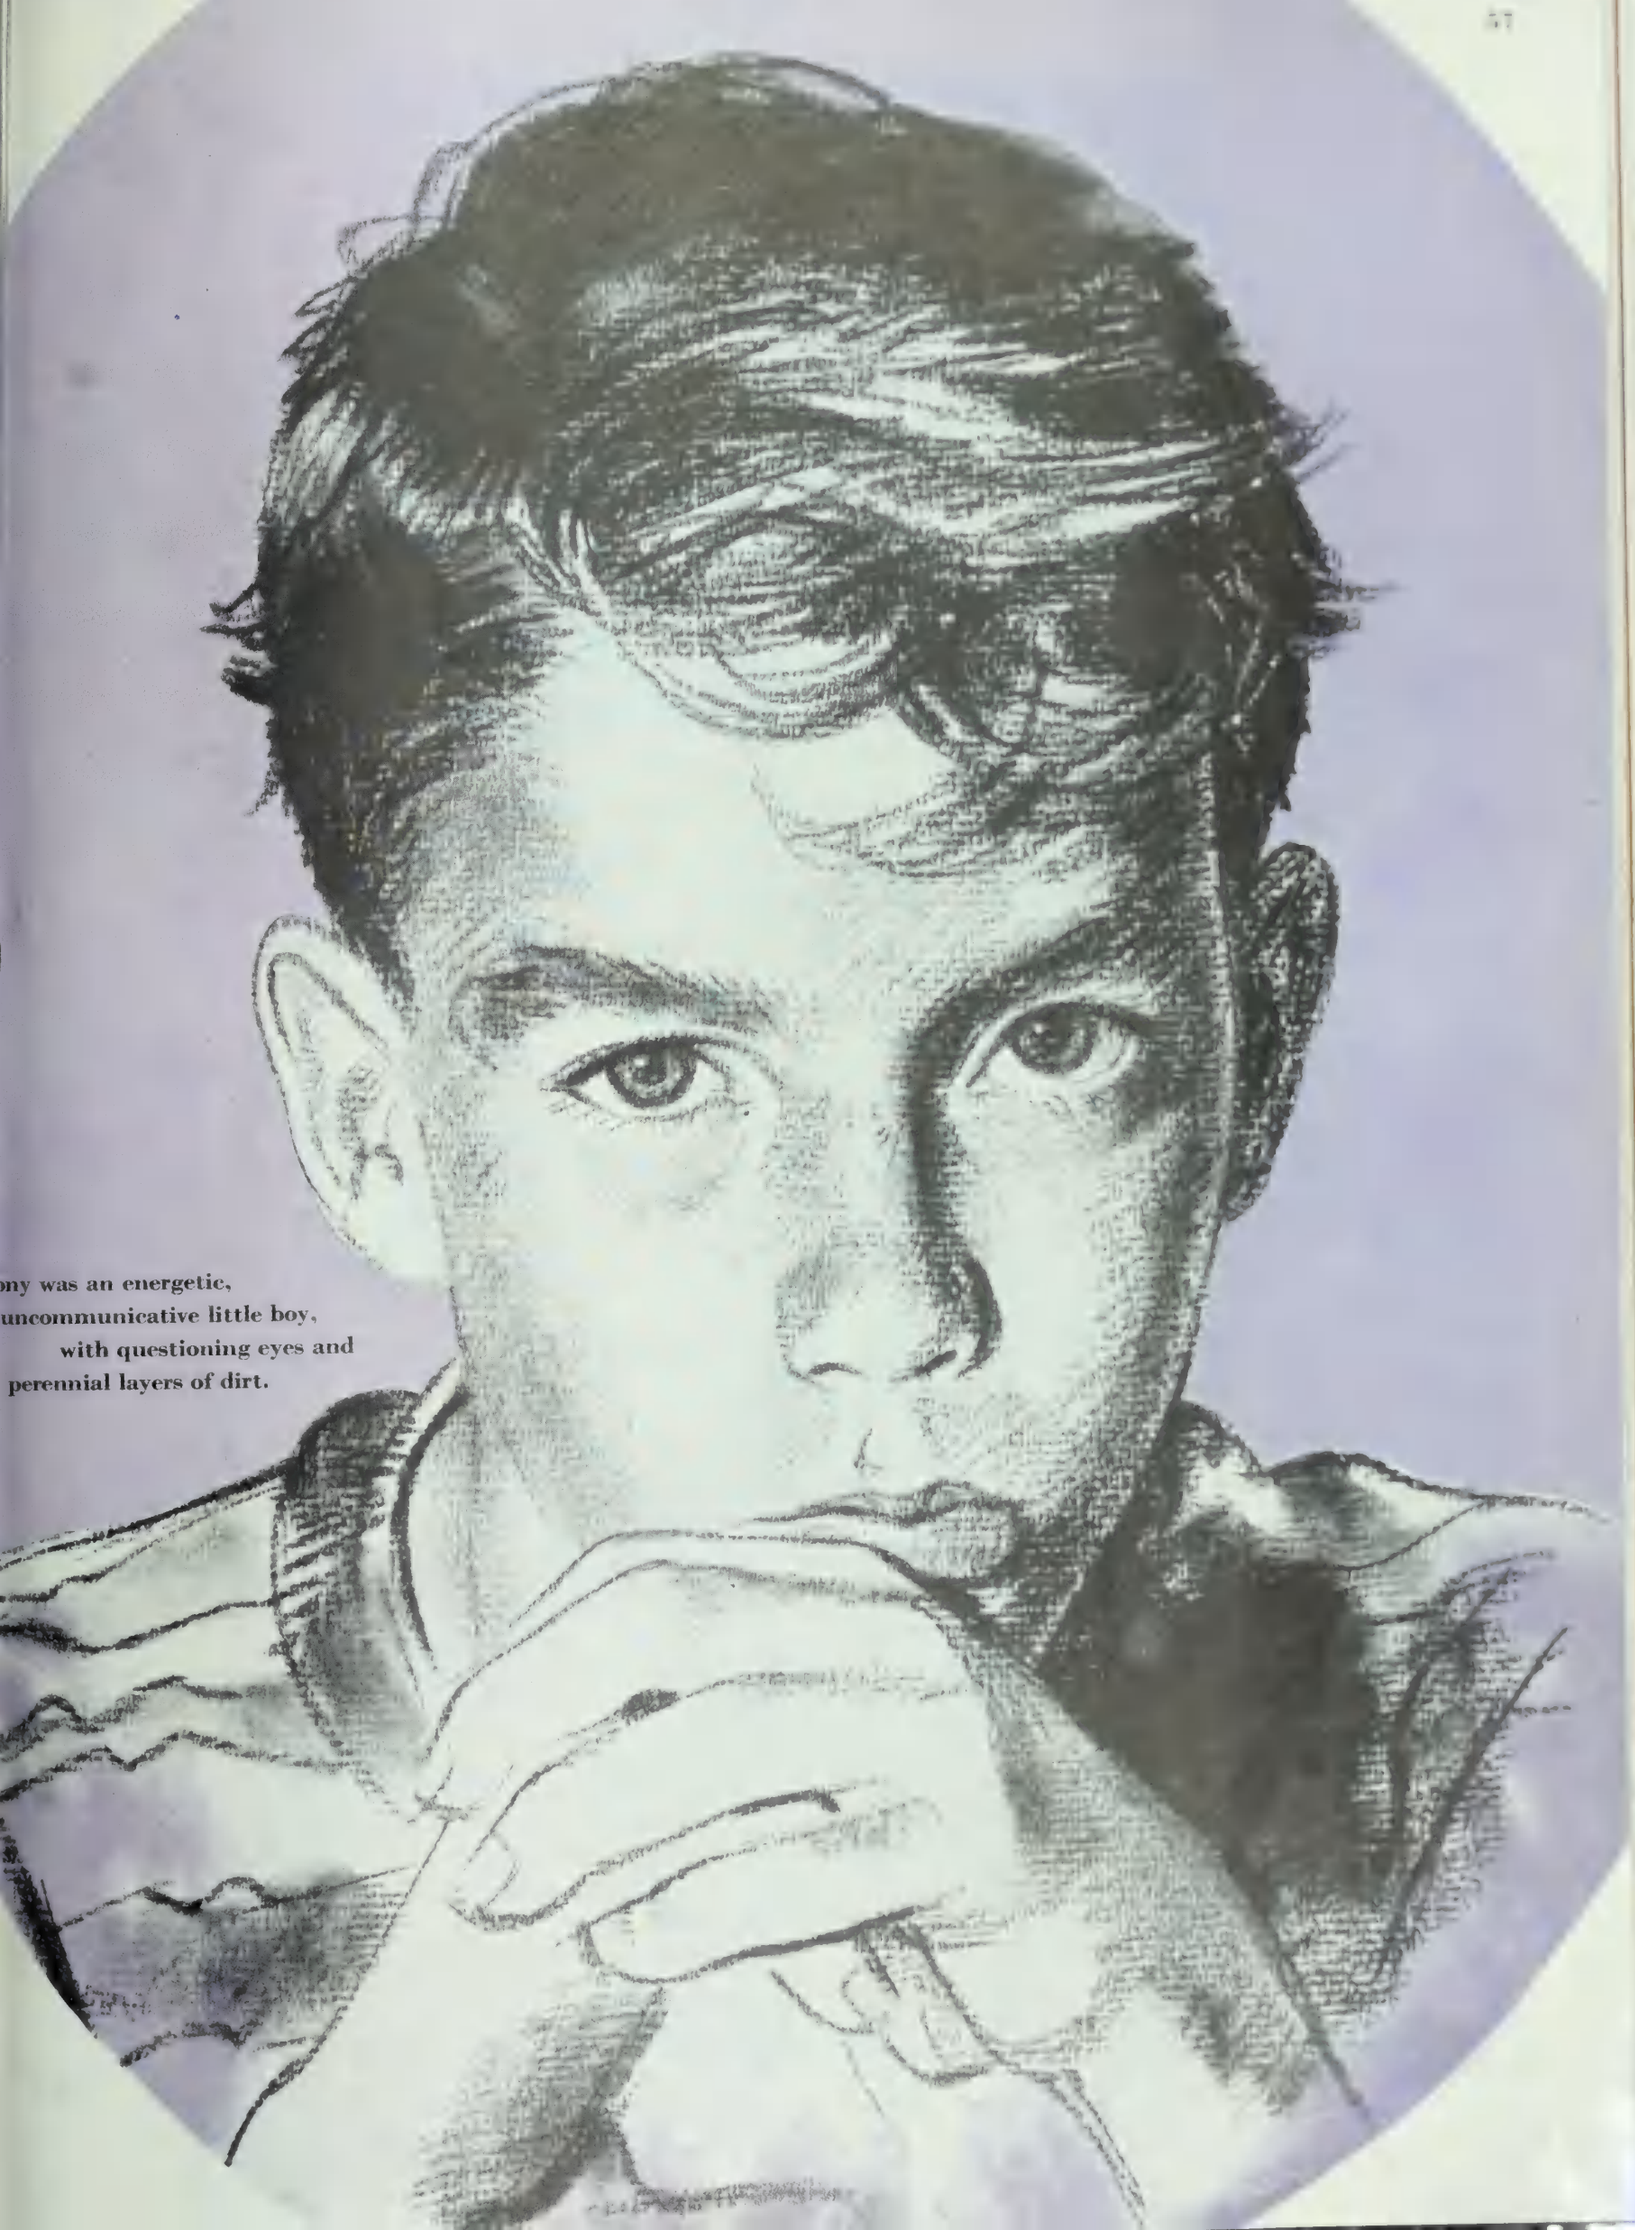
"Just think," she said (for at least the third time) to Kate, "Tony had a birthday last week. He's ten years old now!"

But the baby was absorbed with a tiny speck of green leaf that had drifted onto the floor of her pen. Ellen watched her move it happily from place to place. Kate was that sort of child—quiet, contented, with very little of Tony's exuberant restlessness. But then, Kate was Bill's child, uncomplicated, easy to live with. Whereas Tony ——

In spite of herself, Ellen thought of Dirk, her first husband and her first love. Dirk Hammond was a foreign correspondent now, and his third wife was a wealthy Austrian girl. She hadn't seen him for six years, and she hardly ever thought about him. That much she was convinced of. Her life was full and happy, and she never thought about Dirk if she could possibly help it.

She wasn't thinking about him now. She was planning Tony's favorite supper—rare hamburger, corn pudding and apple pie. She was picturing the three of them, sitting down together at the table. She was wondering if he had changed.

Dirk had cabled that he was sending their little boy back with a newspaper friend, and Bill had driven the thirty miles to the airport to meet him. But it was still hard to believe that Tony should be having those experiences—flying the Atlantic, for instance—apart from her.



The late-afternoon sun slanted through the hydrangea bushes onto Kate's silky brown head, and Ellen was aware of a vague uneasiness. Fortunately, Dirk had no legal rights to his son. When he had left her he had relinquished the custody, and of course the responsibility too.

Even now she could remember that final letter, which, by its flippant tone of mild regret, had been as devastating as anything he could have devised. "I'm afraid it's no go, Ellen," he had typed carelessly on a piece of hotel stationery. "I'm a rolling stone, and we might as well face that fact."

When she had tucked Tony into bed that night she had thought, with lonely despair, You and I are just the moss in his life, darling. And that doesn't count for much, does it?

After the divorce she had been dazed by lack of confidence, and wearied by a persistent effort to make her point of view match with Dirk's casual cynicism. Bill had tried to dissuade her from that. In his mild, cheerful way he had probed again and again into the tangled confusion of her lost values. He was a surgeon, on the staff of the Weldon hospital; he had come into her (Continued on Page 130)

Too many cooks are bad, they say. Tony's trouble was too many parents—
a real mom, a stepfather, a real dad, and a mother by courtesy.

ony was an energetic,
uncommunicative little boy,
with questioning eyes and perennial layers of dirt.

WAYNE ANDREWS

Congregational Church, Madison, Connecticut.

LINE A DAY

1 If you've been auctioning this summer, you'll like a little book I've been rereading. Title, I RECALL, and it's by Jim Hall, who tells all about those "finds" we've all fallen for. In fact, my favorite man is one by the name of Jim. Occupation, auctioneer.

2 To make a canned clam chowder taste as if you had just dug the clams, add cubes of crisp, fried salt pork.

3 To keep peanut brittle out of little boys' pockets, crush it very fine and sprinkle on vanilla ice cream. Be liberal.

4 Rice swells up like a small boy in a cowboy suit. So sometimes you may have some left over, cooked, you know. Add a quarter of a cup to your griddlecake mixture. The rice version is marvelous.

5 When the weather suddenly turns cool, heat canned tomato juice just to a boil. Add a teaspoon of butter for each serving and stir until the butter melts. Serve very hot in small glasses with a thick slice of lemon.

6 Are you a curry fan or fanette? So am I, in moderation. And this quick curry trick suits me fine.

7 Take a can of cream-of-chicken soup and the same amount of light cream and mix them well. Mix a teaspoon of curry powder to a paste with a little milk. Add it to the soup. Beat it well and add seasonings to taste. Heat to hot and serve in cups garnished with minced chives.

8 When we have our fish fry, we'll have Squabs of the Sea. They look like a lot of other sea dwellers and have fooled everybody for years, thus escaping the frying pan. The truth is, Squabs of the Sea are blowfish—nothing more. But they are delicious.

9 Your folks bored with scrambled eggs? Well, drain a can of minced clams, really drain them. Broil crisp and break up some thinly sliced bacon. Add both to the eggs. Season, scramble, and, when done, serve on toast. Garnish with green-pepper slices.

10 The maligned, the abused, the most cast-aside dish on the whole menu is hash. After eating some so-called hashes, I'm inclined to think I know why. The whole thing hinges on that intangibility known as seasoning.

11 Herbs must be used with care. Seasonings—or flavorings—with discretion. "Hold your hand when you have it in the herb bed."

12 When you see a pink-frosted cake, it's usually a kind of cake that has surprises like wedding rings and baby rattles. But no matter, there's a pink cake frosting—a newish one. Good on any occasion.

13 Here it is: Soften 1 package cream cheese with 4 tablespoons cranberry jelly and then add gradually 1 pound confectioners' sugar. Work it all to a fine smoothness. It will frost a 9" cake, layers and all.

14 Note for young brides: Dip out scoops of vanilla ice cream and grate fresh nutmeg over it. This will be pleasing to husband and to wife and other people's husbands and wives. Try it out.

15 Hot weather's fine for picnics in the shade and such goings on, but for me cooking at the out-of-door fireplace belongs to cooler weather.

16 For any outdoor meal, a huge bowl of salad is a must. Potato, properly made, is dandy. Mixed greens, if you can keep them crisp, are fine. Both eat well with cold ham, fried chicken or cheese.

17 Reply to query: No, Gertie, dear. Orégano has nothing to do with Oregon. Nor with organ. Nor with apes. It's an herb. In fact, it's wild marjoram—the Spanish call it "joy of the mountain"—and the marjoram family, both wild and sweet, are excellent seasoners.

18 Then there's Rosemary. This herb has what it takes. She's terrific in the wrong role. But she's a honey in the ham-'n'-eggs class, to mention only one.

19 Now I shall tell you about potato salad. For a large party, boil 6 firm white potatoes, but not to a mush. Just done, that's all. When cold, peel them and set aside. Have plenty of peas cooked, well drained and set to be cold. Peel 3 or 4 smallish onions, or 2 or more Spanish ones. Slice them very thin and do the same with the potatoes. Don't hack them in chunks. Marinate them all in a sharp French dressing. Drain thoroughly and keep very cold.

20 Second chapter: Have ready, and cold, about 6 (4 will do, 6 is 2 better) hard-cooked eggs. Keep out a couple for use later and slice the rest. You might even use 8 or more. No more flexible ingredient was ever known than these in a potato salad.

By Ann Batchelder

21 Third stanza: Now, put your potato, onion and egg slices together in layers with the peas and an old-fashioned "boiled" dressing. Handle it carefully, so it won't be mushy. Fill ice-cold lettuce cups with the mixture, set out on a large platter, top with swirls of dressing and garnish with sliced cucumber, quartered eggs, quartered tomatoes, tiny pearl onions and split sardines. Have all cold. Serve with cold ham and/or sliced cold chicken—and don't forget the hot rolls and coffee.

22 By the way, a mixture of honey with half as much orange marmalade gives baked ham an elegant glaze.

23 For your visiting nephew, change your pitch and make your toasted cheese sandwiches with raisin bread.

24 Caraway or anise seeds added to well-seasoned cream or cottage cheese makes a simple but good spread for whole-wheat crackers or pumpernickel.

25 Quick August dessert: To 1 cup fresh applesauce, add 1 cup light cream, ⅓ cup sugar and ¼ cup lemon juice. Stir until sugar is dissolved. Freeze until firm. Turn into a chilled bowl and beat. Freeze again.

26 Sour milk or buttermilk makes an elegant French toast. Serve with a tart jelly or jam.

27 This is the time to serve lemon or lime sherbet in a fruit cup of melons, peaches, blueberries or what have you. Good as a first or last course.

28 Quick snack for any occasion: Cheddar cheese cut into small cubes and supplied with a toothpick for dipping into a sauce made with ¼ cup catchup and 1 teaspoon horse-radish. Have some crackers handy.

29 Our watch-your-weight crew came up with this special salad dressing for reducers. Put ¼ cup water and 4 teaspoons vinegar into a quart mixing bowl. Sprinkle ¼ cup non-fat dry milk and a pinch of salt over this. Beat until stiff. Then beat in ¼ cup chili sauce. Chill and serve on head lettuce—or on tomato salad. Said to be very satisfactory, but must be made fresh each time used.

30 Good luncheon dish: Well-poached eggs on toast with creamed chipped beef served over them. A watercress salad would be indicated with this.

31 August has no winning ways, just long, drowsy, lazy days.

Bumming with the bumblebees, I would be the same as these.

Summertime is Salad Time ... and SOUP Time, too

-- time for the ONE HOT DISH everybody loves

BY Anne Marshall

ANNE MARSHALL
Director Home Economics
Campbell Soup Company

TODAY let's be frivolous! Or at least let's seem to be!

Let's plan meals that are gay, appetizing and nourishing! Meals that let us off "kitchen-duty" quickly! That means, of course, salads—lots of 'em. But it means something else, too! And here's the news:

Good soup can be just as satisfying on hot summer days as the crispiest of salads . . . the coolest of drinks.

You can prove it yourself! Put bowls of delicious soup on the table with your cool summer foods. You will get most pleasing rewards. By contrast, hot soup makes cool dishes taste better. It helps your stomach to relax—to digest the meal—because your stomach works best in a warm environment.

So plan your summer-eating around appetizing, nourishing soup. Serve it for that one hot dish so many nutrition experts recommend. It's the dish everybody loves! Make summer days SOUP days!

A Summer Meal to Perk You Up

Perfect eating! Cream of chicken soup . . . rich chicken stock, heavy cream, tender pieces of chicken. Just right!

Cream of Chicken Soup
Summer Tomato Aspic Potato Chips
Iced Coffee

QUICK 'N' GOOD!

NEW Salad Dressing You Shake Up in a Jar!

Put into a quart jar, then cover and shake well together:

1 can of Campbell's Tomato Soup
½ soup can of salad oil
½ soup can of vinegar
Salt, pepper, sugar to taste

(Add onion, dry mustard or blue cheese, if desired.) Keep a jar of this dressing in your refrigerator, always ready! Especially good with green salads, fruit salads.

For Refreshing Hot Weather Eating

Vegetable-hungry folks love vegetarian vegetable soup. Fresh-cut garden vegetables in zesty vegetable broth. M-m-m!

Vegetarian Vegetable Soup
Summer Fruit Salad Cheese and Olive Sandwiches
Iced Tea

Perfect Lunch for a Summer Day

So easy to get—so good to eat! Flavorful beef noodle soup—rich beef broth, golden egg noodles and pieces of beef!

Beef Noodle Soup
Summer "Veg" Salad
Berry Pie Cold Milk

How to weave a perfect lattice to top a fruit pie

—a pie-baking hint from MARIE GIFFORD, Armour's famous home economist

Cut pastry, with a knife or pastry wheel, into strips three-fourths inch wide. Place the two longest strips diagonally across center of pie. Then, working from the center to the edge, add other strips—one down and one across—until half the top is covered. Repeat for the other half of the pie. Press edges firmly together. Crimp edge—and you have a lattice-top that's perfect!

And to make your pie crust perfect—rich, flaky and tender—always use Armour Star Lard! It's America's perfect pie lard—the lard of pie-baking champions. Try Marie Gifford's famous 5-minute pie crust recipe, too. You'll find it printed on the handy self-measuring Armour Star Lard carton. It's an easy, can't-fail recipe—you mix all ingredients at room temperature. Use Armour Star Lard for deliciously tender hot breads and biscuits—makes fried foods more digestible, too!

Got a pie-baking question? Just write to Marie Gifford, Dept. 461, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois. She will help you with any pie-baking problem you may have. Write to Marie Gifford, too, for an interesting free booklet of her favorite baking recipes.

Armour Star Lard

—the all-pure lard that stays fresh without refrigeration. Remember, lard saves you money, too!

MELVILLE GOODWIN USA

(Continued from Page 38)

courts and the golf links and the Saturday nights at the club. It was not a bad life, the peacetime Army, if you did not stick your neck out. A lot of it ran together now in his memory, but there was one thing you never forgot and that was your first post. It was the beginning of your life more than any war, and he and Muriel started together at Bailey.

Some of his oldest and dearest friends were among the younger officers who were on the post at Bailey with him. It was his good fortune, too, that he had been able to meet and converse with some of the ablest infantry officers in the Army who came there to the school. He could name them all now if he had to, but then what did names mean? He might, however, mention A. C. Grimshaw, and even civilians ought to remember Grimshaw's name in World War II. He came to the school for two weeks once to deliver a series of lectures. They called him "Foghorn" Grimshaw because he spoke in a low, deferential voice.

Melville met him first over a chess game at the club, and he took one game from Grimshaw, too, which may have been why Foghorn took a liking for him. It was possibly due to knowing Grimshaw at Bailey as much as to his record in the War College that Melville got a staff job under "Tweaker" Beardsley in the middle thirties. It may have been Grimshaw, too, as much as his record that finally got Mel Goodwin into tanks and to North Africa.

There had been quite a ripple of excitement when Foghorn Grimshaw had appeared at the school. The word had gone around that both "Black Jack" Pershing and Peyton March had said publicly that Grimshaw had one of the finest tactical and organizational brains in the service. He had been one of the youngest regimental commanders in the AEF, serving with the Ivy Division and then with Corps and finally at GHQ. There was nothing he had not read and nothing he could not do. Put him anywhere, even in a soap factory, and he would have been running it in the end.

When Mel Goodwin took a game from him at chess and played another to a draw, he did not realize at all what this might mean to him until he happened to be standing outside his quarters one day after retreat. Melville had just bathed and changed into fresh khaki and had gone out to look over the square of lawn that was drying up when Major Grimshaw rode by on horseback with an orderly.

"Why, hello, Goodwin," he said. "Is this where you're living?"

"Yes, sir," Melville said.

"Have you a chessboard handy?"

Melville was very lucky. He had bought a pegged-in chess set when he was in Cannes and he had it in the house.

"It looks cool on that veranda," the major said. "How about a game if you've the time?"

IT would have been conspicuous and out of line to have invited anyone like Grimshaw to his quarters, but it was different now that the major was inviting himself.

"Take my horse back to the stables, please, Murphy," the major said, "and thank you for a very pleasant ride."

He never forgot an enlisted man's name, and when he spoke to enlisted personnel, you were never conscious of rank. Muriel was out on the veranda as soon as they were up the steps, and Melville was proud that she did not look surprised or flustered.

"I've just made some lemonade," she said, and then a while later, after they had finished a game, Muriel asked if Major Grimshaw would not like to stay to supper. They weren't going to have anything but cold chicken and salad and iced tea, but then perhaps it was too hot to eat much.

Right from the beginning Muriel was pretty good at things like that. He would not have dreamed of asking the major himself, and he nearly dropped through the floor when Muriel spoke of chicken, but Muriel had run out in back and had borrowed it from the Cromleys, and Muriel had also borrowed cigars. She had heard that Major Grimshaw liked them, and she had run all the way up the row to borrow some. She had also borrowed after-dinner coffee cups and had asked Colonel Jones if she could pick a few of his begonias.

During supper they began talking about the war, and Major Grimshaw apologized once, saying he was afraid the talk might be boring to Muriel, but Muriel said she had to learn about those things, being an officer's wife, and Melville simply would never tell her about them.

"Melville knocked out two German machine-gun nests," Muriel said. "He threw pineapples into them—isn't that what you call them, dear?"

"Now, Muriel," Melville said.

"That's just like Melville, Major Grimshaw," Muriel went on. "He never wants to talk about himself. Melly, dear, aren't you going to smoke your cigar?"

MOTHER TO SON

In this world you will have to make your own way. To do that you must have friends. You can make friends by being honest, and you can keep them by being steadfast. You must keep in mind that friends worth having will, in the long run, expect as much from you as they give to you. To forget an obligation or be ungrateful for a kindness is a base crime—not merely a fault or a sin, but an actual crime. Men guilty of it sooner or later must suffer the penalty.

In personal conduct be always polite, but never obsequious, no one will respect you more than you esteem yourself. Avoid quarrels as long as you can without yielding to imposition. But sustain your manhood always. Never bring a suit at law for assault and battery or for defamation. The law affords no remedy for such outrages that can satisfy the feelings of a true man. Never wound the feelings of others. Never brook wanton outrage upon your own feelings. If ever you have to vindicate your feelings or defend your honor, do it calmly. If angry at first, wait till your wrath cools before you proceed.

From Andrew Jackson's last letter from his mother.

He had smoked one only once, near Hill 302 in the Argonne. Still, he could not very well pretend he did not like cigars when Muriel put him in that position.

"It was north of Château-Thierry, sir," he said, "near a little town named Cerey, and Muriel shouldn't have brought it up."

"I've been through Cerey," the major said.

"Now, Melly," Muriel said, "don't change the subject."

He had to go on and tell about it after that, and as he did he grew interested in the tactical problem and then the major began talking about tanks.

"I wish we had a sandbox here," the major said.

"Melly," Muriel said, "get a baking pan and get some sand from the Crosby baby's sand pile."

It turned out to be quite an evening when they mixed a little water in the sand. There were some things that were chores, such as paper work and language and administration, but he always did have an instinctive enthusiasm for terrain. He began to forget who Grimshaw was as they moved from one subject to another, and he began criticizing things more freely than he should have.

When Major Grimshaw left it was almost midnight, and Melville did not realize how much he had been sounding off until the major looked at his wrist watch. He could imagine Foghorn Grimshaw's telling how he had spent an evening listening to a c kid lecturing on logistics and fire po Muriel was the one who had started him and he told her it was pretty flat-footed o after the major had left. It did no goo have her say that the major enjoyed the ning or he would not have stayed so lon

"You made me sound like a divisi commander," he said, "right in front Grimshaw."

They were standing alone in that living room filled with all the furniture no one else on the post wanted, becaus course they were kids, and almost any could rank them out of anything.

"But, Melly dear," Muriel said, "yo going to be a general someday." The fu thing about it was that Muriel had n seen a general then, except at his gradua from the Point.

SOMETIMES he wished that Army w were not always watching and worry about their men, but then there was not else much for them to worry about. T future was inseparable from their m future, and they had only one horse to their money on. When things went sour could not blame a lot of them for wis they had married someone else. Ma Muriel wished she had sometimes, but very seldom showed it.

When he got promotions she never loo complacent like some of the other wives, when he got passed over for something g she did not complain. Those years had like a moving belt on the production and Melville Goodwin and his contempo ies had taken their places on that belt the numbers. Some of them left to go business in the twenties. Others had with death, accident and illness, and on two had been pulled off by the high c mand. The rest of the crowd had stayed the belt until the very end, to be so shi tightened and tested that they stepped o logical candidates for a star, and even som these end products broke down when a and not a theoretical strain was placed them. No matter what the simulation combat was the final test.

Melville Goodwin was still a major b in 1940 and only a lieutenant colonel at time of the maneuvers in '41. It was inter ing to remember how things started to cl up in the service when there began to b little distant gunfire in the world. When Germans marched into Poland and French sat still without a single move, could see that it was a new kind of war the exciting thing about it was that a lot o was going the way he had figured. Mechani equipment gave you plenty to think abo and a lot of brass had to revise their id He had to revise some of his own in spring of 1940, when the Germans kni right through at the Ardennes hinge. In f after Dunkirk it looked as though the wh show were folding up. It made him v restless and he found himself short of sle They were at Benning—he was on the fantry School staff as tank instructor—a there were new ideas every minute, a there was also the tactical-aircraft an

"Melly," Muriel asked him, there Benning, "have you heard from Fogh Grimshaw lately?"

Of course, as everyone knew, Gene Grimshaw was in the office of the Chief Staff in Washington.

"I suppose he's still living in Georgeto isn't he?" Muriel said. "I haven't writt Ellen Grimshaw a letter for a long while, a they sent us a Christmas card. I don't lieve they even know that Robert has tered the Point."

When he got orders to go to Washingt to attend a conference of observers b from Europe, he was sure that Muri letter had nothing to do with it. He certain that Foghorn Grimshaw would h thought of him anyway, and the general very glad to see him and asked him to co

(Continued on Page 62)

FOR FAMILY FUN...AT HOME OR AWAY!

"fresh up" with Seven-Up!

COMMENDED BY THE PARENTS' MAGAZINE

ADVERTISED IN AMERICAN HOME ASSOCIATION

BE A "FRESH UP" FAMILY!

The fun of waiting for a bite . . . the pleasure you get as you "fresh up" with 7-Up . . . they're both part of the enjoyment when a "fresh up" family goes fishing. Crystal-clear 7-Up has a way of adding its own lively cheer to any occasion—any time. And 7-Up is so pure . . . so good . . . so wholesome that even the high chair age can enjoy it often. Seven-Up is the all-family drink!

Be a "fresh up" family! Enjoy the clean, fresh taste of chilled 7-Up as you work and play together. Buy a case today wherever you see those bright 7-Up signs.

Copyright 1951 by The Seven-Up Company

FAMILY GAME BOOKLET. Family fun suggestions for youngsters and grownups! Send 20¢ in coin to FAMILY FUN, 1523 S. 10th Street, St. Louis (4), Missouri, or your local Seven-Up Bottling Company.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

You like it... it likes you!

Use FRENCH'S to make a WOW

—best tomato juice cocktail you ever tasted

Taste a tomato juice cocktail made with French's— and you'll say it's a WOW!

Easy, quick—here's all you do. Add a pinch of salt and pepper, a teaspoonful of French's Worcestershire for each glassful of tomato juice—mix well, and serve very cold. Choice ingredients in French's, aged and mellowed, give a zippy distinctive flavor men go for.

TOPNOTCH QUALITY ...COSTS LESS!

(Continued from Page 60)

to Georgetown for the night. The truth was that things were chirking up. The general said he might be wrong, but confidentially he did not see how we could keep out of that show in Europe eventually. There were going to be a lot of chances for bright young men. The general was not as young as he had been back in Bailey, and neither was Melville, though he hadn't a gray hair in his head, but he was still a bright young man to Foghorn Grimshaw.

Somehow I found myself gazing at Melville Goodwin not as a friend but as a useful piece of material, as Foghorn Grimshaw must have. It was after eleven o'clock when he had reached those prewar months in Washington. He stopped and looked slowly around the room. Then he smiled at Phil Bentley.

"Say, Bentley," he said, "right out of the horse's mouth, have I made a fool of myself up to date or haven't I?"

I could see that Phil Bentley liked it. The General had learned how to handle Phil.

"No, sir," Phil said. "On the contrary, you've made a lot of sense."

Obviously Mel Goodwin was pleased, but his glance did not leave Phil Bentley's face.

"In the Army," he said, "you've always got to take loyalty for granted from the top down and from the bottom up. There's no reason why you should be loyal to me, but I'm trusting you, son, and I've got my neck way out. You can raise Cain with me if you want to, and maybe there are some people around who would enjoy it if you did."

"You're going to see everything I write," Phil Bentley said, "and if you think any of it raises Cain, I'll change it."

Coming from Phil Bentley, this meant a great deal, and I wondered if the General realized it. His eyes were still on Phil.

"You see, I'm just a simple guy," he said. His using that expression surprised me, because I had applied it to him so often myself. "You've got to be a pretty simple guy if you lead troops in combat, because combat's elemental."

"You're not as simple as all that, sir," Phil Bentley said. "You're complicated sometimes."

"Listen," the General said, "I know where I stand. I'm a pretty simple guy, Phil."

It was the first time that Mel Goodwin had called him "Phil." As I have said before, calling you by your first name was one of the beguiling habits of big brass. I remembered that he had called me "Sid" much sooner. He showed perspicacity by waiting so long with Phil.

"Just the same," Phil said, "I'd hate to meet you in a poker game."

Phil Bentley knew something about the brass himself. Nothing ever pleased them more than being told they were good at poker, and Mel Goodwin laughed as though Phil had said something very funny.

"Phil," he said, "we'll really have to try it someday."

He had called him Phil again to show it was no mistake. I was looking at Mel Goodwin again, as Foghorn Grimshaw must have looked at him in Washington. He had no excess weight. He was trained down like all the good ones, with just the right facial lines and a cheerful, extrovert look that you often see on a good competitive athlete. Yet somehow he had the correct facial lines without being a rubber stamp like so many of the others.

THE General flicked up his wrist to look at his watch. "Well," he said, "just a few yarns about North Africa tomorrow morning and then you'll have the old man pretty well squeezed out."

Colonel Flax laughed at the General's little joke, and General Goodwin stood up.

"Let's plan to end this by lunch tomorrow if that's all right with you, Phil," he said. "Good night, bright eyes." He smiled at Miss Fineholt, and then turned to me and punched me softly on the chest. "Sid," he said, "stay down here for a minute and explain me to them, will you, and you'd better come along with me, Flax. They might say something that will hurt our feelings; and, Sid ——"

"Yes, sir," I said.

"Stop in and see me before you turn in, will you?" the General said. "Come on, Flax, and let's get out of here."

After they left, Phil Bentley took off his glasses and polished them carefully. "Sid," he said, "he really seems to like me, doesn't he? Maybe I'm learning about the Army."

Perhaps we were all understanding the Army better than previously. Phil had seen something of it before as an overseas war correspondent, but he had been exposed to the products of that great organization more than to its way of life.

"There's one thing that interests me," Phil Bentley said. "Generals' stories are almost interchangeable among generals. Have you ever noticed that?"

"Yes," I said, "that's right. They're uniform."

Phil Bentley swung his spectacles like a pendulum between his thumb and forefinger. "Then why do you suppose they keep on telling them?" He was obviously working out the structure of the profile.

"Sometimes I've thought it rests them," I said. "They convey some private meaning that we don't see. They're a sort of narrative shorthand."

"Maybe they haven't got anything else to talk about," Phil Bentley said. "Take someone like Goodwin. Take his humdrum, stultifying little life, all that spit and polish and all that competition and all that existence by the numbers. Then suddenly he gets more power than anyone ought to have and an automobile and a plane and a permit to kill off people. I don't see anything in the life he lived that made him capable of using that power intelligently. There's a gap somewhere. I wish I could find the gap."

I could see it if he didn't. I had gained some sort of glimpse of it behind Melville Goodwin, but it embarrassed me to point it out to realists like Phil Bentley and Myra Fineholt.

"Don't you see, Phil?" I said. "You ought not to treat him as a materialist. Don't you see he's a hero? It's the power and the glory. Now you and I wanted to be heroes once, and Myra wanted to be Joan of Arc, and we've got over it, but Goodwin still has the virus. It's catching around there at West Point. I don't say that I approve of heroes. I don't say that they look so well in peacetime, but he's a hero and he help it."

I saw Miss Fineholt gazing at m erantly, but Phil Bentley looked startle

"Listen, Sid," he said. "Don't you you're going off the deep end?"

"No," I said. "The trouble is we like to admit there are heroes any outside of an epic."

"Any more than there are fairies bottom of my garden," Miss Finehol

"Just the same, Myra," I told "you've been listening to a hero to perhaps not Grade A but Grade B. have to eat and get along and have pulsions like you and me. If you thi Goodwin that way, everything fits tog He wouldn't have put up with what he through if he didn't have the powe the-glory vision."

PHIL BENTLEY put on his glasses. wait a minute," he said. "Are you try make me believe that every officer in th ular Army is a hero? Let's get down to f

"All right," I said. "The fact is that of them have never got over that fantasy. A lot of them think they m heroes someday, and that's why the the life. Why not face it instead of ga over a word?"

There was something behind all Melville Goodwin had said that was cated and magnificent and impossi rationalize. Perhaps a psychiatrist call it immaturity, but whatever th tribute was, it had its own splendor.

"Let's get it straight," Phil Bentley "instead of kicking it around. Just wh hero?"

I walked to the bookshelf and look The Shorter Oxford Dictionary, and h the first volume to Phil Bentley. "L up," I said.

Phil Bentley turned the pages over s "Well," he said, "well, well. Take this will you, Myra? Here's an Oxford defi of a hero. Quote, 'A man who exhibi traordinary bravery, comma, firm comma, or greatness of soul, comm connection with any pursuit, comma, comma, or enterprise,' close quotes."

"You can't use that about Goodwi you?" Myra Fineholt asked.

Phil Bentley closed the dictionary took off his glasses. "Why not?" he

(Continued on Page 64)

CHRISTINE REED

North Hollywood, California

CHRIS REED is now a Senior Bee at North Hollywood High. ("A Senior Bee is a B12," she explains to those not in the know about high-school terminology.) She is also head cheerleader, a seal-bearer, the only girl on the sports staff of the paper, the vice-president of the Masquettes, and a member of the drill team, the Jourdaines (YWCA), and of Job's Daughters.

Besides, Chris is an ardent baseball fan (Dodgers), makes all her own clothes and "a reasonable noise" on the ukulele. She has been invited to every senior prom since she entered high school. After a dance her favorite snack is cherry root beer, and French fries sprinkled with vinegar. . . . Incidentally, the man with her in the small cover photo is her father, not a boy friend.

HOT DAN SAYS:

"Time to eat Outdoors...

...Time for FRENCH'S!"

(Also made in Canada)

FRENCHWISE BARBECUE SAUCE

…blespoons butter or margarine
…edium onion, minced
…mall green pepper, minced
…blespoons brown sugar
…blespoons French's Mustard
…blespoon French's
…/orcestershire Sauce
…aspoon salt ¾ cup ketchup

… butter or margarine; add … and green pepper; cook … 2 minutes. Add remaining …dients; simmer 10 minutes. … 8 servings.

Smoother, creamier . . . French's is the largest selling mustard in the world

Try these delicious Frenchwise recipes for your outdoor grill! French's Mustard is a blend of the finest spices, mustard seed and vinegar money can buy. This famous mustard has a delightfully different taste—gives food added flavor and zest. No wonder it's America's favorite!

Frenchwise Hamburger

1½ lbs. ground chuck beef ¼ teaspoon French's pepper 1½ teaspoons salt 2 tablespoons minced onion 1 egg 2 tablespoons French's Mustard

Knead all ingredients together, pat into cakes and broil. Serves 5-6.

FREE! Handsome new recipe book—"DINING DELIGHTS"

Send your name and address to The R. T. French Company,
1687 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

It's jelly-making season all year 'round-thanks to

THE NEW 15-MINUTE JELLY MIRACLE!

Brand-New! Frozen Orange Juice and Sure-Jell make thrilling orange jelly in just 15 minutes!

SO EASY!

Try a new Sure-Jell short-boil recipe—with bottled or frozen juice, or frozen fruit—and you'll say it's a miracle, too! No fuss or bother of preparing fruit. Just mix the ingredients and heat! That's all there is to it!

SO THRIFTY!

Costs less than jams or jellies you buy! Yields 50% more jars than the old-fashioned long-boil method. And most important, Sure-Jell is the concentrated natural fruit pectin product that helps all fruits to jell just right!

Powdered fruit pectin for easy jelly making

Product of General Foods

SO DELICIOUS!

The marvelous short-boil method captures all the fragrance and flavor of your fruit or juice. With Sure-Jell they can't boil away, as they can with the long-boil method! (And, of course, Sure-Jell will work its same jelling wonders with fresh fruit! Look for the dozens of recipes for fruits and berries in every Sure-Jell package.)

HOMEMADE Jams and Jellies can't be beat, can't be bought!

(Continued from Page 62)

"Anyway, I'd like to think it over. I think I might use it in the lead."

"You know better than to do that, sweetheart," Miss Fineholt said.

Phil Bentley sighed and looked at the empty armchair where Melville Goodwin had been sitting. "Well," he said, "maybe all this has put me a little off the beam. I don't go with it all the way, but still the definition almost fits him, doesn't it?"

As I walked upstairs after putting out the downstairs lights, I was still thinking so intensely about heroes that I almost forgot that Melville Goodwin had wanted a word with me before I went to bed. I experienced a short sense of anticlimax when I saw him in the main guest room in his undershirt and trousers with his shoes off, but he still looked as though he could slip back into everything if a whistle blew. His shoes were in perfect alignment at the foot of his bed. His coat was on its hanger in the clothes closet. His military brushes were in the exact center of the tall bureau. There was only one detail that I found disconcerting. He was wearing steel-rimmed glasses, and it had never occurred to me that he might need glasses for reading. He was wearing them, I saw, because he was examining a pile of photographs.

"Sit down and look them over, Sid," he said. "I think the boys did a real job on me. What do you think?"

He watched me anxiously when I sat down and examined the pictures. The photographers had obviously struggled for informality, but the strange thing was that not one of them showed him in a grotesque or awkward pose or off balance. Smiling, frowning or smoking a cigarette, talking, laughing or tight-lipped, he was as photogenic as a Hollywood star. The uniform may have helped, and the instinctive correctness with which he wore it, but still there must have been some sort of subconscious watchfulness inside him that not even a candid photographer could penetrate.

"You certainly look sharp," I said.

He accepted it as a fact. "You learn to," he said, "with troops looking at you all the time. I'm used to having the privacy of a goldfish. I'm trying to pick out the best one to pass around."

I knew what he meant by "passing one around." They always made a specialty of signed photographs in the service. I thought of the rows of them I had seen on walls or bookshelves in officers' quarters.

"Muriel collects them like postage stamps," he said. "She always carries a collection with her. Maybe it's not artistic, but it's good to look around and see your friends. I think I'll use this one."

"That one looks fine," I said.

"Muriel said to be sure to get one of you, Sid," he said. "Preferably a picture of you and Helen together. We want you in the gallery."

"That's where we want to be," I said, "permanently in the gallery."

He took off his glasses and put them in their small black case. "Sid," he said, "I can't tell you what your seeing me through this has meant to Muriel and me. Muriel said she liked you as soon as she saw you. She knows a lot of people, but she doesn't like so many."

"Helen and I have enjoyed having you here tremendously," I said. "Helen loves company, and this has been quite a build-up for me. They always like it at the studio when I associate with Very Important People." I laughed to show that this was partly a joke, though basically serious. "I feel I've come to know you as I never would have otherwise, with all this personal history and reminiscence. I've always thought a lot of you, just seeing you around, the way you do see people, and it's nice to know I had sound judgment."

"I'm glad if I've made a hit with you, Sid," the General said. "I guess everybody likes to be regarded favorably in the right quarters, and I admire you personally. You've got a lot on the ball. Say, without pulling punches, how do I rate with Phil Bentley and that research girl?"

"You ought to know," I said. "The mire you, Mel."

"Well," he said, "that's fine. Say, S me my fountain pen, will you? It's i coat pocket in the closet."

It was an order, but it was not o place, because his asking me showed he considered me a member of his g

"Here you are, sir," I said.

I had just called him "Mel," but n was correct to call him "sir" and we knew it. He picked up a photograph the floor beside him, and wrote acr diagonally in a firm bold hand.

"Here," he said, "from me to Across the photograph he had written, Sid with admiration and affection, Me

"Thanks, sir," I said. "I'll value always."

Again, it was correct to call him because the moment had been formal, ir ing a presentation, an award of merit the pinning of a medal, and all our tal led up to it, but now the formality finished and we were out of formation

"Oh, forget it, Sid," he said, "but I every word of it." He coughed and c his throat. "So you had lunch with I New York, did you?" The elaborately way he leaned back in his chair and his ful unconcern were faintly amusin cause subtlety was not one of his points.

"She called you up, didn't she?" Without meaning to, I was adopting h unconcern—talking casually about a both knew slightly, named Dottie Pea

"That's right," he said. "I'm having with her tomorrow night. It really nice to see Dot again. I sort of though forgotten all about me. She never an my last two letters."

There was no use warning anyone things like that. Instead it was alwa visable to get out from under, and th eral was old enough to take care of h and I was probably taking the whole too seriously—but I felt that I had something.

"Oh, that's the way she is," I said off with the old and on with the new don't want to take Dot too seriously, It was about all that I had any right

"Thanks for the briefing, son," he s guess I wouldn't have had that invita I hadn't spanked that Russkie in Berl not taking Dot seriously, but all the it will be nice seeing her again."

"Dot's pretty good company," "and she has a whole suit of armor front hall."

Melville Goodwin still looked very "I certainly want to see it," he "Maybe I need a little relaxation— record, Sid."

"Well, don't forget you have a rec said.

"Oh," he said, "everything doesn into a two-o-one file."

"Perhaps not," I said "I was just th of Ulysses when he was coming hom Troy."

"What has Ulysses got to do with it General asked.

"You recited a poem about him the Ritz in Paris," I said. "Remembe

He looked at me hard, as thou wanted to pull his rank, but then h have realized that he was out of the m zone.

"Well," I said, "when he was sailin to Ithaca to rejoin his wife Penelope, wax in his ears so he couldn't hear the sing."

Melville A. Goodwin's face grew r suddenly he laughed. "It hurts me to educated boy like you fall down on m ogy," he said. "He put wax in his crew son. He didn't use any wax on hims had his men tie him to the mast." Mel Goodwin had an almost flawless m "And anyway, there aren't any Ci Calypsos or sirens around either, son. only Dottie Peale, and I don't take h ously."

Even in his undershirt, surrounded photographs, Mel Goodwin possessed which I needed to believe. That must een why I let myself go further.

right, you're not exclusively Ulysses," "You're Major General Melville A.
in, USA, graduate of West Point, the ry School, the Tank School, Com-and General Staff School and the War e, but what's more, you're a combat
l. I've even heard the boys call you dy Mel.'"
n," he said, "you ought to write cita-
. Go right ahead and lay it on. Don't stop you."
d what's more," I said, "you're Horat the Bridge."
thought you were just telling me I was es," Melville Goodwin said.
ell, you're Horatius too," I said.
d how can man die better than facing l odds for the ashes of his fathers and the es of his Gods?'" had been smiling as he listened to me, uddenly he stopped and his forehead
led. "No kidding, Sid?" he asked.
o," I answered, "not in the strictest
."
face was graver and sterner and sadder it had looked in any of those candid graphs. "That's right," he said, "it entirely kidding. Maybe I've got a little at stuff. You need it in the show, and he whole show's over. There's one trou-with acting in those shows. You get d up to them, and I'm not dead. That's rouble with it—I'm still alive. You've ed me a pretty fast son, and maybe old tius Ulysses Goodwin better turn in now get some sleep. Good , Sid."
Good night, Mel," I

The happiest man in the world is the one who has a good wife. —JOSH BILLINGS.

Here," he called, "come back here. You t your photograph."

had thought that Helen would have been p long ago, but she called me as soon as s in our dressing room. She was sitting in reading.
I haven't seen you all day," she said, cept to look at you across the table at the ers' mess."
Don't be bitter," I said. "We've got to ld War II, and the circus ought to break fter lunch tomorrow."
I'm not bitter," she answered, "but I
't know you could be so military. Well, me I've been wonderful through it all. I d a little encouragement."
told her, of course, that she had been derful through it all.
I wish the General didn't make you so less," she said. "What were you doing o late?" she asked. "I heard everyone
e upstairs."
Oh," I told her, "just saying good night
Horatius Ulysses Goodwin."
Sid," she said, "what's going to happen
ut him and Dottie Peale?"
Now, Helen," I said, "what makes you k anything is going to happen?"
he looked at me for a moment and then shrugged her bare shoulders. "Somes you're awfully obtuse," she said.
on't you know that Mrs. Goodwin knows bout it?"
Now, Helen," I said, "there isn't any 'it' her to know anything about. There was Paris, and I told you about Paris. What she say to you that makes you think so?"

H, Sid," Helen said, "of course it about Paris. It's about now, and of se she didn't say anything. How could
"
You ought to put something over you the window open or you'll catch cold," id. "If she didn't say anything, how do know she knows anything?"
Oh, Sid," Helen said, "really. Anyone see she knows. You only have to look at dwin. I'd know if it were you."
Well, it isn't me," I said.
I know it," Helen said. "Of course I
w. Dottie's never worried me."
Then why did you bring her up?" I
ed

"I didn't," she said, "but now we're on the subject, I wish there were something we could do about it. Do you know what I think? I think she wants to marry him."

"Now, Helen," I said, "what should make you think anything like that?"

"Oh, Sid," she said, "anyone can see she's looking for a man."

"All right, she's looking for a man," I said.

When she spoke again I was half asleep. "Sid," she said, "another thing."

"What other thing?" I asked.

"GILBERT FRARY sent me a big box of orchids this afternoon—not purple ones, yellow ones."

"Well, he was here the other night," I said, "and Gilbert always likes to send things."

"But he's never sent so many," Helen said. "There are twice as many as he's ever sent before. You can look at them tomorrow. They're in the icebox. Good night, darling."

"Good night," I said.

Gilbert Frary and the orchids and Melville Goodwin and Dottie Peale tangled restively in my thoughts as I fell asleep.

Women were often more realistic than men in their analyses of other women, especially certain women. I had not taken certain aspects of my luncheon with Dottie Peale seriously until after those remarks of Helen's. They opened a new and curious vista of odd little possibilities. Of course Dottie Peale was one of those people who were always being talked about in the chromium Latin Quarter that had its center near the night clubs and the restaurants of the Fifties. I had never cared much for this area, but I did know something of it professionally.

Everyone in this area had been wondering for a long while when and whether Dottie Peale would get married again. She was the sort of person, everyone said, who certainly ought to get married, and there were plenty of prospects with whom her name had been connected. I had not thought much about Dottie's private life for a long while, and Helen's theory that Dottie had selected Mel Goodwin as a prospective husband did not seem wholly convincing. Still, I could not help remembering Dottie's wistful remarks about not having anyone, not even me. If Dottie had been thinking along these lines about Melville Goodwin, at least I had come first and somehow the idea made me quite cheerful.

These reflections returned to me as soon as I awoke the next morning. The Army had taught me to set my mind like an alarm clock, and the General would be down for breakfast at eight sharp prepared for his final session in the library. I immediately woke up Helen. She could not believe it when I told her it was half past seven.

"And what if it is?" she asked. "I've just gone to sleep."

"It's his last breakfast," I said, "and we both ought to be down."

"How do you mean?" Helen asked. "He isn't going to be executed or anything, is he?"

"The last officers' mess," I said. "And I think you're all wrong, Helen. I don't think Dottie had any idea of marrying him. Why should she?"

"Oh, you're thinking about that, are you?" Helen said.

"It just crossed my mind," I said. "Of course she doesn't want to marry anyone."

"Well, why are you so cheerful?" Helen asked. "You're usually cross at this time of the morning."

"I was just thinking about you and your shape of things to come," I said.

"Darling," Helen said, "don't you see the General's new? He's different from all you other boys. Can't you put yourself in Dottie's place?"

"No, I can't," I told her.

"Well, I can," Helen said.

The General and Colonel Flax were already in the living room waiting for breakfast, and Melville Goodwin also looked cheerful. He must have been telling Colonel

Success secret* for HOME CANNING!

Here's one sure way to get cheers for your home-canned treats. Put tempting, lasting flavor into every jar!

What do you expect to can or freeze, this summer? Plump, ripe fruit? Delicious fresh vegetables? Tantalizing pickles or relishes? Just make sure you use the finest spices a careful cook can choose. Best way is to buy by brand—McCormick in the East, Schilling in the West—depending on where you live.

The products that bear these famous names assure full, true flavor that holds its own—through processing and storing—and brings extra goodness to your table. Buy them at your grocer's—today!

* Make sure you're set with these McCormick or Schilling spices!

- Pickling Spice
- Mustard Seed
- Celery Seed
- Stick Cinnamon
- Whole Cloves
- Ground Cloves
- Whole Allspice
- Ground Allspice

plus dozens of other "magic touch" spices and extracts

McCORMICK FINE SPICES
Schilling FINE SPICES

East or West—
the same fine spices
only the name is different

McCORMICK & CO., Inc.
The World's Largest Spice and Extract House

P.S.—Be sure to buy the tea with the big Mc

Flax some anecdote, because I heard them both laughing before Helen and I arrived.

"Good morning, my dear," he said. "Did Sid make you come down here on account of me?"

"Oh, no," Helen said. "I love to get up early."

"So does Muriel," the General said. "It's nice we're getting Helen in the groove, Sid, and we've really got to get activated this morning. I want to leave for New York this afternoon. Where are Bentley and Fineholt?"

"I'll send Oscar upstairs after them," I said.

"That's all right," the General said. "Flax has been up after them already. They answered you, didn't they, Flax?"

"They're rising and shining, sir," the colonel said. "They ought to be right down."

"Oh, Mel," Helen said, "Sid showed me your photograph and what you wrote on it. I love it."

"I meant every word of it, my dear," the General said. "I'm proud to think I'll be somewhere in this house."

"I'm proud, too," Helen said. "It's all been lovely, and sometime soon you and Muriel must come again without all this interviewing. I love Muriel."

"That goes both ways," the General said. "You ought to hear what Muriel said about you. She said she wished you had married someone in the service. You know what she means, Sid. Muriel couldn't say anything more than that."

"That reminds me," Helen said. "I have a little present for you to take to Muriel. I want her to have my box of orchids that are in the icebox. As long as they're cold they'll keep until you get to Washington tonight."

"Why, that's very kind of you, dear," the General said. "There's only one little hitch." He frowned. "It may just be," the General said, "that I won't be able to get to Washington tonight, and I wouldn't want to have those orchids spoil."

"Oh, dear," Helen said, "they're yellow orchids. As soon as I saw them I thought of Muriel."

"The difficulty is, dear," the General said, "I have a few duty calls to make in New York. I ought to drop in at First Army Headquarters as a matter of courtesy and see Bud Hodgkins there. We were at the Point together, and Bud may ask me to dinner and spend the night. That's why I can't be sure about the orchids."

"Oh, dear," Helen said. "I'm sorry."

The ranks were forming already, and loyalty was starting from the bottom up. "I'll be going down to Washington tonight, sir," Colonel Flax said. "It will be a pleasure to leave the flowers for Mrs. Goodwin."

The general smiled. "Good," he said; "thanks, Flax. That's the best way out of everything."

I knew that Helen was looking at me, but I did not want to look at her.

"Let's go in and get breakfast," I said. "There's no use waiting."

"No use at all," the General said. "We've got to get moving."

Once I heard someone say in France that any general above the one-star rank carried his headquarters around with him mentally, even if he was not attached to anything. General Goodwin had developed an instinct, of course, for imposing order wherever he went, and all the rest of us had instinctively fallen into our proper echelons. Breakfast at the stroke of eight was part of the system, and following breakfast came the brisk ten-minute walk. The General simply said, "Come on, Flax," or "Come on, Sid," according to his desire. This last morning Melville Goodwin pushed back his chair and thanked Helen for a delightful breakfast. Then he did not even say, "Come on, Sid." He simply said, "Sid." Everything was running like clockwork at headquarters, and in thirty seconds we were outdoors in the fresh October morning. He had set a course for himself down the drive to the main road, then diagonally across the field to the deserted stables. We started down the drive in close-order cadence.

Elephants are almost invariably led by a female. —ANON.

"There was a wind last night," he said, "but no rain. This is good maneuvering weather."

"Yes, sir," I said. "The ground's solid underfoot."

When he looked at me I felt like a young officer who had made a flip remark. "Don't kid me, son," he said. "I'm not in a kidding mood. Those orchids! What made Helen ever think of sending me down to Washington with a bunch of orchids?"

"Well, you see," I said, "Gilbert Frary—he's the one who runs the program—sent them to Helen. They're a very rare variety. It's what Gilbert would call a gracious gesture, and I suppose Helen wanted to make a gracious gesture."

"If anyone sent Muriel a lot of orchids," the General said, "I'd put an interpretation on it."

"Maybe there is one," I said, "but Gilbert's always making gracious gestures."

"Now there was a colonel when Muriel was at Baguio," the General said. "Some people always have woman trouble. You can always pick the Fancy Dans." I waited expectantly for Melville Goodwin to go on, but the General was silent, and we walked for a while in cadence. "Muriel was really a sharp-looking gal," the General said, "in Baguio, but she never did have man trouble. There's only one thing wrong with Muriel."

The General was thinking out loud, but I wished he would not think out loud quite so confidentially.

"I wouldn't say this to many people, boy," he said, "but there comes a time when a man has to talk to a friend who has a broad-gauge, tolerant view. I don't know how to lay it on the line exactly, but you're about the only one I know as an intimate friend who is on both the inside and the outside."

"On the inside and the outside of what?" I asked.

"The service," the General said. "You have a service-type instinct and a service-type loyalty. I observed it the first time I saw you. Now let me make my point. There's only one thing wrong with Muriel. She's always taking over. It may be—I don't know—that I'm not quite as adjusted to Muriel as I was, because I've been overseas for quite a while and sort of on my own. You know—compelled by circumstances to work out a few ideas by myself. I know Muriel can't help it. She's got it in her mind to get me a desk somewhere at the Joint Chiefs. I don't seem to be adjusted any more. You see what I mean?"

"Yes," I said, "I see what you mean. Now take Helen." But I stopped. There was no need of bringing Helen into it, and after all, a lot of other men had found they were not adjusted to their wives when they came back from overseas.

"That's exactly what I mean," the General said. "Everybody has personality problems. But there's one thing I'd like to get straight. I may be wrong, but it seemed to me that you had a sort of stricken look when I said I was going to have dinner with your friend and my friend, Dottie Peale, tonight. Now what is the matter with it? Why did you give me all that talk about my re just because I'm having dinner with D Peale?"

I thought for a while before I answer might as well have tried to stop a fire l running to a fire. "Never mind it," I "but just take it easy, Mel."

He looked at me and I looked back at It was another of those rare moments he did not have the rank.

"Say, Sid," he said, "has anything pened between you and Dottie since Par get the idea that you don't seem to like any more. You don't seem to understand charm, her sympathetic quality or anythi

"Oh, let's skip it, Mel," I said. "I like in a different way from you, that's all." of course he did not want to skip tal about Dottie Peale.

"There's one funny thing about me, S he said, "that I don't understand. Any I dance with a pretty girl twice on Satu night, there's always a general air of di proval up and down the scale, a raisin eyebrows and a lot of kind advice. There a lot of high-ranking nonmonogamis you'd be surprised—but when it comes t taking a day off, Eisenhower or Clar Bradley or somebody gets me on the ca The whole Army wants me to be tru Muriel. . . . What are you smiling about you think that's funny?"

"Yes," I said, "a little funny."

We had reached the stable, and no turned right oblique to the house.

"You ought to get some horses, Sid, said, "but let's get this straight. I k where I am and what I'm doing. Do yo derstand?"

"Of course I understand," I said.

"I just want a few moments off," the eral said, "just a few moments out of a tic life to talk to someone who listens t ideas. Dottie always listens. She even some of my ideas."

"That's right," I said, "Dottie al listens," and I wondered if he knew tha had opened himself like a book and guilelessly turned page after page.

The General drew a deep breath cleared his throat. We had almost rea the house. "Well, that's all there is to it, said. "I just wanted to give you a briefing, Sid, so you'd see there's no serious about this at all. Come on, I wa get this over. One thing at a time, son, thing at a time."

(To be Continued)

WE MUST PAY FOR OUR OWN ROOM ON EARTH

(Continued from Page 41)

The meeting had a curious urgency about it, she continued, which went unstated, but not unfelt. It was well known to everyone that war was brewing in Europe, but in England there was little of the mental and physical preparation that was to prove so strong only a few months later. Lectures on civil defense were numerous, but they carried little fervor and there were many who called them outright warmongering. Hitler was a man with whom the English could do business; the Nazi ambassador was a charming addition to London society. The Home Secretary spoke of none of this, however; he confined himself to the problem he wished to present to Lady Reading, and in his manner of taking it for granted that it was vital won her over, body and soul, to his idea that it was up to her to think up something new that would successfully recruit women to work with the Air Raid Precaution services.

"But I'm off to Bulgaria for a month," she said, unable to explain that only patriotism could make her even attempt such an awesome task.

"Make it fourteen days—and think about it in the meantime," he said, leaving her no way out.

Fifteen days later, Lady Reading was back with a memorandum. The idea of the WVS had been born on the Orient Express as it sped across Europe, carrying the Dowager Marchioness of Reading to visit her old friend, the wife of the American minister to Bulgaria—and had been summed up in memo form on a typewriter of the American legation in Sofia.

That memorandum, precise, efficient and brief, stands today as a masterpiece of understatement concerning the WVS. In it, Lady Reading listed the aims of the service to be, first, the enrollment of women in the Air Raid Precaution services, and second, to bring home to all women, especially women at home, what air raids meant, and what they could do to help their families and themselves, in the event Britain was attacked.

For out of this acorn a great oak grew. Once the enrollments were stepped up in the ARP to the satisfaction of all concerned, once the women were educated on what they could do, well, there was then no stopping them. To a woman they took up as their slogan "The WVS Never Says No"—more discreetly phrased in an official bulletin as "No task is so slight that it falls below our notice—no effort so great it lies beyond our strength"—and after one year of prewar, and six years of war work, it took a fact-packed, 276-page book simply to outline their accomplishments. This list of activities ranged from the early and relatively simple days of motor transport, billet surveying (in case of London's being evacuated) and salvage work, through the fierce years of the London bombings, when the WVS worked hand in hand with firemen, servicemen, dockyard workers and bombed-out families, ignoring such mundane matters as rest, regular meals, fire, flood and explosives.

Those in the food services prepared, kept hot, delivered millions of cups of coffee, soup, tea, sandwiches, carrying them into bombed areas before the bombs had stopped falling and the fires died away; delivered them to the fire fighters, ruin diggers, trapped families, school children, invalids, British servicemen going abroad, American men arriving, war plants without lunchrooms, homes without gas or electricity, refugees from abroad, evacuated mothers and children—anyone who needed them, wherever and whenever they were needed.

Women in the clothing units knitted, sewed, sorted, demothed, classified, washed, deloused, disinfected, stored and distributed coats, blankets, socks, shoes, boots—anything that might be needed by the bombed-out families, the servicemen, the refugees. They "adopted the feet of the army" and darned all their socks. They handled the endless stream of clothing that went from American homes, largely through the American Red Cross, to the British people. They saw that the kids evacuated in the summer in play suits had sweaters to wear in the winter, that men bombed out in pajamas had work clothes for the following day.

They staffed rest centers for the home ran nurseries for babies, hotels for refu homes for the aged—scrubbing, mop doing the laundry, getting the m They worked in hospitals when the n were overburdened, served as subst housekeepers and baby-sitters and c when mothers were wounded or ill. established dormitories in the railroad tions for the men on leave in transit nowhere to rest. They made camou nets—collected bones, rags, scraps of p no bigger than bus tickets—and shi books overseas. They set up Welcome C for the American troops landing in Engl gave parties for the Dutch, Polish, Be refugees, gave aid and guidance to fo visitors. They manned air-raid inquiry p where thirty minutes after a bombing could find out whether your family had hit—or where you, the homeless one, c go now for lodging, food and clothing. served overseas in canteens, clubs and l centers for the troops.

At their peak, they were 2,000,000 st

And, women always, they gave more just muscle and sweat. People who saw in action remember them for the sp things: the finding of a pet canary small, stricken boy standing in front o bombed ruins of his home; the Americar of hot coffee handed to the Yanks in osition, or possession, I thought, then ad- antage would be taken all along the line, nd where would we be? The job-first ap- roach had to start with me, or I couldn't xpect it to start anywhere. I've stuck to hat attitude throughout.

(Continued on Page 68)

"Today our job-first attitude is so much part of all of us that we at headquarters onestly feel ourselves very humble. We feel ve learn from the regional workers—not hey from us."

Stressing the job, eliminating the rank, hrowing out fund collecting and cash hold- ng had other influences. With rank non- xistent, uniforms and insignia were a sim- ple matter of useful and attractive garments: greenish-gray jacket and skirt, a bright louse ("I thought of the time it takes to vash and iron a white blouse and decided n a cheerful winy red," Lady Reading said), hat, of course, in order to be tidy and eminine—but not a cap, and no rules on what angle to wear your hat, either. ("Every woman is an individual in the WVS.") And he whole costume done by the best de- igners at the lowest prices—$8 for the basic outfit, and nothing obligatory about buying ne if you don't want to.

No fund collecting and no cash holding eliminated tiresome budgeting, as well as doorbell pushing. But, more important than hese, it threw each local unit back on its own resources: it meant an increase in inge- nuity, enterprise, neighborhood co-operation, nd a freedom of action that they would never have had were the government footing a huge bill, or patron- esses and patrons clam- nering that their do- nations go for this or hat pet project.

I had now reached, I felt, the heart of the WVS—the focal point around which it re- volved, the quality Lady Reading likes to call "purity of motive." But I was still dissat- isfied. Clearly, it seemed o me, although Lady Reading hotly disputed t, the story of the WVS was not complete without the story of its eader. What was it hat Lady Reading had which distilled—or in- stilled—the spirit that motivated the WVS? The subtle infusion of her own personality, her philosophical values, these were apparent in every job the organization approached, as important as tea leaves in a pot of tea, with- out which it would be mere hot water. With- out Lady Reading, I felt, the job of defense and reconstruction the WVS had done would still have been done—but it would not have been done the same way, with the same spirit, the same richness and generosity, the same staying power.

It is not easy to discover what makes a person tick. But in every life, a certain pat- tern of character stands out, for better or worse, a way of reacting to common situa- tions, of meeting common problems. In most of us, these "characteristic" things begin to grow when we are very young: determined by our circumstances, or heritage, or en- vironment.

There were three strong influences in the young life of the present Lady Reading. The first probably was religion, but perhaps her illness was of equal importance. There was also a strong love for her father, and with it a desire to please him and be like him.

STELLA READING was born Stella Charnaud on January 6, 1895, in Constantinople, where her father was stationed with the British Foreign Service. Because she was born on the Feast of Epiphany, when Christ was revealed to the Gentiles, her mother chose the Latin for "star" as her first name. She was descended from French Huguenots who, some 350 years before, had forsaken their homeland and sacrificed everything for their religious beliefs, fleeing France to join the Church of England

A deep loyalty to the church persisted in the family descendants, coupled with a strong patriotism, and their life in foreign lands strengthened these traditions. Family prayers were a regular part of each day; church attendance on Sundays and holy days was obligatory, and Sunday was kept very faithfully indeed.

"There were nine of us children," Lady Reading said. "Four older than I, four younger. On Saturday night, our dolls were put to bed, and they did not get up until Monday morning. On Sunday, our only pas- time outside of the church was coloring texts. Religion was thus a part of our life, like eating three meals a day.

"IT is very difficult to talk about religion. It is a personal matter. But my faith in God has always been very real. I believe deeply in prayer; time spent in church is a time of withdrawnness—a time when one searches for perspective on the real values of life. And it is true this has influenced my work with the WVS.

"There is a poem I've always liked, by Rabindranath Tagore. It's about a man who was searching for the touchstone. He had an idea where it was, and he decided to devote his life to finding it. He set out, clad only in a loin cloth and a girdle of chain, and picked up stone after stone, touching it to his girdle. Years went by, then one day he chanced to look at his girdle—and it was gold. He had picked up the touchstone, but he had tossed it away, not recognizing it. It is something that happens to so many of us. We come upon our own touch- stones, but life is mov- ing so fast, there is so much to do that we pass by the things which are the most im- portant to us without always noticing their importance. In the WVS work, I have hoped so much that this would not happen, that we would not throw away our touchstones, that I have deliberately set aside certain times in which we can examine them. Each year I have sent out a Christmas message—a sort of gath- ering together in words of the spiritual values in the work we are doing. And at work con- ferences, we have special hours devoted to the philosophy of volunteer work.

Boston is noted for its winding, picturesque, and often confus- ing, streets. An English visitor arriv- ing late at a reception at Henry Cabot Lodge's house complained of getting lost: "I don't see how any- body finds their way around these crooked streets." "It is rather diffi- cult," Lodge cheerfully admitted. "Why, I remember a friend—lived all his life in Boston—who once took a cat he wanted to lose down to the river." "And did he lose it?" asked the Englishman politely, but some- what confused at the turn of the conversation. "No." Lodge replied, "and he would never have found his way home if he hadn't followed the cat."

"When my own faith and strength falter, I replenish them by going out and learning from people who have really made something of their work with a devotional belief. A good volunteer must feel she is out to give some- thing—but one of the most difficult things about handling volunteers is that often they do not know the value of what they have to give. A shocking lot of people are unaware that they have anything worth giving to anyone else. You have to help them find themselves.

"Too often we tend to think that the best workers—or even the best people—are those with skills, with highly developed intellects. These are nice extras—but the most im- portant qualification for the best volun- teer is to be good in the true sense of the word: in character, outlook, belief, life and faith. There is more generation of good work by giving confidence to other people, than in doing the work oneself. The person whom I would cheerfully hang is the person who says, 'I always do it myself because then I know it is well done.'"

As Lady Reading said this, she laughed, but I was struck strongly by how precisely she had captured a trait of her own, although whether she knew it or not I was not impu- dent enough to ask. When you are with her, and for hours, days, even weeks afterward, you are buoyed up by a sense of well-being, of strength, of confidence, not only in what people can do, but in what you yourself can do. It is a great gift some people have to give; Lady Reading is one of those who give

DISCRIMINATING PEOPLE PREFER

HERBERT TAREYTON

MRS. JAMES MITCHELL CRANE, charming socialite of New York and Sands Point, L. I. Discriminating in her choice of cigarettes, Mrs. Crane says: "Herbert Tareyton gives me more smoking enjoyment than any other cigarette."

Discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton. They appreciate the kind of smoking that only fine tobacco and a genuine cork tip can give. The cork tip doesn't stick to the lips . . . it's clean and firm. And discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton because their modern size not only means a longer, cooler smoke, but that extra measure of fine tobacco makes Herbert Tareyton today's most unusual cigarette value.

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT THEM YOU'LL LIKE

Copr., The American Tobacco Company

READER'S DIGEST* Reported The Same Research Which Proves That Brushing Teeth Right After Eating with

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST

Reader's Digest recently reported the same research which proves the Colgate way of brushing teeth right after eating stops tooth decay best! The most thoroughly proved and accepted home method of oral hygiene known today!

Yes, and 2 years' research showed the Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever before reported in dentifrice history! No other dentifrice, ammoniated or not, offers such conclusive proof!

LATER—Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

Use Colgate Dental Cream
✓ To Clean Your Breath
✓ While You Clean Your Teeth—
✓ And Help Stop Tooth Decay!

COLGATE RIBBON DENTAL CREAM

*YOU SHOULD KNOW! While not mentioned by name, Colgate's was the only toothpaste used in the research on tooth decay recently reported in Reader's Digest.

it. It is a gift that cannot be manufactured; it must come from the heart.

Perhaps this grew out of her religion, perhaps from her illness. She suffered as a child from what she now thinks was a curvature of the spine, but which at the time was not diagnosed. It caused days of staying in bed, of pain, of weariness. But it had its own compensations. She learned early that people like others to be cheerful, to cover up their troubles. She learned to live vicariously—with her own life limited, the pleasures and activities of others were of very real interest. She learned to love books, all books, any books, and to speak many languages as the family moved around the blue waters of the Mediterranean, from Turkey to Mesopotamia to Greece.

Frequently they went home to England on visits, but because young Stella was delicate, she was not sent there to school, but was instead taught by tutors and governesses. It was a haphazard education, for her father believed that girls should learn only what they wanted to, and not too much of that. Young Stella, happily, wanted to learn everything, and, as a reward for not biting her nails, he permitted her even to learn Latin and Greek.

"I was a pasty-faced, pigtailed, serious youngster," she recalled. "And how much I wanted to be a butterfly! I remember once hearing an aunt tell a friend that one of her daughters was soon coming home from England. 'But what difference does it make?' the woman asked. 'You have so many daughters.' 'Ah,' my aunt replied, 'but she is the gay one.' And how I wished someone would describe me that way!"

There was something else Lady Reading learned, however (and gaiety was to come later, when she had grown into health and vigor), and that was the value of being "the one who is always there"—the nerve center. Bedridden, homebound, she was the one who took messages, heard confidences, held hands in small sorrows.

"How much you miss if you are not there when someone has something they want to say—right then," she said. "I suppose that is the thing which has kept me at my desk, day in, day out, for so long. There has to be a nerve center, I think, in any organization, and it is, I think, my job in the WVS to be it as much as I can. A mistake is made somewhere, everything is all confusion, nobody knows what has happened—and then I remember that the organizer two regions away wears pince-nez and they are always slipping off her nose, and probably she has not read the last paragraph of her work instructions. Details are important; little details—how a telephone switchboard works can affect how a whole office functions. These are the things you don't know if you're not there."

As she grew up, because she was always there, she was also sometimes called upon to take over the running of the house. With a large family, generously staffed, it was a small organization in itself. She made mistakes, but she learned. Then came another important learning period—of a very different variety. For in her late teens, the family income suffered reverses, and loving her father deeply, wanting to help him, young Stella decided she would get a job. It was not her father's wish; he did not believe in women's working, especially not his daughters, and, quite candidly, he did not believe that she had very much to offer. But without his approval, she made her decision, and went to London to find a post as secretary.

To both her amazement and his, she proved to be an excellent one, and in her thirties was asked by Lord Reading, then Lord Viceroy to India, to join his staff.

This work, and her subsequent marriage to Lord Reading, added another tremendous influence to her life. Like her father, Lord Reading was a happy person, despite the heavy burdens of state which he carried. He was also selfless, she felt. Marrying him late in his life, he had only five years with him before he died—but to Lady Reading "it was five years of such bliss for me that I would work my fingers to the bone the rest of my life to pay for it."

As the wife of a statesman, Lady Reading shifted her energies from business to volunteer work. Because of family training, she had been long in the habit of doing some sort of civic work; now she became a voluntary magistrate, an organizer of a group to aid the unemployed, and an important figure in charity work.

Thus when the Home Secretary called upon her to organize the women of Britain to meet the challenge of war, she was prepared not only as the holder of a great name but also by life, by previous experience, to be of service.

Today she works from nine-thirty to six-thirty in the WVS offices on Tothill Street from Monday to Friday. On Fridays she drives down to her home in the country, and Saturdays and Sundays, before she gets out of bed, she goes over her mail for the week, dictating to a machine her letters, suggestions to fellow workers, orders to herself. This dictating machine is one of three—the office one, the London house one and the country one. It is another way of "being always there."

She also uses her week ends to keep in touch with new laws and to inform herself on old ones. Although she used to twit her husband that laws were made by men to be broken by women, she holds that civic work has now become the handmaiden of governments, rather than of private interests, and that it is vital that volunteer organizations work with a knowledge of statutory law. It is not a knowledge which she enjoys seeking, however, the reading of law being a dull occupation and one which she cannot do while she is gardening—her favorite recreation.

Now and again, she takes time out for an evening at the theater, dinner with old friends, and she is never too busy to see her step grandchildren or step great-grandchildren. Most years she comes to America, partly to see old friends here, partly to meet other leaders in her field, and partly just because she loves this country. Several times she has traveled even farther abroad to see her far-flung WVS units in India, Japan and the Near East.

Currently, the WVS is faced with another change in its program, this time a reversal. Once again, it is being called upon to recruit workers for the defense of the country.

Soon Lady Reading will again take to the stump and go through Great Britain talking to various women's groups about the work to be done, the work that is needed. The WVS has never sought admiration—publicity, says Lady Reading, sullies the quality of the work you perform—nor have they exhorted and beat drums to gather in workers. But this time they expect to be even quieter about enlistments.

"I have learned a lot about voluntary work by now and why people do it," Lady Reading summed it up. "It is through such labors of love that one pays for his room on earth—and I know today how very many people feel the need to make this payment.

"I used to say, 'We need you.' Now I know that we all know every hand will be needed in the next great conflict. This time when we seek new workers we will simply present the job that has to be done and say, 'It's up to you whether you do it or not—you're the one who has to face posterity.'"

She leaned back in her chair, and spoke slowly.

"The days ahead of us will not be easy," she said. "They will be harder, in all probability, than the ones behind us. But we cannot quit. In order to accomplish anything, one must have, first, the vision of how it can be done, second, the stamina to carry it through.

"There is a prayer that says it much better than I can—the prayer of Sir Francis Drake on the eve of the Battle of Cadiz. 'Lord God,' it goes, 'when Thou givest to Thy servants to endeavor in any great matter, grant us also to know that it is not the beginning, but the continuing of the same, until it be thoroughly finished, that yieldeth the great glory.'"

THE END

NEW patent BY REALSILK

HOSIERY THAT LOOKS, FITS, WEARS BETTER

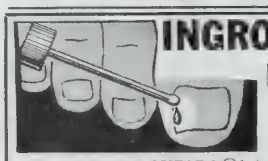
REALSILK MEANS QUALITY

For easy shopping, Realsilk's smart hosiery and other family apparel are brought to your home or office!

▶ Profitable Sales Opportunities now available for men and women. Write:

REAL SILK HOSIERY MILLS, INC.
Dept. J-17, Indianapolis 6, Indiana

For complete removal of superfluous hair use ZiP Epilator



ZiP—IT'S OFF because IT'S OUT

Safe for face, arms, legs. Good stores, or send $1.10 to Jordeau, Box H-11, South Orange, N. J.

DISASTER

May Lurk in Neglected Minor Injuries
BURNS, CUTS, SCRATCHES, SCALDS

Painful, dangerous infection may result from neglect of small injuries. Apply Oil-O-Sol instantly. This gentle germ-arresting antiseptic acts at once to help control infection, ease pain, speed healing. Wonderful first aid protection for 50 years. Does not sting. Easy to use. Mosso's Oil-O-Sol, 50¢ today at your drug store.

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You?
Immediate Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

Amazing FREE Trial Offer Proves
You, Too, Can MAKE EXTRA MONEY!

Write today for big value ARTISTIC Christmas Card Assortments on FREE Trial. Just show to folks. They buy on sight! No experience needed. You make up to 100% profit on 21-Card $1 Assortments, 35 other fast-sellers zoom your earnings!

START EARNING NOW!

FREE Samples of EMBOSSED Christmas Cards WITH NAME, 50 for $1.25 up; $1 Personalized Stationery, etc. Send now for full details and Assortments on Free Trial!

Get Details of $2500 CASH PRIZE CONTEST

Artistic Card Co., 347 Way St., Elmira, N.Y.

WOMAN AT THE WINDOW

(Continued from Page 37)

bristles all over me. . . . Anna's special and I'm run-of-the-mill—I know that. I knew it when she was nine and I was six. But accepting it is something different. I was just getting so I did. . . . Of course I have to go. Since mother died, there hasn't been any family but us. . . . I couldn't imagine it, that she won't walk again. Graner—he did the operation—he was so hopeful. I can't believe it."

"Relatives shouldn't look after each other. You're right," Lollie said.

"I am right—but of course I must go. But look, Lollie, I want to keep this room. I want to hang onto it awhile. Could I borrow two weeks' rent from you? They're going to pay me something, I don't know what, but if I settle up things here, get my ticket and all, I won't have much left."

"I'll take care of the room till you let me know otherwise," Lollie said. "I would make it for a definite time—two weeks, a month."

Elizabeth gave her a quick, grateful smile but did not answer, and presently Lollie went to her own room.

In the morning Elizabeth went to the bookshop and said that she couldn't take the job. She paid her bill at the cleaner's, took her library books back, bought a present for Johnny, finally one she couldn't afford for Anna. She went home, packed.

Next morning it was raining. Elizabeth rose at seven, put coffee on, went to Lollie's door, called, "Come have coffee with me!" Lollie came very soon, in the blue suit which was her school uniform.

"Look, Elizabeth," Lollie said, "I'm worried about this. Can't they get a nurse?"

"Adrian says not—they have one, but she's no good. I'm all right." She got up from the card table she had set up for their breakfast, went to a book, took out some snapshots and brought them back to Lollie. "That's Anna," she said. "She's always gay and generous as well as lovely to look at. But, Lollie, she's never needed me. And now she does and I was reluctant. I'll be ashamed of that forever—but, oh, I can't explain myself."

Lollie's round face was sober. She got up and said, "I've got to go," then put her hand on Elizabeth's. "Make it two weeks, definitely. . . . There's a boy, isn't there?"

"Yes, Johnny. Five years old."

"Don't get to feeling too sorry for him and stay on." She hesitated as if wanting to say more, but picked up her books, bag and car keys, and departed.

Elizabeth called a taxi to take her to the station. She looked around her room before she picked up her suitcase—looked at her rows of books, her desk, so unfamiliarly tidy, the worn carpet on the floor. It looked beautiful to her, dear, her own. Then she picked up her suitcase and went out fast.

It was a dreary ride in the train. Half the time you could not even see beyond the veil of the rain against the windows. When you could see, there were only sodden fields, dreary farms with rutty drives, and machinery rusting in the farmyard.

SHE kept seeing Anna in the hospital, flowers all around, so absolutely sure that this was just a silly interlude between fun and fun, making even this fun. And other people coming in so that there wasn't much time to talk.

I've always wanted her to want me till I've almost died of it, she insisted to the streaming window. And now she wants me. She says. She won't want me long, and then I'll have to start getting myself whole and free all over again. That's what bothers me, I suppose.

The mournful sound of the whistle echoed through the train, out into the early night, and the conductor called out, "Lakeville! Lakeville!"

She saw Adrian before she came down the steps. Then he was reaching for her suitcase, saying, "Hello, Liz." Someone said, "Hi," and Adrian said, "Hellow, Hux," did not pause. Hux—he was the one who had flooded the hospital room with flowers, the one who had been driving the car when —— Adrian put the suitcase in the back, opened the front door for her.

In the car they said nothing till they were out of the big graveled place by the station. Then Elizabeth said, "It's understood—this is a mistake, Adrian. But here I am."

"If that's your attitude, of course it will be a mistake," he said without friendliness.

HE didn't speak again till they came to No. 7, till he'd stopped the car.

"Wait a minute, Adrian," she said then. Her heart was pounding unaccountably. "We can't start like this. All I meant was . . . some people you don't want with you when you're sick. I'm one of those for Anna. Does she know?"

"Yes, she knows."

"She was so sure—Doctor Graner was so sure," she said helplessly. "He said, 'Your sister's going to be all right.'"

"Damn Graner," Adrian said tonelessly. "But—did something go wrong?"

He did not answer, but took her suitcase and together they went up the stone steps of the old house. Adrian opened the moss-green door, and they were inside the hall.

Hard speech between those who have loved is hideous in the memory, like the sight of greatness and beauty sunk into vice and rags.

—GEORGE ELIOT:
Bits of Burnished Gold
(Randolph & Co.)

Johnny sat on the bottom step of the stairs in a good blue reefer. His thin, sharp little face was a mask of waiting—as if he'd been waiting long.

"Oh, Johnny," Adrian said. "I'm sorry. I know I said you could go to the station, but I got held up at the plant." He spoke crossly and Johnny looked straight at him with eyes that said, You forgot.

"Hello, Johnny!" Elizabeth said.

"Hello," he said, not moving.

She gave a little tweak to his ear and walked to the kitchen. "Hi, Bunce," she said. Bunce was fat, but she could cook.

"Hello, Miss Burke," Mrs. Bunce said. "You'll be wanting to go up and see her and wash up maybe. Everything's about ready."

Elizabeth walked out of the kitchen and toward the stairs. Johnny still sat there and she said, "Take off that elegant coat, Johnny. I'm here—you can't meet me now. I've got something in my suitcase for you." She went on up the stairs, down the hall to the big front room that looked over the street.

Oh, Anna, Anna! The Blessed Damozel! The May Queen under the elms at college! Snow White—Aelfraida—all the fair ones of the world since time began. Anna. Anna. She sat in a wheel chair by the window, with a little table pulled near her for her supper. Her jacket of amber satin had a mandarin neck and was the color of her eyes, and her hair, like warm sand in color, was pulled up in little curls to the top of her head. Her delicate, triangular face was all light and she said, "Oh, Liz!"

Elizabeth came to her, bent and kissed her. She sat down on a hassock close to Anna's chair. "I told Adrian this was a fool idea," she said too quickly. "But here I am. . . . It's hell not to walk—but being an invalid is becoming to you!" She talked too fast, feeling shock, a shock she had not expected to feel, and wondered why she had not expected to feel it.

"I hope so," Anna said. Her voice was just the same, such a gay, expressive voice, with no self-pity in it. "I'd hate to be one of those stringy invalids who smell of medicine. . . . Oh, Liz, I had the most horrible nurse; the worst of it was, she liked me."

"And you thought I'd be a change?"

"You won't call me 'dearie,' anyway. Will you? . . . No, I just wanted someone of my own, that's all."

(Continued on Page 73)

What you can do about ALLERGIES

MILLIONS OF PEOPLE in our country are affected by some form of allergy. It is estimated that about four million people suffer each year from hay fever alone.

An allergy is a disorder or a sensitivity which some persons develop to normally harmless things like pollens, foods and dust. Many other factors may also be involved, such as chemicals, bacteria, etc.

The discomforts that occur when these trouble-makers come in contact with sensitive tissues are believed to be caused by a chemical called histamine. This chemical is apparently released by the body's cells in such large amounts that the tissues themselves are affected and their normal functions upset. This results in sneezing, skin rashes, digestive upsets, and a variety of other discomforts.

Today, treatment for all types of allergy is becoming increasingly effective. There are diagnostic tests which help doctors identify even quite obscure causes. In addition, there are also new drugs which aid in controlling many allergic symptoms.

1. If you have an allergy, ask your doctor about the antihistamines. When administered under a physician's advice—as they must be, since they are toxic to some degree—they often give rapid, though temporary, relief.

The antihistamines are especially beneficial in those allergies—such as hay fever—which are caused by substances that are inhaled. For best results, however, these drugs should be used along with other measures designed to give more lasting relief.

2. If you have hay fever, the doctor may recommend that desensitizing treatments be given early in the year, long in advance of "the hay fever season."

This helps build up protection and enables many patients to go through the season with little or no discomfort. Prompt and proper treatment is desirable, as studies show that persons with untreated hay fever often develop asthma.

3. If you suspect a food allergy, consult your doctor about diagnostic tests which reveal foods that should be avoided.

Authorities caution against self-prescribed diets to relieve food allergies, because essential foods may be unnecessarily omitted.

It is especially important to follow this safeguard in infants and children who have digestive upsets or skin rashes thought to result from eating certain foods.

Emotional difficulties have been found to play a part in allergy disorders. Consequently, doctors may study the patient's background in an attempt to find and clear up emotional situations that may lead to more frequent or more severe attacks.

Today, through prompt and proper treatment—and complete cooperation between the doctor and the patient—most allergy victims can be greatly helped.

COPYRIGHT 1951—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of your booklet, 851-J, "Allergic to What?"

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

It's true. All this food—and more—can be placed in the G-E Refrigerator shown below.

25% to 50% more food space

General Electric Refrigerators give you much more storage space than most refrigerators now in use . . . yet they occupy no larger floor area!

TWO separate appliances in one cabinet!

You get two appliances in one cabinet when you invest in a General Electric Refrigerator-Food Freezer Combination.

ONE: A large food freezer. It has its own separate door, its own separate refrigerating system, and its own temperature control. It's not just a short-time storage compartment for frozen foods. In it, you can freeze your own foods and safely store them for up to a year, for it maintains safe, zero-degree temperature.

TWO: A de luxe fresh-food refrigerator. It has its own separate door, its own separate refrigerating system, and its own temperature control. In it, moist cold keeps your foods garden-fresh day after day.

And, it is thoroughly dependable! No other appliance made, we believe, can quite compare with the General Electric Refrigerator-Food Freezer Combination in dependability, in quality and in convenience features.

See it today at your G-E dealer's. Look for his name in the classified telephone book. General Electric Co., Bridgeport 2, Conn.

General Electric
REFRIGERATOR-FOOD FREEZER COMBINATION

Trim and specifications subject to change without notice.

Food Freezers are much-wanted appliances in America today! G-E. gives you a zero-degree freezer and a no-defrosting refrigerator in one cabinet!

Redi-Cube Ice Trays make it possible to pick out cubes singly, and return the rest—still in the dividers—to the refrigerator. Cubes will not drop out!

Frost does not build up in the fresh-food section. Covered foods do not dry out! Foods remain crisp and fresh, in this General Electric Refrigerator.

Butter Conditioner mounted in the General Electric Refrigerator door keeps a full pound of butter at best temperature for mixing and spreading.

Ask your neighbors about G-E Dependability

GENERAL ELECTRIC

(Continued from Page 71)

an's your own, isn't he? And Johnny. s. B.?"

own blood kin," Anna said. "Oh, all been wonderful. Cornelia's the tful mother-in-law in captivity. But ll worn out—Adrian with trying to ful, Cornelia with running up and airs, Johnny . . . Johnny's been was going to die. I hope you can m know I won't. He doesn't even ome in here. . . . Oh, Liz, I am glad ere!"

beth didn't answer. Her brown face ypsylike and weathered in the lamp- ıe was trembling and she hugged her ght to stop it.

the room? We'd just had it done en I had this smashup. I think it's Anna said.

beth gave a brief glance around and Looks like Marie Antoinette's bou-fussy, you mean?"

no. It's exactly right—for you. Well, ıas warned me supper's ready. Do I our tray up, or what?"

uld you? Bunce is really too fat to airs."

beth made for the door. "Be right e said gruffly.

ung her brown coat over the stair idily. Underneath the coat she wore blouse, a gray cardigan sweater and n-and-gray plaid skirt. Bunce was through the kitchen door with the d Elizabeth took it from her. She ck upstairs, set the tray on the table. up your own meat and everything?"

ed.

y not? . . . What a frightful skirt!"

beth looked down at the plaid. "Yes, it is. Gray and brown—very distin- l-looking together, they said. Does it ?"

course it does, darling. Think you wear my skirts? Somebody ought to. e of a heavenly chartreuse wool."

p it, Anna. I'll wear my own clothes. try to make me over."

Torny Liz! I don't want to make you 's just ——"

I now. It hurts you to see an ugly skirt s in the room. But I can't change now, I can't even try."

a laughed. "All right," she said gently. you've established your independence. your supper."

a child Elizabeth moved obediently the door. That was what Anna could ıer, turn her into a child with no will. doorway she paused.

uld you like to have Adrian eat up ith you?"

a's brown eyes sobered. "No," she 'I wouldn't. I wish people wouldn't hinking I can't stand it to be alone a e. I like being alone, Liz. And—well, a long-term proposition—I don't want t things, make habits."

right," Elizabeth said, went slowly down the stairs. She was just the same. ould she be just the same? No one had uch courage.

w do you do, Mrs. Suydam?" she nd put out a hand. Adrian's mother's face had no beauty, but great dignity straint.

s kind of you to come, Elizabeth," uydam said. "To give up your job."

wasn't much of a job—and I hadn't tarted on it."

y sat down at the table.

na looks wonderful, doesn't she?" eth heard herself saying.

e always looks wonderful," Mrs. Suy- aid quietly.

es—but well too."

e tries to—for our sakes."

h, I don't think you could fake it!" eth said.

ou haven't been here all these months," n said sharply.

o," Elizabeth said. She put her hands in her lap, held them tightly together. ny," she said, "I went to a country fair nonth and saw the biggest pig in the He was so big he couldn't stand up."

"What's a fair?" Johnny asked.

Where had they got Johnny from? There was none of Adrian in him, Adrian, fair and solid, like a Viking—there was none of Anna's grace or life. She began to talk very fast about country fairs. Horses, cows, chickens, canned things, enormous pumpkins and squashes. Johnny had good eyes, she thought. Intelligent eyes.

But suddenly Adrian was saying, "All right, Johnny. Eat your supper. We'll save the rest of the fair till some other time. . . . We try to keep table conversation more or less adult." He smiled at Johnny to take the edge off that, but his voice had an edge of its own.

ELIZABETH picked up her fork, then said almost rudely, "All right, Adrian. Now you say something adult and interesting." She was ashamed, but the shadows or Johnny's thin face or something compelled her. She was more ashamed when Mrs. Suydam smiled at her without anger and said:

"You've made a point there, Elizabeth. To tell you the truth, it was always Anna who made our conversation interesting. But we may learn."

"Sorry," Elizabeth said. She could not even meet Adrian's eyes. It was so damnably true—it was Anna who made the light, who, even up there alone, was more exciting than all of them put together.

Adrian took his coffee upstairs and Elizabeth said, "Want to help me unpack, Johnny?"

"We've had to give you the little room next to Johnny's," Mrs. Suydam said. "It's comfortable, but small. Adrian's been sleeping in the guest room."

"That'll be fine," Elizabeth said.

Johnny sat on the bed and she hung away her few things. She came on the package for Johnny and gave it to him.

"You'd better like this!" she said. "It's magic. I hunted all over town for the filings."

He had opened the package, which had a magnet and a box of iron filings. "I don't know what it's for," said the thin voice.

"You don't? You've never had a magnet? Just take it in your hand and hold it over the box. Don't let it touch . . . then watch."

The filings jumped up to meet the magnet, made a little tail on either arm, and Johnny said, "It jumped!"

"I told you it was magic."

"There isn't really any magic," Johnny said, but his eyes were still wide on his treasure.

"All right. Be scientific if you want to. I call it magic." She lifted a tissue-wrapped object from the suitcase. "How would you like to take this perfume in to mummy? Tell her it's a present from Aunt Liz."

Johnny kept his eyes on the magnet. "You can take it."

She didn't insist, but busied herself a few minutes without talking. Then she said, "I'm going into mummy's room now. Do you want to come along and say good night?"

He didn't answer, but began to fold his present up very carefully. "I have to put it away," he said. She went next door with him. He went to the plain chest by his bed, opened it and put the package inside. There were, she saw, no toys cluttering the room. Then he took her hand and went along with her to his mother's room. In the doorway the small hand gave a sudden pull away from Elizabeth's. "Good night," he said quickly and vanished.

Anna gave a small sigh, then laughed ruefully. "My loving little son," she said. "I suppose sickness is frightening to a child. You'd think I was cruel to him—but I'm not."

"I should hope not," Elizabeth said.

"The trouble is, you never know what he's thinking. It isn't like a child to keep his thoughts so hidden—is it?"

"All children aren't alike," Elizabeth said. "Do you go to bed now or sit up awhile?"

"I think bed. . . . Liz, don't tell Adrian, or he'll go into a panic, but this is really as much of a day as I can take right now. . . . I don't know whether you can get me into bed alone or not. There is a little lift from the chair to the bed and maybe you'll need Adrian to help you. Clean nighties are in the middle drawer."

Elizabeth helped her. She got the nightgown on and wheeled the chair over. She brought a bedpan. Then she told Anna to put her arms around her tight and lifted her over onto the bed.

"You're light as a feather," she said, troubled by the lightness.

"Liz, if you're awake around ten or eleven, would you bring me some milk? I don't want you staying up for it—but if you are awake."

Ten o'clock. What an unearthly hour to go to bed! Probably be good for her, though. "I am bone-tired," she said, turning out the light. Then she thought of Anna, dancing in the dawn, Anna trying the ski jump off Camp Hill. Back then she'd worn her fair hair long. She'd looked like Alice in Wonderland. She still does, she said to herself. You turn romantic as—as Rossetti, just looking at her. . . . And there was that man Huxley at the station—he's in love with her. Does Adrian mind, I wonder? Then she heard Adrian walking down the hall to the guest room.

Transfiguration

By Robert P. Tristram Coffin

The lantern you carry by your side burns steady,
It has no mystery on it like the lights
The stars that pant and flicker high above you Sow, like cries of gods across the nights;
Your lantern burns as quiet as you are,
It has no hope of being like a star.

Yet your lantern is a little brother
To the stars, as all your neighbors know
When they see you going through the evening
Across the fields of clover or the snow,
To them a calm still lantern and a man
Become as twinkling as Aldebaran.

She really wanted me, her thoughts raced on. I mustn't mind about the skirts, things like that. She really wanted me. I mustn't get like a stone wall about being changed. God knows, a little changing wouldn't hurt me. It's wicked, to be thinking about myself when Anna's like this. Oh, Anna!

Adrian Suydam said, "You've got my telephone number, Liz; don't hesitate to call me at any time."

"I won't. But everything will be all right."

"Doctor McIntry will come in a minute—his number's right over the phone there."

"Adrian, don't worry so. I'll take care of her."

He frowned as if there were more he must say, but he went at last.

"Does he always fuss like that?" Liz asked Mrs. Bunce.

"He's a husband in a thousand," Mrs. Bunce said. "But then, he's got a wife in a million. He's been just out of his mind with worry."

Elizabeth went slowly upstairs.

"Anna," she said, "you don't like all this solicitude, do you? You look as lively as a cricket and they all act as if you were still on the danger list."

Anna's brown eyes crinkled up in delight. "Oh, Liz, I'm glad you're here! It's just that I was on the danger list so long. They've got the habit. It's going to be a bit of a trick, to make life normal and exciting again, but between us we'll manage it. You know, when they first brought me up here, from the hospital, I thought, 'These four walls, just these four walls—I'll die here.' But I won't die. That's the whole point, I won't die here."

"Anna, I thought Graner was so sure. Did—did he fumble the operation?"

"Which operation? There were three. He wanted to do one more—at least he told me it might be the end of me. Perhaps a chance in a hundred that it wouldn't. But I'll take a half life any day to a chance in a hundred at a whole one. And I'll make the half life seem whole too."

"Oh," Elizabeth said slowly. She heard Adrian's cold, passionless voice saying "Damn Graner." Everything seemed suddenly changed, and she did not know quite why. She said abruptly, "Shall I have a go at that hairdo now? You've certainly picked a complicated one!"

"It wouldn't hurt you to find a good barber," Anna said. "Good heavens, someone's at the door already!"

Two women came in at different times, but their calls overlapped. Jen and Lucy, they were called. They sat in the bright room and Anna told them stories of the hospital—not of herself in the hospital, but of stories she had run across in passing through.

So the morning went and then there was lunch, then a brief nap, then more people. The last one was the paper boy, who came up the stairs with muddy shoes and said, "Hi, Mis' Suydam. Here's your paper!"

At supper Elizabeth asked Mrs. Suydam, "Does Anna always have so many people dropping in?"

"Anna is greatly loved," Mrs. Suydam said.

So it was no special day. This was the way life was at No. 7.

"Just don't let her get too tired," Adrian said.

"Well, it would tire me to death, but she seems to like it," Elizabeth said.

She took a filmy brown nightgown with a circle of yellow lace at the neck from the drawer.

"If you don't mind the ironing—I do love a fresh nightgown every night," Anna said. Then after she was in bed, "Do you think you can manage, Liz?"

"Yes, I can manage."

"I know you were watching me like an old mother hen today—but I do love people coming. I do love life so, Liz."

"If you can take it, I can," Elizabeth said. "Shall I let Adrian come up now?"

Anna made the briefest pause before she said, "Yes, let him come. He has so little of me, poor darling."

And later Elizabeth heard again those slow steps going down the hall to the guest room. I must make him know I love Anna, she thought anxiously. He doesn't believe it. That's my punishment for being reluctant. . . . It's her courage that breaks your heart. It's real courage. What would I have done? I couldn't make a half life seem whole. She makes it amusing and interesting and beautiful—no, I wouldn't have what it takes to do that.

A WEEK later she looked from Anna's window out on bare trees on streaks of dry snow along the curbs and steps, and said with wonder, I'm still here. She had sent the money for the room to Lollie, said only, "I may be here longer than I planned." The work wasn't hard. It was even a pleasure to take care of someone so fastidious and lovely as Anna. Yet Elizabeth Burke was often tired and she was glad now to go to bed at ten o'clock. It was, she thought, staring out the window while Anna read her mail, wearing, living up to Anna's bravery. All Lakeville seemed to come into and out of that room. It was amazing, an incredible feat, that Anna should make this invalid's room so much a center of life and light.

That afternoon another habit was established. The tea hour. Doctor McIntry came in. Anna sat with a book in her hands and said, "Are you being professional or just coming calling? Don't you dare run up a foolish bill on Adrian!"

"I like to work it both ways," the doctor said. "It would be pleasant to be paid for

Be sure of yourself in any situation . . .
Take NULLO Daily!

NEW PILL NULLO
KILLS BODY ODORS AND BAD BREATH!

Absolutely Harmless!
Take it like a vitamin!

What a pleasant, relaxed, secure feeling you have when you take Nullo daily. This harmless little chlorophyll tablet not only stops underarm perspiration odor, it controls all body odors from head to foot all day long.

Take 1 or 2 Nullo tablets every day (internally like a vitamin) and no matter how hot the day, how stuffy the room, what time of the month, you can welcome the closest contact knowing that you're as fresh as though you'd stepped right out of a shower.

There's never been anything like Nullo before. This one pill controls all body odors including odors of the breath. Even onions, tobacco, and alcohol are no match for Nullo. Just chew a Nullo tablet and your breath is clean. You can be sure you won't offend over the conference table, in conversation, even in contact as intimate as a kiss.

Try Nullo in the 29c Pocket size today. Money back if not delighted. Take Nullo as directed every day to be sure you don't offend anyone . . . anywhere . . . in any way!

Made by a doctor's formula

Nullo is safe as a lettuce leaf! It contains only an ingredient you eat every day in healthful green vegetables—nature's chlorophyll. But Nullo is concentrated chlorophyll! It really works . . . it's really safe. Nullo is the only advertised chlorophyll tablet made by Dr. F. Howard Westcott's exclusive formula.

The De Pree Company
Holland, Michigan
Established 1906—Manufacturers of Nurse Brand Drugs and Wheatamin Vitamins
30 day supply $1.25.
Economical family size (100 tablets) $2.95.

NEW POCKET SIZE 29¢

nullo®
CHLOROPHYLL TABLETS

The original chlorophyll tablet featured in Reader's Digest!

©1951

coming to visit with you. You're the only woman in town who doesn't bore me. This time I'll just call it friendship. . . . You the sister?"

"Yes, I'm the sister," Elizabeth said.

"Sit down," Anna said. "You've been neglecting me."

"You don't need me, alas. . . . Meg wants Johnny for Sunday. All right?"

"If she can take it, I don't mind. I know I talk too much, but Johnny—he's so silent. If Meg can wake him up, more power to her."

The doctor gave a quick, straight look at Elizabeth. He had a look that was completely honest, a look that made people think he was kind, though he was not. He had shed illusions long since, had Doctor McIntry.

"Not much like you," he said of Elizabeth. "Sure you're sisters?"

"Always believed so," Anna said. "She's a nice girl—but stubborn."

"Anna's stubborn too. It just doesn't show on the outside," Elizabeth said. "Shall I make some tea?"

When she came in with the tea, Anna said, "We've been watching the people go by. Mrs. Daggett—you know, the caterpillar one with all the humps. It's a game I play: Mr. Botsworth's like a cod; you're my little Shetland pony, darling. Adrian called you that once and it fits. Isn't she a pony, doctor? Just the way she plumped the tray down—so ponylike! . . . I'll pour it, Liz. I always feel like such a lady pouring tea from this nice old silver pot. Isn't it a love? It was Adrian's great-grandmother's—Cornelia gave it to me. Why don't you call her down for a cup of tea, Liz?"

Elizabeth went to the stairs and called Mrs. Suydam, and Mrs. Suydam came, quietly, erectly, as was her wont, greeted the doctor and accepted tea.

It was peaceful there in the bright room. Everything shone—the silver tea things, the knobs on the fenders, the old gold clock with cherubs on the mantel. But the light was brightest on Anna Suydam, sitting there in the wheel chair, with the golden-brown eyes looking around at them all with such love, such an effect of saying, These are my very best people. This is what I like, sitting here talking with my own people.

Doctor McIntry got to his feet. He shook hands all around, giving Elizabeth an amused, half-indulgent smile. The doctor walked to the door before he turned and said, "Oh, Anna—Huxley Reals. Can't you do something about Huxley?"

"About Huxley?"

"Yes—get the guilt complex under control. He'll be no earthly good if he doesn't stop this."

"I'll try," Anna said. "I'll have Adrian ask him in—I have tried, but I'll have another go at it."

"Do that." Then he went.

Later Anna said, "Would it be too much trouble, having tea every day?"

"No—it's fun," Elizabeth said.

"Good! It rounds the day off, I think."

THEN it was Sunday, a bright, bitterly cold day, with a blue sky and white clouds scudding across the blueness. Church bells rang and people walked along the streets in their Sabbath best. Mrs. Bunce was a churchgoing woman—Baptist by creed. She didn't like asking favors, but she did say, "If you wouldn't mind giving an eye to the roast, Miss Burke. I'll be back plenty of time for the vegetables." She let her bulky figure out the front door, her Bible in her gloved hands.

Anna laughed and said, "In an hour you'll see her coming down the street with her friend Maisie Potts, talking sixteen to the dozen—about us. They think it's romantic that Huxley has this silly attachment. I'd love to listen in once, but I know what they say as if I were there. I don't mind. Bunce is wonderful, really, and she can talk about me all she likes."

At two the doctor's daughter came for Johnny. Elizabeth went to the door. The tall young woman said, "You must be Anna's sister. I'm Margaret McIntry."

"Hello. Yes, I'm Elizabeth Burke." And between them flashed something of instant recognition and liking.

"I'll run up and say hello to A Johnny, get your duds on!"

And that was all of their first meeti

Anna said, "Meg's the salt of the ea but she always makes me think of th farm horse Uncle Jean used to have."

Elizabeth smiled. Margaret McIntr like a horse, long-limbed, with a long And yet so real, without any veneer. "I her," she said.

"Oh, Meg's a grand girl," Anna said lessly. "Liz, do stay around when H comes. He's a lamb—but troublesome.

But it didn't turn out just as pla Elizabeth went down to see that every was ready for tea, then joined Adrian i living room. When the doorbell ran moved to answer, but Bunce got there saying, "That'll be Mr. Reals."

Elizabeth saw Adrian's face tighten he called out cordially, "Go right up, H

ONCE Elizabeth had heard Bunce s Huxley, "He's such a beautiful boy!" came into the living room, paying that deference to his employer. "Sharp out said briefly. He was not a boy. He was a as old as or older than Adrian, and the that this was so abruptly changed ev thing. Anna had laughed gently about ley Reals' devotion. It was, Elizabeth thought, like the devotion of a schoolb a teacher. It wasn't that way at all.

Adrian said, "You know Liz, don't y

"No, I'm afraid not. Hello, Liz."

"Hello," Elizabeth said.

She had thought it would be simple t company him up the stairs. She saw it w not be simple, saw it would be impossible was no child but a man, competent, ma used to having his own way.

"Anna'll be waiting for you," Adrian

Huxley turned and moved toward door. Elizabeth saw what Bunce had m by the "such a beautiful boy," but he not beautiful, only sensitive and fine-dra

When she carried the tray upstairs, H ley sat on the hassock near Anna's chai look of reproach, apology, flashed betw the sisters.

"This is my sister, Liz," Anna said.

"I know Liz," Huxley said, but not l ing at her. "At least, I've met her."

"If he isn't polite, pay no attenti Anna said. "I've been scolding him and sulky."

"No, I'm not sulky, Anna." Huxley R got up and moved the table nearer for tray. "But I'm not a child to be scol either."

"I left out the roses," Anna said. "I fo to scold you about them. They are lo and I won't send them back this time— the company doesn't pay you enough cover roses, Hux."

"I paid for them, not the compar Huxley said shortly. "Surely I can do w I like with my own money?"

"Isn't Adrian coming up, Liz?" A asked.

Elizabeth went to the stairs and cal "Tea, Adrian!"

When Adrian came in, he said, "H you're always underfoot. You might p weekdays to come calling—not make lov my wife right under my nose."

"You mean—it doesn't bother you if don't see me doing it?" Huxley asked.

"No, I didn't mean exactly that."

They spoke lightly, but Elizabeth fel current of something that was deadly serious between them all the same.

Then Anna picked up the conversati made it gay and easy and they presently gan to laugh. Suddenly there came a s tence about dancing, then about dream of dancing—about movement in gene "I'm always moving in my sleep," An said. "Now don't start feeling sorry for m it's just one of those things that happen the subconscious, I suppose." Somehow got them talking about things that moved skating and boats and planes, and Elizab found herself telling them about the C last fall when she had taken Bessie Lore house on the bluff across from Wellfleet.

"It was sunny the day I came," she sa "but the next day the wind began to bl never stopped for two weeks. All day nd all night long the water slapped on ore. And the clouds raced and the gulls ver, gliding and swooping, gliding and ing. I began to feel as if I were the olid thing in the world, the only thing ould stay put."

d didn't you love it?" Anna asked. sounded quite poetic, about the gulls. g. I didn't know you had it in you."

ell, I have lots in me that you don't about," Elizabeth said more briskly.

ian was standing by the hearth. He d with some anxiety at Anna and said, ld you like to rest now till dinner, ?"

ut the rest of them out. Huxley got up id he must run along.

en Elizabeth came downstairs Huxley was just leaving. He paused in the hall, "Good day, Liz. Thanks for the tea." he put his hand to the doorknob. t was a pretty bit of cruelty up there." ruelty?" But she knew what he meant. dn't start it," she said.

ou certainly contributed your share." know. I couldn't stop. It was hideous." couldn't look up at him, but stood conscious of his tall, angry figure by oor. Then the door closed and she was . She went to her room, shaken. Yes, it been cruelty. Only—only the Cape had to her so clearly, it had fitted in. She oved the loneliness. But suppose she ust had to sit inside, hearing the wind, ing the gulls? Would she have loved much? "A pretty bit of cruelty"—remembered the words, tears stung at ds and she wiped at swiftly and angrily her sleeve.

heard Johnny come d got up quickly, ran b through her short Buck up! she said to lf in the mirror, but wn sober, guilty eyes d back at her, saying, ouldn't have talked away about the gulls!

r a moment, for only a moment, as she n the rug before the living-room fire with ny, her heart eased.

nny said, "I used to pretend there was le person in there."

see him now," she said. "See his peaked gainst the brick?"

t looks like horns to me," Johnny said. No, I think it's a little cap, like brownies . He looks friendly."

He never talks to me if anyone else is though," Johnny said.

No. His kind never would. But I may friends with him sometime when you're here."

f it gets all ashes, where does he go?" ny asked soberly.

ZABETH gave a laugh, rueful for logic in oung. "Don't you think he could hide at little crack in the bricks back there wait for the next fire?"

He'd get very cold."

No, he doesn't feel the hot and cold the we do. Otherwise, he couldn't live in the re"

Sometimes they burn up people that ie Johnny said. "Their bones and every-ng."

e moment of ease was gone. "Do they?" said slowly. "Who said so?"

Oh, somebody. They put them in a big ace."

That's true," Elizabeth said at last. Ad it makes a very beautiful light too. It's s you turned all into light—like him in e."

Do you think he was dead once?"

I don't know. He looks very much alive . See him tip his hat to us!"

ut the happiness was gone. And when he stopped believing in the little man?

lizabeth stood holding the red dress be-her, stared at herself in the mirror. Her n eyes were angry, but helplessly angry. rs. Suydam had knocked at her door. "I e you won't mind, my dear. I like to sew and I've fixed this dress over for you. It was Anna's, but it's not been worn much."

Elizabeth said, "But I have clothes enough, Mrs. Suydam." That had sounded ungracious and she had added, "But it's kind of you."

"Of course you have clothes—but this is such a pretty dress and it will be something gay for Anna to look at."

So she had taken the dress, with difficult words of thanks.

It was a pretty dress, of the softest, brightest red, with gold studs on the belt. It made a gypsy of her in the mirror. She hung the dress in the closet, but continued to see herself in it, almost pretty. Why did the thought of wearing it make her prickle all over? I am not a pleasant character, she admitted.

Nevertheless, she waited four days before she put the dress on at teatime.

Anna had a guest. Elizabeth saw the smooth sweep of black hair, the leopard coat, before Anna said, "Juliet, this is my sister Liz. This is Huxley's sister, Liz. And she's brought me a present."

JULIET said, "I found it at an auction the other day and I thought it would amuse you. It's a busybody. You'll have to get Adrian to fasten it to the window on the outside. You can watch people coming down the street. It's just a reflector, really. But I should think it would be fun."

"How enchanting!" Anna said. "Why, I can know everything that goes on in town! What a lamb you are, Juliet!"

Juliet stayed a half hour, telling the small gossip of town, and there was a good deal of laughter. Finally she went away.

Anna sighed. "It's an awful feeling to be with someone you know doesn't like you. Thank goodness I don't have it often. She never has liked me, from the very beginning, before I even knew Huxley. She runs the social life of the younger crowd. I haven't tried to run it, so I don't see why . . . well, maybe—this sounds vain—but maybe it's because people always seem to have such fun here. It's the house, or something—it lends itself to joy. I do think it's lovely, don't you, Liz?"

"Yes. It's one of the nicest houses I was ever in."

Adrian put the busybody up the next morning. He called Liz to ask her about adjustment, and Elizabeth sat where Anna generally did and directed him.

Adrian turned finally and grinned at Anna still in bed. "Snoopy!" he said.

"Just you wait—you'll be glad, I'll keep you informed on everything!"

He laughed, came to her and kissed her and then hurried off to the plant. Anna generally stayed in bed till ten or so, but today she wanted to get up at once. Presently, dressed, combed, she sat in the wheel chair and eyed her new possession.

"I wonder who'll be first in it!" she said. "Oh, it's Mrs. Daggett. She's a character. She's got quite a lot of money but she lives like a pauper. She writes letters to somebody every single day and trots to the post office with them. I wonder who she writes to. I've got to find that out. I do feel excited, Liz. I'll forgive Juliet a lot for giving me the busybody."

The little mirror was a great success. It made Anna laugh so often, and through it Elizabeth came to see the whole town. It wasn't that Anna had not been able to see people from her window before, but to see them long before they reached the house, to watch them coming from way up North Lake toward town—that was different. It gave time for personal histories, speculation. It was more than a glimpse.

One day Elizabeth said something about the busybody she wished she hadn't said. She went up to Mrs. Suydam's rooms for something. The rooms up under the eaves were very nice, with good pieces of furniture and a kind of immaculateness that was ap-

(Continued on Page 77)

It is easier to believe a lie that one has heard a thousand times than to believe a fact that one has never heard before.

—ROBERT LYND:
The Passion of Labour
(Charles Scribner's Sons).

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Not a soap, not a cream— Halo cannot leave dulling, dirt-catching soap film!

Gives fragrant "soft-water" lather —needs no special rinse!

Removes embarrassing dandruff from both hair and scalp!

Halo leaves hair soft, manageable— shining with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or oily cream shampoos leaves dulling, dirt-catching film. Halo, made with a new patented ingredient, contains no soap, no sticky oils. Thus Halo glorifies your hair the very first time you use it. Ask for Halo—America's favorite shampoo—at any drug or cosmetic counter!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

BUY-LINES

AN ADVERTISING P

A SUNNY summer's day invites you to have a picnic and your own backyard is the nicest setting I can think So check up on the weather and, if the forecast is "fair" for tomorrow, call the people you like who like your kin fun and invite them to a come-and-cook-it barbecue. Here's how: Just set your garden table with the usual "trimmin (pickles, relish, salt, pepper and barbecue sauce) plus several kinds of meat . . . chops, ham, wieners and hamburger, instance. At lunchtime, let your guests choose their favorite meat and cook it themselves over the barbecue grill. W the last piece is done to a turn, bring toasted rolls and salad from the kitchen . . . followed by dessert and cool drinks. It's a can't-fail "formula" for a per picnic . . . I know from personal experience.

ARE YOU AN ARTIST AT HEART . . . like to draw, sketch and paint? If so, you may have really valuable art talent and that's important . . . for artists are needed (especially women artists!) There's good money in art . . . lots of it, if you have talent. You can earn at home, too . . . so send for:

FREE ART TALENT TEST . . . a wonderful, easy test, developed as a result of 36 years of experience, by one of the world's great art schools. The test is easy to take . . . but a completely reliable, scientific way to find out if you have real art talent. And you can take this amazing test at home in your spare time . . . so write for your FREE copy of the Art Talent Test today. Just send your name, age and address to Nancy Sasser, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

You have nothing to lose and everything to gain . . . because artists are in big demand now. That's why I urge you to ACT NOW . . . find out if you have a talent for art that you can turn into money.

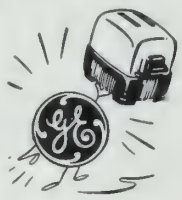
OF COURSE, YOU'RE BEAUTIFUL . . . but others may not know it if you're careless with your beauty "treatments." That's why I suggest you enlist the expert help of CO-ETS . . . handy little fluted cotton squares that are as soft as silk, as smooth as silk, but absorbent as only the finest cotton can be. They serve your every glamour need to perfection . . . for a CO-ET is truly your best "bet" for applying home permanent wave lotions, powder, rouge, skin fresheners, liquid deodorants, cuticle softeners and foundations . . . as well as removing nail polish, cleansing cream, sun tan oil, excess make-up and a dozen-and-one other make-you-prettier tasks. So don't let the real beauty in you "sleep" . . . let CO-ETS help you "wake" it up and keep it radiant. They're priced so low you can easily afford to use them lavishly . . . cost only 35¢ for the large economy package with 80 fluted cotton squares, 19¢ for 40.

HERE'S THE GOOD NEWS I know you've been hoping for . . . now you can get Form Fit Sheets by LADY PEPPERELL! Just think what this means . . . Form Fit Sheets (made with mitred corners that slip over the mattress and hold the sheet firmly in place) with the same traditionally fine quality, exquisite texture and long "life" of all regular LADY PEPPERELLS! They're the biggest boon to bedmaking ever discovered . . . for they stay smooth and unrumpled . . . don't have to be tucked in and smoothed out each morning. They're cooler, too . . . don't pull out and wrap around the sleeper. Made to fit standard single or double mattresses, LADY PEPPERELL Form Fit Sheets ideal for all beds . . . particularly "hideaways" since they don't have to be re-m each time the bed is put away. And they're Sanforized for lasting fit . . . in both LA PEPPERELL Combed Percale and LADY PEPPERELL Superfine Muslins. Ask them . . . at your Favorite Store.

I WON FRIEND HUSBAND to salads . . . and here's how. I k away from sissy-sweet combinations. I make he-man, m course salads, loaded with body-building protein nourishm extended with KNOX, the real, high-protein, unflavored atine. Try my KNOX Deviled Egg Salad . . . then you'll w to use all the wonderful Gel-Cookery recipes in the packa Soften 1 envelope KNOX Unflavored Gelatine in ½ cup c water. Place over boiling water; stir until gelatine is thoroug dissolved. Add 1 tsp. salt, 2 tsp. lemon juice, ¼ tsp. Worcestershire. Cool abou mins. Stir in ¾ cup mayonnaise or salad dressing. Add 1½ tsp. grated onion, ½ finely diced celery, ¼ cup finely diced green pepper, ¼ cup chopped pimiento, cups chopped hard cooked eggs. Turn into 1 large or 4 individual molds. Chill u firm. Unmold on salad greens. Garnish with hard cooked egg wedges and mayonn if desired. Makes 4 servings.

FREE! KNOX Gel-Cookery recipe booklet . . . write Nancy Sasser, Dept. J8, Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

THE SMARTEST HOSTESSES I know agree with me on this . . . that DEL MONTE Unsweetened Pineapple Juice is the perfect juice for all-round use, and offers wonderfully cooling refreshment and flavorful enjoyment these sultry summer days. It's a taste-enticing delight, with meals and between meals . . . any time of the day and night. That's because DEL MONTE'S exclusive strains of pineapple have true tropic flavor . . . and are picked only when natural tartness and sweetness are in perfect balance. The result? It's not too tart and not too sweet . . . the most refreshing Pineapple Juice you ever tasted. But you be the judge . . . compare DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice with any other brand and see for yourself. It's good for you, too . . . abounds in natural fruit sugars and is a good source of Vitamin C. So always keep several BIG cans chilling in the refrigerator . . . ready for your family's and guests' enjoyment.



I'M NOT EXAGGERATING . . . I wouldn't dream of entertaining without serving TRISCUIT Shredded Whole Wheat Wafers. The fun begins the minute they appear . . . for everybody loves their just-right-for-crunching texture and hearty, tangy, whole-wheat taste. And they're salted to a "turn," too . . . then golden-toasted to crisp perfection. In fact, TRISCUIT Wafers are so wonderful, they need no "dressing up" . . . but I think they're extra special with this Anchovy-Cheese Spread. Try it for your family real soon . . . see what they think:

Blend one 3-oz. pkg. cream cheese, 1 tbsp. anchovy paste, 1 tsp. minced onion and a little cream until mixture is smooth. Spread lavishly on TRISCUIT Wafers . . . or let your guests spread their own.

Just be sure you get TRISCUIT Wafers, the distinctive biscuit made by National Biscuit Company . . . easily recognized by the big red NABISCO Seal on the package.

PUZZLED BY ALL YOU HEAR and read about electric toasters . . . don't know how to tell the best from the rest? Well, in my opinion, there's only one answer . . . a GENERAL ELECTRIC Automatic Toaster. This sleek beauty will give you breakfast joy forever . . . "serve" toast to your taste time after time after time. All you have to do is set the control to dark, light or medium and forget it . . . every slice you toast (whether one or twenty!) will be just the way you "ordered" it. What's more, a G-E Automatic Toaster pops the toast up or keeps it down . . . 'til you and the breakfast are ready. I adore its wonderful, easy-to-clean, Snap-in Crumb Tray, too . . . you just snap it out, brush it off and snap back in again. But why go on . . . I can't begin to tell you all the reasons why I think the GENERAL ELECTRIC Automatic Toaster is the best you can buy. So learn all about it first-hand . . . at your G-E Dealer's.

HERE'S MY FAVORITE FORMULA for bree cool refreshment . . . a delicious Chocol Cooler. And, of course, I make mine w WALTER BAKER'S 4 in 1 Inst Sweet Cocoa Mix . . . for I've tried th all and I think it's by far the best! I that's only natural . . . for everyth chocolate tastes best when it's BAKE and 4 in 1 Chocolate Coolers are si ply "packed" with that world-fam WALTER BAKER fla-vor. Furthermore, it "serves" your Chocolate Coolers the easy, instant way . . . you just:

Use 3 heaping teaspoons BAKER'S 4 in 1 per 8 oz. cup milk. Mix in shaker u creamy. Or add the BAKER'S 4 in 1 t little milk in tall glass, blend well, th fill glass with milk, stirring well.

WALTER BAKER'S 4 in 1 costs much than similar products I've used, too . so treat your family and guests to t luscious cooler often. Its rich, chocol goodness will make a big hit . . . I kno

ALL IN FAVOR OF VARIETY in sweet-to-eat treats say the same thing . . . BORDEN'S Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk. It's your "key" to 70 luscious delights . . . each one quick, easy and failure-proof. This magic recipe for the best-you-ever-tasted Lemon Pie is a good example . . . try it tonight: Blend 1 1/3 cups (15-oz. can) BORDEN'S Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk, ½ cup lemon juice, 1 tsp. grated lemon rind or ¼ tsp. lemon extract, and 2 egg yolks. Stir till mixture thickens. Pour into chilled 8-in. crumb crust or cooled pastry shell. For meringue, add ¼ tsp. cream of tartar to 2 egg whites and beat until almost stiff enough to hold a peak. Add 4 tbsp. sugar gradually, beating until stiff but not dry. Pile lightly on pie filling. Bake in slow oven (325°F.) 15 mins. or until slightly browned. Cool.

FREE BOOKLET! "Eagle Brand Magic Recipes" . . . with 70 time, work and money-saving treats. You'll want to try them all . . . so write Nancy Sasser, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

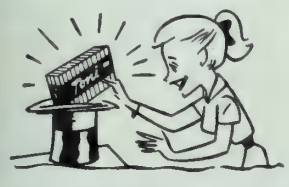
YOUR DREAM COMES TRUE . . . now you can serve luscio protein main dishes at a better than bargain price. Ho Just depend on DEMING'S Sam-O-Lets . . . a deliciou different kind of salmon that's light in color and delic in flavor, with skin removed. Costs but a "song," too . yet DEMING'S Sam-O-Lets works menu "magic!" This luxe delight proves it:

Place 1 can DEMING'S Sam-O-Lets, whole, in center of rack in pressure saucepan. Surround with 3 med. potato sliced, ½ large onion, sliced. Add ¼ cup water, sprinkle w 1 tsp. salt, ¾ tsp. paprika. Heat, bring to 15 lbs. pressure, cook 5 mins. Cool imme ately to zero. Carefully lift salmon out, place in center of platter. Heap potatoes a onion around salmon. Serves 3.

And for more luscious treats, try DEMING'S Sam-O-Lets in sandwiches and sala too . . . perfect, "thanks" to DEMING'S exclusive feature, salmon with the skin remove

Nancy Sasser

Personally Yours



WANT SOFT, LOVELY HAIR . . . and all the compliments that go with it? Then you'll be interested to know that John Robert Powers, famous beauty authority, recommends KREML shampoo to all his models . . . for, unlike drying shampoos that leave hair dry, brittle and unruly, KREML Shampoo has a natural oil base. That's why it helps keep hair silken soft and a darling to manage . . . as well as encourages any natural curl. But that's not the only reason why Powers models depend on KREML Shampoo to keep their hair looking lovely and why I recommend it so highly . . . its special cleansing qualities bring out all the hair's natural highlights and make it sparkle w natural gloss and sheen. So use KREML Shampoo . . . from now on. And get K EML Hair Tonic for Friend Husband. Comes in a handsome new package now at th lowest price in KREML History . . . the 16-oz. size saves you up to 40%.

I LIKE ALL MOTHERS . . . I try to understand my baby's m y special needs and to care for them wisely. And, of course, c on tips are one of my ablest "assistants" . . . but since th 're put to such delicate, exacting use, I insist on the very fi st. And this means Johnson's COTTON TIPS . . . because n one else in the world has such experience and skill in m king baby products. And like most mothers, I've found th Johnson's COTTON TIPS have many advantages:

T y're baby-soft . . . made of the world's finest cotton. And th 're baby-safe . . . because they're sterilized right in the box a constantly checked by famous Johnson & Johnson quality-control method. The c on is spun directly on the sticks, too, and stays firm in use . . . with double tips fo extra thrift and convenience.

So for your baby's sake and your own peace of mind, don't compromise with qual- t . . insist on Johnson's COTTON TIPS. Come in two sizes . . . 29c and 49c.

TH EE MAGIC WORDS that will grant your w n for a soft, natural-looking wave . . . T NI HOME PERMANENT. Only N ther Nature can compete with the gl iously soft and silky wave of a TONI . . . r act, you really can't tell a TONI from n urally curly hair. Know why? Because th TONI Creme Waving Lotion waves yo r hair so gently. It's the gentlest wav- r lotion I know of. Then, too, only T NI has the wonderful new neutralizer, P mafix, that leaves your hair softer and m re naturally lovely at the very first co bing. But only seeing is believing . . . so give yourself a TONI HOME P RMANENT soon. It costs only $1 . . . b both your mirror and your friends w tell you it's the softest, loveliest, m st natural-looking wave you ever h d. And you'll find that your TONI t es no more care than naturally curly h r.

GLAD TIDINGS deserve repeating . . . so let me tell you again about BLUE-JAY's new Wonder Drug, Phenylium (pronounced Fen-ill-ee-um). It's the first really new medication for corns and calluses in over 70 years . . . here's how it works. Phenylium gets down under corns and helps push them out . . . from underneath! New BLUE-JAY brings quicker, surer removal of painful, burning corns than any treatment known! That's no exaggeration . . . for in actual tests, BLUE-JAY's Wonder Drug, Phenylium, went to work 33% faster than other leading remedies! Furthermore, of all the corn sufferers who tried New-Formula BLUE-JAY Corn Plasters with Phenylium, 3 out of 4 say . . . "It's better than any corn treatment I ever used before!" But prove it to yourself . . . get BLUE-JAY Corn and Callus Plasters with the amazing new Wonder Drug, Phenylium, at your drug store today. You'll agree . . . it's the quickest, surest corn removal remedy you ever used.

JOYOUS SUMMER FUN, including carefree swimming, can be yours even during those "inevitable" days of the month . . . if you rely on TAMPAX for monthly sanitary protection. It's a hot weather joy . . . for it's worn internally and absorbs internally. Frees you from the heat and discomfort of external pads and belts . . . yet guards your secret in a bathing suit (wet or dry), scanty play clothes and the thinnest frocks. TAMPAX is worthy of your utmost confidence, too . . . for it's the invention of a doctor. Made of extremely absorbent surgical cotton, TAMPAX is compressed into d nty little applicators . . . easy to insert, quick to change and no trouble to dispose o I can assure you, too, that it can't be seen or felt or interfere with any activity . . . a l eliminates all chafing and odor. So get TAMPAX today . . . and enjoy cool, c nfortable freedom "next time."

(Continued from Page 75)

pealing. There were also some good paintings, and Liz paused before one of them and said, "I do like that!"

Mrs. Suydam was surprisingly still. The picture was of docks with mist folding over them. At last Mrs. Suydam said, "Yes, I am fond of that one too. My son painted it."

"Your son?" Elizabeth said in astonishment. "Not Adrian?"

"Oh, no," Mrs. Suydam said. "My son Alex, who died."

"I'm sorry," Elizabeth said awkwardly. "I didn't know Adrian had any brothers."

"He has been dead fifteen years," Mrs. Suydam said distantly and stiffly.

"He must have had great talent."

"Yes," Mrs. Suydam said.

Later, as she combed Anna's soft curls, Elizabeth said, "You never told me Adrian had had a brother."

"It was long before I knew Adrian. Who's talked of him to you?"

"Mrs. Suydam. I asked about the paintings in her rooms and she said her son Alex had done them. I was startled."

"That's odd, you know. She has never talked to me of him. I wonder if there was something queer about him. Adrian told me he was drowned in a boating accident—said there was quite a difference in their ages."

"It seems strange," Elizabeth said. "Too bad you can't turn your busybody on that life."

Anna laughed. "Well, maybe I will. Have you anything special to do this morning? I wondered if you'd mind going down to Mr. Willis' drugstore and asking them if that buttermilk soap has come. I do love that soap and nobody else in town carries it."

"Yes, I'll go," Elizabeth said.

When she came out of the drugstore, someone called, "Oh, Elizabeth! Miss Burke!" Meg McIntry was coming toward her with a basket of groceries. She wore a scarf over her head and an old gray raincoat.

"I was just thinking about you," she said. "How about walking home with me?"

Elizabeth hesitated, but said, "I don't know why I couldn't. Mrs. Suydam is with Anna this morning."

So they walked to the doctor's old house. Though it wasn't long since breakfast they sat at the kitchen table and drank coffee. They didn't talk about anything important, yet conversation flowed easily between them.

Elizabeth explained the busybody and Margaret McIntry laughed. "Sounds like Juliet," she said.

"Did you ever know Alex Suydam?" Elizabeth asked suddenly.

Margaret looked up quickly. "Of course. Grew up with him. Why?"

"I just wondered. I never knew he existed till a couple of days ago."

"He killed himself," Margaret said.

"Oh. How terrible. He was so talented."

"Yes. Come on in the other room." She led the way into the crowded, happy-looking cluttered room and made a brief gesture toward the picture above the bookcases. It was of the lake on a gray November day—cold seemed to come out of the very canvas. The shadowy buildings along the shore were cold, too, and all was grayed down to bleakness. "He did that when he was eighteen years old," Meg said. "I don't know—I just don't know. He was in college and got in some sort of jam and was sent home. But it was more than that. He was destined for the plant and hated the thought. He was here the night before. He liked my father—he liked to come here. My father was out somewhere that night and Alex didn't stay long. Next morning he went out on the lake and didn't come back. They said it was an accident, but he had known boats all his life and could swim like a fish. No, it wasn't an accident. . . . Well, that's a sad old story. But that picture is good. I'm proud to have it."

She turned abruptly from the picture and began to talk of other things. She was blunt, entertaining, humorous. The doctor's house was stuffy and untidy, but Elizabeth had the feeling of having breathed great drafts of fresh air.

Mrs. Suydam was sitting with Anna when Elizabeth came in.

"Hope I didn't hold up anything," Elizabeth said. "I walked home with Margaret McIntry for a few minutes. I got the soap."

"Anna was a little worried about you," Mrs. Suydam said.

"Fiddlesticks! Anna knows I'm an able-bodied female."

"Well, I didn't think you'd get lost in Lakeville," Anna admitted. "And you certainly ought to be able to walk home with Meg or anyone you like. It's just—well, I expect I'm getting selfish. It's bad for me to be waited on from morning to night. I'm getting to expect it. But if you can get any fun out of Meg, for goodness' sake do it!"

"I do think she's fun," Elizabeth said. "She's so honest, so forthright. I like that."

"Do you? Well, within reason, I do too. But Meg's close to the line of bluntness for bluntness' sake. She just doesn't happen to be my cup of tea. I think I'll take a little rest before lunch."

In calm water every ship has a good captain.
—SWEDISH PROVERB.

That night Elizabeth was sitting in the living room when Adrian came downstairs and joined her. He lit a pipe and just sat smoking for some minutes in silence. Elizabeth had a feeling of unease, as if she were about to be scolded, but she kept on reading. At last Adrian surprised her by saying, "Are you contented here, Liz?"

"Contented? That's a funny word to use."

"Why so? Are you?"

"I don't know how to answer you. I've never been a very contented sort of person. I'm all right, though. You know how I feel about being here, Adrian. I don't see that we need to talk about it."

"Anna thinks you are getting restless. My mother would be willing to take over a few hours now and then to give you some time off. Anna is very anxious that you have some fun if you can find it. But I don't want her left alone."

"Anna is never left alone, but the truth is she likes to be alone. She really likes it, Adrian. People don't want to be hovered over every minute. Wouldn't you hate it yourself?"

"I dare say I would. But Anna has always had something going on. She likes people."

He excused himself abruptly then and went upstairs.

The next day Mrs. Suydam came to Elizabeth and said, "We've been thinking that you ought to have a full day off every week, and perhaps every other Sunday. I'll be glad to tend to Anna. It's her idea that you should have a day to yourself and I think it will work out better so."

"If that's the way she wants it," Elizabeth assented stiffly.

So, not wanting it, she had her days off, every Friday and every other Sunday.

Her first Friday was a strange one, long and strange. In the morning she looked over her clothes, sewed a button on, washed out a few silk things. She went to Johnny's room and found him lying on the bed with a book.

"Look, Johnny," she said, "this afternoon, let's go exploring around the town, shall we? You can show me things."

"All right," Johnny said.

After his nap Elizabeth bundled him up and they went out exploring. They went down to the business center and looked in through the window at Mr. Campanini mending shoes. He wore a leather apron and he had huge old-fashioned mustaches. He looked up and winked at Johnny and then went on tapping. "Let's go in!" Elizabeth said, but Johnny flushed and said, "No. I like to look through the window." They stood there till they were chilled and then moved on down the street.

"I'd like to see the lake, if you aren't too cold," Elizabeth said.

So Johnny led her to the next side street and they walked down its short, steep length

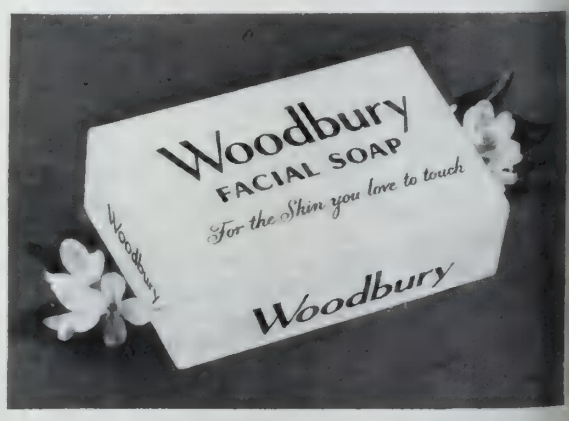
(Continued on Page 79)

Which one is the daughter?

Here's the Beauty Secret of a famous mother who looks as young as her daughter

If you saw these women on the street, or in a restaurant, you might turn and say: "What lovely sisters!" But you'd be wrong.

For Mrs. Dee F. Bredin, young as she looks, is Denise's mother!



Many people make that wonderful mistake about this New York socialite. Mrs. Bredin doesn't mind. In fact, she furthers the illusion by keeping the accent on youth in her clothes, her hair-do, and so very important —her complexion! It glows with the light of mature beauty, yet it's youthfully smooth and radiant! And Mrs. Bredin thanks one soap, Woodbury!

For Woodbury Facial Soap, you see, is more than a cleanser. It's made by skin scientists who add an emollient face cream ingredient—a rich oil—to every cake of Woodbury!

While some soaps may dry delicate skin, Woodbury softens. This rich cream ingredient is intended to help replace the natural oils you wash away.

Any complexion is fresher, younger-looking with Woodbury Soap care. Take Mrs. Bredin's word for it (she's the woman on the right). Or ask daughter Denise, another radiant Woodbury Deb!

Better still, try Woodbury Facial Soap yourself—today! In Facial and Bath sizes.

Woodbury Facial Soap... with the Beauty-Cream Ingredient for the skin you love to touch

(Continued from Page 77)

he lake. It looked lonely and deserted n there on this chill December afternoon. her along you could see the long narrow dings of the Suydam Boat Company.

That's where my father makes boats," ny offered.

Did you ever go to watch him do it?" abeth asked.

Once I did," Johnny said.

hey walked along the shore a way, seeing small gull riding the wind. Then as they ed to go, they saw Huxley Reals coming g the walk from the plant. He wore a top-, but his head was bare. It did not take long to reach them, but it was long gh. Long enough for Elizabeth Burke to a sharp anger against life, against the h that there was never any equality in , that the ways of the heart were devious illogical. No, her heart cried out. No. She ght foolishly of the money she kept send- to Lollie for the room.

Why, hello!" Huxley Reals said. hnny, I was just thinking about you."

lmost any little boy would have grinned ly at that, but Johnny looked up at him waited without smiling.

Well, I was," Huxley insisted. "Don't so skeptical. They are opening the new er-skating rink tomorrow afternoon and y have some extra-fancy skaters here as a d-off. I thought maybe you and I could watch them for a while. How about it?"

Elizabeth wanted to shake Johnny, he was cool about it. At last he said, holding zabeth's hand tight, "If Aunt Liz goes, I ."

Huxley Reals laughed. "Well, Aunt Liz go, too, if she likes."

Johnny, I'm afraid I'm going to be busy. be staying with mother tomorrow."

My father will be there. It's Saturday," nny said.

Huxley Reals said, "I'll fix it up with na. You're hooked, Aunt Liz. What are two doing down here on a day like this?"

We're exploring," Johnny said gravely.

You are? Come with me, then, and I'll w you something. Once a week or so I e to come down to see what's keeping old pps home. Sometimes it's the misery, metimes the bottle. He'll be harmless, even t's the bottle. He's our best man, but he s weaknesses. . . . Here we are."

Johnny looked up at Elizabeth question- ly.

It's all right," she said, and they went h Huxley Reals up three rickety steps o one of the shacks they had just passed. small ancient figure sat at a bare table in lean but bare room.

HE old man squinted up at them out of row but bright blue eyes. "Bloodhound," said. "Snooping around."

Right you are, Cripps. Why aren't you the plant? . . . Let Johnny see what you're ng there. Look, kid—how do you like at?" The old man was making a ship in- e a bottle. His thick, calloused fingers did t look as if they could possibly manipulate e tiny masts, but the ship was almost done.

The old man squinted up at Elizabeth. Who be you?"

She's Aunt Liz," Johnny offered.

That's right. I'm Aunt Liz," Elizabeth d with a grin at Mr. Cripps.

How do you get the sails in?" Johnny ked.

Well, boy, you watch. I'll show you."

And I suppose you'll expect us to pay u for showing him," Huxley Reals said.

Don't give a hoot whether you do or t," the old man said. "I got my days hen I don't feel up to taking that trip up ere. My legs is bad."

They all watched the delicate operation th anxious eyes.

Well, son, that's the way it's done," ipps said at last. Then the old man got up d went to a cupboard, opened the door d took out a smaller bottle with a smaller ip inside it. He handed it to Johnny. "You ke that home with you, son. I made that r you."

A look that was childlike, full of wonder me over Johnny's sharp little face. He took the bottle into his hands. Then he said, "You didn't. You didn't even know me."

The old man gave a small cackle. "That's where you're wrong, boy. I know you, all right. You're the boss' boy. You're the spit of your Uncle Alex, kid. Now you come again—but don't you bring no bloodhounds with you. . . . Reals, you leave me alone. If you want to give my job to somebody else, you can."

"Some of these days I will," Reals said. "Cripps, you get away with murder. You show up tomorrow."

"See how I feel," Cripps said.

At the door Johnny turned. "Thank you," he said clearly.

"Don't mention it, old salt," Cripps said.

They stood an instant there in the narrow street by the cold lake before Huxley Reals turned back toward the plant.

"That was exciting," Elizabeth said. "Thanks."

Huxley Reals frowned and let his glance drop to Johnny, who stood holding the bottle with great care. "Try to think up some more spots. Like to help out. . . . Well, Johnny, so long. I'll pick you and Aunt Liz up tomorrow."

The next day at three on the dot, Huxley Reals appeared at the door. "Ready, Johnny?" he asked as soon as he came into the hallway. "Get your things on. Where's Aunt Liz?"

"Upstairs," Johnny said.

"I'll go up and say hello to your mother." He went up the stairs, walked into Anna's room. Adrian was there, and Elizabeth. "Hello, Anna," he said. He nodded to Adrian. "I'm taking Liz on a bat. Johnny won't go to see the skating without his Aunt Liz. You'll hold the fort while we're gone, won't you?" he asked Adrian.

"I'll be here, if that's what you mean."

Elizabeth said uncomfortably, "I'm not going. I'm sure Johnny'll go with you, Mr. Reals, without me. It's almost teatime and ——"

Anna said, "Adrian, why don't you and Liz take Johnny to the rink and let Huxley entertain me? He'll bring the tea. . . . Go on, Liz—I'll be quite all right."

And before she knew it Elizabeth was out in the street with Johnny and Adrian. Adrian was angry and it was an unpleasant walk to the rink. Johnny was silent, with none of that wonder in his eyes that had been there yesterday when he had seen the ship.

At the entrance, Adrian did come alive enough to say, "Well, here we are, Johnny." They found places on the side lines and several expert skaters were doing their stunts. After an hour Adrian said, "Had enough, Johnny? We'd better jog along, I think."

They were out in the street again, walking toward home through the early dusk.

"Well, did you enjoy that?" Adrian demanded of Johnny. "I hope so! I used to do that for hours on end. It seems silly now."

Johnny hadn't had to answer and that was a good thing, Elizabeth thought. For he hadn't enjoyed it. He hadn't enjoyed it at all. They stepped into the hall and heard laughter from upstairs.

But when Huxley had finally gone Anna said, "I thought you'd never, never come back. I hope you had fun."

"Well, I guess Johnny did," Adrian said. "Though one never knows."

When Elizabeth put Johnny to bed later that night, Johnny said suddenly, "You won't ever go away from here, will you?"

Elizabeth paused. "Yes, I probably will someday. This isn't my home, you know. I'm going to stay quite a while, though."

"You could have this for your home."

"No, I couldn't, Johnny."

"If my mother died, then you could."

Elizabeth felt a cold shock along her spine. "Johnny!" she said. Then she was ashamed of having heard desire in the small voice. It couldn't have been desire. "Look, Johnny, your mother isn't going to die. She can't run around and play with you any more and that makes her sad. But she's not going to die. You mustn't worry about that."

SHE knew she was talking too fast, filling up the vacuum after the shock. Johnny looked straight at her again and said:

"But if she was dead, then you could stay forever."

"No," she said sharply, "no, I couldn't."

She stood up and walked away without a good night. She went into her room and sat down on the bed and covered her face in a movement of revulsion.

"How horrible," she whispered. "How . . . monstrous!"

Presently she went into the bathroom, washed her face, looked in the mirror to see if the horror was wiped out. She came to Johnny's door, would have passed, but something stayed her. She walked in and Johnny was huddled under his blanket, crying almost soundlessly. She bent and kissed him. She didn't want to condone what he had said, but she couldn't let him go to sleep crying. She waited a moment, but he said nothing, so she went out and into Anna's room.

I'm frightened, she said to herself. I've never been so horribly frightened.

Mrs. Bunce and Miss Potts sat in the little sitting room of Miss Potts' cottage. It was a funny room, clean as soap and water could make it, very crowded with incongruous pieces of furniture. The two women rocked comfortably, but Miss Potts' faded eyes were a little anxious.

"I'm certainly glad to set," Mrs. Bunce said with a sigh. "Been on my feet since sunup."

Always when Mrs. Bunce came, Miss Potts immediately went to the kitchen, made coffee and got out a coffeecake or cookies, but tonight she just sat and talked and watched the clock surreptitiously.

At last Mrs. Bunce said frankly, with her kind laugh that was so much a part of their intimacy, "Well, Maisie, aren't you going to give me a cup of coffee?"

Miss Potts' thin face grew unpleasantly flushed. "I thought I'd wait a little while." Then with an effort she rushed on: "You see, Leora, Mr. Botsworth's going to drop in for a cup with us. We got to talking about coffee's going up in the shop and one thing led to another—you know folks always say I make first-rate coffee, and the first thing you know he was saying he'd come in and have a sample some night and then he said he'd be along tonight. You don't want to get ideas in your head—it don't mean anything."

Her voice trailed off. Mrs. Bunce stared at her, shocked. She had been coming to Miss Potts' cottage for years, and of all people in the world, Miss Potts was the last to think of as having a suitor.

"Why, Maisie Potts!" she said at last.

"Now don't you go thinking things," Maisie Potts said weakly.

But at that moment there was a knock on the door and Maisie, reddening afresh, went to answer the knock. Mr. Botsworth looked, as Anna had so aptly stated, like a cod. But he was a genial man with a hearty voice.

Ask any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

THE secret of staying in love is never to show disillusion; the moment you do, the other person will quit trying to be better and be what he knew he was all the time.

Child watching a dragonfly: "It must be one of those miracle bugs."

The parents leave a note:

Pudry: Maybe it will be raining, maybe it won't. Therefore (a) if it is raining, do not disturb the management's glorious slumbers: (b) if it is not, set the alarm for 8:30 and run. Signed,

THE MANAGEMENT

The first time a daughter raises her voice to screaming pitch she should feel the sole of a slipper, because the most abominable thing in a house is a yelling woman.

Our son should make a wonderful father; he ought to be able to understand every phase a child might go through.

"Maybe you don't know it," said Cousin Margaret when I hung up a fancy dish towel before quitting the kitchen, "but you inherited that from Grandmother K. She always hung one for looks too."

When the plumber turned the water off in the upstairs bathroom and the daughters had to wait three days for baths, they looked upon themselves as social outcasts. They still can't conceive their parents' having the unsanitary pedigree of a bath a week.

It's going to be quite a day in this country—and I hope I'm around to enjoy it—when the pendulum swings back and some thought is given to helping parents feel secure.

Some women never seem through with what is to be done; other women have the air of never being interrupted in anything of importance.

People who build houses with living rooms on top of bedrooms should first figure out the ratio between the number of times they go out of the house and the number of times they go to bed.

A strong home these days is one that can hold its children without television.

One teacher helps to clinch vocabulary by saying, "You have to learn a word only once. No matter how long you know the word, it will never change, never grow fat, gray or old—and fifty years from now will look exactly the same."

"I wouldn't mind being the youngest," laments our preteener, "if just for one day I could catch up!"

Definition of a lady: A woman who never leaves a public rest room worse than she finds it.

As close together as a boy and a dirty shirt.

Idea for cartoon: Bride with box of soap powder: "It's wonderful! All you do is add water."

Women once worried more about getting married than staying married.

"The worst thing that you can do to a child is to be always after him," says the school custodian. "I've worked with power in one form or another most of my life, and I've learned that once you get something working good, leave it alone."

In a child's drawing, sky never meets earth. It seems to be the painful duty of an adult world to bring them together.

Daughter: "I'm going to give a party this summer and I'm going to invite only men—because do you know what I think causes all the trouble at parties? Women!"

"Took you up on it, Miss Potts!" he announced. "Where's my coffee? Well, hello, Fatty!" He had called Mrs. Bunce "Fatty" when she was a little girl and he still did so. "What you doing here?"

"Leora often comes to keep me company," Miss Potts said. "Just sit down, Mr. Botsworth, and I'll go make us some coffee."

"Whew!" he said, laying off his overcoat. "Mind if I take off my coat too? It's hot as an oven in here."

"Just be comfortable," Miss Potts said.

So he took off his suit coat and sat in his shirt sleeves by the stove. "This is a good little house," he said. "Remember when Matt Spears built it."

"You've got a good house yourself," Mrs. Bunce reminded him coldly. Looking around on Maisie's house as if he owned it!

"It's all right. Don't have the feeling for it now, though. It's kind of lonesome living all stark alone like I do."

"You could have your daughter Jane and her husband live with you."

"Well, Fatty, you know how that is. Young folks like to be by themselves. That's natural. I don't aim to change my ways—too old for that, now. . . . Well, about time, Miss Potts, before Fatty and me get in an argument."

Miss Potts had made an angel food and Mrs. Bunce noted the fact with a sinking heart. She knew quite well that Miss Potts made angel foods only on birthdays and special holidays.

Mr. Botsworth took a sip of coffee, scalding hot. "Strong enough to sink a battleship," he said. "But it tastes like coffee, I'll say that." He took a large triangle of angel food. "That certainly slides down."

They talked on, but all the time Mrs. Bunce felt emptier and lonelier. Ed Botsworth acted so at home. And those silly red spots on Maisie's cheeks, and the foolish way she bridled when Ed asked for more of that coffee.

"Well, I've got to work tomorrow if you folks haven't," Mrs. Bunce said suddenly. "Hate to break up the party, but I'll be getting along now."

Ed Botsworth said, "I'll walk you home, Fatty."

Mrs. Bunce said sharply, "You'll do no such thing." She got her coat and hat on, pulled on her cotton gloves. "Good night, Maisie," she said. "Good night, Ed."

But when she was safe in her own back room at No. 7, undressed and in her bed, tears came to her eyes. Well, that's that, she tried to say philosophically, but she couldn't stop the tears from coming. Her little snug room was suddenly too snug. It was all she had. She didn't know how much Miss Potts' cottage had enlarged her world till now that world had shrunk to this.

In the morning when Johnny wandered into the kitchen she didn't tell him to get out from underfoot, as she was wont to do. When Elizabeth came down to the kitchen Mrs. Bunce was rocking back and forth, Johnny in her arms, singing, "Jesus loves me. This I know, For the Bible tells me so; Little ones to Him belong—We are weak but He is strong. Yes, Jesus loves me ——"

Elizabeth, not knowing what impulse had brought about this tenderness, was startled and touched. She said nothing, but all the way upstairs and later she kept remembering Johnny's head against that broad bosom, the clear voice, the rocking chair. Was it as simple as that, the way to Johnny?

In Anna's room Anna looked up with excited brown eyes and said, "Oh, Liz, run down and ask Mrs. Daggett in! She's coming down the street. Bet you two to one I'll find out who she's writing to! Run—before she gets by!"

Elizabeth ran down the stairs and opened the front door. "Oh, Mrs. Daggett!" she said. "My sister wonders if you wouldn't come up and say hello to her!"

The old woman paused. She peered up at Elizabeth with an odd expression in black eyes, pouched and veined of lid. "She must be bored," she said clearly.

Elizabeth laughed uncertainly. "No, she's never bored. She just wants to see you."

Mrs. Daggett came up the steps. "I must be at the post office before eleven." She came into the hall; her black eyes took in the contents of the hall, the wallpaper. "So Anna fell for this paper, did she?" she asked. "I have some of the original in my back bedroom."

Anna called gaily, "Have to go out and drag you in to see me! Shame on you, Mrs. Daggett!"

Mrs. Daggett put her bag on a chair, came and shook hands, then sat down. "Anna, you didn't want to see me any more than you wanted to see Bill Vine," she said. "You saw me in that contraption of yours and thought you'd surprise me."

Anna laughed. "True, but I did want to see you. I see the same old faces over and over. I wanted a change."

Mrs. Daggett gave a small grunt, then said, "Remember this room when it was old Mrs. Suydam's—Adrian's grandmother's. It had brown paper with gold medallions and brown velvet curtains."

"It doesn't look like that now, does it?"

"Looks elegant. Like you," Mrs. Daggett admitted. "Grandma Suydam'd have dropped dead to see those heathenish prints on the wall out there in the hall."

"But you don't want me to live her life, do you? I've got a right to put my life on top," Anna protested.

"Certainly," Mrs. Daggett said.

"Oh, I am glad you came in!" Anna said. "I see you going by every day and I think about you a lot—I truly do. I wonder if you're lonely. When you're shut in you speculate on everything. Do tell me who you write to every single day, so I won't have to brood over that any more!"

Mrs. Daggett was silent. Then she reached for her bag with an awkward spiderlike motion, got to her feet. "No, I'm not any lonelier than any of God's creatures. I must run along now. Good day, Anna."

Elizabeth followed her down the stairs and opened the door for her. "Thanks for coming in," she said embarrassedly.

Mrs. Daggett peered up at her from the bottom step. "I like the looks of you," she said. "Come and see me, young woman."

When Elizabeth went into Anna's room again she said, "Two to one, eh?"

"Oh, just wait. I'll know yet!" Anna said.

It was later that day that Anna said, "We have to think about Christmas." Something in her voice made Elizabeth feel great compassion for her.

"You do the thinking," she said. "Would you like the tree up here?"

"I suppose it better be, if it isn't too big. We have always been very gay at Christmas, with lots of parties. But we could have open house one day, couldn't we? Only you'll have to do such a lot of shopping, Liz."

"I don't mind. Only there are so many places you can write to nowadays. I'll get catalogues, and you can shop yourself. Don't worry about it. We'll manage everyone."

Then one day Elizabeth went downtown to get a record, and in the music store Huxley Reals was standing, discussing some record machine with the proprietor. He waited till she had made her purchase and walked out of the store with her.

"I never asked how the skating party went off without me," he said in a friendly voice.

"Well enough. No, not so very well," she contradicted herself. "Adrian didn't really want to go, you know."

"Well, I didn't either," he admitted. "Or at first I didn't. Meg McIntry was lecturing me—said that taking on Johnny would be more useful than sending roses. D'you think so?"

"Better for whom? If you begrudged doing it, I'm quite sure Johnny would know it."

He laughed. "You don't coddle people, do you, Aunt Liz?"

"Why should I?"

"Why should you, indeed? What do you think of a record player for Anna for Christmas? I know they have that big one downstairs—but perhaps a smaller one for her room. She loves music, so I wondered ——"

Elizabeth thrust her hands into her big pockets, said, "Yes, she loves music, but . . . must you be such a fool, Mr. Reals?"

She hadn't known she was going to say it, she wanted to take it back, but the words hung there on the air, spoken. He stopped, turned and stared at her.

"A fool?" he said. "Yes, I must be a fool, if that is what you call it."

"What do you call it? I don't know why Adrian doesn't throw you out of his house, out of his plant. Palely loitering around his wife!"

She was aghast, but couldn't stop. To her amazement he laughed, began to walk again by her side.

"What a temper you have!" he said. "But to tell the truth, I'm past shock treatment, Aunt Liz."

"Don't call me 'Aunt Liz.' And don't think I don't know what Anna does to you. She's terribly exciting as well as beautiful—all the same, a record player costs fifty dollars or more, doesn't it? That's downright silly."

"But would she like it?"

They had come to No. 7 and paused at the steps. Elizabeth Burke gave him a sudden smile and said, "I think she'd love it."

He grinned at her in a puzzled way, walked away.

When Elizabeth went into Anna's room, Anna said, "Are you stealing my swain?"

"Heavens, no! He's having a struggle trying to decide what to give you for Christmas."

"And what is he going to give me? I ought to suggest a new refrigerator."

"You'll find out. . . . Could I give Johnny a dog for Christmas?"

"He's allergic to cat and dog fur," Anna said.

Then Christmas was there. In Anna's room, where was the heart of the house. There was one bad moment when Elizabeth didn't know whether Johnny would even come for the tree, but Bunce came to her door, took his hand and said, "All right now, Johnny—looks as if Santa's been here!" And Johnny went with her to his mother's room. Adrian distributed gifts and Anna was excited and loved everything. Johnny had plenty of toys, puzzles and books and a new tricycle. He managed a few reluctant thank you's, prompted by Bunce. Anna was like a child with presents. Of the record machine she said, "The extravagant darling! But I can't send it back."

The next day was the open house, with all Lakeville wandering through the house, with laughter high, with singing, sitting around Anna's chair, Anna's own alto coming through clearly and truly. A gay party, a good party.

The next afternoon Doctor McIntry dropped in. "Well, you haven't lost the knack, Anna," he said. "A good party. I expected to find you in bed."

"Cornelia's the one who's exhausted," Anna said. "Run up and see her before you go. She did work too hard. . . . I saw your car coming in my busybody and I willed you to stop. I was just scheming about you. Wondering whom to marry you off to."

"Stop right there, Anna. I don't want to marry anyone."

"But suppose Meg married—then how would you get along?"

"Meg? She won't marry. We're both content—so put your mind on something else. Aren't you losing weight?"

"No. It's just the day-after-the-party look. I'm fine. . . . I even thought in an idle moment of Liz here for you. She'd make the perfect doctor's wife."

Elizabeth made a little face at him and he laughed. "No, I won't have you, Liz. I'm old enough to be your father. If you want a husband, I'll find you one—among the young fry."

"I don't," Elizabeth said. "It wasn't my idea. I don't even like you very much."

Anna gave a crow of laughter. "My Liz. But he'd grow on you, too, darling. He's nice, really."

After he had gone upstairs to see Mrs. Suydam, Anna said:

"Why don't you like him? He's one of my favorite people."

"I don't know. He's got a cold heart."

"Doctor McIntry? But that's not true. You can't believe how nice he's been to me, how gentle and how patient."

"To you, yes. But you're special, Anna. He's a little in love with you."

"Oh, nonsense But you know, I hope he is—just a little."

On Thursday afternoon Mrs. Bunce had a telephone call. This rarely happened and she shouted "Hello!" boomingly into the receiver. "No. I guess not. Don't want to butt in! . . . Well, I'll see."

But at eight o'clock, in her black coat and little black hat with the feather at the wrong angle, Mrs. Bunce was walking to Miss Potts' house. When she got there Mr. Botsworth's figure appeared in the doorway behind Maisie's.

"Hello, there, Fatty! Come on in with us old folks!" he called out genially. "We thought we'd have a little game of three-handed rummy. Or don't you Baptists allow that?"

"Why, we're not so behind the times as all that," Miss Potts said. "You've got the wrong idea about the Baptists, Mr. Botsworth. Gambling, they don't like that, but a game of rummy's all right."

Mr. Botsworth winked at Mrs. Bunce. "A little stake makes the game exciting, but just as you say, girls. Just as you say. I'll tell you—how about putting up that extra fruitcake you got out there on the shelf? Winner takes the fruitcake home. You wouldn't call that gambling, would you, girls?"

(Continued on Page 82)

"He's eating solids now—keys, newspapers, pencils . . ."

only the finest only by

Vanity Fair

the most economical lingerie in the world today

Only experience will prove that this slip of such exquisite daintiness is also the most practical and economical
you can wear.
In superb Vanity Fair
nylon tricot and nylon net. It washes simply, dries quickly,
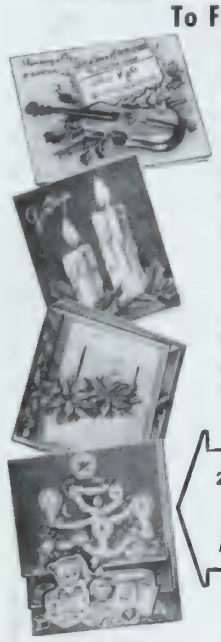
needs no pressing,
is ever beautiful. Style #3-8-6.
In average length about $6.95,
in tall length about $7.95.

©1951 VANITY FAIR MILLS, INC. • EXECUTIVE OFFICES, READING, PA.



imagine!

EXTRA CASH

FOR
- NEW CLOTHES
- HOME REPAIRS
- CLUB OR CHURCH FUNDS
- VACATIONS
- CHARITIES
- CHRISTMAS GIFTS
- UNPAID BILLS

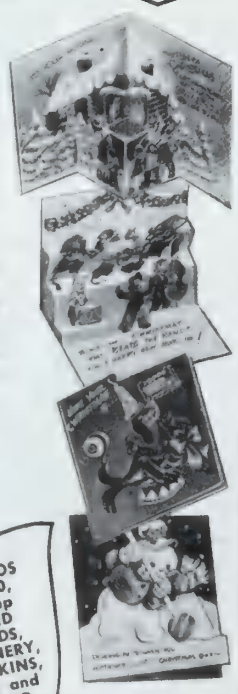
GET IT QUICK—EASY!

Sell Newest Greeting Cards For Christmas & All Occasions To Friends

Everybody is eager to select from over 100 super values—and you make up to 50¢ profit per $1.00 box! No experience needed. Just show samples. Gorgeous Floral, Religious, Tree Ornament cards, colorful Gift Wrap Ensembles, novel Gifts, animated Children's Books, exclusive items sell themselves. Special money-saving offers.

21 FOR $1.00 LEADER CHRISTMAS ASSORTMENT

3-DIMENSION COMIC CHRISTMAS CARDS



Write Today For Samples That Bring You Sales

"... first time we have ever used this means of raising money ... pleased with the results obtained in so short a time."—Mrs. A. M. Winkler, Athens, Pa.

"... easiest money I ever earned."—Mrs. W. F. Whetsell, Indianapolis, Ind.

Have club members sell. Prompt service. Cash bonus. Mail coupon at once for FREE sample portfolios, Feature assortments on approval, FREE catalog and selling plans.

ELMIRA GREETING CARD CO.
Dept. C-1145, Elmira, N. Y.

FREE
SAMPLE PORTFOLIOS 40 and 25 for $1.00, 50 for $1.25 and up
NAME IMPRINTED CHRISTMAS CARDS, SCENTED STATIONERY, DECORATED NAPKINS, BOOK MATCHES and 48-Page CATALOG

RUSH COUPON TODAY!

ELMIRA GREETING CARD CO.
Dept. C-1145, Elmira, New York

Show me how to make extra cash. Please rush me Feature assortments on approval, free sample portfolios, free catalog and full information.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

(Continued from Page 80)

Miss Potts flushed and said, "You can have the fruitcake and welcome."

"No, no. Just want the fun of trying to get it."

"I guess there wouldn't be any harm in that, would there, Leora?" Miss Potts asked.

"I don't see as it makes any difference one way or the other," Mrs. Bunce said. She did think it made a little difference, but it wasn't, of course, like playing for money.

Mrs. Bunce liked to play rummy, and in spite of herself enjoyed the game. When it was done she found herself in possession of a fine fruitcake.

"You take it home, Ed," she said. "I can make my own cakes."

"I'll bet you can," Ed said. "But fair's fair, Fatty. It's yours."

So she walked home with the cake under her arm. It bothered her. She wanted to throw it away, but it was a good cake.

She sent some cake up for tea next day and Anna said, "Where did this come from, I wonder? Bunce never made it—fruitcake's not her line."

So when Elizabeth took the tray down she said, "Anna wondered where the cake came from. It was terribly good."

A dull red went up Bunce's face. "I won it," she said bluntly. "Playing rummy with Maisie and Ed Botsworth."

"Why, Bunce!" Elizabeth said, exploding with laughter.

"I don't see as it's so funny," Bunce said. "When I was seven years old I signed a pledge I wouldn't ever dance or drink or gamble. I never broke it till now. You can have fun over a game without getting something for it."

"Yes, but the cake was so good."

"That fool, Maisie Potts—at her age," mumbled Bunce, and bustled off.

Elizabeth went back and reported and Anna laughed till tears stood in her eyes. She managed to have Bunce come up later and she said to her, "Let your conscience be at rest, Bunce. You gave us a wonderful tea party today. . . . Don't tell me Maisie has a suitor?"

"That's what she has. I should think she'd see she was making a fool of herself. She's sixty if she's a day. And a butcher—he's just looking for a cozy home, that's all he's looking for."

"Well, I wouldn't want to be married to him. But Pottsy may see him through other eyes—he may be Adonis to her."

After Bunce had finally gone, Anna laughed again, laughed and laughed and Elizabeth with her.

Anna said, "You know, Maisie and Bunce have always interested me. They're both as sensible as the day is long. Just the same, it's an awful blow to Bunce to have Maisie getting serious over a man, even if it's Ed Botsworth."

"She'll have to work out her own salvation. It's funny—but it's sad too," Elizabeth said. Her brown face was suddenly grave.

In the doctor's old brown house next morning Margaret McIntry came into the office and said, "Mrs. Daggett's sick. You'd better drop in there as early as you can make it."

"Daggett? What's the matter with her?"

"I don't know. But she's sick. She didn't go to the post office yesterday."

"For heaven's sake!"

"No, I mean it. You must go," Margaret said.

But when he came in at noon he confessed he hadn't been to see Mrs. Daggett. "Look, Meg, be your age. I wouldn't have any excuse for stopping there. You can drop in on her if you want to." Then he gave her a look that was quizzical, but friendly. "Say, I've been wanting to ask you—are you thinking of marrying anyone?"

Margaret McIntry dropped her fork on her plate. She gave a short laugh. "Marrying anyone? Are you out of your mind?"

"Then you're not? Good. I've been prodded toward matrimony myself—with a 'what would you do if Meg married?' sort of nonsense. You needn't go into shock. I'm not convinced. Nor likely to be."

"And who put that bright idea in your head? . . . Never mind, don't tell me. It was Anna Suydam. Whom has she picked out for you?"

He laughed. "Her sister Liz. Thank God the young woman's got brains enough not to take it seriously."

Margaret said, "If you married—which you won't, being completely heartless—it won't be anyone like Elizabeth Burke. You wouldn't be that lucky." Then she grinned at him forgivingly and said, "And never use my welfare as an excuse for doing something you want to do anyway."

"Meg, such penetration of male vanity isn't becoming. You probably ought to marry, though what I'd do without you, I don't know. But the truth is you're a born spinster."

She sat quite still and stared at him.

"What's the matter? Shouldn't I have said that?"

"No," she said. "You shouldn't have said that. It's quite in character, though. You needn't worry. I am not going to marry. But I am not a born spinster. And you'd better get into the office."

He got up, his face more embarrassed than it often was. "Look, Meg ——"

Letter

By Raymond Kresensky

The groves of maples stretching far,
The miles of purple clover,
These will be here for you and me
After your work is over.

Your country road is always here,
Leading away to town,
Against the heavy green of fields
The meadows gold and brown,

And cornfields laid upon the earth—
But here within your room,
Set deep upon the lines I write,
Your favorite flower in bloom.

"Go on!"

She cleared the dishes away, washed them, then got her coat. But before she had reached the door, the bell rang and there were Elizabeth and Johnny on the porch.

"Oh, you were going somewhere!" Elizabeth said.

"Come in. I'll put it off a bit. I was worried about Mrs. Daggett. She didn't go by with her letter and I wondered if she were sick."

"We could wait for you," Elizabeth said. "Or I'll tell you—Mrs. Daggett asked me to come see her. Suppose I run in for a few minutes and leave Johnny here with you?"

"Sound idea," Margaret said.

Mrs. Daggett had a good house, plain of line but big and dignified, if worn and in need of paint. Elizabeth Burke rang the bell and there was no answer. She went around to the side door and rapped. At once she heard that deep, surprisingly cultured voice call:

"Come in. Whoever you are, come in!"

She stepped into a room that might once have been a library. At least there were many shelves crammed with books. But there was a couch, too, and on the couch lay Mrs. Daggett, drawn and white.

"Oh, you," Mrs. Daggett boomed out. "I've sprained my ankle or broken it maybe. Thought nobody was ever going to stop in. Want to get hold of McIntry for me? The phone's in the kitchen."

Elizabeth called the doctor. He said he'd come as soon as he could.

Elizabeth went back. "He says I'd better not do anything till he gets here. Is it very painful?"

"Well, I've stood it for twenty-four h I guess I can stand it for another. could swallow a cup of tea if it wouldn bother."

Elizabeth found tea, made toas brought it in. "That's not much. Wo you like an egg or something?"

"That'll do for a start, my dear. B just in the nick of time. I was hollow c my toes." Then she gave Elizabeth a trating look. "Look, girl," she said, you do something for me? Over on tha you'll see two envelopes, and there's s in a little bowl. If you'll bring me thos envelopes, I'll be grateful." Her sharp eyes never left Elizabeth's face.

Elizabeth walked to the desk and the two envelopes were. She couldn't help the face of them, though she willed h not to look. Elizabeth got the st brought all over to Mrs. Daggett.

The old woman affixed stamps to bot velopes, put one envelope inside the Then she said quietly, "I suppose yo that address?"

Elizabeth said, "Yes, Mrs. Daggett.

"I think you're a young woman wh keep quiet on things that are none o business."

"I hope so."

"I hope so too. . . . Will you bring paper and writing things over where get my hands on them? I think I'm goi be laid up a bit." When Elizabeth had t paper and pen, Mrs. Daggett said, down. I don't think I make mistakes a folks very often. That's my grandson he's in prison. He's been there four years he'll be out soon. I don't want everybo this town knowing where he's been. He right and he's going to have a chance if manage it. You see, girl, I didn't do rig my boy. He married a bad woman, a bad woman, and I quarreled with him never were friends afterward. But th this boy and I think he's all right. He's that woman for a mother and he got trouble. He took a car and had an acci and killed a man. It sobered him up an wrote to me. I want that boy here and I w him to get a decent start. I write to him e day and I don't want him to miss my let I send them by Sarah Horne—an old fri If you'd mail a letter for me every da I get on my feet again, I'll be grateful."

Elizabeth didn't know how she was g to manage that. But she said, "Yes course I will."

McIntry came in with his bag, grunted a surprised, "What are you doing here?" went at once to Mrs. Daggett. "Well, see what you've been doing to yourself," said. "That's a nice one! How'd you do i "Fell off a chair."

"We'd better get you over to the hospi Don't think it's broken, but we'd better h an X ray."

"It's not broken. You ask Jennie Lea to come over here and wait on me. I'm going to any hospital."

"You are if I say so." In the end he Jennie Leavitt, fixed Mrs. Daggett up best he could, let her have her own way.

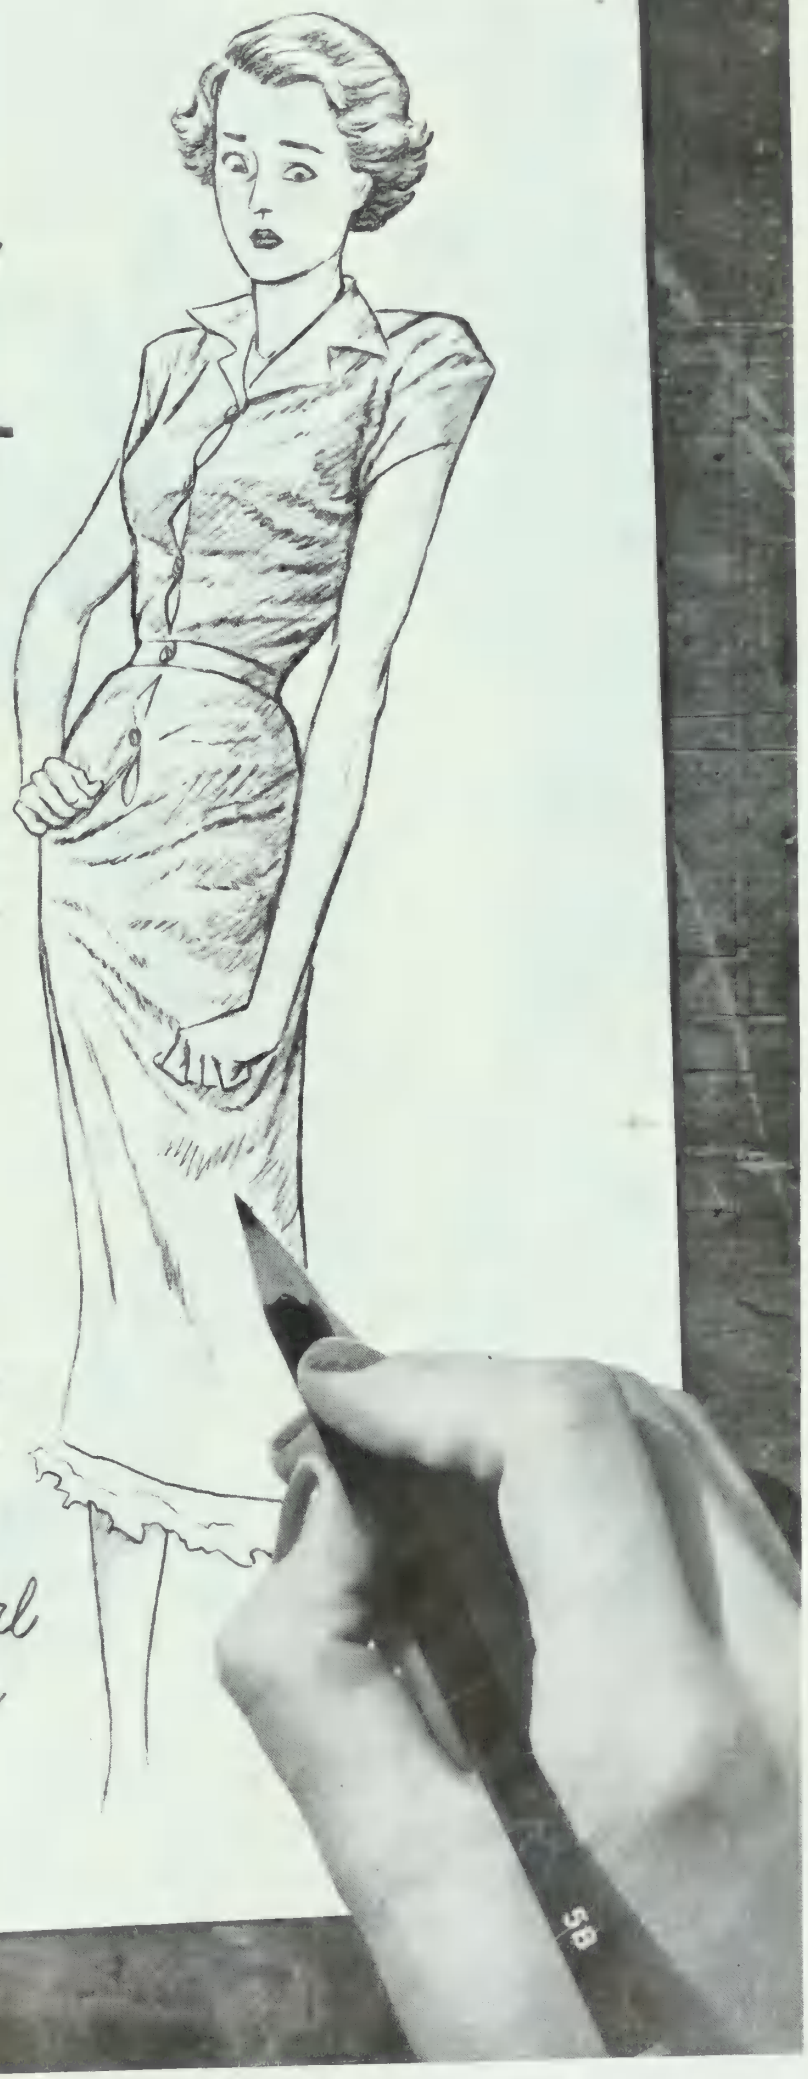
It was the next day that Peggy Jones t Anna about the kindergarten Corinne Lem was going to open. "I'm sending Susa Peggy said, "and I wondered about John Thirty a month, she'll charge."

After Peggy had gone Anna said, "I w der if I ought to consider it. Adrian's had much expense."

"I think it would be money well spen Elizabeth said. "Good heavens, I'll take cut to pay for it. Or let it be a present fr me."

Anna said soberly, "Yes, it might be good idea to have him go. And I'll even you pay for it for now, darling. I'll give y an I O U for it, though. There's no reas Adrian can't pay for it, only right now, wi all the hospital bills and everything ——

"I'd like to," Elizabeth said. "And wit out any I O U's."



Elizabeth told Anna about Mrs. Dagg and Anna's eyes brightened. "Oh, dear

(Continued on Page 84)

Don't be a SKETCH!

No matter where you buy your cottons, no matter what you pay...

They can't shrink out of fit—if they are trade-marked "Sanforized"

★ So in these times above all others, insist on seeing "Sanforized" on the label.

BEFORE you buy, make even your favorite salesgirl show you "Sanforized" on the label!

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

These Murray Sices "SICE-ETTES" are designed to turn fashion dreams into thrilling realities for you who are five feet five or under! Custom-sized and custom-tailored exclusively to fit your smaller dimensions without alterations. Left: In Botany Marchana, 100% virgin wool worsted gabardine. Right: In Juilliard's Worsted Flannel. Both in wonderful Autumn colors! Sizes 10S to 24S. Moderately priced. In New York at Arnold Constable; in Los Angeles at the Broadway Department Store. These Murray Sices "SICE-ETTES" are Janet Norwood Selections at the Marizon-Rosenberg member stores listed on page 85 or write:

THE MURRAY SICES CORP., 252 WEST 37TH STREET, NEW YORK 18, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 82)

that may slow me up on my detective work! Bunce always has soup going, I suppose you'd better take her some."

So that day was taken care of by the taking of the soup.

Anna said to her before she went on her errand, "You might feel around a bit—make her aware that friends ought to have someone to notify in case of accident!"

"No, I don't think I could do that," Elizabeth told her.

Then Anna said, "I know—just offer to mail her letters for her!"

At Mrs. Daggett's, Elizabeth sat down by the couch. Jennie Leavitt was working noisily in the kitchen, whistling as she worked.

"Mrs. Daggett," Elizabeth said, "about the letters—Anna asked me to ask you if I could mail them."

Mrs. Daggett's black eyes sought Elizabeth's face. "Warning me, eh? Show them to her if you like. I've known Sarah Horne for fifty years. I knew I liked you, girl. You're responsible. It's not so common."

And that night Elizabeth said steadily to Anna, "There's no secret really. They're just to an old friend of hers called Sarah Horne. I told her I'd mail them till she was on her feet again."

"Letters every single day to an old friend?" Anna said doubtfully. "What a friendship!"

Elizabeth took Johnny to kindergarten his first day. When she saw his sharp face against the blue of Corinne Lemon's dress, saw his passivity beside the excitement and giggles of the other children, she suddenly regretted bringing him, and when she finally walked away she felt guilty. And yet wouldn't it really be good for him?

There were friends in that afternoon and Mrs. Suydam came down and said she would go for Johnny.

"Oh, would you, Cornelia?" Anna said. "We're right in the middle of a rubber."

Elizabeth put her cards down and said, "I think he'll be expecting me, Anna."

"Oh, sit still, Liz. Cornelia'll like the walk."

When Cornelia came in, Elizabeth looked up anxiously and Anna said, "Well, he seems to have survived."

Mrs. Suydam said, "Yes. I think it will work out very well."

At the supper table Adrian said, "Well, our big schoolboy! How did it go, kid?"

"All right," Johnny said. Then he lifted those large, knowing eyes. "Miss Lemon let me read a story to the whole class."

"She did? What do you know about that!" Adrian said. "I thought reading came in the first grade. Didn't you have any games?"

"Kind of. In a circle."

When Liz tucked him in bed, he said, "I read a story to the whole class."

"Yes, you told us. That was fun."

"They all listened to me."

Elizabeth frowned a little, then said, "Of course. You always listen when somebody reads."

When she went in to Anna, she said, "He's terribly proud of having read to the whole class. Does that mean a lust for power, I wonder? Or maybe he's just compensating himself for having no power at home."

"No power?" Anna said almost sharply. "I don't know what you mean by that, Liz. No one's ever tried to hold him down."

Elizabeth remembered Adrian's shutting off the account of the fair on her first night, but she didn't say anything.

Mrs. Suydam came into the room and Anna said, "Look, Cornelia, do you remember a Sarah Horne who used to live here?"

"Of course," Mrs. Suydam said. "She moved to California."

"Were she and Mrs. Daggett great friends?"

"I don't know. Why do you wonder about her?"

"Daggett sends her a letter every single day. Doesn't that seem odd?"

"It does, rather."

And the next day Anna asked Bunce, "Do you remember Sarah Horne, the doctor's wife, Mrs. Bunce?"

"I should say so! She was kind, Horne was."

"Were she and Mrs. Daggett friends?"

"Not that I ever knew of."

So that day when Elizabeth went t Daggett's and got the letter, she slowly to the post office, having the that Anna could see her going, see t the frail outer covering of the letter hand.

On Friday, Elizabeth walked towa old brown house and found herself with Margaret. It was snowing outside tle big flakes coming almost singly pa window. Inside it was warm and brigh the snow outside emphasized the wa gave them a snug, happy feeling that into their talk.

Then the doctor's daughter gave a sardonic spurt of laughter and said, " Anna's trying matchmaking!"

Elizabeth laughed too. "Have no fe won't come off."

"I should hope not, though I'd tur over to someone willingly enough. N you, though. I warn you, he's begun t it seriously."

Elizabeth sobered and said, "The part is, it could happen. I mean, Anna make it happen. No matter whethe wanted it or not. I don't have much co when it comes to Anna."

"You look as if you had some spu your own," Margaret McIntry said. it." Then her face took on a look of a "I lack courage too," she said. "You was engaged to Adrian once."

Elizabeth looked up with astonish "To Adrian?"

"Yes. My mother died—it didn't see time. There was my father to look Then he met Anna. But if I'd had the age, I would have married him and le father struggle as best he could. He have managed. He didn't, I must a even know I was engaged, but I doub would have mattered had he known. an interesting but not unselfish man—I him, but I know him. . . . I've never tioned this before and I won't again. Anna and Adrian and Johnny are not p to whom I am indifferent and it is b that I don't see them too much."

"Adrian," Elizabeth said in a wh "How strange. . . . Don't other p know?"

"I doubt it. We went around toget but it had just happened when mother No, I don't think so."

Elizabeth stood up. "I must meet Joh she said. Then she said, confused, trou "That's why you love Johnny so."

"Partly," Margaret said. "Let's not s of it again. I don't know why I told y it came to me that I must."

"I feel sad," Elizabeth said childishl "You needn't. It's all right."

She walked in the snow, and the sad wouldn't go away. The wrong people ways the wrong people loving each othe many people being hurt by love. So m many people. And I'm tied more, she meaning the town felt ever closer to meaning that through knowledge she bound to these people, meaning the room across from Lollie was growing mer, more unattainable, meaning that was losing the vision of herself getting a from Lakeville, being just Elizabeth B again.

Adrian said at breakfast, "The lake's for skating at last. Johnny, maybe Aunt could take you down to try your skates."

"I'm afraid I didn't bring my skat Elizabeth said.

"Anna has some around somewhere."

"They're hanging in the closet," Bunce said.

There was an instant when hate came in waves from Mrs. Bunce and from Adr too, for anyone who should dare to Anna's skates, but Elizabeth said, "H about it, Johnny? Shall we try it?"

"All right," Johnny said.

These Janet Norwood Selections featured on page 84 are at the following stores represented by Marizon & Rosenberg or write: The Murray Sices Corp., 252 West 37th Street, New York 18, N.Y.

Al[illegible]y, New York	M. Solomon Furs
As[illegible]lle, North Carolina	Worth's Inc.
Ba[illegible]more, Maryland, Easton Ave.	Lee's Inc.
Br[illegible]sville, Pennsylvania	R. S. Goldstein
Bu[illegible]ington, Iowa	N. Grossman
Ca[illegible]sburg, Pennsylvania	Betty Lee Shop
Ch[illegible]go, Illinois, So. Halstead Street	Kass Bros.
Da[illegible]s, Texas	Peyton's
De[illegible]r, Colorado	Mortons
De[illegible]t, Michigan	Cobb's Fashion Shoppe
El[illegible]beth, New Jersey	Carol Blane
Ev[illegible]ville, Indiana	The Wells
Fa[illegible]mont, West Virginia	Osgood's Smart Shoppe
Ft[illegible]collins, Colorado	Julian's
Ga[illegible]burg, Illinois	D. F. Grossman
Gr[illegible]l Rapids, Michigan	Sarret's
Gr[illegible]sboro, North Carolina	Prago-Guyes
Hi[illegible] Point, North Carolina	Tobias
Ja[illegible]ca, New York	The Style Shop
Jo[illegible]ton, Pennsylvania	Klines Inc.
K[illegible]as City, Kansas	The Leader Clothing Co.
K[illegible]r, West Virginia	Shapiro's
La[illegible]ette, Indiana	Jacques Inc.
La[illegible]ster, Pennsylvania	Logan's
La[illegible]on, Oklahoma	The Parisian
Le[illegible]non, Pennsylvania	Logan's
M[illegible]llen, Connecticut	Lyman's Inc.
M[illegible]le, Alabama	Reiss Bros.
M[illegible]ne, Illinois	Grossman's
M[illegible]oe, Louisiana	Silverstein's
N[illegible]ville, Tennessee	Fox on Fifth Ave.
N[illegible] Haven, Connecticut	J. Johnson & Sons
N[illegible] Orleans, Louisiana	Labiche's
N[illegible]ara Falls, New York	Mack-Friedman Co.
O[illegible]homa City, Oklahoma	Street's
P[illegible]ducah, Kentucky	Irving P. Bright, Co.
P[illegible]nsacola, Florida	Sam's Style Shop
P[illegible]tsburgh, Pennsylvania	Rattner's
R[illegible]ding, Pennsylvania	Martin's
R[illegible]mond, Indiana	Vigran's
R[illegible]chester, New York	Roselee
Sa[illegible]amento, California	Ella's
Sa[illegible]sbury, North Carolina	Guyes-Betty Lou
Sa[illegible] Antonio, Texas	Sadye Harris
Sc[illegible]nton, Pennsylvania	Salben's
Sh[illegible]boygan, Wisconsin	People's
Sh[illegible]bridge, Massachusetts	Louis
Sp[illegible]ngfield, Missouri	Sieger's
St[illegible]petersburg, Florida	Slimers
Tr[illegible]ngton, Connecticut	Bronson-King
Ts[illegible]a, Oklahoma	Street's
Ty[illegible], Texas	Kline's
Ut[illegible]a, New York	Winner's Ladies' Apparel
Wa[illegible]shington, D. C.	Alans
Wi[illegible]chita, Kansas	The Model

MARIZON & ROSENBERG
2[illegible] WEST 34th STREET • NEW YORK, N. Y.

AMAZING CREAM REMOVES UNSIGHTLY HAIR QUICKLY, SAFELY

Acts Below "Razor Line" Without Cutting or Scraping Legs

The modern way to remove ugly hair from your legs is with Neet® Cream Hair Remover. It works deeper than a razor, below the surface of the skin. Safer too from razor cuts and scratches. Neet leaves tender skin soft and smooth, free from razor stubble. Just apply Neet like any cream, then rinse off and hair disappears like magic.

SELL Christmas Cards 40 FOR $1.25
PRINTED WITH SENDER'S NAME

Make Money Spare Time—For Yourself, Church or Club. Make money and friends with fast-selling Personal Christmas Cards printed with Sender's Name. No wonder everyone eagerly buys when you sell 40 for $1.25, 3¢ each. No experience needed. SAMPLES FREE! Albums of 30 styles — actual cards — Free. Also big Special Box Assortments sent on approval. Designs include Religious, Humorous, Artistic and Business. Big season now. Send no money! Samples Free. Rush name on postcard.
GENERAL CARD CO., 1300 W. Jackson, Dept. 408, Chicago 7, Ill.

Demonstration Kit FREE to YOU with Actual Sample Stocking

Easy to make money in spare time, introducing sensational pre-made-to-measure NYLON Hosiery. Yours-Truly Nylons are different, better. 3 Pairs Guaranteed 3 Months or Money Refunded. Rush your name, address for FREE Demonstration Kit and our money-making plan.
AMERICAN HOSIERY MILLS
DEPT. W-156 INDIANAPOLIS 7, IND.

HARD TO GET, BUT WE HAVE THEM!

METAL FOIL CARDS

Write for free Surprise Package, filled with novelties, specialties and selling helps. Get sample boxes of our best selling Xmas cards on approval.

MAKE $40 ON 50 BOXES

CAS. C. SCHWER CO., 37D Elm St., Westfield, Mass.

The day was cold and dry and still, a perfect day for skating. Johnny carried his double-runner skates over his shoulder in comical imitation of Elizabeth. There were other children on the lake and quite a few high-school youngsters. Johnny sat on an old box and Elizabeth fastened on the new skates.

Huxley Reals skated up. "Hello, there. Want any help?"

"No," Johnny said.

I do. I need help, Elizabeth thought. I don't want to see you or think about you. She looked up with a grin and said, "That was final, wasn't it? What's the matter with the boat business today? Is there a holiday?"

"Matter of fact, there is. We just finished off an order, and Adrian decided to close down till Monday. . . . Come on, Johnny. Skate with me while Aunt Liz gets her skates on."

Johnny's face set in obstinate lines, but Elizabeth said, "All right, Johnny. I'll be ready in a minute."

He was good with Johnny, taking falling down as part of the fun, praising Johnny when praise was due, acting as if he were enjoying himself. Elizabeth's skates were on and she stood up, moved toward them, with that joyous feeling she always had on the ice.

"All right. I'll take over," she said. Huxley Reals skated away and his red pull-over made a spot of color, vanishing up the lake.

It didn't take Johnny long to learn to stand alone and presently they were moving together, Johnny's small hands firmly in Elizabeth's. They laughed and were almost gay.

"I can do it! I can do it!" Johnny said once. "Of course you can do it," Elizabeth told him.

They saw Corinne Lemon skating toward them, and to Elizabeth's surprise Johnny called out, "Look, Miss Lemon! I can skate!"

Miss Lemon stopped and said, "Well, that's wonderful, Johnny!" She gave Elizabeth a look of—what was it, respect?—then said, "How about having a try with me, Johnny?" He went willingly with Corinne Lemon, and Elizabeth was left standing alone there in the bright day.

"All right, Elizabeth—let's go!" Huxley Reals said. He took her hands and they were off. "You skate awfully well."

"I've skated all my life. . . . I mustn't leave Johnny alone."

"He's having a wonderful time with Corinne. . . . The only time I feel I could take the world by the tail and swing it is when I'm skating."

"Don't talk," she said.

He stopped talking and they swept up the lake, clear to the plant, then turned and came back to Johnny without a word.

She said, "Well, Johnny, we'd better get home for lunch."

So they took their skates off and went home. Johnny even waved a good-by to Corinne Lemon, put his skates over his shoulder proudly.

"That was fun," Elizabeth said. "You did awfully well for the very first time."

"I could probably do it on skates like yours," Johnny said. "I can balance the best of anybody in the world."

"Indeed!"

"Well, I can."

ADRIAN asked them at lunch, "How did you make out, son?"

"He thinks he's Sonja Henie already," Elizabeth said. "Don't ask him."

"I skated with Miss Lemon," Johnny said. "I didn't fall down, either."

"Good for you!"

The next morning after Mrs. Suydam had gone off to church, Elizabeth heard someone moving about downstairs. She went down and found Bunce frosting a cake in the kitchen.

"Why, Bunce, why aren't you at church?"

Mrs. Bunce did not look up as she said, "I just thought I wouldn't go today."

"But you always go! Don't you feel good?"

"I feel all right," Bunce said.

Elizabeth had to leave it at that. When she went upstairs she said to Anna, "Bunce didn't go to church. I wonder what's the matter."

Anna said, "I wonder! It's Potts. She's had a quarrel with Potts!" Then she told Adrian all about the romance between Potts and Ed Botsworth.

Right after dinner, Huxley Reals appeared. When Elizabeth went to bring the tray Anna was telling him about Bunce and Potts.

"Pottsy? It's incredible!" he said. "Not an ounce of romance in her."

"But it's true. They're courting!" Anna said.

THEN Huxley stirred, stood up. "But I haven't come acalling," he said. "I'll do that around teatime, if I may. I came to borrow Johnny and your sister for an hour or so. For skating."

Elizabeth said quickly, "Sorry. Not me. But Johnny'd love it."

"No, I want you, too," Huxley said. "You don't mind, do you, Anna? Not with Adrian home?"

"Of course not," Anna said. "Run along!"

In the street, Huxley Reals said, "I managed that pretty well, didn't I?"

"Amazingly well," Elizabeth said dryly.

"I thought so. It's part of a course of treatments."

"It would have been more efficacious had you taken Meg or . . . Charlotte Wayne."

"Well, one has to start somewhere. You were close at hand. The idea wasn't to make her mind, however."

"What was it, then?" Elizabeth asked.

They had come to the street going down to the lake and could see the ice thronged with skaters. All the town seemed out.

"I see Miss Lemon!" Johnny said excitedly.

"Good!" Huxley said.

They got their skates on, took turns skating with Johnny. At last Huxley said, "I wonder if Miss Lemon wouldn't like to take over for a few minutes? . . . Oh, Corinne!"

He managed that amazingly well, too, and they went swinging up the ice toward the plant.

"Don't say, 'Don't talk!' now," he said. "Because I'm going to talk. I'm going to tell you what the idea is."

"You needn't."

"But I'm going to. Because you're responsible. It wasn't your calling me a fool, either, if that's what you're thinking of. It was that 'Don't call me Aunt Liz,' business."

"I don't know what you mean."

"I think you do. I just don't want to lose my own identity—and I was close to it."

She said helplessly, "I don't know whether it's important. I used to think so, but I don't know any more. Maybe it's all there is to it—we're made to give ourselves away. I just don't know any more."

"No. That's not the way it is," he said almost angrily. "Don't start mixing me up again. I'm not against giving—only against giving the entire self. When you said 'Don't call me Aunt Liz,' I had the feeling that I knew something important suddenly. Not only about you, but about myself as well. Take this skating—when I put on skates yesterday for the first time, it seemed like a betrayal. A wicked, cruel betrayal. But I said, 'I've got to do this—if I'm to stay Huxley Reals, I've got to do this.'"

"Let's go back," Elizabeth said. They skated halfway in silence, then Elizabeth said, "I do understand. But I don't know the answers. I'm mixed up too. I keep paying rent for my room in town—so I do understand. Yet there seem times when I think that it's only a silly kind of pride that makes you want to keep part of yourself away. I didn't do anything special—just lived in a

(Continued on Page 87)

Here is how Archie, my dishwasher, explains it: "When there's too much money and not enough pie à la mode, that's inflation. When there's too much pie à la mode an' not enough money, that's deflation. When there's plenty of both, you got indigestion."

—WALLY BOREN.

Amazing NEW TYPE DEODORANT!

• NO MUSS
• NO FUSS
• NO DRIP
• NO WASTE

Because it's in

STICK FORM

"A/S" STICK DEODORANT

At last! A remarkable new deodorant that slicks on in a second, safeguards you hours longer! It's neither messy nor sticky, can't harm clothes . . . and it dries instantly! Pleasant to use . . . delicately fragrant. Both men and women find it the perfect answer. Try it today! 75¢, plus tax.

April Showers

April Showers TALC

Here's your all-time choice for cooling, soothing refreshment. Made of finest imported talcum powder, and scented with enchanting April Showers perfume. 39¢, plus tax.

CHERAMY

Corners are preshaped to fit and cling. A deep tuck-under anchors all four sides to the mattress.

Keep cool on a CONTOUR sheet— it won't wrinkle, can't pull out!

Coolest thing you can sleep on, short of ice, A Pacific Contour Sheet*! Your tossing and turning won't wrinkle its restful smoothness, can't budge its firmly held corners. It's a cool delight every hour of the night.

And a time-saver! Come morning, the bottom sheet is neat as the night before—so when you get up your bed is half made!

Summer-ize all the beds in your home with Pacific Contour Sheets. Specially cut and taped corners fit your mattress as if tailor-made, can't pull out. A shaped tuck-under holds all four sides ripple-free.

Pacific Contour Sheets launder easily, and they stretch so smoothly over the mattress, ironing is optional. Won't shrink after washing because they're Sanforized*.

Available in luxurious percale or sturdy muslin in standard double, twin and crib sizes that adjust easily to slight variations in mattress thickness. Ask for Contours at your favorite sheet counter or send for folder and name of nearest store to Pacific Mills, Dept. DD-8, 1407 Broadway, New York 18.

Worth waiting for!

Pacific Contour Sheets are selling so fast that your favorite store may be temporarily out of stock. We are doing our best to catch up with the heavy demand. Pacific Contour Sheets are worth waiting for! Place your order now.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

It's a PACIFIC sheet BY PACIFIC MILLS...WEAVERS OF FINE COTTONS, RAYONS, WOOLENS AND WORSTE

(Continued from Page 85)

pot little room and went to a dull job day af day. Life wasn't half as exciting as he . . . It isn't that I don't think about it just don't know the answers."

see," he said quietly. "Well, Johnny, I se ou don't even need any help any more. Y re learning faster than I did."

e gave Elizabeth an odd smile that said Jo ny was one of the ones who liked to be ot eir own, too, apart, self-sufficient. Then, af Johnny had exhibited his prowess for a fe minutes more, they took off their skates ar went home.

rangely, there was no one in and Adrian w reading to Anna. Anna wasn't up, but w bolstered up in bed. She looked tired, E abeth saw at once. Adrian put the book d n and said, "Let's have a drink downst s, Hux—Anna wants to skip tea."

o they went downstairs and had coffee ar cake. And to Elizabeth's amazement Jo ny came and sat on the arm of Huxley's ch r and even ate some cake with them. A ian and Huxley talked of some plant b ness and Adrian was friendly enough, b still Elizabeth was glad when Huxley w t.

I'm worried about Anna," Adrian said. "I have the doctor look in tomorrow."

Adrian?"

e looked around half impatiently.

Adrian, I think it tired her to think of us s ing. She used to love it so. Be honest—te me if you think it's cruel that we do th gs like that. It seems cruel—and yet, life d s have to move along."

e sat down, leaned forward with his head in his hands. He was a good-looking man, b his body looked inexpressibly weary.

Oh, I don't know, Liz," he said at last, lo king up. "She especially wanted you to g But that may have been it. I don't always k w what's the right, the kind thing to d . . . We've just got this big Government o er—it's going to be a lot of overtime work a rst. Even that seems wrong—that I have to give time to the Government, I mean. B as you say, life does have to move along. I ave to earn a living."

Of course."

he doctor did come in next day. "This is p fessional," he said. "Let's get you into b and give you a look over."

I'm fine," Anna said. "I really am."

He gave her a thorough checking.

She didn't say much, only once, "I hate m legs' getting thin. I was proud of my p tty legs."

Liz massage them?"

Yes. But they're getting very thin."

You're all right," the doctor said. "drian's a fussbudget. Want to get up a in?"

I'll get up later. Sit down—are you in a r h?"

I've got a dozen calls to make. Take care o ny girl here. Don't let her think she's got t strength of Samson!" He patted Anna's h n hand, went away.

The next day Mrs. Daggett went past, ng a stick and hobbling, but making her on way to the post office. Anna saw her and d, "Well, your errand days are over, I . . . . Such a funny old witch—I worry ay at her mystery all the time."

Oh, let her go, Anna. It's her business," zabeth said.

I know. But I feel as if I have to know."

HEN Johnny came home from school at day—Mrs. Suydam was going for him ery day now—he rushed up the stairs and led out, "Aunt Liz!"

I'm in here," Elizabeth said.

He came to the door and said, "I made the st clay thing of all and Miss Lemon showed to the mothers!"

Elizabeth felt her heart pounding, but she id only, "Johnny, you're getting as proud a peacock. What did you make?"

"I made a cat. It looked just like a cat," said. There was something so triumphant out his voice, something abnormally triphant. Why didn't Anna speak, give him me word of praise or even of censure for asting? But Anna said nothing.

"Well, good for you! Bring it home and show it to us. There's some cinnamon toast left—want a piece?"

He took two steps into the room, held out a hand for the toast. It was like luring a bird closer with crumbs. But then Mrs. Suydam called from down the hall, and he was off. They heard him scrambling up the stairs to his grandmother's rooms.

"School's really doing a lot for him," Elizabeth said, but her throat felt dry from the drama of the brief event. "He's getting bold—and he needs to be bold, even if he overdoes it for a bit. I'd rather have that than silence."

"I suppose so. I don't like it, though. But I don't seem to have much influence over him."

"He'll be all right. I really do think so, Anna. He's waking up."

The middle of that week, Anna had a caller, a Mrs. Tye, who was a great gossip. After she had gone Anna looked excited and said, "Know what I've discovered? Mrs. Daggett has a grandson! That boy of hers who died—who was such a no-good man and married that awful woman—well, they had a boy. Mrs. Tye knows it for a fact. Maybe Sarah Horne knows him and keeps tabs on him for Daggett. Do you suppose it could be?"

"Oh, leave her alone!" Elizabeth said. "What does it matter?"

"It matters to me. I can't have things dangling like that. Does it seem snoopy, Liz? It's like a book, really. Only better than a book, because you're one of the characters."

There was a sleet storm on Saturday. About eleven Anna, watching her busybody, saw Mrs. Daggett coming slowly down the street, using her stick still.

"Call her in, Liz!" Anna said.

Elizabeth was cutting off some faded flowers. She hesitated. "No, not now, Anna."

Anna looked around at her, astonished. "Yes, right now—run! I really do want to see her."

"Then don't quiz her," Elizabeth said.

"Silly! I like the old caterpillar!"

Elizabeth went slowly down the stairs. She hoped Mrs. Daggett had gone by and couldn't hear her if she called, but Mrs. Daggett was just by the steps as she opened the door. "Anna says you ought to stop in and see her," she said.

Mrs. Daggett peered up at her. "Well, I could on my way back," she said.

"The stairs are pretty steep," Elizabeth said. "Maybe you ought not to be climbing them."

"I can manage," Mrs. Daggett said, and went on.

She couldn't stop it, felt the morning moving toward disaster, toward pain.

Mrs. Daggett sat in the straight rosewood chair and Anna said, "I ought not to have made you climb the stairs with your bad feet. But I do love to visit with you, Mrs. Daggett. Let's talk about old days in Lakeville, before I came here. Tell me about Prather. Was he from Lakeville?"

"Born and raised here," Mrs. Daggett said. "And a wild one, to boot. Never thought he'd make a minister—but he did."

"How exciting! He always seemed stiff and very much the clergyman to me—and here he's got a past and everything."

"A PAST?" Mrs. Daggett said. "I wouldn't say that, any more than any of us have pasts."

"But you said he was wild when he was a boy."

"Not wilder than many others," Mrs. Daggett said. "Don't make stories where no stories are, Anna."

Anna spoke then very gently: "I know, I can't help it. I do love people. But you had what they called a 'wild boy,' too, didn't you? And he turned out all right too. What's his boy like? Is he wild too? He does have a boy, doesn't he? Someone said so."

Elizabeth was standing. She hadn't been able to sit down since Mrs. Daggett came. Now she wished she were sitting, for her knees felt weak and she was cold all over.

Mrs. Daggett acted then as if she hadn't heard Anna. She gathered her gloves and stick and said, "Well, I'll have to get along, Anna." She moved toward the door and Elizabeth moved to accompany her. Mrs. Daggett said coldly, "You needn't come down. I can find my way, thank you."

Anna's brown eyes sparkled as Elizabeth turned at the closing of the front door. "I was right!" she said. "I was right!"

Elizabeth walked out and into her own room, sat down at the small desk and dropped her head against her arms, let scalding tears flow against her arm. Never, never would Mrs. Daggett trust her again—maybe she would never trust anyone. Maybe she would not now have her boy come here when he was released.

Presently she went to the bathroom and washed her eyes, powdered her face to hide the tears, but when she went to Anna, Anna said at once, "What's the matter, Liz?"

"Nothing."

"But something is. You've been crying."

"It's nothing," Elizabeth insisted. "I was crying for my own sins—and I told you long since that my sins were private affairs."

Anna leaned her fair head back against the chair. She looked so fragile, so beautiful. Anna asked suddenly, "You don't want to leave me?"

"Of course not."

"I've got so used to you, Liz. You seem to belong here—and, now I'll confess, in the beginning I was afraid you wouldn't. You used to have such bristles—but maybe I like bristles better than I used to—anyway, it seems as if you'd always been here and it was right."

"That's good," Elizabeth said.

That night she wrote to Lollie and said this was the last money she would be sending. Mrs. B. could rent her room any time she liked. After the letter was gone, she felt a different person, committed to this life, with no ties elsewhere. Nothing had changed, except that the frail tie to another life had been cut, and yet she knew she had changed, had given up something.

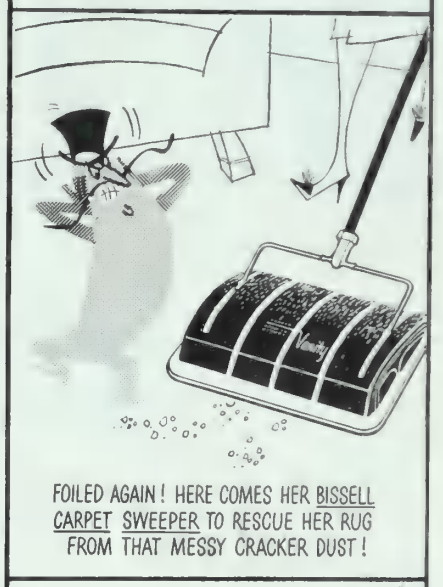
Sunday afternoon Huxley Reals came. He nearly always dropped in for an hour on Sundays. Huxley sat in Adrian's chair, where Adrian himself had so little time to sit. He had on a tweed coat and brown slacks and his thick brown hair was a little ruffled. A collegiate costume, Elizabeth tried to say scornfully, but he did not look like a college boy. That was what hurt so, that he looked so much a man and behaved so like a boy.

"If you don't need anything, I'll go get Johnny while Mr. Reals is here," she said.

NEXT MONTH

"Most young Americans here in West China are gambling with their lives; they don't see a future, and I have no right to plan for one either."

TRUCK DRIVER Stephen Purcell was one of the curious assortment of people who came to visit Jane Breasted, Quaker missionary in China during the War of Resistance to Japan. There were Li, the Japanese spy, trying to use Jane as a cover-up for his activities; Daisy Fairchild, OSS employee, admired by all the American officers in Chungking; Major Trent, who began reading the Bible and Shakespeare at Jane's insistence; Willow, Communist refugee and Jane's former student. To these people, and many others who came to her for help, Jane, though mortally ill herself, gave a sense of peace and hope. Grace Boynton tells the story in



RIVER GARDEN OF PURE REPOSE

Complete in the September JOURNAL

BEWARE THE RUG-A-BOO!

AH, HA! THE KIDS HAVE SPILLED CRACKER CRUMBS! BEFORE MOM HAS TIME TO VACUUM I'LL PULVERIZE 'EM AND GRIND 'EM DEEP INTO HER PRETTY RUG!

FOILED AGAIN! HERE COMES HER BISSELL CARPET SWEEPER TO RESCUE HER RUG FROM THAT MESSY CRACKER DUST!

I DON'T NEED TO "BEAR DOWN" WITH A BISSELL® THE "BISCO-MATIC"* BRUSH ACTION ADJUSTS ITSELF TO ANY RUG TEXTURE—GETS THE DIRT QUICK, EVEN WITH THE HANDLE HELD LOW!

DON'T LET THE RUG-A-BOO GET YOU!
GET A "BISCO-MATIC" BISSELL

Only $6.95 up
A little more in the West.

BISSELL SWEEPERS

Bissell Carpet Sweeper Company
Grand Rapids 2, Michigan

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Bissell's full spring controlled brush.

new toilet brush with easy-to-clean NYLON bristles

It's attractive . . . it's sanitary . . . it's made with Du Pont nylon bristles. Nylon bristles are easily kept clean and sparkling. They stay stiff and resilient . . . do a thorough cleaning job . . . do not absorb odors . . . give years of satisfactory service in your home. Look at these features:

Stiff, springy Du Pont nylon bristles won't mat or break off, no matter how hard you scrub. And therefore nylon bristles last 3 to 5 times longer than ordinary bristles.

It's easy to keep Du Pont nylon bristles clean. Rinse them in a solution of soap and water. Then shake. Nylon bristles dry quickly . . . won't get damp or musty.

Whenever you buy any brush, ask for one with Du Pont nylon bristles because . . .

The best brushes have DU PONT NYLON BRISTLES

DU PONT

Better Things for Better Living . . . through Chemistry

"It's early yet," Anna said.

"A little, but he wasn't planning to stay for supper today."

As she was going out the door, Adrian said, "Where are you off to?"

"I was going to get Johnny. He's at the doctor's."

"I'll come along," Adrian said briefly.

She was startled, but waited and they walked down the steps and up the street together.

"Wanted to get a breath of air," he said. "And I see Hux every day and can get along without him on Sundays."

"Yes, he's omnipresent," Elizabeth said, laughing a little.

"I'd fire him—only it would be for the wrong reason and everyone in town would laugh and say I was jealous of him. Which I'm not. But sometimes I wouldn't mind telling Hux where to get off at."

"Then why don't you?"

"One of those things. . . . Meg needn't think she has to have Johnny every Sunday."

"She likes to have him."

They came to the doctor's old house, and Adrian went in without ringing. As if he were used to that house and opened the door without thought. Then he was embarrassed at having walked in and said, "I might have rung."

Margaret was sitting at the table with Johnny and they were working on a big jigsaw puzzle. "We're used to having people walk in," she said. "How are you, Adrian?"

"I'm fine. Ready to come home, Johnny? It's almost suppertime." Then he gave an odd look about the room and Elizabeth felt she knew exactly his sensations. It was just the same, the very same cluttered, homely room as when he had come here years ago. Nothing in it had changed, not even Margaret.

"I could give you some coffee. We don't hold with tea," Margaret said.

"No, thanks. We have to get back."

And they were out in the street again, going home, Johnny between them.

"Have fun?" Adrian asked Johnny.

"Kind of," Johnny said.

"If you'd come out with an unqualified 'You bet!' once, I'd drop over," Adrian said. But his voice was kind enough and he held Johnny's hand in his all the way home.

Johnny went out to the kitchen and Adrian and Elizabeth went up to Anna's room. The tea things were there and Anna said, "Where have you been so long? The tea's cold."

"Doesn't matter. I'll have some cold," Adrian said, holding his cup out. "We've been calling on Meg. Hux, that's my chair—how about letting me have it for half an hour?"

HUXLEY Reals looked at him in surprise, but he got up, standing half a head taller than Adrian.

"You only boss me weekdays," he said, "but you can have your chair."

"If you're going to be underfoot all day Sunday, too, I'll boss you then as well," Adrian said. "Why don't you get yourself a girl you can keep, Hux?"

"Adrian, what are you trying to do?" Anna said. "Scare away the source supply of my roses?"

"I'm trying to pick a quarrel with Hux," Adrian said.

"You're almost succeeding," Hux said. "Have you got any girls to offer—as nice as the one I can't keep?"

Adrian's fair face reddened and he said, "Take Liz here. Take anyone. But for goodness' sake, don't take all my Sundays—as well as my chair!"

Anna laughed and said, "Have some cold toast, darling—and calm down. What has got into you? I'm ashamed of you both."

Adrian took the cold toast, looked at it with some distaste, but began to eat it.

Huxley said, "I'd better be going. Keep your shirt on, Adrian—I'll be seeing you tomorrow, unless you want me to resign as of now. . . . So long, Elizabeth."

There was a silence in the room after he had left, then Adrian laughed. "I've been wanting to be mean to Hux for quite a while."

"You certainly were mean," Anna said. "You don't really mind Huxley's coming here—you know you don't. Why all that, then?"

"I don't know. I don't like to see anyone making a fool of himself—Hux has too much on the ball for that kind of nonsense. And for a minute there, I did see red—not on account of you, Anna, but because I wanted my own chair."

They all began to laugh.

But it wasn't altogether funny. It was frightening too. It was out of character for Adrian, who was always controlled—before Anna, at least. Maybe the extra work at the plant had put him on edge.

THE next day when Johnny came home from school he came straight up to Anna's room, the first time he had ever done it since Elizabeth came. He walked to Anna's chair and held out his small clay cat that he had made in school. "It's for you," he said.

Anna set it down on the table before her and said, "That's very good."

It was good, for a five-year-old. It was a real cat.

"Thank you," Anna said. But there was no love in her voice that knew every cadence of love. "Thank you very much, Johnny."

"You're welcome," Johnny said too politely and backed out of the room.

"You know, that is very good indeed," Elizabeth said. "And you see, he thinks of you more than you realize."

"Yes, he must," Anna said.

A half hour later, when she was reading, she suddenly put her book down on the table, pushing it against the cat so that it tumbled off to the floor.

"Oh, how dreadful!" Elizabeth cried and ran to pick up the cat. Its perky ears were squashed flat and its tail was off. She tried to squeeze it back into shape. "There, it's almost right," she said. "It would have been horrible to have something happen to Johnny's present!"

"Horrible indeed," Anna said, but her voice did not sound like Anna's voice.

On Friday, Elizabeth suddenly made up her mind to go to see Mrs. Daggett. She went around to the side door and knocked. Mrs. Daggett's voice came clearly, "Come in!" But when Elizabeth stepped inside, her heart pounding uncomfortably, Mrs. Daggett looked at her and Elizabeth knew she was done with her.

"Mrs. Daggett, I wanted to tell you ——" she began.

"You need tell me nothing," Mrs. Daggett said. "There is nothing to tell."

"But there is. I didn't ——"

"Please go, Miss Burke."

There was such finality in her voice that Elizabeth turned to the door obediently. Then she whirled around. "You've got to listen to me, Mrs. Daggett. I didn't tell Anna. I didn't."

But those old dark eyes looked at her unmoved. She went out of the house and homeward.

In her room she tried to write a letter to Mrs. Daggett, but everything she said seemed wrong. She had to accuse Anna to free herself. She put the letter away. She would try again. Some friend of Anna's was there—it sounded like Juliet's voice—and she was reading poetry to Anna. Elizabeth got up, put on her things again and went to see Meg McIntry.

But Meg was not alone. Huxley Reals sat by the window smoking a pipe, looking very much at home. Elizabeth tried fast to think of some brief errand, but Margaret said, "Oh, come in!"

And Huxley grinned and said, "Yes, do come in, Aunt Liz."

So there she was with them, saying, "You do have banker's hours, don't you?"

"More or less."

"Your sister's at the house."

"Indeed! Up to no good, you may be sure. What are you doing off duty?"

"It's my day off. And they weren't talking about you—they were reading poetry. If it hadn't been my day off I'd have liked to stay and listen in."

More people prefer...

PRE-FAB* VENETIAN BLINDS

Custom-made for you!

Only PRE-FAB can give you all the wonderful features that add new beauty to your windows. All-metal enclosed head, self-adjusting tilter, finger-touch action and Rolla-Head one-piece metal bottom rail makes cleaning easy.

Now . . . Eastern's improved all-metal slat material makes your venetians lighter, brighter, more beautiful. DuPont Plastic finish colors.

Insist on PRE-FAB! There is a custom manufacturer within reach of your telephone. *PRE-FAB blinds are custom-made with the equipment and products made by EASTERN MACHINE PRODUCTS CO.

Baltimore 30, Md.

Get Yourself EXTRA CASH

THOUSANDS of our most successful subscription representatives got their start by sending us a postcard asking for our plan. By return mail we sent them a generous cash commission offer and easy-to-follow ideas that have helped others make money. Many of these folks earn up to $1.50 an hour in their spare time. YOU CAN DO THE SAME! Just mail that postcard today to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
625 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

QUICK CASH for YOU!!

NEW! SENSATIONAL! CHRISTMAS CARDS WITH "THE TALKING BOX"

it says— MERRY CHRISTMAS!

De Luxe Album PERSONAL GREETINGS

Yes, Peerless Greetings' new Sensational TALKING BOX E HELP YOU EARN BIG PROFIT

COMPLETE LINE OF CHRISTMAS and EVERYDAY CARDS, GIFT WRAP and CHILDREN'S BOOKS. Take orders from friends and neighbors. Everyone buys. UP TO 100% PROFIT PLUS CASH BONUSES. Write today for details and samples on approval.

4 POPULAR PRICED ASSORTMENT LINES FREE SAMPLES

PEERLESS GREETINGS, 404 S. Wells St.
DEPT. LJ-2 CHICAGO 7, ILLINOIS

Lady, are your tack marks showing? THIS

WALL-TO-WALL CARPET installed with Smoothedge has added beauty—no ugly tack marks, scallops, or dust-catching indentations. Easier to keep clean. Write to Smoothedge today for FREE color book "Working Magic with a Carpet."

NOT THIS

Smoothedge
1530-X N. Indiana St., Los Angeles 63, Calif.

LOOK WHAT'S HERE!

FREE IMPRINT SAMPLES

IT'S EASY TO MAKE BIG MONEY SELLING WELCOME CHRISTMAS CARDS

YOUR SPARE TIME TURNED INTO CASH. Sell your friends and fellow workers 21 for $1 and 50 for $1.25 with name on. Your profit to 100%. Write for selling plan and samples on approval NOW. Costs nothing to try.

WELCOME CARD CO.
368 Plane St., Dept. 29, Newark, N. J.

MATERNITY DRESSES WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG

Advance Styles

Dresses & suits for morning, street, afternoon, or sports, $2.95 to $22.50. Also maternity corsets & lingerie. (Catalog mailed in plain envelope.)
CRAWFORD'S, Dept. A 729 Balt., Kansas City 6, Mo.

ley said, "Read something to Meg e. I feel like being soothed."
'n not the soothing kind of reader," eth said. "But I don't mind."
walked over to the bookshelves, reached most at random and took down The land. She didn't even like Eliot much, e sat down in the window seat and at once to read. Why this? Why this? going through her mind even as she She sat there with her hair hanging her forehead, bent to the book, and le the snow fell and the room was warm luttered and full of friendliness and the nt began to be beautiful, painfully iful. She finished at last, sat there, the still open in her hands.
remember Alex reading that," Mar- said. "It didn't mean a thing to me. strange it seems that now we under- it very well indeed."
xley Reals said nothing, just sat there, ead back against the shabby old chair. know," Elizabeth said. "Is it just that older—or that the world knows more wastelands now?" She put the book e sill. "I have to run along now."
Don't go," Margaret said.
t Elizabeth got up, reached for her Huxley slowly rose. Margaret just and let them go.
was getting dusky outside and with the falling the world was beautiful, still.
You're quite a girl, you know, Eliza- " Huxley said suddenly.
What called that forth?" But her voice dn't come out with lightness.
Oh, I don't know. But you always seem ake me take stock—it's a gift, I ex- . . . Why were you unhappy when you in?"
e didn't deny her un- iness. She said, "A ate matter."
hen there they were e familiar stone steps. Would you like to come and say hello to Anna?" she asked.
No, thanks. Not tonight, Elizabeth." He mured "Good night" and was gone.
hat night, curled up in the chair by Ana's bed, Elizabeth looked up and saw the cat on the very edge of the table. "Your almost fell off again," she said. "I'll put the mantel."
hen she turned from the mantel, Anna's were on the cat. Her expression was strange. But she said only, "Do you w what I heard today? That there was e question about Alex's drowning—some ght he did it on purpose. I thought I v Cornelia awfully well, but she never o me that."
Maybe she doesn't even know it."
I think she does. She has always been open about everything with me—that ns to hurt a little."
But if it's true, it's something she ldn't want to talk about. Would you?"
It depends. Not to everybody, maybe. we're friends, or I thought we were."

was several days later when Elizabeth n Mrs. Suydam coming out of Anna's n, with tears running down her face. She ed blindly past Elizabeth and toward stairs to her own rooms.
lizabeth went slowly into Anna's room. hat's the matter with Mrs. Suydam?"
Poor darling—she's been telling me ut Alex. It made her cry. She feels re- nsible—about Alex, because she tried to suade him to stay in the plant and only nt part time. But of course he knew that ng an artist was a full-time job. Cornelia w that Mr. Suydam was a sick man— she loved him. Adrian was too young to e over. . . . Well, he gave in and the next rning he was drowned."
I wish you wouldn't tell me. I don't nt to know," Elizabeth said.
Of course you want to know, darling. It's , isn't it? But it will be better for her to e got it said."
I don't think it will be better. Because it'll be harder for her to be proud and f. She depends on that."

"But she oughtn't to—not with me."
That night Elizabeth said, "Mrs. Suydam came down and got a tray. She didn't eat with us."
"Poor Cornelia. Well, she'll have a low day and then she'll feel better."
And the next day Mrs. Suydam did appear and was her usual, remote, polite self. But she looked older to Elizabeth, broken somewhere, not to be mended.
On Friday of that week, Bunce called Liz to the phone. "For me?" Elizabeth said in surprise.
She went down the stairs and lifted the receiver. It was Huxley Reals, and at the sound of his voice she gripped the receiver and turned her face away from Bunce.
"Elizabeth? Look, will you do something for me?"
"What is it?"
"It's your day off, isn't it?"
"Yes."
"Then about four-thirty, walk down the lake road, will you? I want to tell you something."
"Couldn't you come here?"
To her surprise he chuckled. "Now, Aunt Liz!" he said. "I'm not in favor at the moment. Come, will you?"
"I'll see," she said, and hung up.

SHE said she wouldn't go. He just wanted a wailing post and she wouldn't be it. But she went, a few minutes late, walked down to the lake road and saw him coming at once. He is not, she told herself helplessly, the kind of man I should love. I should love someone steady and quiet, with no grace that shows on the outside. That man in the bookstore—that is the kind of man for me. It hurts to love a man like Huxley Reals, for he is from another world and it's not my world and never can be.
"Hello, Elizabeth." He took her arm and turned her about and they walked a few steps in silence.
"What did you want?" she asked at last.
"I don't exactly know," he told her. "But I've come on something I can't cope with. It's Pottsy."
"Miss Potts?"
"Yes. She more or less brought me up and I'm fond of her. . . . When Anna told me about her and Ed Botsworth, it seemed funny and yet sad. Potts has never had an admirer in all these years, not that I know of. Well, last night I met Ed going home from his shop and I said, 'Ed, I hear you're courting my Pottsy.' Elizabeth, he isn't courting Pottsy at all—it's Bunce. Seems he liked her way back when they went to school together. Finally found out she spent her Thursday evenings with Pottsy and got invited there so he could see her. He was terribly embarrassed, but forthright enough too—and concerned if he'd given Pottsy the wrong idea. . . . That's the story."
"How awful."
"It's been on my mind all day. Could you tell Bunce?"
"I don't think so. No, I don't think I could tell Bunce that, any more than you could tell Pottsy."
He was silent. Then he said, "It would be easier to tell her than Pottsy. Because she's the gainer."
"She won't look at it that way. Why did you tell me?"
"I had to have some help in it and you were the only one I knew who wouldn't laugh at it. Will you try to break it to Bunce?"
"I'll try. But I don't know whether I can. Or whether I should. Affairs of the heart ought to be let alone. I'm afraid to interfere, and that's the truth."
"Well, I've told you. I feel better, anyway. At least Ed understands there's been a mistake. He ought to have seen it in the beginning. . . . All right, we'll just wait."
They came to the corner of Main Street and Elizabeth said, "Don't walk home with me. . . . Thanks for telling me."
"Nonsense. Why shouldn't I walk home with you?" He kept by her side till they reached the house. "You're a comfort anyway," he said then. "I don't just know

To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice.
—PROVERBS 21:3.

Let Your Beauty be Seen..

Palmolive
Brings Out Beauty

WHILE IT CLEANS YOUR SKIN!

SO MILD...
SO PURE!

For Tub or Shower
Get Big Bath Size Palmolive!

36 Leading Skin Specialists in 1285 Scientific Tests Proved That Palmolive's Beauty Plan Brings Most Women Lovelier Complexions in 14 Days

Start Palmolive's Beauty Plan today! Discover for yourself—as women everywhere have discovered—that Palmolive's Beauty Plan brings exciting new complexion loveliness.

Here's all you do: Gently massage Palmolive's extra-mild, pure lather onto your skin for just a minute, three times a day. Then rinse and pat dry. You'll see Palmolive bring out your beauty while it cleans your skin.

Doctors Prove Palmolive's Beauty Results!

why—you certainly don't help a fellow much—but you're a comfort."

He swung off into the dusk and she went slowly into the house.

In the morning, while Anna was reading her mail, Juliet dropped in. She had been to a party the night before and seemed to have come to tell Anna all about it. Then she smiled at Liz and said, "What were you doing wandering by the lake yesterday with my brother, Liz?"

It came too suddenly. She knew she had not turned quickly enough to hide panic in her eyes. "Oh, I was out walking and ran into him," she said. "He walked me home. But don't get romantic notions about me and your brother, Juliet."

Juliet laughed and said. "Well, I can try, can't I?"

Anna said, "What did Jen wear to the party? Did she get the black number?"

Then Mrs. Suydam came back with Johnny and presently Juliet went away. But Anna said nothing about Elizabeth's meeting Huxley Reals by the lake.

Nothing seemed to happen for a week. Anna seemed just the same. It was only that guilt made Elizabeth feel she was being punished. Anna even gave her a velvet dress of that tawny shade of bronze chrysanthemums. "I don't know where I'd wear it," Elizabeth said, "but it's beautiful." Mrs. Suydam shortened the dress a little, put a few more fine pin tucks in the shoulders.

When Sunday came around again, Margaret McIntry called up and asked Elizabeth to supper.

Anna said, "Oh, you can wear the velvet dress!"

It was, Elizabeth admitted, guilt that made her submit, put on the dress, when she wanted not to. She went to the doctor's house and Margaret said, "Why, you look beautiful! If you weren't so dressed up, I'd ask you to come out in the kitchen while I make the salad."

Elizabeth laughed and went out to the kitchen, perched on a high stool.

"What's been happening?" Margaret asked, her hands busy over the salad bowl.

"Happening? Not much. Or not that shows on the outside."

"It's a good thing the inside doesn't show," Margaret said.

Elizabeth looked up at the long, plain face and thought, She has great dignity—great courage. How I like her!

Margaret put her knife down, then said seriously, "In a moment of weakness, I told you how things were with me. I want to ask something of you—don't let Adrian come here again."

"Again?"

"He was here last Sunday and again Friday night. Why is he so tired, Liz?"

"He has this extra work at the plant—but it isn't only that. He—he's been through so much this year."

"I know. But he has always been enormously strong. He came in like a man walking in his sleep and sat down and said, 'Don't talk, Meg—I just want to rest a minute.' And he didn't talk. He just sat there and rested. But you see ——"

"I see. No one could take that."

Margaret picked up the knife, went on with her task. "Friday he came in, not knocking or anything, and said, 'Play to me, Meg.' I used to play the old songs for singing. I'm no musician. So I went to the piano and played and pretty soon he got up and went out without saying a word. . . . But he must not come. I'm human, I can't have it."

"I don't know how I can stop it. Adrian is not one you can order around."

Elizabeth could see Adrian sitting there in the old brown chair, his head resting against the cushions, exhausted, wanting a moment's peace, and finding it, and Margaret seeing him finding it and being tempted, tempted to take what of him she could have, even yet. Margaret had no charm, but she had strength and she had love, and knew she could give it to Adrian Suydam if she wanted to.

In that moment she could have told Margaret everything about herself, about Daggett, about Huxley. But she did not. She just sat there on the stool and watched Margaret and felt that they knew all about each other without telling.

Then the doctor came in and gave Elizabeth a grin from the doorway. "My intended!" he said. "You look very nice t

They sat at the table and talked laughed and the doctor was amusing caustic.

When it came time to go home he "Well, I suppose I have to see you h Liz."

"Nothing of the kind," Elizabeth "In fact, I'd rather walk alone."

"How can I court you here under M eye?"

"I'm not in the courting mood. No rather go alone."

But the doctor came out with her walked down the street by her side. "No fooling, you're a nice girl, Liz," the do said suddenly. "I could do worse."

"Don't be silly, Doctor McIntry!"

"I'm not joking," the doctor said.

Incredibly, she heard the words. "W you'd better be," she said confusedly. "Because I don't like you very much, Do McIntry. I'm not joking about that, eith They had come to the house already. "G night," she said and left him.

Had she known it, she could have nothing more calculated to stiffen the tor's desire.

On Tuesday night when she bro Anna's milk to her, Anna was wide a and wanted to talk. "Oh, darling," she "I feel so excited! The doctor says courting you! Liz, you must take him really mean it."

"Please, Anna. I just don't want doctor."

"But there isn't anybody else, is ther Anna demanded. "Is there, darling?"

"If there were, I wouldn't tell you."

"Oh, Liz! Then there is!"

The room was in shadow, except for little circle of light from the bedside la Elizabeth was grateful for the shadows, had the feeling that Anna could see r through them. Suppose she should tell A the truth, the whole truth? She felt temp to do so. Suppose she told Anna that Ad was going to see Margaret because couldn't rest any more in his own ho Suppose she told her that even if she lo Doctor McIntry, there was something proud and stubborn in her that she coul allow him to be given to her by Anna? silence grew and was dark and frighten

"Liz"—Anna's voice was warm like l like silk—"Liz, you do love somebody Tell me, darling. Doesn't he love you to

"Anna, look, I know I'm your little sis But I'm a grown woman now. And so you. I don't ask you about the state of y heart, do I? And you wouldn't tell me, did. So why should I tell you?"

"But you know the state of my he Liz. You know I'm married and that I being married to Adrian. Don't be se tive."

"I'm not secretive. It's just—it's just t I can't talk about some things. I can't, An so don't tease me to."

"Earnest Liz!" But her voice was lovi "All right—only I'll know somehow, ki can turn the busybody on anybody's hear I really can."

"Yes, I know." Elizabeth got to her f picked up the little tray. "I think I'll g bed," she said. "Or somewhere where can't read my open face."

But the next day, though Anna's upon her were sometimes quizzical, th was no more talk of Elizabeth's secret lo That didn't mean, Elizabeth knew, that was forgotten.

Mrs. Bunce, with a coffeecake in the cu of her arm, started out for Maisie Po house. The coffeecake was no gift from Suydams, but had been made with ingre ents bought by Mrs. Bunce. A few steps yond the tobacco store someone sudde materialized out of the darkness. It was Botsworth.

lo, Fatty," Ed said.
H! Where on earth did you pop from?"
cted embarrassed, as if he had some-n on his mind he couldn't get out. He d, "Fatty, I've got to talk to you."
at about?"
" Ed said succinctly. "I've come awe to making a fool of myself without g it. I thought everybody in town was making a bid for you, Fatty.
liked you way back in grade school.
t know any way to get to you but by you at Pottsy's house. I thought you'd ough that quick enough. Somebody's oking me about courting Pottsy!
getting on, Fatty—there ain't time to round like we were kids. I think we nake a go of it. What do you say?"
ce stood there in the dark, big, shaken.
ou out of your mind, Ed?" she said.
, I ain't. I been thinking of this ever -well, from way back."
ll, you stop thinking about it, quick.
r heard such nonsense."
began walking on. He caught up with d said, "Look here, Fatty ——" d you ever stop to think, Ed, that a n my build might not like to be called sh, no. I've called you that for forty guess."
"?"
ell, stop it."
n Maisie Potts, in her best gray dress, the door to them and they went in.
, Leora, what's the matter?" Maisie
"You look like you were sick!"
n fine," Bunce said. "Here's a bit of ake I made to go with coffee tonight."
ou ought not to have bothered," Miss said.
ce saw that Maisie's cheeks were pink,
he had her best cloth on the table.

even o'clock Bunce was back in her nall room back of the Suydam kitchen.
t down in the rocker, her coat and hat
, sat there for half an hour, no strength to move. Dear God, help me. Dear God, shall I do? was all that went through ind in that half hour. Then she got up, ssed, crept into bed, her body old and
She had always believed herself sincere she said she was through with mar-
But in spite of herself she thought of tsworth's little house. If it hadn't been aisie, Bunce knew in those long dark of sleeplessness, she might have con-ed taking Ed Botsworth.
the morning Johnny was downstairs
s he often was, and when he went out kitchen there was no Bunce bustling
It was several minutes before she d her door and came out, tying on her
.

"It's awful late," Johnny said.

"So 'tis. I overslept," Bunce said. "You set the silver around while I get the coffee on."

"Your eyes look very little," Johnny said. "Do you ever cry, Bunce?"

"Well, not often. Don't chatter, boy. Get the table set."

When Elizabeth came down, she gave a glance toward Bunce, who stood half turned away, buttering the toast. Bunce, with a face always as red and fresh as an apple, looked haggard. This is it, Elizabeth thought. She knows. But she took the tray without a word and went upstairs.

SHE wanted to spare Bunce Anna's too discerning eyes for an hour or two. So she said, "I know it's my day off, but let me fix your hair and tidy up a bit. I haven't got a thing to do and Bunce is busy." So she did Anna's hair and made the bed.

Then Bunce came lumbering up the stairs. "I'm kind of slow this morning," she said. "What would you fancy for lunch, Mrs. Suydam?"

"I'd fancy whatever I got. From you. . . . What's the matter, Mrs. Bunce?"

"Matter? Nothing, Mrs. Suydam."

"You look as if you'd had a night out. Don't tell me you have such riotous goings on at Maisie Potts'!"

"Not without you call having a cup of coffee riotous," Mrs. Bunce said. "You can run along now, Miss Burke. I'll look after things here."

"Bunce, you wouldn't want to bother with one of those mushroom omelets, would you? It would be wonderful."

"That's no bother," Bunce said.

Elizabeth lingered a moment after Bunce went out. Then she went slowly down the stairs. Anna would have it out of Bunce before lunch was over. If only she could stop her someway. Anna would think it funny and romantic, and maybe it was funny and romantic. But it was something more than that too. She walked into the kitchen.

"Bunce," she said, "I know what the trouble is. You know about Ed Botsworth, don't you?"

Bunce turned and stared at her.

"I knew it two weeks ago," Elizabeth went on. "Huxley Reals told me. He was worried about you and Miss Potts. He thought you ought to know. But I couldn't seem to tell you."

"You ought to have," Bunce said.

"Yes, I know. I couldn't. But I've been thinking about it all this time and worrying. I don't see how it can come out right."

Mrs. Bunce gave a deep sigh. "I don't know which way to turn, and that's the truth. I don't know if I'm coming or going."

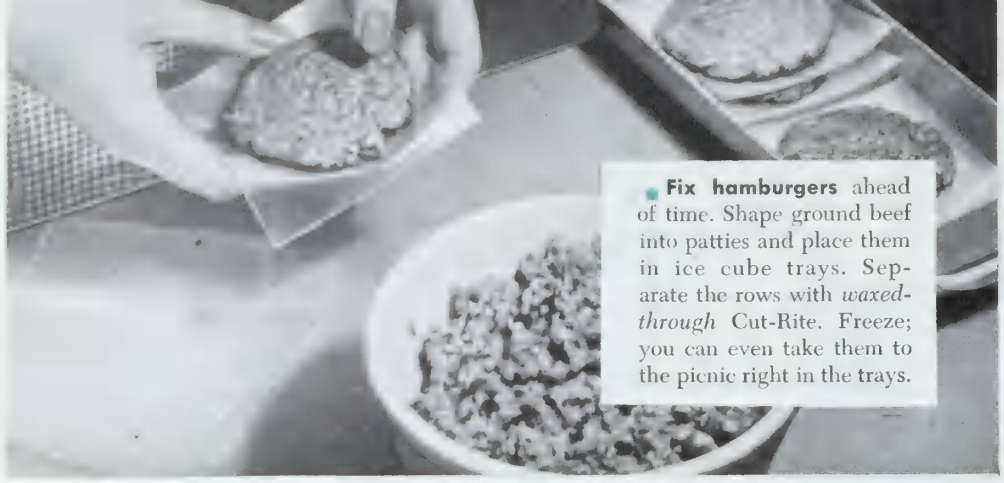
"I'd think a lot more of him if my parents didn't like him so much."

LADY PEPPERELL . . .
FIRST FOR QUALITY

LADY PEPPERELL
Superfine MUSLIN SHEETS
. . . FIRST FOR WEAR!

Prettiest way to dream for practical you!

Who'd ever guess you have so much good sense in that pretty head? But your Lady Pepperell Superfine Muslins prove it! They're the sheets with all the extra threads—1,000 more than regular muslins—for extra strength, extra fine texture, smooth and cool to lull you blissfully to sleep. Lady Pepperell colors, too, are straight out of your dreams—the soft, subtle, flattering shades that will make you truly a sleeping beauty.



In blankets, too, look to Pepperell for style, for value. Newest decorator colors, new scientific fibre blends make Pepperell blankets your best buy today! Blankets from $7.95 to $16.95 at your favorite store.

LADY PEPPERELL
Sheets
IN SUPERFINE MUSLIN
AND FINE COMBED PERCALE

PEPPERELL MANUFACTURING COMPANY, BOSTON, MASS.

IN SEVEN LOVELY COLORS—AND CLASSIC WHITE
Pink, blue, maize, rose, peach, aqua, green as well as classic white—all tub-fast and so exquisite, there are more Pepperell-colored sheets on America's beds than any other brand!

PEPPERELL FABRICS

Fix hamburgers ahead of time. Shape ground beef into patties and place them in ice cube trays. Separate the rows with waxed-through Cut-Rite. Freeze; you can even take them to the picnic right in the trays.

DIONE LUCAS GIVES YOU SOME

Quick Tricks for Picnics

. . . famous cooking authority

Wrap moist foods, like deviled eggs or pickles, in Cut-Rite—it's extra-heavy to keep them from leaking through. Cut-Rite doesn't go to pieces when wet—is so marvelously pliable, it folds or twists without splitting.

Make separate little packets for salt and pepper. All you do is tear off a piece of waxed-through Cut-Rite, pour on the salt or pepper and then fold it in half. Now seal the edges with a warm iron.

Cut-Rite's famous cutting edge always tears easily—there's never any waste to it. A Scott Paper Product.

Every day – more women choose it – love to use it!

"CUT-RITE" REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

"And that's the first business of man—to know that. . . . I read that somewhere," Elizabeth half apologized. "Will you take lunch up or shall I?"

"I'll take it up," Mrs. Bunce said.

That afternoon Elizabeth, ready for skating all by herself, paused in Anna's room where Jen and a woman called Evelyn Wood were sitting. Anna was telling them, with much laughter, the problem of Bunce. Elizabeth felt darkness growing in her, making her face dark. She said hotly, "That's mean. That's damnably mean, Anna!"

Anna went on laughing. "Oh, Liz," she said, "she'll never know and you have to be able to tell your friends funny bits of psychology that pop up!"

"How do you know she won't know? And it isn't funny to Bunce."

She saw the surprised eyes of Jen and Evelyn Wood upon her, but she couldn't stop. Then Anna sobered and said, "I'm sorry, girls. Bunce is my great help in time of trouble—I couldn't live without her. I wasn't trying to be cruel. But Liz is right—and don't you dare to spread it around!"

That was a handsome apology and Elizabeth had to let it go at that. But as she swept alone up and down the lake, she said to herself that Jen and Evelyn couldn't possibly keep a bit of gossip like that to themselves. It would be known all over town in a day or two and laughed about. Still, what could she do? And maybe it was right to laugh. Maybe that would clear the whole thing up quicker than anything else.

I don't know either, Bunce, she admitted. I don't know if I'm coming or going.

But presently the sharp fresh air calmed her and she didn't think at all, but moved swiftly, mindlessly, up and down the lake.

That night, when Anna brought up the matter of Bunce, saying gently, "I was stupid this afternoon, darling. It was such a wonderful story—but I was stupid to tell it," Elizabeth said calmly, "Oh, never mind. Bunce will work it out."

"Liz, would you mind taking that little cat away? Every time I look at it, I think of how I'm failing with Johnny."

Elizabeth went to the mantel and took the little cat down. "But Johnny will be disappointed if you don't have it up. And Johnny's all right now. He's doing all right in school and he seems much happier."

"But not with me," Anna said. "Please take it away."

Elizabeth took the little cat into her own room, stood it on the bureau. The next day Johnny saw it there.

"I didn't give that to you," he said.

"I know you didn't. Mummy said I could have it to look at for a little while."

Johnny walked out of the room and, to her amazement, went straight to Anna's room. She heard him say, "You gave away my cat!"

Anna did not answer for a moment and then she said, "Make me something else. I've given the cat to Aunt Liz." Her voice was not warm at all. It was almost indifferent.

"I'll make you another cat," Johnny said, with an odd fierceness in his voice.

"No, I'd rather have a rabbit," Anna said.

JOHNNY came running back. His sharp little face was all screwed up in anger. "I'll make her another cat!" he said. "I will!"

"All right," Elizabeth said, but the whole scene had a strangeness, had something in it she could not understand. And Johnny's face was not a child's face, was ugly with hate. Was it disappointment that Anna had given his present away? Was that all it was?

On Sunday Johnny went to Margaret's. The doctor called for him and took him in his car.

The doctor said to Elizabeth, with a grin, "Hello, my prickly pear!"

"Hello."

"Why, I believe you blushed!" Doctor McIntry said. "I didn't know girls did that any more. You must be softening toward me!"

"Nothing of the kind," Elizabeth said.

"You come get Johnny at five. I'll get in a lick then."

But she didn't go to get Johnny. Reals came, and also another pair. T ple left soon, but Huxley stayed Adrian said he would get Johnny.

"Oh, let Liz go," Anna said careles

"I'd like to," Liz said.

But Adrian went. Huxley sat there and let Anna do most of the talking. F she said, "You're dull today, Hu something on your mind?"

"I am dull," he said. "I've been w on this article. I'd done so little lately that it's hard going. I've been ing perhaps I ought to make a change

"Leave Adrian?" Anna said protes

"Yes. Get out of town and make start."

"Oh, no. Lakeville couldn't get on w you, Hux. You're our brightest youn about town!"

"Well, being a bright young man town can't last forever, Anna. I'm ju so young as I was ten years ago. I planned to stay in Lakeville anyway.'

"You are in a mood! You mustr Hux. I know I'm selfish, but I don't wa friends to go away."

HUX got up. "Well, I probably will b when I'm an old man with a beard cane," he said. "I'm old enough to kno fresh pastures aren't always greener. I I feel as old as Methuselah today."

"And you don't know whether coming or going," Elizabeth was sur to hear herself say. She managed to "That's a quote—it just went throu head."

"No, I know," he said. "I'm coming he contradicted himself by going, without saying good-by.

"He was low, poor Hux. He wor away, though," Anna said. "Why, walking Adrian home! Probably tellin how to bring up Johnny. Only they seem to be talking even. I must tell A they looked like one of those silent m pairs who haven't anything left to s each other."

"Adrian doesn't like that kind of j Elizabeth told her.

"Silly! Adrian likes any kind of joke

Meg didn't come in.

When Adrian came upstairs, Anna gr him with a laugh. "Oh, Adrian, I saw coming in the busybody! You and looked exactly like a New Yorker cart the married pair who have no more to s

But Adrian did not laugh. He sat do his chair, looked out the window, s only, "Oh, did we?"

Anna leaned her head back. "Isn't most suppertime? Adrian, do eat up with me tonight! Hux is tiresome an like to have a really restful hour with

He smiled at her, but said nothing, Elizabeth went off to see about the su But Elizabeth thought, She shouldn't said that. Oh, she shouldn't have said it thinks he couldn't possibly change; she sure he loves her forever and ever. B shouldn't have been said.

Elizabeth sat beside Anna's bed. "Th something that's been on my mind," said. "About Bunce. It's why Hux told not me. He's always brought all his prob to me."

"That I don't know," Elizabeth "Probably he hoped I might do somet about it, but I didn't. He felt out of here at the moment."

"Was that it? But you might have told Liz. Why didn't you?"

"Oh, I don't know," Elizabeth said lessly. "It just seemed to be Bunce's ness, nothing we ought to mix into. B course I might as well have, because B told you anyway."

"I hope you weren't silly enough to t I'd mind your creeping out to meet H Anna said, with a small chuckle.

"Don't be silly. And I didn't creep anyway."

Had she said that boldly enough? boldly? Anna's head turned on the p and the brown eyes searched Elizabeth's

"Why, Liz!" Anna said.

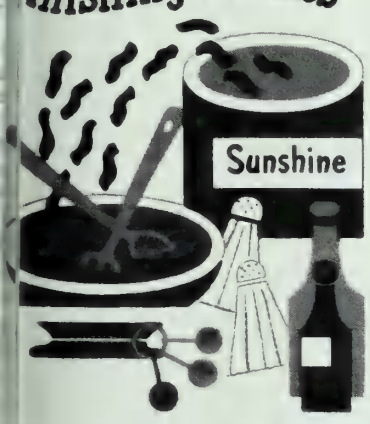
Prices will never go up on the food you can today!

Can more, save more. For easier canning buy only KERR Mason Jars, Caps and Lids.

KERR ADVANTAGES:

Exclusive—golden finish on both sides of the lid.

Exclusive—natural gray sealing composition—extra cushion for surer sealing.



Instant sound test.

FREE! GUIDE TO BETTER CANNING

Complete canning instructions, gummed labels, recipes, etc. Write: Mrs. Ruth Kerr, 131 Main St., Sand Springs, Okla.

KE SWEET CASH! FREE SAMPLES!
SELL Empire CHRISTMAS CARDS
Big line of fine — and fire sellers. Gorgeous $1 Christmas and All-Occasion Assortments. Metallic, plastic, comic cards. Surprise gift items. Top value name printed Christmas Cards 25 for $1 up. Animated children's books. Scented stationery. NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED—Costs nothing to try. Fund raising plan for churches and clubs. Special offers. Extra Cash Bonus. Write now for samples.
50 Name Printed Cards $1.25
Personalized STATIONERY Napkins · Coasters
EMPIRE CARD CO. 232 FOX STREET ELMIRA, NEW YORK

Finishing touches

Many a recipe comes to life when you add the zest of brilliant red, whole Sunshine Pimientos. Their appetizing, mild, spicy flavor can be inspiration for delicious casseroles, meats, salads, vegetable dishes, omelets. Their color turns plain recipes into pretty ideas.

Keep several jars of Sunshine on the pantry shelf.

SUNSHINE PRODUCTS COMPANY
Griffin, Georgia

"What do you mean by that?"

"Liz," Anna said again, in that wondering tone. Then, very softly, "I'm sorry, sis. I never dreamed it was Hux."

"Hux? I hope you know what you're talking about."

"Yes, I know, darling. All this stubbornness about the doctor—but it never entered my head you'd be so foolish as to fall for Hux."

"Anna, you're out of your mind," Elizabeth said. "I hope I wouldn't be such a fool as to fall for someone who worshiped you. I never said I'd fallen for anybody. You made that up out of whole cloth."

"You protest an awful lot! Well, we'll forget it tonight. Only I do feel hurt, somehow—that you didn't tell me."

"Didn't tell you what? I can't make up a love life, even to entertain you."

Anna laughed, reached out her hand and put it over Elizabeth's. "Sleep tight, my thorny one," she said.

In her bed Elizabeth Burke lay wide awake. Anna had not believed her. What did words matter, when you knew someone so well that all those words had meant absolutely nothing? Anna knew. And what now? What would Anna do with her secret? Would she present it to the girls? To Huxley? To Adrian? I will have to go away from here, she said to herself. But how? What reason could she give? Was it not the same as a confession if she went away? I don't know, oh, I don't know whether I am coming or going.

She was afraid to begin the next day, but she did begin it. It was to be a day remembered forever, but it began like any other day. Anna looked at her once or twice with that look of amusement, that speculative, teasing look that was so enchanting and yet today so unendurable, but she said nothing.

The day wore itself away. It was toward suppertime when she said suddenly to herself, I will go and see Daggett tonight. I didn't do it right before. But I can't get hold of myself till she knows that I didn't betray her.

Nor did she beat about the bush when it came time for going. Huxley Reals came in, but Adrian did not go out and Elizabeth said, "Adrian, you'll be here all evening, won't you? I'm going down to call on Mrs. Daggett."

"Go ahead," Adrian said.

She went down the stairs, out the front door and into the street. There had been a thaw and the streets were full of slush. It was hard walking. But Elizabeth went steadily along, came to Mrs. Daggett's big old house. She knocked, heard steps. The door opened and Doctor McIntry stood there. He stared at her as if she were the last person he had expected to see.

"What's the matter? Is she sick?" Elizabeth said blankly.

He pulled her in, closed the door. "Stroke," he said. "She won't last the night."

"But I've got to talk to her."

"Why? Jennie Leavitt is with her. She's no sight, Liz. And she won't know you."

"I must see her," Elizabeth insisted.

SHE followed him into the bedroom, and there lay Mrs. Daggett, her eyes half open, her mouth slack, a little moisture dribbling from one corner, and an odd, twisted look to one side of her face.

Elizabeth walked to the side of the bed. "Mrs. Daggett," she said. "Mrs. Daggett."

But the eyes did not change. There was no recognition, no movement of the eyes. Elizabeth walked out of the room and the doctor followed her.

"If she gets to—to be herself again, will you call me?"

"Yes, but I doubt she will. Not tonight, anyway."

"But you will call me?"

"I said so, didn't I?"

He was puzzled, but she walked out of the house and on up the street. Then she found herself crying, the tears hot, then cold against her face. She tried to wipe them away with her sleeve. At last she turned and went home. She came to No. 7. The door opened and Huxley Reals, head bare, overcoat open, came out the door. She put a hand to the railing, waiting for him to pass. But he stood there and stared at her.

"What's the matter, Liz?"

She could feel the rush of tears again, could not stop them.

He came down the steps, took her arm. "What is the matter? You're shaking."

"I know. Mrs. Daggett is dying."

"Mrs. Daggett?"

"She's had a stroke. She's dying."

HE was walking her firmly up the street. "But look here," he said at last. "Was Mrs. Daggett anything special to you? I don't understand. . . . Stop your crying, Liz."

"I'm sorry. I can't seem to stop. I must go home."

"Looking like that? Here, come in with me a minute and I'll give you a drink. There's no one home—come along."

"No."

"Don't be silly. If ever anyone needed something, you do. Oh, come on and stop your nonsense!"

Everyone knew he had an apartment of his own. They went in by the side door and Elizabeth was pushed into a deep chair in a room that was filled with books.

"Coffee or brandy?"

"Coffee."

"All right. Sit still."

She couldn't have moved had she wanted to. When he came back, he handed her coffee, said not a word while she drank it. "Thank you," she said. "I'm all right now."

"You look a degree more normal. Now tell me why you were going into hysterics because old Mrs. Daggett is dying."

"She thought I betrayed her," she said. "I had a secret of hers—she thought I told it to Anna. I didn't. To have her die and not know—it seemed to me I couldn't bear it. I went there tonight and I was going to make her listen to me."

"Hold it," Huxley Reals said shortly, commandingly.

She stopped short. His voice was not the teasing, self-mocking voice he used for Anna. It took obedience for granted. She obeyed. Then she got up. "Thank you for the coffee. I will go now."

He did not stop her, instead walked with her to the door, out with her into the night.

When they came to the steps again, she said, "I'm sorry I went hysterical. It was only—it was a shock to know that I wasn't ever going to get a chance to tell her. It seemed so cruel."

"Yes. But we have to accept some cruelties in life, I expect."

"I suppose so. Only this one—it will be with me forever. Good night."

"Liz—Elizabeth —"

She paused on the second step.

"Do you want to tell me the secret?" he asked.

"No."

"All right. It seemed so important," he told her. "I thought you might. Good night, Elizabeth."

Now she was in the house, going quietly up the stairs. She went to her own room, undressed, went to bed. She did not sleep. One o'clock, two . . . three. The phone did not ring. At last she fell asleep and when she woke it was bright daylight. She jumped out of bed, dressed quickly.

She went downstairs and got the tray ready. Just as she started through the hall, the phone rang. It was Margaret. "Elizabeth?" Meg said. "Dad asked me to phone

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Summer Love

By Eva Tuttle Walsh

This ends before
It went too far.
A surface burn
Will leave no scar.

Only the finger tips
Closing about
A candle flame—
Putting it out.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Perk Up Plain Dishes with Heinz Mustard!

Try these simple, wonder-working tricks with HEINZ Prepared YELLOW MUSTARD

● For the best deviled eggs you ever made—and the quickest to fix—blend two tablespoonfuls of Heinz Prepared Yellow Mustard and a dash of salt with the yolks of four eggs.

● Here's a sandwich spread the whole family will love: Chop four hard-cooked eggs. Add ¼ cup bacon bits, one Tbs. finely chopped parsley, 3 Tbs. mayonnaise, ½ tsp. of Heinz Prepared Yellow Mustard. Mix and spread on your favorite bread.

HEINZ PREPARED MUSTARDS Are Unusually Fresh Tasting And Fine Textured—Because Heinz Uses A Modern, Fast-Grinding Method That Helps Retain The Pungent Flavor Of Mustard Seeds. Ask Your Grocer For The Mild YELLOW Kind!

Take these short cuts to extra flavor with HEINZ Prepared BROWN MUSTARD

● Hot dogs are glorious if you'll spread them generously with Heinz Prepared Brown Mustard — then roast 'em over an open fire. When a nice crust forms on the hot dogs, they're ready to eat —and enjoy!

● Ground lamb—formed into patties, wrapped in bacon and broiled—tastes delicious topped with a dash of Heinz Prepared Brown Mustard.

Finer In Flavor, Creamier In Texture, HEINZ PREPARED MUSTARDS Are The Best Money Can Buy! Use The Stronger BROWN Kind To Glorify Scalloped Potatoes, Breaded Chops, Many Other Dishes!

Betty Crocker's EASY DOUBLE-QUICK

PEPPERMINT STICK CAKE

Betty Crocker Peppermint Stick Cake (make only with GOLD MEDAL FLOUR)

FOR SUCCESS . . . do these first:

1. Have ingredients room temperature (70° to 75°). In hot weather use milk and eggs directly from refrigerator.
2. Preheat oven to 350° (moderate).
3. Grease generously and dust with flour 2 round layer pans, 8 x 1½-in.
4. Measure level for accuracy with standard measuring cups and spoons.
5. Sift GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour, then spoon lightly into cup and level off. Do not pack.

Sift together into bowl:
- 1⅞ cups (1½ cups plus 2 tbsp.) sifted GOLD MEDAL Flour
- 1½ cups sugar
- *1¼ tsp. soda
- *1 tsp. salt
- ½ cup cocoa

Add:
- †½ cup high grade shortening
- 1 cup milk
- 1 tsp. peppermint extract (not oil of peppermint)

Beat vigorously with spoon for 2 minutes by clock (about 150 strokes per minute). You may rest a moment when beating by hand; just count actual beating time or strokes. Or mix with electric mixer on medium speed (middle of dial) for 2 minutes. Scrape sides and bottom of bowl constantly.

Add ⅓ to ½ cup unbeaten eggs (2 medium)

Continue beating 2 minutes more, scraping bowl constantly. Pour batter into prepared pans. Bake 30 to 35 minutes in moderate oven (350°), or until top springs back when lightly touched. When cake is cool, frost with Candy Mountain Icing (recipe below).

*If you use GOLD MEDAL Self-Rising Flour, omit salt, reduce soda to ¼ tsp.; and add ½ tsp. red food coloring.

†Such as Snowdrift, Crisco, Spry or Swift'ning.

CANDY MOUNTAIN ICING

Stir until well blended in a small saucepan ½ cup sugar, 2 tbsp. water and ¼ cup white corn syrup. Boil rapidly to 242° (mixture spins a 6- to 8-in. thread or a few drops form a firm ball when dropped into cold water). When mixture begins to boil, start beating ¼ cup egg whites (2). Beat until stiff enough to hold a peak. Pour hot syrup slowly in a thin steady stream into beaten egg whites, beating constantly with electric or rotary beater until mixture stands in very stiff peaks. Blend in ½ cup crushed peppermint stick candy or ½ tsp. peppermint extract.

If you live at an altitude over 2,000 ft., write Betty Crocker, General Mills, Inc., Minneapolis 1, Minnesota, for recipe adjustments.

Betty Crocker Promises Outstanding Results Only with

GOLD MEDAL FLOUR

"Betty Crocker" and "Kitchen-tested" are reg. trade marks of General Mills, Inc.

Betty Crocker developed this glorious yet time-saving summer treat—Peppermint Stick Cake—just for Gold Medal . . . to take full advantage of its superb, uniform baking qualities. From sack to sack . . . cupful to cupful . . . Gold Medal's wonderful qualities never vary! No wonder Betty Crocker tested recipes and Gold Medal "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour doubly assure you success . . . with everything you bake!

IT MUST BE BETTER!

Women buy more sacks of Gold Medal "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour than the next 5 brands combined you. Mrs. Daggett died a few minutes ago. She never regained consciousness."

"Oh. Thanks." She hung up, sickness flowing over her.

"What is it?" Bunce asked.

"Mrs. Daggett died."

"Mrs. Daggett?" Bunce's eyes asked what deep concern it was of Elizabeth's.

"Bunce—would you mind taking Anna's tray up?"

Bunce took the tray. Elizabeth sat down at the kitchen table, put her head down on her arms. Out in the West was a boy who would never get those letters any more, would never have a home to come to. It might be that this worry had brought on the stroke.

The bell at St. Paul's was tolling. The sound came solemnly through the storm, for the worst blizzard of the year was raging through the streets of Lakeville. Nevertheless, the dead must be buried and this was the day of burial.

Mrs. Bunce and Mrs. Suydam, each dressed in somber black, had braved the storm and gone to the church. But Elizabeth had said, "No, I won't go."

"I hope Adrian won't get chilled," Anna said. "It's not the day one would pick to be a pallbearer. I don't know why they asked him—except that he's one of the leading business lights of Lakeville. He's always felt so responsible for Lakeville—as if he'd founded it and had to keep it going."

"Well, that's good. Good to know someone who does feel responsible."

"I suppose so. But it makes him work so hard."

Mrs. Bunce and Mrs. Suydam came home at last, but Adrian did not come for some time after. Then he came upstairs and into Anna's room.

"We were beginning to worry about you," Anna said. "Was it awful?"

"No. But bitterly cold."

"Did many come?"

"Yes, a good many, considering the day. The church was almost full. Bunce thinks a Baptist funeral is better, with a eulogy and a good long sermon, but the service at St. Paul's suits me. The eulogy consists of all those people sitting there, having struggled through the blizzard."

Anna looked surprised, as if Adrian was talking out of character. But all she said was, "Yes, you're right. . . . Aren't you frozen? Liz, how about making us some coffee instead of tea today?"

THE next day at about ten o'clock the phone rang and Mrs. Bunce called Elizabeth. "This is Mr. Masters, Miss Burke," the voice said. "I wonder if you could come down to my office this morning?"

"Mr. Masters?" Elizabeth said. "And what was it you wanted to see me about?"

"I'll inform you when you come. I'm upstairs, next to the bank. Masters and Winch. Shall I expect you?"

"All right," Elizabeth said. She went back up to Anna and said, "Funny thing. Mr. Masters wants me to come down to his office."

"Henry Masters? Run along. I'm consumed with curiosity!"

Elizabeth climbed up dingy stairs and sat in a heavy old chair across from Henry Masters. He was a thin dry man with a small mole on his cheek.

"Miss Burke, I have here the will of Mrs. Will Daggett. It is very brief. I will read it to you: 'I, Amanda Daggett, being of sound mind, do bequeath all my possessions, real and personal, to Elizabeth Burke, of Number Seven North Lake Street, Lakeville.' Signed by Mrs. Daggett, Jennie Leavitt, Lena Jones, Mary Stone."

Elizabeth stared at him. "That's impossible."

"It seems to be in order, Miss Burke. There is a letter to you, marked 'Personal'—here it is."

"When did she give it to you?"

"Some weeks ago. It was when she was laid up with that bad foot."

"It's a mistake." Elizabeth stood up. "I'll have to think about this, Mr. Masters."

"There isn't much you can do, except [illegible] it," Henry Masters said. "You happen [illegible] in luck, Miss Burke, and I congrat[illegible] you."

"In luck?" Elizabeth said, and H[illegible] Masters remembered the strange look i[illegible] plain face for a long time. She walked o[illegible] his office, home, up to her room.

She did not even go to Anna, but sat d[illegible] read the letter marked "Personal":

My dear Miss Burke: My friend Sarah H[illegible] is an old woman like me. Since her hold on l[illegible] so precarious, I deem it necessary to make c[illegible] arrangements to safeguard my small prop[illegible] for my grandson. There is no legal way in w[illegible] you will be liable to turn this property ove[illegible] tact to my grandson, and yet I trust you t[illegible] so. He will be free next November, if all [illegible] well. I enclose the address and that of my fr[illegible] Sarah Horne. There is something in the ne[illegible] borhood of eight thousand dollars in the b[illegible] Would a thousand of this be fair to pay yo[illegible] your trouble? There is also a box of jewelr[illegible] my desk. It is not worth much, but some of [illegible] worth wearing. Please accept that. I have [illegible] myself in your hands. I trust you.

Sincerely, AMANDA DAGGET

ELIZABETH BURKE sat looking at the lett[illegible] long time. It simply could not be. She w[illegible] to the telephone, called Henry Masters.

"Mr. Masters, I do feel there has bee[illegible] mistake," she said. "There must have b[illegible] a later will than this. Will you look for i[illegible]"

"Why, yes, if you say so."

Then she went to Anna. "Whatever [illegible] it?" Anna asked.

"It's too strange to tell you," Elizab[illegible] said. "It seems Mrs. Daggett has left all [illegible] had to me."

"To you?" Anna said in amazeme[illegible] "Why, you hardly knew her! Was th[illegible] much money?"

"I don't think so. It's all a mistake. Lo[illegible] Anna—don't tell anybody till they've lool[illegible] for another will."

But though they searched the clutte[illegible] old house as carefully as possible, they fou[illegible] no other will. When they told Elizabeth [illegible] said, almost coldly, "Very well, I will acc[illegible] it. You will know what must be done ab[illegible] taxes and such things, Mr. Masters."

She went to the house, sat in it one day [illegible] an hour. Jennie Leavitt was there, cleani[illegible] at the request of Elizabeth herself.

She said to Jennie Leavitt, "Why do[illegible] you and your brother move in here and k[illegible] the place going for a few months?"

"You can rent the house easy as rolli[illegible] off a log," Jennie Leavitt said.

"No, I don't want to. Not yet. I'll t[illegible] you—could you pay for the oil to heat [illegible] I'd let that be the rent, that and keeping t[illegible] place clean."

She wrote a letter to Anthony Dagge[illegible] She told him of Mrs. Daggett's death, of t[illegible] will: "I am only a trustee till this misfortu[illegible] shall have passed you by." She wrote [illegible] Sarah Horne, told her the facts, asked h[illegible] further co-operation. Then she watched t[illegible] mails for a reply.

One day Johnny said, "Are you going [illegible] live in Mrs. Daggett's house?"

"No, darling."

"It belongs to you, doesn't it?"

"So they say. But I am not going to li[illegible] in it. . . . Don't you want to address yo[illegible] valentines? I'll help you."

He spent much thought on the valentine[illegible] Bunce, Meg, Miss Lemon, Susie, his fathe[illegible] Then he hesitated. "How do you spell Liz[illegible] he asked. She told him.

"And which one for mummy?" she aske[illegible] "How about this one—it's beautiful?"

"I don't care."

"Then this one," she said firmly.

On Valentine's Day Bunce sat at th[illegible] kitchen table, her valentine propped befo[illegible] her, when Elizabeth came down.

"You got the prize one," Elizabeth sai[illegible] "His very best."

"Poor lamb," Bunce said. "Poor litt[illegible] lamb!"

That night Bunce, in her little room, wi[illegible] the valentine propped against her Bibl[illegible] wrote a letter:

Dear Ed: I have been upset, but I begin [illegible] see my way clear. Much as I appreciate th[illegible] honor you've done me, I can't do it. The rig[illegible] for you to marry Maisie and I know e real happy with her. She's true gold u wouldn't be sorry. I've made up my don't try to change it.

Yours in the faith,

n she paused. She had been going to Leora Bunce," but she looked up at lentine and then wrote "Fatty."
were tears in her small black eyes.
ame was her only concession to sentia said to her on a Thursday, "Mrs.

have you told Ed you'd marry him in't going to marry Ed, Mrs. Suydam." nsense! Of course you are!"

, Mrs. Suydam, I'm not." She went he room with a flurry of stiff gingham.
have to do something about that," aid. "She thinks we can't get on with-
."
aybe she doesn't want him," Elizabeth course she wants him! Why, I n't know, except that he's a man."

abeth went down to the kitchen. Bunce up from her potato peeling. "I've up my mind, Miss Burke."
s, I know." She went over to Bunce, nd kissed the round red cheek. "Bless Bunce," she said. For she knew that had chosen this loneliness in prefer-o betraying her friend.

n Anna said, "I'm going to have come over here.
's no point in being thwarted s, no point in her aving Ed if she him," Elizabeth

o, you aren't,
. It's Bunce's ess."
a looked at her,
sed, but did not e, only smiled
y. "You're getwfully bossy, now
e got a fortune!
you'd get your-me new clothes."
thought I was legant these days. But I could afford suit."

e next morning Elizabeth went down one good clothes shop in town. But she saw the suits displayed, confusion ok her. She tried on one, but it was y not for her. She said, "I don't like ut I don't know just what I do want. me in again." She saw the raised brow salesclerk, but she walked out of the and stood before the door, ashamed of nowing what she wanted.

Huxley Reals came out of the bank. He ner, came at once toward her. "Hello.
are you doing out this morning?"
was trying to buy a suit. I haven't got gh brains to pick it out and I ran away."

gave her a sudden grin and put his on her arm. "I'll help you pick one out.
always takes me along when she buys es." He put out a hand to the door, d it. "Hello, Grace," he said to the irl who had raised her brows at Eliza-"We've come to buy a suit. What have got? None of those slinky things that wears. Something that you can walk in ut tripping."

Grace was laughing and affable now.
've got some tweeds."

"Well, let's see 'em," Huxley said. "There, check, that's it. Put it on, Elizabeth."

She stood in the dressing room with the
on. It was of fine brown-and-cream check it made her look what she was, a girl loved the outdoors, walking, common , freedom.

"It's a little long," Grace said. "Wait, I'll t up so you can see."

"I like it," Elizabeth said.

It was more than she had meant to pay, she bought it, left it to be shortened and ed out of the shop with Huxley Reals.

"Thanks," she said. "That was the fastest ping I ever did. I don't know what happens to me when I get clothes. I'm not so indecisive about other things."

"No one knows everything," Huxley said. "I'm not going back till after lunch. Why don't we have a sandwich in Tony's place?"

"Why not?"

They sat in a booth and had a sandwich and coffee and Huxley Reals said, "I haven't congratulated you on your inheritance. It meant she had forgiven you whatever it was you thought she held against you, didn't it?"

"No, it didn't. She—she made that will when she still trusted me."

"Oh. But she could have changed it, couldn't she?"

"That's what I'll never know."

THEY finished their coffee in silence, then Huxley paid the bill, and they walked out. "I have to get back to the job," he said. "Look, Elizabeth, I think she could have changed it. I think she trusted you—because you are a person to be trusted. I trust you."

"You might not, in like circumstances."

"Yes, in like circumstances," he told her. "In fact, there has been a like circumstance, hasn't there? I didn't think you'd betray me about Pottsy. I knew better. Anna has this fantastic ability to get at the root of a matter by magic—I know that very well indeed. But I trust you and I feel sure Mrs. Daggett did too. I wouldn't brood about it if I were you. . . . When you get your new suit," he said, "I'll take you out, shall I?"

Elizabeth hesitated. "I'll see. I always seem to run into you when I'm in trouble, don't I? But I'm not always troubled."

"I know. Well, be seeing you, Liz," he said and swung back down Main Street.

Elizabeth did not hide this meeting. She went at once to Anna and said, "Well, I've got a new suit. And you'd better like it, because Huxley picked it out."

"Huxley?"

"I am a fool about clothes, Anna. I go into a kind of coma when I see new things. I went into one this morning and I came out, almost weeping at my stupidity—and Huxley Reals was coming along and asked what the matter was. I told him, he jerked me into the shop and I had a new suit in ten minutes. It's brown check—and you've got to like it."

Anna laughed. "I'll wait till I see it. Huxley chooses Juliet's clothes—but you're not Juliet. Did you tell him I was missing him?"

"No. I was engrossed in this suit business."

She was invited to Meg's to supper. At the table the doctor was full of talk. He laid himself out to be entertaining and he was entertaining. When Elizabeth left, the doctor walked along the street with her.

"Almost spring," the doctor said. "Though March can be very wintry in Lakeville."

"Yes, it has seemed like spring today," Elizabeth said without brilliance.

The doctor gave his slow laugh. "Let's not talk about the weather. I told Meg I was going to ask you to marry me, so I'm asking you. I know I'm older than you, old enough to be your father. But I don't feel old and I think I have considerable usefulness in me yet. I do think we might make a go of it. Do you?"

"No, I'm afraid I don't," Elizabeth said.

"Why not? I'm not being funny, Liz. I mean it."

"You'd never have seen me if Anna hadn't made you," she said.

"Maybe not. But I do see you now. I'd say I loved you, only I know it sounds silly from an old codger like me. Think I do, though. What does it matter how it came about?"

"It might not matter if I wanted to do it," Elizabeth admitted. "But I don't, Doctor McIntry. It's just that I don't care about you that way."

"You might get to," the doctor said. They had come to No. 7 and paused at the steps. "I think you're the woman for me, Liz."

WITH THE CHILDREN

"I used to think lots of silly things, but now I've changed up my mind."

Our eldest advising our youngest: "When you go to kindergarten next year you will have to pick up and put away all the things you build with blocks because in school they don't know how to clean around things like mommy does."

"When a father says he'll see, in a real kind way, then that is as good as a mother's yes."

—KATHRYN COFFEY GLENNON.

"What makes fireflies light up?" You may or may not have the answer for that one. But be glad your small fry are curious enough to ask, gladder for the pep that inspires such activity at the end of a top-speed day. Make sure they keep that energy—give them healthful Minute Tapioca dishes. Perfect summer-evening dessert—this

Hot-weather treat

Easy... different... made the real Minute Tapioca way!

MINUTE TAPIOCA COOLER

1 recipe Minute Tapioca Cream Ice Cream

Prepare Minute Tapioca Cream according to package directions. Then take a big scoop of your favorite ice cream—chocolate, vanilla, strawberry . . . they all go well—and plump it right on top of each serving. Makes 5 or 6 servings of the most scrumptious dessert—cooling, yet nutritious. Nothing could be easier, or taste better! (A wonderful way to get milk and eggs into young 'uns, too.) For that "country kitchen" goodness no ready-made dessert can match, get real, genuine Minute Tapioca today!

REAL TAPIOCA! MINUTE BRAND TAPIOCA

FULL OF COUNTRY-KITCHEN GOODNESS!

Did you know that Minute Tapioca makes the best possible thickener for fruit pies? If your recipe calls for cornstarch, substitute the same amount of Minute Tapioca. If it calls for flour, substitute slightly less.

FREE! Over 50 recipes for pies and other delicious desserts made with Minute Tapioca. Send your name and address to Minute Tapioca, Box 815, New York 46, New York.

Offer expires February 1, 1952. Good only in U.S.A. Product of General Foods

Something about his serious voice touched her. She put a hand on his arm and said, "I'm sorry. I like you better than I thought I ever would. I wish I could, but I can't. You see, I happen to love someone else. Someone I can't marry—but I never could take second bests."

He was silent a moment. "Oh, well, I tried," he said then, and tried to laugh.

"I'm so sorry," she said again.

"Believe you really are. That's something. Well, good night, Liz."

"Good night."

"Anna, the doctor asked me to marry him," Elizabeth said the next morning. "I said 'No,' in case you're already planning my wedding dress."

"That's stupid," Anna said. "He's a real person and he'd be good for you."

"I presume he would. I just can't be that practical about it. Let's not talk about it any more."

"I don't give up—he'll ask you again."

"No, he won't, Anna."

"There's the mail!"

Elizabeth went down the stairs and took the mail from Bunce's hands. She saw the letter on top: "Miss Elizabeth Burke, 7 N. Lake St." and Sarah Horne's address in the corner. It was an hour later before she had a chance to read it:

My dear Miss Burke: It was with deep sorrow I learned of my friend's death. I have forwarded your letter and enclose a reply. As my own hold on life is tenuous, I am relieved by the arrangements Amanda made.

Sincerely, SARAH HORNE.

Then the other letter, with that ugly number on the face of it:

Dear Miss Burke: Thank you for writing to me about my grandmother. It would be hard to tell you what her letters have meant, putting what she calls "gimp" into me. I don't know what I am going to do when I get out, but I guess I can get a job somewhere. My grandmother didn't want anybody to know where I'd been. But I don't think you can keep something like being in stir secret. Somebody always finds out. It isn't that I'm crazy to shout it out to folks, but it doesn't seem practical not to admit it if you have to. I don't know what I'd do with a house. My grandmother thought she could get me a job with a boat company there, but I don't know whether she had done anything about it. A job's what I'm most interested in. I am enclosing a five-dollar bill (we earn a little here, you know) and I wish you'd put some flowers on my grandmother's grave for me. If you'd write to me now and then I'd be pleased. I miss my grandmother's letters. Only I don't want to hide anything any more and go through Mrs. Horne. Very truly yours,

ANTHONY DAGGETT.

Elizabeth held the limp bill in her hands and the tears ran down her face.

At two o'clock she stood in the old Lakeville burying ground on the bluff above the lake. In her arms Elizabeth carried freesia. She stood by the new grave that she had wandered a long time to find. She felt strangely peaceful, as if it didn't matter whether Mrs. Daggett had forgiven her or not. She put the freesia down on the forlorn grave. It would die soon. But until then it would lie there, golden and fresh, a message from a boy in stir.

THAT night she wrote to Anthony Daggett. She sent the letter by way of Sarah Horne, in spite of the boy's protests. She wrote sensibly, without much sympathy:

I do not think you could afford to keep up the house on any salary you could earn at the present in Lakeville. I did think you might rent it and reserve a room or perhaps two or three for yourself. As to a job with the boat company, I will make inquiries.

At the end she said:

I am sending this to Mrs. Horne as usual. I believe you are right about secrecy, but for the present I have personal reasons for not wanting to discuss you or your affairs in this household.

One day when she came home from fetching Johnny, the Reverend Mr. Prather was sitting with Anna. He was an interesting-looking man, with deep-set eyes and a stern mouth. "This is my sister Liz," Anna said. "We were talking about sin, Liz."

"Let's not. Let's talk about spring, [illegible]abeth said. "I saw a boy with some [illegible] willows."

"We've got March to go through [illegible] Anna said. "Oh, but let's have tea!"

"Thank you—another time," the [illegible] of St. Paul's said. "I must go now. [illegible] come again?"

"Of course."

He shook hands with Anna, then t[illegible] to Elizabeth. "Don't trouble to come [illegible] I'll find my way out."

When the door closed below, Anna la[illegible] "Well! I think he liked you. I saw th[illegible] in his ministerial eye."

"What are you doing—spinning [illegible] again?"

"Why not? Oh, Liz, I do so want y[illegible] be happy! Half loaves are better than [illegible] I think you ought to stop dreaming rom[illegible] dreams and face reality. Don't be a[illegible] darling—but that's the way it looks to [illegible]

ELIZABETH turned from the window [illegible] she had been standing. "And what rom[illegible] dreams do you think I'm dreaming, An[illegible]"

"I said, don't be angry. I mean Hu[illegible] Oh, I know you deny it, but—well, i[illegible] had seen your face when he helped you [illegible] out a suit! I wish it hadn't been that wa[illegible] but the only way to forget it is to mak[illegible] try at loving someone else. Truly, it is.'

"Why?"

"Oh, Liz, don't be that way."

"Speaking of a hypothetical case—[illegible] the one you're dreaming up isn't real—[illegible] shouldn't I try for Huxley if I want to? [illegible] free, isn't he?"

Anna gave that breath of laughter [illegible] was so familiar. "In a way."

"Well, then? I don't dream about him[illegible] how do you know, if I tried hard enou[illegible] couldn't have him?"

"I know Huxley," Anna said. "It's a [illegible] situation, if you like, but it won't cha[illegible] Huxley isn't changeable."

"Still," Elizabeth's stubborn voice [illegible] on, "if I wanted to try, there wouldn[illegible] any real reason I shouldn't. You're wi[illegible] enough to have me try for the doctor, or [illegible] the Reverend Prather—but why not be [illegible] ing to have me try for Huxley if I want [illegible] Anna's voice became a little sharper [illegible] don't want you hurt, that's all. And y[illegible] just make a fool of yourself—you'd [illegible] that, and I'd hate it for you, darling."

"You needn't worry. It's just that I [illegible] it understood that I am grown up and th[illegible] have a right to try for what I will, so lon[illegible] it doesn't hurt others."

She was trembling when she went to [illegible] own room, as if she had been through a g[illegible] dramatic scene.

That night at the dinner table Mrs. [illegible] dam said, "I saw Mrs. Reals today and [illegible] tells me Huxley is thinking of going to [illegible] Paul to work. He's had an offer, it seems."

Adrian looked up quickly. "Huxley? [illegible] didn't tell me."

Elizabeth saw he was upset, but he said [illegible] more then. He took his coffee upstairs [illegible] Anna's room. Elizabeth read to Johnny, [illegible] him to bed, then sat down in the living r[illegible] with a book.

At last Adrian came down. He said, "[illegible] Hux say anything to you about leaving?"

"Not lately. Some time ago he mentio[illegible] it here one day."

"I think I'll drop around and see hi[illegible] Without another word he got his coat [illegible] went out.

Elizabeth went up to Anna. "Whe[illegible] Adrian gone to?" Anna asked.

"He went to see Huxley Reals."

"At this time of night? With all his fuss [illegible] about Hux, I should think he'd be glad i[illegible] went away. Though Huxley won't go."

"He might."

"No, he won't go. For your sake, darli[illegible] I hope he does—but he won't."

Elizabeth gave a quick sigh. "I'll turn [illegible] now, I think. Is there anything else [illegible] want?"

"Just that you don't be cross with m[illegible] Anna said.

"I'm not cross with you."

"You sound uncommonly like it. W[illegible] run along."

was nearly one when Elizabeth heard n come up the stairs and go down the his room.
breakfast she asked, "Is Huxley Reals
?"
ooked at her blankly. "I don't know."
ou didn't see him?"
, I didn't see him."
refused more coffee, though he always wo cups at breakfast, went up to say oy to Anna. He hadn't been gone more an hour when a great box of spring s was delivered.
, they're from Adrian," Anna said.
use he was a little cranky this morn-suppose. Do you want to put them in before you take off on your great Fridventures?"
abeth arranged the daffodils and tulips bowl. She had no plans for the day, h usually she spent part of it with aret McIntry. But till then? Perhaps aret would go somewhere for lunch her. She went to her room and put on ew suit. It was the first time she had
it. She walked to the McIntry house, d in, as was her habit now. There was e about.
en the doctor stepped in from the office,
d at her, though with some ruefulness, aid, "Margaret didn't get up for break--but she says she isn't sick. Just go on p.
e began to walk up the stairs, but felt g in doing so. She went to Margaret's and found the door shut. She tapped
y. "It's Liz. May I come in?"
Margaret hesitate? It seemed so. Still, aid, "Yes, come in," and Elizabeth d into the room. Margaret McIntry h bed. Her hair hung in plaits and made ok younger, but her eyes were bleak as aid, "Hello. I'm being lazy today."
re you sick?"
ot at all. Didn't you ever want to—to raw from the world for a bit?"
h, often. Well, then, I'll go and let you raw."
Margaret laughed suddenly and said, "I'll me clothes on. I'll tell you what let's do. I can borrow Mr. Berg's car. Let's go out into the country somewhere."

"All right," Elizabeth said.

But once they were in the car, Margaret was silent. There was no flow of easy talk between them.

They found a country inn and were all alone in its dining room. Over coffee Margaret said, "Well, we got out of Lakeville anyway."

"Yes. Do you dislike Lakeville?"

"Sometimes I hate it. Never for long at a stretch, though. I've accepted the fact that I probably won't ever escape it. Don't we get caught in the strangest traps?" She poured another cup of coffee and said fiercely, "Love or duty or ambition—we call 'em all sorts of fancy names, but all they are is traps." Then she gave a grin that was more familiar and said, "I'm not losing my mind, if that's what you're thinking."

"I wasn't thinking that. I suppose I was agreeing with you—only I gnaw away at mine still. I do gnaw a little."

"You can gnaw till you chew a leg off, but you won't get out," Margaret said. "Or, if you do, you'll be minus the leg and will have to fight twice as hard to exist."

"I should have left you in bed," Elizabeth said.

"Of course you should," Margaret told her. "I'm no fit company today. Let's go, shall we?"

They went out again into the sunlight, got into the car and headed for town.

Almost at the end of town Elizabeth said, "Adrian sent Anna some of the loveliest spring flowers this morning. Do you think men always apologize for something when they send flowers?"

Margaret said, "I wouldn't know. Men don't send me flowers." They had come to the house. "Wait, I'll just run Mr. Berg's car in," Margaret said.

"I ought to go on home," Elizabeth said. Still, she stood on the steps and waited.

Margaret returned and opened the door. They stepped into the hall. There, on a small table, lay a florist's box. Margaret walked to it, opened it without a word, as if she had

Best I ever ate

If your family is like mine, you better count on two servings of this rn souffle per person. I can promise u everyone goes for this recipe.

Gertrude Crum

CORN SOUFFLÉ

By Gertrude B. Crum

Only fresh corn on the cob is used for this recipe. Freshly picked corn is best, because more sugar and milk are present. You will need 1 to 1½ dozen ears. Remove husks and silk. Slit the kernels lengthwise of the ears with a sharp knife. Then take the back of the knife and scrape (but do not cut) the ears, pressing out the inside of each kernel. The result is a bowlful of corn milk and kernels without hulls. Add 1 cup heavy cream to the corn and stir. Season with 2 teaspoons salt. Beat the whites of 5 eggs until stiff and fold into the corn. Pour into a 2-quart baking dish and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for 70 minutes. The top should be a heavenly golden brown, the inside should be "set" but succulent.

LOW-COST STEW
with a High Hat Flavor

THANKS TO

The Kettle-Simmered cooking sauce

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

BEEF STEW—Hunt Style

Hunt's Tomato Sauce makes a stew more delicious than any other tomato product you can imagine.

Because this cooking sauce is different. Hunt's alone gives your recipes this Kettle-simmered blend of sun-ripened tomatoes and fine spices.

Best of all, a can of Hunt's costs you only a few cents. Get some and make this delicious stew! . . .

2 lbs. lean beef
2 tbsp. flour 2 tbsp. fat

Cut meat in pieces, roll in flour, brown in fat in heavy skillet or saucepan. Then add the following (and here's where Hunt's rich, all-tomato flavor really goes to work for you!):

1 can Hunt's Tomato Sauce
2 cups water 2 tsp. salt ¼ tsp. pepper
⅛ tsp. thyme ½ a bay leaf

Cover tightly and cook over low flame until almost tender—about 1½ hours. Then prepare and add the following:

6 onions 6 carrots 6 potatoes

Cook about 30 to 45 minutes longer, till vegetables are tender. If desired, add a cup of green peas just before vegetables are tender. And now—

Get six lucky people together for generous servings of the best stew they've ever tasted—thanks to Hunt's rich flavor.

And forever after—give your everyday recipes a flavor boost with Hunt's Tomato Sauce. Meat loaf, casseroles, spaghetti, vegetables, gravies, fish. Get Hunt's for a few cents a can!

Hunt Foods, Inc., Fullerton, Calif.

Hunt-for the best

For Breakfast or Dessert
Hunt's
Heavenly Peaches

Why drudge away your day like this...

when bakers bake such luscious pie as this

SURE—you could bake a luscious pie like this at home.

But, is it worth the time? Is it worth the trouble? Is it worth the risk of failure?

It certainly isn't worth it! Because modern bakers use the same high quality ingredients you would use; bake fresh daily with the same care you would take.

So—let your baker do your baking and go enjoy yourself. Buy a pie today—at your bake shop, your grocer's, or from the baker who calls at your door. Order pie, too, when you eat out.

And remember! Bakers bake pie better now than they've ever baked before!

© 1951, American Bakers Association, Chicago

Bakers of America

SEAL OF ASSURANCE

Buy a PIE today... taste how good it is!

forgotten Elizabeth's presence. It was full of the softest yellow roses.

"I thought men never sent you flowers," Elizabeth said helplessly.

Margaret sat down on the stair steps, put her head down on her knees, like someone sick. "Go away. Go away," she said.

Elizabeth turned and walked out of the old brown house.

In the morning Adrian came down to breakfast, sat down with the rest. "I won't be home till dinnertime. We're working all day today," he said, and that was about all he contributed to the conversation. But at the door he turned back. "Liz, don't let Anna overdo today. She is overtired."

But Anna seemed quite herself when Elizabeth got her up, did her hair. "You know," she said, "I've got so I can't take your days off, darling. I think, though I hate to put Adrian to any more expense, that I'll see if Jennie Leavitt will come for those days."

"I don't really need any days off," Elizabeth said.

"Of course you do. I like Jennie. Besides, she is a fountain of gossip!"

Elizabeth hesitated. "Perhaps you'd rather have her all the time, Anna."

"Does that mean you don't want to be here?"

"No."

"Don't think I wouldn't understand, Liz, if you suddenly wanted to go. Sometimes we simply have to run away—I know that."

"But I don't want to run away," Elizabeth said. "Why should I?"

That afternoon Elizabeth went down to see Jennie Leavitt and asked her about coming. Jennie, though she often did practical nursing, was hesitant

"Well, I don't know, Miss Burke," she said. "It keeps me awful busy looking after this place. I don't know as I'd want to say I'd do it regular."

"Try it for a few times, then," Elizabeth urged. "Try it tomorrow, will you?"

It was agreed and Elizabeth went home.

Anna said, "Will she come?"

"She'll try it. She didn't promise for good."

The doctor stopped in that afternoon. For some reason Elizabeth had no desire to escape him. She sat down with him and Anna and talked easily enough along with them.

When he was leaving he said, "Oh, by the way—Meg said to tell you she couldn't have Johnny tomorrow. She isn't feeling quite up to par. She's sorry."

Elizabeth was relieved and alarmed at the same time. She would have Johnny, but she would also worry about Margaret.

On Sunday morning, when she was almost through with breakfast, she said, "Adrian, could I have a talk with you?"

For an instant something old and sick came into his young, hard-fleshed face. "Well, talk," he said.

"In the living room."

He rose without a word, walked into the living room, and she followed. "What's on your mind, Liz?" he demanded.

"Calm down, Adrian. I want to ask a favor. You don't seem in the mood to listen, but now I've started I'd better go through with it. I want you to give a young man a job—not now, but next fall."

HE had expected something else. She saw the relief come to his eyes. "A job? Who is it? What is your young man good for?"

"I don't know. Office work, I expect, though maybe he's good at machinery too. He's been in prison for the last four years."

He stared at her, interested at last. "In prison?"

"Yes. His name is Anthony Daggett. He's Mrs. Daggett's grandson. He was driving a car for which he had no license and killed a man. He was a little wild, but I think not bad. He's getting time off for good behavior and he's been working in the office in prison. He may be caught up into the war—there's no way to know yet. But what he wants is a job. Mrs. Daggett told him she hoped to get him one with you. You see, Adrian, the property she left is really for Anthony Daggett. I hold it in trust, so to speak. She didn't want anyone to kno had been in prison, but he feels you ca keep it a secret, and I suppose he is righ I'm asking you. Do you think it woul possible?"

He didn't beat about the bush. "I'll Liz. If it is possible, I'll fit him in."

"That's fair enough."

"I suppose he's the one Mrs. Dag wrote to."

"Yes."

"Do what I can. . . . You're a queer Liz."

"Sometimes I quite agree with you."

He went out and up the stairs, but she there quietly, feeling strange, and yet some odd way, at peace. There was noth to prevent him from going straight to A with this bit of news. And yet she did think he would.

THE bell rang and there was Jennie Le itt. Elizabeth took her upstairs to Anna.

"Hel-lo, Jennie!" Anna said. "What angel you are to give us a hand!"

Mrs. Leavitt smiled. "It's how I earn living, Anna. Now if you'll just tell me w wants doing ——"

The phone rang and it was Peggy Jo "That you, Liz? This is Peggy. Susie's b begging for Johnny to come spend the with her. Could he come?"

"I don't know why not. I'll ask Ar What time?"

"Any time, from now on."

She went up and asked Anna.

"Tell her it's a godsend," Anna said. didn't know what he could do now M laid up. Do you want to take him ove

It was a blustery day. As she walked a from Peggy's house Elizabeth thought, Johnny! And yet Johnny was happy eno now. His fellow creatures liked him and was far less introspective than he had be But there was no change in his relations with Anna or Adrian.

It will soon be nothing to me, Elizab Burke murmured. For she was going. knew she was going. How soon? She did know, but quite soon.

"Oh, Elizabeth! Aunt Liz!" came voice behind her. She half turned and wind blew snow against her face. She wai and he was beside her. "We are always me ing in snowstorms," he said. "Hasn't y new suit come home yet? I thought we w going to have a date?"

"It will keep," she said.

"This is a good time for it, wouldn't y say? Suppose I get the car out and we'll on a binge. You go get your suit on."

"All right," Elizabeth said. "I'll come.

"Good! I'll wait out in front."

He turned and went back the way he h come and Elizabeth went up to her roo put on the new suit. She took the old topc over her arm, left her head bare. Then walked into Anna's room.

Adrian and Anna were playing cribba Elizabeth looked straight at Anna and sa "I'm going out to lunch with Huxley Rea Is there anything you want before I go?"

Anna put the peg in, her eyes lower "Not a thing," she answered carelessly.

"Good-by, then," Elizabeth said.

"'By," Anna said, beginning to deal.

The car stood at the curb and she walk straight to it, climbed in beside Huxley.

He moved away, not asking her wh she'd like to go, just starting out as if had a destination. After they came to t edge of town he said, "You don't look ve happy about the whole thing. Why do we just be happy for a change? Not hu around for psychological problems or ar thing?"

She couldn't tell him that she was st shaken from her announcement to Ann that all her courage had been used up. "I willing," she said. "But I don't kn whether you can just turn happiness on a off at will."

"I got fifty bucks for my article. We c have an elegant luncheon on that."

"Did you really? I'm glad."

"I am too. This is a celebration of r success. Did you know that Ed Botswor has as'k[illegible]ottsy?"

dy?" Elizabeth said, then flushed t on. "I mean, it seems only yester-Bunce turned him down."
sy is blooming like a rose."
's some salvage," she said.
they did not talk, but drove swiftly the storm. It was nearly an hour alf later when they came to the old e back road. There was a fire burne hearth of a low-beamed room and re taken to a table near the fire.
h let Huxley help her take off her which he did with a little grimace:
ou look like a girl out on a date."
ade her laugh as they ordered and fire at her back warmed her and she illusion of great happiness, knew it illusion, but clung to it, shutting ev-out.
aking of salvage," he said suddenly coffee, then stopped.
aid, "Yes—speaking of salvage?"
article, that's a small bit," he said
y. "I know well enough not many vill ever read it, only a few engineers right through the Engineering Jour-l, I did write it. I'm going to count Would you mind if I told you the story fe?"
ow most of it," she said. "Lives are nuch open in Lakeville, aren't they?
n't mind, but you don't need to."
ughed aloud. "Oh, Liz, you are good You simply won't let a fellow get ic. I'm being defensive, I expect. I ve been a fool, but want it to show."
oesn't show much,"
th conceded. "Are ng away?"
I don't think so.
I would, then I
my mind. It didn't important as I'd inking it would."
at the last minute
uldn't go," she said.
"That happens not to be true. I could one very easily. But it would only een an escape from admitting there thing to escape from."
voice was steady and serious and she up at him, looked away again. She feel warm now, only still and fright-e gone through it and come out
" he went on. "It isn't that I don't her as beautiful and even desirable.
lo not any more desire her. That's bit-ou like, but there it is."
abeth, to her own astonishment, felt swift sorrow for Anna. "Have you r so?" she heard herself say.
. But she knows. Anna knows every-
This was the day I'd set for telling ut I saw you and evaded it."
t's go home," she said.
t's not. I like it here by the fire. I can u are not liking me much right now, ll I like it here. Aren't you the one alled me a fool?"
s. Yes, I did."
en why are you so hurt because I'm no faithful? You ought to be glad I've o my senses."
lon't know—it's like realizing a fairy isn't true. But I can't have it both can I?"
p, you can't have it both ways. And o old for fairy stories. I've been too old ne time."
ease—will you take me home?"
right." He stood up rather abruptly, he bill.

went out to the car, started home-
They had driven some distance before
d:
ok, Liz—Elizabeth, I mean—I'm told you. I shouldn't have, not first.
rry—ashamed too."
at's all right. I don't want to talk
it."
was Johnny. Johnny doesn't love her.
r thought about it much. I don't know but I never did. But he doesn't love or she him. But you have to love your on, don't you? It got to haunting me."

"She loves him," Elizabeth said stiffly. "I don't know why they aren't friends."

"Why aren't they, though? Wasn't it Steele who wrote a story about a man who was going to marry a woman and saw her suddenly through her little girl, who discarded old loved dolls for new and fancy ones? Not quite analogous. Well, I'll stop. I just wanted you to know how it was."

She did not answer. She sat huddled there, feeling the wind almost physically, though she was safe inside the car. She knew that she had gone today with Huxley because she had suddenly had to prove to Anna that she had the right to do so—it had almost nothing to do with Huxley that she had gone.

YET here she was, with his sleeve touching hers. They had eaten together and he had told her the state of his heart. She had, for a little space, been happy, but she had known that this was to be paid for. That it was going to be paid for dearly.

Then Lakeville was looming up before them. He stopped before No. 7, but for an instant did not get out. Then he smiled at her ruefully. "It wasn't much good, was it? We'll have another date, and make it really gay."

"The suit's unlucky," she said.

"No, we didn't make any mistake on the suit." He got out, came around and opened the door. "I liked sitting by the fire with you, though," he told her. "I could as easily have told you the story of my life as not."

"I don't doubt you," Elizabeth said dryly. "I almost told you mine!" Now she really did go, up the steps, inside the green door.

She had such a feeling of doing everything for the last time, as if her hours here were numbered. There was the sound of voices upstairs. But Elizabeth Burke did not join the party. She went quietly to her own room and closed the door.

Presently she was walking through the snow, Johnny's hand in hers. He was talkative, excited. Susie had a trapeze in the basement and wonderful had been his prowess on the trapeze. As soon as he was in the house he went scrambling up the stairs to his grandmother's rooms, and began telling her about his adventures.

Elizabeth went to the kitchen and said to Bunce that she would just make herself a sandwich for supper and take it up to her room. She did that.

She knew when the visitors left. She knew that Adrian had had supper with Anna. She knew when Jennie Leavitt shut the front door and departed, but she sat on there in her small room, unable to move out of it. She heard Adrian at last go down the stairs, then come up and go to his own room. It was now bedtime.

She carried in hot milk and toast, set the tray down on the table, fixed Anna's pillows. "How did you like Jennie Leavitt?"

"All right," Anna said. "She's very entertaining, a fountain of news. Did you have fun on your date?"

"Fun enough."

Anna went on with a small chuckle, "I never knew anybody so hipped on making her points. . . . Liz, I have been selfish. You know, I honestly did think that you'd be happier with me than anywhere else. I took it for granted—isn't that vain? And now Adrian tells me that you resisted like anything coming. That was a slap!"

"Yes, I resisted," Elizabeth said. "Because—well, Anna, you do get tired of people. I didn't want you to get tired of me."

"Nonsense! You know very well I love having you with me. But one thing I couldn't bear, and that would be having you here from duty's sake—I couldn't take that."

So this was the way it was going to be. It wasn't going to touch Huxley at all—only her own thorny character. "I don't suppose there's any use protesting if you've made up your mind," she said.

"I've had it made up for me," Anna said. "All you've ever wanted was to get away.

The denunciation of the young is a necessary part of the hygiene of older people, and greatly assists the circulation of their blood.

—LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH: All Trivia (Harcourt, Brace and Company, Inc.).

Fresh and New for Summer...

Borden's CHIVE Cream Cheese!

Count the ways you'll use this lively, Chive-y Cheese on Summer Days!

HERE's the freshest news in summer snacking to come your way in many a day!

It's Borden's Cream Cheese with tangy chopped chives already in it! The new-formula cream cheese is fresher in flavor, lighter, fluffier than any cream cheese you know. The chives are picked while young and tender from Borden's own chive gardens, largest in the U.S.A.

A fresh and lively combination that adds up to a variety of refreshing summertime tempters like these:

1. Quick canapés: Cover baby rounds of salty rye bread with Borden's Chive Cream Cheese.

2. "Chip Dip": Whip the cheese with a little milk and serve with potato chips.

3. Party sandwiches: Spread Borden's Chive Cream Cheese generously on thin-sliced bread of different kinds.

4. Speedy snack: Offer Borden's Chive Cream Cheese and crackers when you serve a tall, cool drink.

5. Super salad: Top slices of tomatoes with Borden's Chive Cream Cheese.

Borden's Chive Cream Cheese comes in the handy 3-oz. foil package—a companion to Borden's plain and Pimento Cream Cheese. Look for all three in the dairy case of your favorite food store.

©The Borden Company

Serve your favorite summer fruits with plenty of Borden's Cream Cheese!

For a luncheon salad or dessert on a summer night, serve fruits from the orchard and the melon patch with a bowl of Borden's Cream Cheese, softened and whipped till it's fluffy!

You'll want to be generous with Borden's Cream Cheese, so get the thrifty 8-oz. size at your favorite food store today! A written guarantee on every package!

Borden's Fine Cheeses

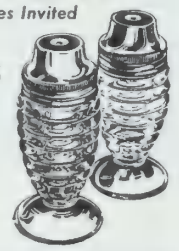
Folks who know cheese say "Borden's, Please!"

Keep salt DRY!

Airko*

MOISTURE-PROOF SHAKERS

Free-flowing salt, no matter how damp or muggy the weather! Over 11 million American homes now have AIRKO Moisture-Proof Shakers giving wonderful free-flow service day in and day out. The patented Airkonite element in the gleaming chrome top is a self-reactivating drying unit . . . no further attention is required!



The beautiful Deluxe Airkos stand four inches tall, are made of sparkling crystal glass, with hand-cut satin-finish base. Packed in unique "Show-Case" gift boxes.

$1.00 PAIR

GET A PAIR TODAY!
At Better Stores, Leading 5 & 10's
Dealer Inquiries Invited

AIRKO* ORIGINALS

These smaller Airkos have the same amazing drying element . . . Ring-designed crystal clear glass, metal tops with plastic colored shields.
Only . . . . . 39¢ PAIR

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

AIRKO MFG. CO., Clermont, Florida

Swingline Tot 50 Quick as a Bunny!

Clicks all over the house!

—It Tacks!—
—Staples!—
—Mends!—

Use your handy TOT 50 daily to do dozens of jobs like these all around the house, No fussing, with messy glue, nasty hammers, tacks, pins. TOT 50 does so many things easier, faster, cheaper, better!

1000 Refill Staples 25c

Only 98¢ with 1000 staples

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

SPEED PRODUCTS COMPANY, INC.
LONG ISLAND CITY 1, NEW YORK

Sold at Drug, Hardware, Stationery and Variety stores everywhere

That hurts, Liz—it really hurts. You've always been special to me, but really no one is special to you but yourself. You like to see yourself as generous and dutiful—but you didn't really want to come at all."

That rang some bell of truth and Elizabeth's face whitened. "Perhaps you're right," she said. "When shall I go?"

"Whenever you want to. You're not bound here, Liz."

So there it was. Suddenly she laughed. "Oh, but I am bound here!" she said. "And I don't want to go. Because, you see, it isn't any of it true. Not a word of it."

She got up, took the glass and plate, walked out of the room. After she was in bed, she laughed again, but silently. Then as suddenly as the laughter had come, tears came. I've got to be here when she knows he's gone from her, she said to herself. Or maybe he won't go—maybe he's just fooling himself. And—and Adrian. Does Adrian want me gone too? Is that it?

How could life be the same after that? And yet for a space it seemed to be so. Anna said no more about Elizabeth's going. The routine went on. Huxley Reals did not come. Friends thronged the gay room, played cards there, talked, and nothing seemed changed. On Friday Jennie came again, but Elizabeth did not go to Margaret McIntry's. She wrote a long letter to Anthony Daggett. She knitted. She stayed put. She did not know what this reprieve signified, but that it signified something she did not doubt. Then on a Monday night Adrian went out. He sat with Anna till nearly ten, then without a word went out. It was late when he came home.

When it came to the second Friday, Elizabeth, after lunch, went to Margaret. It had seemed a very long silence between them. She did not walk in, but rang the bell. The office door opened and the doctor came out.

"Come in, will you?" he said. "I'm busy right now, but I want to see you. Just wait in the living room."

So she sat down in the room that had been the friendliest she knew in Lakeville. She sat there for half an hour before the doctor strode in from the office.

"What a mess!" he said. He dropped down into the brown chair as if exhausted.

"What's the matter? Where's Meg?"

"You tell me. I'm going around in circles, Liz. Meg's gone, bag and baggage. She's got herself a job in a library, in Rochester. Just said she had decided to take a job and that I would have to make some other arrangements. She thought Jennie Leavitt might come. The truth is I depended on Meg and I'm lost. I don't know what got into her."

"There wasn't much for her in Lakeville," Elizabeth said.

"Just as much as there'll be working in a library in Rochester. Meg made herself a good enough life here. Of course she's never married, but I don't think that's upset her. Do you think Jennie Leavitt would come?"

"I don't know. She comes to us on Fridays and every other Sunday. But she might. Ask her."

MEG had gone, without telling her. She had bitten off a leg and got out of the trap. How would she manage, with only one leg? Meg. Meg. What agony had she gone through before she packed her things and made her firm announcement?

Elizabeth sat at supper with the rest, very quiet. She saw Adrian glance at her once or twice as if questioning her silence, but she could not talk.

Then Mrs. Suydam said, "Meg McIntry isn't sick, is she? She didn't ask Johnny for Sunday."

Elizabeth looked up. "No, she isn't sick. She's taken a job in Rochester. In a library."

"Meg?" Mrs. Suydam said in astonishment.

"Yes. So the doctor told me."

She couldn't look at Adrian, but was aware that he had risen. He walked out of the dining room without a word.

"Well, that surprises me. Meg's never seemed to have any ambitions like that," Mrs. Suydam said.

"You never know what people's am are," Elizabeth said.

She didn't tell Anna about Meg. E doctor did. He came about eleven th morning. He dropped down into th chair, said, "You see before you a pletely confused man, Anna. Look, you all, see all—what got into Meg any

"What's she done?"

The doctor looked at Elizabeth slight surprised frown. "Didn't Liz tel She's left me—gone out into the wor got herself a job. I can't make head of it."

"For heaven's sake! Liz, why didn tell me? What kind of a job?"

"In a library. I don't understand it. thought you might know what it w about."

"I don't. Meg never tells me much. I come to think of it, she's the only town who doesn't tell me much. But sume it's a man. It generally is."

"I DON'T know what man. Meg seems allergic to men. No, I don't kn that's so, but she seems to consider th the lesser species, tolerates them, that Huxley Reals drops in, but she treat like a small brother. Adrian has been i and then, to pick up Johnny or someth and that's all the men she knows much

Anna gave her warm smile and "Well, I hope she hasn't a yearning fo Adrian! But now you will really ha marry."

"I suppose so. But don't pick me out one else, Anna. I don't have any luck your pickings."

After he went Anna said, "Why didn' tell me? Whatever did get into her, I der? I can't imagine. But I'll find out!"

"Maybe she really did get tired of the doctor's housekeeper. It isn't a thrilling life, would you say?"

"I thought you were such pals. D she ever mention it?"

"No, never."

Adrian didn't come home for lunch, did come at about four. He kissed Anna out of his coat, dropped it across the and sat on the stool.

"Did you know Meg McIntry had to Rochester, taken a job there?" A asked.

"Somebody said something, I think. I'd heard that."

"The doctor was in. He's going aroun circles. I'd give a lot to know exactly she did go. It just didn't seem in charact

Elizabeth put in, "But it did. If she cided she wanted to go away and live own life, she's the very one who would She wouldn't dawdle over making up mind either."

"The doctor swears she had no love Hux dropped in there often, but I c imagine Hux giving her a whirl—though might have wanted him to, I suppose."

"That's nonsense," Adrian said evenly. "She treats Hux as if he wer quite bright."

Anna's smile had a faint edge of anger, she said, "You never know what spins are thinking. They work up the most extra dinary fantasies."

There was a small silence, then Adr said, "I don't think Meg has ever been gi to fantasies. And 'spinster' isn't a word have thought of for her."

"It's just a word," Anna said. "She's so old—thirty-two or -three, I imagine. have said she had some father comple only she's gone. But maybe gone to esc it."

"I don't think Meg has any father co plex," Adrian said. "I dare say she'd h lived a completely normal life if ——"

"If what?" Anna asked gently.

"If I hadn't ditched her," Adrian said. was engaged to her when I met you."

"Why, Adrian!" Anna's voice was amazed whisper. "To Meg?"

"Yes. If her mother hadn't happened die that year and the doctor hadn't happen to need her, I'd have been married her. . . . So I don't much care to hear y discuss her spinsterhood, Anna."

ling, I'm sorry," Anna said. "But l you never tell me?"
was nothing to be proud of," Adrian f you don't mind, let's drop it."
beth managed to escape then. She know whether Anna dropped it or was very tender with Adrian the orning, gay and charming as only new how to be.

n in her busybody she saw Huxley oming down the street, she said, "If could say I'm not at home! There Huxley. Don't go away, darling—he won't stay long."
Adrian did go away. He said, "Hi, sent him upstairs and went into the oom. Elizabeth heard him coming,
to go.
, stay, Liz," Anna said.
rather not."
Huxley was in the room. He looked nd there were lines down his face that th did not remember. He did not sit ian's chair, but drew the rosewood p and sat in that.
at's a very delicate chair," Anna said.
break it I won't forgive you."
won't break it," Huxley said. "How , Liz?"
ne."
d Anna's fine and I'm fine. So that's d of. How would you like to run nd knit or some-
Liz?"
like it," Elizasaid, but Anna
d her with:
, don't let him
you away, Liz.
wn. Hux and I hold private sations."
is one I mean to ivate," Huxley ietly.
ut my little
—she knows hing about me," said. "You can private as you fore Liz."
H gave Elizabeth den clear look she could not
"All right," he
I just wanted to tell Anna I'd taken vice at long last. . . . I'm going to be d, Anna, and I wanted to tell you."
arried? Not really?" Anna said. "Oh, ope I'll like her. Is it Charlotte?" She very well, with friendliness, concern for ppiness, pleasure.
o, I don't think so."
on't think so?"
I just say 'no' then," Huxley said.
Charlotte." couldn't be Meg, after all?" Anna d him.
eg? No, it couldn't be Meg. The truth it's only a decision, Anna. There isn't dy. But I've been bothering you and long enough."
hy, Hux! You haven't bothered us. To u the truth, you bolster up my self-ence no end. And probably Adrian's
But of course you ought to marry," ld him. "If you haven't decided, I can y mind to it!"

Huxley looked again at Elizabeth, suddenly and said, "I think it'll be ould that suit you?"
a looked at Liz as at a stranger, specu-ly, with a little frown. "Liz?" she
"Oh, I don't know, Hux. She's a dar-but she's awfully independent and dy—she'd walk out on you, like Meg d out on the doctor."
don't think so. Not if I put my mind to ng her," Huxley said. "I could always her in."
o I have anything to say about this?"
beth demanded. "Sorry, but I'm not at disposal. I'm not at anybody's dis-ell, it just came to me," Huxley said.
"
ave to give it more thought."

Elizabeth walked out of the room, straight out and downstairs. She went to the kitchen, where Bunce was getting everything ready before she started for church.

"What's the matter?" Bunce asked. "You're white as a sheet."

"Nothing's the matter."

BUNCE went, but Elizabeth sat by the kitchen table, very still, her hands tight-clasped on the table's edge. She didn't even hear Huxley come down the stairs, but he was there in the doorway.

"Well," he said, "that's that."

"I suppose you feel free as the air," she said coldly.

"No. I feel as if I'd taken a beating. But it's done."

"Is it?"

"All right. Perhaps it isn't. Perhaps it never will be," he said, and his voice, too, was cold. "All the same, Liz, I have wasted enough of life. I am not going to waste any more. On futility. I'm sorry I dragged you in. But, for an instant there, it did seem possible. I meant it."

"That's big of you."

"Do you have to be this way? I thought we were friends."

"Well, we're not. I know I'm contradicting myself, but I just don't like faithless people."

"Yes," he said slowly, "you are contradicting yourself. I thought you didn't like slaves."

"I don't. But I don't like faithless people, either."

"Well, I do have faith—but we'll skip it for now." He turned to go, then came back. "I wouldn't lock you in, Liz."

She did not answer and he went away. She just sat there, staring down at her clasped hands, knowing life was cruel, a trap indeed.

Adrian said, "So you are really leaving us, Liz?"

"Yes. I thought right after Anna's birthday, if you could find someone else by then."

"Well, you must do as you think best," Adrian said. "You've been a great help to us." He, too, was tied. He could not ask her to stay because he knew that Anna no longer wanted her.

She told Anna. "If you can arrange things, I believe I'll leave right after your birthday." Anna did not protest.

Anna was very sweet these days. She said to the girls, "I've been as selfish as all get out—keeping my little sister tied to me so long! She just came to 'help out' a few days and here I've kept her months! But you know how you impose on sisters!"

The girls made a little flurry of regret, asked her for lunch, for dinner, tried to crowd into a little space more hospitality than they had managed in all the weeks before.

Then Bunce said one day, "Miss Burke, would you want to come to Miss Potts' wedding with me? It's going to be next Wednesday morning at ten. At her place. You don't know her well, but it don't seem like it's a wedding without anyway a few there. Likely Mrs. Reals'll come. Maisie's done for her a long time."

"Why, I'd like to go," Elizabeth said. "What could I get her for a present?"

"Well, she's had her heart on a silver butter dish—but maybe that would be more'n you'd want to spend."

"No, I'd go that far."

So on Wednesday morning Elizabeth sat with Bunce on the horsehair sofa in Miss Potts' little house. The Reverend Mr. Smith was there, a big, earnest man, and Mrs. Reals, very stiff and dignified, and Huxley Reals. That was the entire wedding party, except for the bride and groom. Miss Nobody ever quite realizes how his life is being woven day by day out of myriads of invisible threads. But, in fact, each unnoticed influence and every imperceptible tug up or down which the ordinary daily experiences furnish are silently making the life and shaping its course. The commonplace present we hardly count because we are always looking back on a past or dreaming ahead into a rosy future, which will be full of wonderful and epoch-making events. And yet all the time, in spite of us, the future is being made out of the present, and the stuff of our future is to be what we are now weaving in.

---

—RUFUS M. JONES:
Finding the Trail of Life
(The Macmillan Company, 1950).

Inside Story of a Wonderful Cookie!

Mmmmmm...velvety-smooth vanilla cream inside and crisp chocolate wafers outside! That's the delicious story of Sunshine HYDROX, the Finest Cream-Filled Chocolate Cookie Ever Made!

Sunshine HYDROX COOKIES

THE ORIGINAL CREAM-FILLED CHOCOLATE COOKIE

Only $1.25 Pair

SEND NOW FOR THESE WEE SCOTTIES

Send now, and start selling these and other fast-selling Gifts, Cards, Stationery for big year-round income. FREE—Home Demonstrators Greeting Card samples, wholesale price-list, catalog, and all you need to start making money at once. Best sellers on approval.

Write now to TERRY STUDIOS
465 Westfield, Mass.

CRISP — TENDER — DELICIOUS
JOLLY TIME POP CORN
BEST FOR HOME POPPING

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

"—it's the Quality Pack"

Serve Mushrooms in cool, appetizing salads with chicken, mixed vegetables, shrimp. Treat the family to Enjoy these finest of Cultivated Mushrooms, picked at flavor peak; packed retaining their a process that retains all tenderness and fresh mushroom flavor. If your Grocer doesn't have KEYSTONE Mushrooms send his name. For FREE Recipe Book write Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa.

Need EXTRA CASH?

Here's How to Get It

Earn money easily, quickly, selling subscriptions to Curtis Publications and other popular magazines in your spare time. For information write direct to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
623 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

AT LAST!

Inexpensive but delicious

BROILED STEAK

Watch for "specials" at your butcher shop and buy inexpensive cuts of chuck or round steak. You can broil your steak to a tender, tasty turn after it stands overnight in this mixture:

⅓ cup lemon juice or vinegar
½ cup salad oil
2 teaspoons onion juice
1 tablespoon LEA & PERRINS Sauce

Wipe dry and broil on each side. Serve with sauce made of 3 parts melted butter blended with one part LEA & PERRINS Sauce.

Whenever recipes call for Worcestershire, you can be almost certain that the experts who write the recipes mean you to use LEA & PERRINS Sauce, the original Worcestershire. Always ask for it by name.

FREE RECIPE BOOK. Write LEA & PERRINS, INC. 241 West St., New York 12, N. Y., Dept. L-8

Potts, in a lavender silk dress, with violets pinned awkwardly, a little rouge on her thin cheeks, her gray hair curled unsuitably, stood beside an embarrassed Ed Botsworth. Mr. Smith, facing the pair, began the ceremony.

What a very little time a marriage ceremony took! All those heartaches, all those misunderstandings, all those sacrifices—and in a space of a moment the thing was done.

There was a wedding breakfast laid out in the little dining room. Pottsy and Ed were going to drive upstate to his cousin's for dinner and that was to be the extent of their honeymoon. They were too old for Niagara Falls, Ed said. They saw them off, and then the party was over.

"I told Maisie I'd tidy up here," Bunce said.

"I'll help," Elizabeth said.

"No, you'd better get back. I know where everything belongs. You run along."

"Come on, Liz," Huxley said abruptly. Then he went to Bunce, put his hands on her shoulders, bent and kissed her on either cheek. "Bless you, Bunce! You made it a real, honest-to-goodness wedding!"

Bunce's face broke up a little. "Well, a wedding ought to be special," she managed to say. "Now you all run along."

Huxley said, "Where'd mother go?"

"She told you—she wanted to do some shopping. She walked home. I guess you weren't listening."

Elizabeth was in the street with Huxley. "Come, get in," he said. "I'll run you home." She got in. "That was tough going," he said. "But it turned out well. Adrian says you are going away."

"Yes, I am."

They were already at No. 7.

"The town will seem empty," he said. She got out of the car, moved toward the steps. "Liz!" he said, and she turned.

"The butter dish was beautiful!"

She laughed and went in.

She tried to tell Anna about the wedding, but found there was little to tell. "It was very simple—but nice," she said. "Pottsy looked lovely, in lavender silk, with violets."

"Well, I suppose it's our gain—Bunce won't be leaving us. But it does seem hard on Bunce," Anna said. "I think I'll give myself a birthday party."

"That would be fun."

"A big one. I don't mean with presents and all that—I won't tell anyone it's my birthday, but just ask everybody. We'll call it a farewell party for you, darling."

They began to plan the party, and Anna was gay and even loving as if, now that Elizabeth was nearly gone, she could afford to be.

Then one afternoon Cornelia Suydam was sitting in Anna's room and suddenly said, "I am getting old! I must write to Alberta at once."

"Alberta?" Anna said.

"Cousin Alberta—stepcousin, really, no kin. I wondered, when I heard that Meg had gone to the Rochester library, why that seemed so familiar. Cousin Alberta has been there for years. I think she's head librarian. I'll write and ask her to show some kindness to Meg." She got up, murmuring something about her failing memory, went out of the room.

It was four days later when Mrs. Suydam received a letter from Cousin Alberta. She was in Anna's room when the mail came, and took her note, read it.

"That's odd," she said.

Anna looked up. "What's odd?"

"She went there because Cousin Alberta was there. Adrian sent her to Alberta. She says Miss McIntry is proving very satisfactory and that she likes her. . . . Adrian spent a summer with them once, but I didn't know he kept in touch with her. It's strange."

"Yes, it's strange," Anna said. "We certainly discussed Meg's departure very thoroughly with Adrian."

To Elizabeth's surprise, Mrs. Suydam said nothing to Adrian, at least in Elizabeth's presence, about Cousin Alberta. Nor did Anna say anything to him, so far as Elizabeth knew. It was only natural that Anna should speak of it, and perhaps alone with Adrian she had, but never before others. That was more frightening than speech.

One day as Elizabeth walked down the stairs to the ground floor the phone was ringing. Elizabeth said, "Hello."

"Hello—Liz? Would you help me pick out a birthday present for Anna?"

"No, I'm not much good at that sort of thing."

"All the same, will you? Come down the lake road at four-thirty, will you?"

"No."

"I'll expect you—Elizabeth." He hung up.

She sat with Anna and when it was four-thirty, she was still there. She carried the tea things down, lingered a moment in Bunce's shining kitchen.

"Anything you want?" Bunce asked.

"No. Just dawdling. I've been dawdling all day," Elizabeth said.

Then the doorbell rang and Bunce went. Elizabeth heard her say, "Yes, she's here—she's out here in the kitchen, Mr. Reals."

A Girl's Prayer

By Elizabeth Abbot

God, give me eyes that I might see
The work that can be done by me.
God, give me ears that I may hear
The cries of those who need me near.
God, give me lips that I might speak
Comfort and peace to all who seek.
God, give me a mind that I might know
To help the ones who need me so.
God, give me hands that I might do
Some large or simple task for You.
God, give me prayer, that I may pray
Thy help and guidance every day.
And these things all else above,
God, give me a heart that I might love.

Huxley Reals stood in the kitchen doorway and said, "Where's your coat? . . . It's spring." He said, as they walked in the street together, "Why did you stand me up?"

"I told you I wouldn't come."

"But I did think you would. I don't want to buy a present. I shall send flowers, as usual. Shall we walk down by the lake?"

"Why?"

"Because I want to. I've got something to say to you." He had his hand firmly on her arm and they were walking down the steep walk to the lake road. They came to the lake, walked along its edge for a moment in silence. "You're not very approachable, Liz," he said at last.

"I suppose I'm not."

"No, you make it very hard for me. You make me seem a fool, which I am not. You make me a man of little faith—which I don't think I am, either. But, Elizabeth, why shouldn't it be so—about you and me, I mean? Why shouldn't it?"

Spring was all around them. The air was soft, the light was a spring light. The water itself looked softer, warmer.

"Why should it? I just don't like second bests."

"You mean I'm not your first choice—or you're not mine? There wouldn't be many marriages in the world if the first choice was the one that led to marriage. I'm sure that in your girlhood you managed to go through a lot of loving that led to nothing. Didn't you?"

"Yes, I suppose I did. But I am not a child now. What I suppose you're trying to say is that now you've had your cake, you feel as if you'd like a little plain bread for a change."

"No. Or perhaps I do feel like that. Do you mind being plain bread?"

"Probably. Most women do."

"I don't know why. The staff of life. Look, Liz—Elizabeth—I know all you can say. I loved your sister Anna a very great deal. I thought I would love her till I died. I am very much alive and I no longer love her. I don't even know whether it is because you came or because the thing had run its course or what. Let's say I've been sick and now am well. Only, of course, you could say, 'This, too, will run its course.' And perhaps it will. I do not think so now, but perhaps it will. It seems firm and everlasting, and as if I had never loved before. You see—well, my love for Anna had nothing to feed on, nothing to grow by. Love's got to be in a state of growth or it's nothing. It does seem as if we could grow together—but you look as stubborn as a rock."

Elizabeth burke stood still. She said, "You see, I happen to love you."

He put out a hand to her shoulder, stared at her. "Then ——" he began.

"No. I happen to love you. But I don't want to marry you—I wouldn't think of marrying you. I would always remember that you had loved Anna for six or seven years and had stopped. Anna needs love, she needs it very much. She has Adrian, but she needs love and she depended on your love, whether she encouraged it or not. Then you stopped. . . . Well, you could stop again."

He was very quiet, looking straight at her through the soft light. "Yes, I might," he said at last. "But I do not think so. I don't see any point in lying or being more prophetic than is possible."

"Let's go home."

He turned and they began to walk back. They said never a word till they reached No. 7. Then he put a hand on her arm and said, "You love Anna more than me—is that it?"

She said, "I don't know. It could be."

"Shouldn't you make up your mind about that? I'm talking nonsense—I'm feeling about eighteen because you said you loved me. I can't seem to think of anything else. Say it again."

"No. Never again."

It was still light and everything about the street swam in the light, in the soft light of a spring night.

"I think I'll come up and say hello to Anna."

"No, don't."

"But I am going to. I have some things I must say to her. I must tell her I know whom I want to marry. She has put a spell on you too. I will break it, Liz. Because I am going to marry you, you know," Huxley told her. "I am going to."

Now she could have him. She could have him if she liked. Why then did it seem as if life were ended? Why did her heart ache so? She went to her own room, huddled on the bed. The tears began to run down her face. It seemed a long time afterward when Huxley came out and down the stairs, when the front door closed and all was still.

At supper Elizabeth found herself looking at Adrian. He did seem older than when she had come. But he still looked strong. Strong enough to bear his own burdens. I like Adrian, she thought suddenly.

After dinner Adrian took his coffee upstairs and when Elizabeth went for the tray he met her at the door with it. "I'll get Anna to bed tonight," he said.

So she knew she was banished from Anna's room. She went to her room, wrote a letter to Anthony Daggett. She wanted to write to Meg, but she did not. No, Meg would write her if there were anything to write that should be written. How little preparation it took to change her life!

She sat still, trying to see the shape of her life ahead, failing. She had given herself to Anna again, been again rejected. But she had given more of herself than that. She was partly given to Meg, to Jen and Peggy, to the doctor, to Bunce and Pottsy. And she had given her heart away, foolishly. "Because I am going to marry you, you know. I am going to." But of course he wasn't going to. It would never happen, becaus was not going to let it happen.

At that moment the telephone r sounded loud and shrill. She went down the stairs, lifted the receiver.

"Elizabeth?"

"Yes."

"I know it's late—just wanted to g something to go to sleep on."

"What?"

"Wanted to ask you this: Is it fair to devote so much of yourself to keep and not allow me to do the same? about that, Liz."

She could not answer, stood there the receiver foolishly.

"Are you there, Liz?"

"Yes."

"Are you thinking?"

"Yes."

"About me?"

"About Bunce. . . . No, it isn't fai

Now there was a silence at his end line. At last he said more gently, "Th for tonight. . . . But don't forget, L be all right if you don't forget. Good

"Good night," she said.

In the morning when Elizabeth wo thought at once, I must tell Anna. I m her I have made up my mind. But t the day of the party. There were so things to do. There wasn't time for Elizabeth went down to help Bunce. S to go to the store. She arranged flowe morning was gone. She went up with eon and Anna was still in bed.

"I thought I'd rest," Anna said. " all getting in such a dither about this Elizabeth said, "Anna, I wanted with you about ——"

"About what? Huxley? I'm not mood. Run along and help polish. I re need a little peace before a party."

So Elizabeth went away again, de

It was midafternoon when Bunce sa hear Meg McIntry's home for over S Mrs. Suydam'll likely want to ask her party."

"Oh, is she? I don't think Anna k Elizabeth said.

"Well, you'd better give her a Bunce said.

But she couldn't do that, though sh a longing to see Meg. Nor did she thin would come to the party, nor that would want her to.

Elizabeth dressed at five, though had been asked for supper at six. She the chrysanthemum velvet dress. She into Anna's room. Anna was sitting window.

"Ready so soon?" Anna asked.

"I should have fixed you up first. I know why I got dressed so early," Eliz said confusedly. "Anna ——"

"Why, there's Meg McIntry! I th she was in Rochester."

"She's home for the week end."

"Go, call her in. I must ask her t party!"

"I don't think she will want to come

"Why ever not? I want very specia see her."

Elizabeth walked down the stairs opened the door and called, "Margare

Margaret McIntry was almost to th ner, but she heard. She began to walk toward No. 7. "Hi, Elizabeth!" she sa

"How good to see you!" Elizabeth "How awfully good to see you! Are y right?"

Margaret looked just the same as She laughed. "I'm fine. And you?"

"Fine," Elizabeth said. "Anna want to come up. Don't come, Margaret."

Margaret gave her a suddenly grave gl "Why not?"

"Just . . . don't come."

"Well, thank you for the warning, think I will. You see, Liz, Anna can anything to me any more. I'm not afr Anna." She was inside the hallway, m up the stairs.

"Hel-lo, Meg!" Anna said witn gaiet warmth. "And how's the job?"

(Continued on Page 104)

Stop perspiration odor instantly...check perspiration moisture —with famous cosmetic deodorant

You're sure of yourself...through the longest day...with Tussy Cream Deodorant. It instantly stops perspiration odor... checks perspiration moisture. Antiseptic, too...for extra protection. Made by beauty specialists—on a fragrant, fluffy vanishing cream base. Tussy Cream Deodorant disappears without a trace...is kinder, gentler to your skin. Safe for delicate fabrics, too. Get Tussy Cream Deodorant, the cosmetic deodorant, in economical jars and tubes. 50¢ and $1 plus tax.

NEW! Tussy Liquid Deodorant in plastic squeeze bottle... a spray a day protects you against offending. $1.25 plus tax.

TUSSY cream and liquid deodorant

A 5¢ Package Makes 2 Quarts

A PITCHER of refreshing Kool-Aid in the ice box is the thrifty beverage standby in millions of homes. A 5¢ package makes 2 full quarts. Simply dissolve a package of Kool-Aid in 2 quarts water and sweeten to taste. Kool-Aid in the ice box by the pitcher full is always chilled, fully blended and ready for quick serving. Handy for children. Six delicious flavors. It's a family favorite the year 'round.

AT GROCERS

© 1951 PERKINS PRODUCTS CO. "KOOL-AID" IS A REGISTERED TRADEMARK OF PERKINS PRODUCTS CO.

(Continued from Page 102)

"How are you, Anna? No need to ask. You look blooming. The job's fine."

"Sit down. I shouldn't ask you to, because you must run home and put on your best bib and tucker and come to our party tonight."

"This is my best bib and tucker," Meg said dryly, "but I'm not one for parties, Anna. I'll skip the party."

"Well, tell me all about your job. What do you do?"

"I keep books," Meg said briefly.

"I'm so pleased with myself for suggesting Cousin Roberta to Adrian! If you do want to get off on your own, it's so comforting to have a friend at court!"

Meg said only, "Yes, very comforting."

"Meg, there's something I have wanted to say for a long, long time, almost ever since I've been married. I didn't know at the time I was taking Adrian away from anybody. It wasn't a thing I could have done, had I known."

Meg gave a quick smile. "It's a long time ago. There's no need to speak of it now."

"I suppose not. But I've never felt you liked me awfully much and I wanted you to know that. I—I've almost felt I ought to share Johnny with you. And I have, what I could. But of course I can't share Adrian." Her voice was sweet, kind, regretful.

"Did anyone ask you to?"

"Of course not! But I know how it must feel living in the same town with Adrian—how you felt about getting away. You see, Meg, it shows so when you're fond of someone. Still, everything's all right now. Go home and make yourself gay and come back at six. I'd really love to have you come."

"But I'm not coming. I'm never coming to this house again, Anna."

"Why, Meg! Oh, I've hurt you and I wanted us to be friends!"

"There has to be honesty between friends," Meg said.

"But I've been honest! You mean you don't want me to be too honest—is that it?"

"No, I didn't mean that. You can pretend to yourself, Anna, that you've been speaking the truth, but of course you know very well you haven't. If you'd like me to list the lies, I can, but I'm sure you know them."

"Why, Meg! I've never lied in my life."

"First, you don't want me at your party. We'll put that down as a social lie and forget it. Next, you didn't think of Cousin Roberta at all. Next, you wouldn't have dreamed of sharing Johnny with me, had you known. You didn't know; that's another lie. Another: You'd have taken Adrian if you'd wanted him, no matter who stood in the way. You'd even take Huxley when he wants to marry your sister, if you could. But that, thank God, you cannot do. And my face shows nothing. No one in this town has ever dreamed I was hurt about Adrian. I have never talked of it except to one person I trust implicitly, and I am sure that Adrian never has. He saw you, he loved you, and that was the end of it. But you cannot bear it that anyone has ever touched your possessions. I am not taking any of your possessions, but I think it might be good for you to know that I could have, had I so desired."

"Could you, indeed?"

"Yes. And not because Adrian does not love you. But because he was so dead tired that he would have turned to anyone who could let him rest. I know how, you see. You have a kind of courage, I grant you that, but you haven't got the courage to go through another operation so that Adrian might possibly have a whole wife instead of half a wife. I know that you have to give a man great tenderness to compensate for not having a whole body to give him. I think you could have given it to him, but no, you thought only of yourself."

"So that's what you think of me," Anna said slowly. "But then, I suppose that's what I might have expected. If you've been hurt you can't bear kindness."

"Oh, I could bear kindness if I received any. But that wasn't kindness, Anna. Why don't you look in your busybody and see yourself? . . . And sharing Johnny! You mean you were glad to have him out of the house. He remembers the kittens, you see. You pretend he's afraid you're going to die. It's not that—he's afraid of you. . . . And now I think I've said all and more than needs saying. But never ask me here again, Anna."

She rose and walked toward the door. Elizabeth saw that Anna's hand was moving in a curious circle, round and round, on her table, but she went after Margaret, walked down the stairs with her.

Margaret turned. "A fool's effort," she said. "But I had to do it." She walked down the steps, away in the gathering dusk.

Elizabeth went up the stairs. Anna sat just where she had left her, her hand still making that circle on the table. She did not look up and that fact was frightening.

It was Anna who spoke first. She spoke not to Elizabeth, it seemed, but to her own moving hand. "I told him not to let her in," she said. "She was mangy and she had a bunch on her neck. She couldn't have taken care of them. . . . It wasn't my bedspread—she was mangy and she had a bunch on her neck. . . . Someone had to do it."

The cold was in Elizabeth's spine now, in her marrow. The voice was not Anna's voice, but one tired and flat and defeated. These were the kittens Meg meant. These must be the kittens, born on Anna's bedspread and probably drowned—and Johnny had seen. The little clay cat fell on the floor, its tail off, its ears flattened. "I'll make her another cat!" Johnny cried.

"He looks at me as if I were a murderer. You all do. Adrian does."

"No, Anna. That's not so." But her voice came like a whisper.

"And I suppose Adrian thinks I should have had the operation. He'd rather have me dead than half alive."

"Adrian's never mentioned it."

"But he did. And suppose I had the operation? Would it be better to walk around dead inside than to sit here dead inside?"

"Oh, Anna!"

Then there was Adrian in the doorway. "What's the matter? Aren't you ready yet?" he asked.

Elizabeth moved a space away, giving Anna room to breathe. Anna took her hands from the table, let them lie hidden in her lap.

"Don't rush me, darling," she said, and her voice was just as always, gay, amused, bright. "Are you feeling awfully strong? I thought maybe you could carry me down to the living room. It does seem silly to make everybody climb those stairs."

She sat in the round-backed chair with the angel-head carving. White tulips sat on the table beside her in a circle of light. The room was full of laughter and there were gifts strewn across the afghan on her knees, on the floor at her feet. "Happy birthday, darling!" . . . "Happy birthday, Anna!" Over and over the words sounded, like a chorus.

They brought plates of food and sat on the floor and the laughter was high and the talk exciting. And through it all Anna's voice came, tying them together in friendship, in warmth, making it another of "Anna's parties."

Elizabeth went to the kitchen after another bowl of salad and Huxley was there with Bunce. He smiled at her and said, "Did you know I was going to marry Liz, Bunce?"

Mrs. Bunce said, "I guess Miss Burke's got more sense'n that."

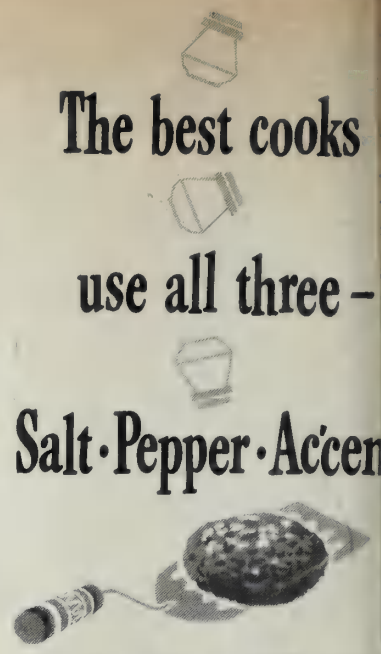
"No," she said slowly, "I haven't, Bunce."

"Well, for goodness' sake!" Bunce said. "I'd never have thought of it!"

Then it was over. They were reluctant to go, but at last it was over. Adrian carried Anna up the stairs.

"Do you need me?" Elizabeth called.

"No," Adrian said.



But presently she followed them slowly up the stairs. Though Adrian had said he didn't need her, she walked toward Anna's room. She stood in the doorway, did not come into the room.

"Is everything all right?" she asked.

Adrian turned angrily. "Is this some of your doing?"

"I don't know what you mean," she said.

The best cooks use all three – Salt · Pepper · Ac'cent

It's the "third shaker"! Ac'cent the exciting new miracle seasoning takes its place alongside salt and pepper—makes food taste naturally better. A touch of Ac'cent makes meat meatier, chicken more chickeny, vegetables tastier, "just-picked"... remarkably brings out the good flavors already present in food.

WONDERFUL ON HAMBURGER! Try this simple test: make two identical hamburger patties. Season both as usual, but sprinkle one of them with Ac'cent. Fry in separate pans—then taste the amazing difference! Ac'cent is as easy to use as salt. Ask your grocer for the handy kitchen shaker. If he doesn't yet have Ac'cent, send us his name and address. Amino Products, 20 N. Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Illinois. Also in Canada.

Ac'cent®
PURE MONOSODIUM GLUTAMATE
...makes good cooking taste better!

*T. M. property of International Minerals & Chemical Corp.

Stainless steel, and rustproof parts. Available in a variety of colors. At department, home furnishings, and hardware stores.

Dazey Ice Crusher $8.95 to $10.95
Model shown No. 160C—All Chrome

Makers of the world's first and finest wall type can opener.

it's a DAZEY

Make A "LOT of MONEY" in a LITTLE SPARE TIME

Show New EXCLUSIVE CHRISTMAS CARDS

It's easy to make extra money in spare ti showing friends and neighbors the famous tionally advertised Wallace Brown 21-C "Feature" Assortment. Sells for only $1.0 up to 50c profit for you. Many other mon making Christmas and Everyday Greeti Card Ass'ts and Gift Items—Plus easy-selli personal name-imprinted Christmas Card bring you dollars of extra cash in spare hou

RUSH NAME for SAMPLE

Send no money! Just send name, address and we send you actual s ple of the thrilling "Feature" Christmas Assortment on approval; FREE samples fast-selling Personal Christmas Cards. Write tod

WALLACE BROWN, INC., Dept. B
221 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, New Y

ng—don't jump at Liz like that. It's .o do with Liz," Anna said. "I'm do it."
Adrian said.
ny life," Anna said. "Haven't I the decide what to do with it?"
nine too," Adrian said.
t's mine," Anna said, and her voice ost cold. "It belongs to no one but been too weak to decide before, but ve decided. I told Doctor McIntry go Monday. He'll call Graner in the
."
n't have it," Adrian said.
it's settled, darling. If it were you,
the same—wouldn't you?"
n turned away from the bed. He over to the hearth, but did not look even then. "I suppose I would."
, then?"
n't go through it all again," he said.
let you go through it. I thought you opy. You've seemed so."
ned so," Anna echoed. "I'm very must sleep now. . . . Do you want to some milk now, Liz?"
beth went down the stairs, heated
. When she came back Adrian was ne put the tray down, turned to put ws behind Anna. Anna said: "You I'm not hungry."
beth sat down by the bed, drank the ediently.
'll stay till I get home, won't you?"
, I'll stay."
nt to pound these pillows up a little?"
moothed the bed, patted the pillows, e lifted the tray.

"Good night, Anna," she said. Surely there must be more to say, but Anna said, "Good night," and that was all.

She was back in her own room. She sat down, still in her velvet dress.

How peaceful this room is! she thought. But of course it wasn't the room. I suppose I never loved her before, she admitted. Even if I've said I did so many times. I worshiped her and I envied her and I pitied her—and that was all. And why now? Because she's walking into danger with her head still high? No—oh, Anna—it's because you did it for love's sake—it sounded like for your sake, but it wasn't. You're afraid—but you're going to do it, because that's the only way you know how to say "I love you." Oh, Anna!

The house grew very still, but still she sat there in the little room. And nothing was finished, but the peace remained with her. And out of the peace came Huxley's face, a face with sober eyes and a firm mouth, a face to love and trust forever. And Johnny's small face, and Mrs. Suydam's proud face. Bunce's dark little eyes. Her people. She would walk these streets for the rest of her life. She would see Johnny grow up, she would grow old here and die herself. And Anthony Daggett might fall on some foreign soil or he might come to this town and be her friend. And Mrs. Daggett—she would never, never know whether Mrs. Daggett had trusted her to the end or not. It was all unknown, the future, and there was pain ahead, and anxiety. But the peace persisted. If you just loved enough, just trusted enough. . . .

"Why, I know—I know whether I'm coming or going!" she said aloud. THE END

TRAIN APPLIQUÉ . . .

Gay scraps make an amusing appliqué for a child's room. The "choo choo" goes across the top of a sheet or at the bottom of cotton curtains. The engine on a pillow slip or a shirt. The appliqué is designed for easy sewing. Pattern No. 2573, 15c.

Turn to Page 24 for information on how to order this pattern.

Cool makin'—Cool eatin'

ICEBOX "COOKED" WITH BAKER'S COCONUT!

Choose a frosty beauty for tonight!

Chilled Orange Chiffon Pie—refreshingly topped with snowy, tender-moist Baker's Coconut. No baking—not even the crust.

Frosty Strawberry Fluff—light and luscious with flavor-fresh coconut.

Ice Cream—so exciting topped with golden-toasted* Baker's Coconut. Or fold 1 cup coconut into 1 quart softened ice cream—and refreeze.

*Toast coconut in shallow pan in moderate oven (350° F.) 5 to 7 minutes. Stir often, to brown evenly.

ORANGE COCONUT CHIFFON PIE

Mix 2 egg yolks, slightly beaten, with ¼ cup milk in saucepan. Add 1 package Jell-O Vanilla Pudding; blend. Stir in 1¼ cups milk gradually. Cook and stir over medium heat until mixture comes to a boil and thickens. Remove from heat—stir in 3 tablespoons concentrated Birds Eye Orange Juice gradually. Add ½ cup Baker's Coconut.

Beat 2 egg whites until foamy. Add 4 tablespoons of sugar, a tablespoon at a time, and continue beating until mixture will stand in stiff peaks. Fold in hot pudding gradually. Turn into chilled graham cracker crust. Chill pie. Sprinkle with ½ cup coconut.

Graham Cracker Crust. Combine 1¼ cups fine graham cracker crumbs and 2 tablespoons sugar. Add ⅓ cup melted butter—mix well. Press firmly on bottom and sides of 9-inch pie pan. Chill.

STRAWBERRY FLUFF

Dissolve 1 package Strawberry Jell-O and dash of salt in 1 cup hot water. Soften 1 3-ounce package of cream cheese with 2 tablespoons hot Jell-O mixture; blend well. Set aside.

Add 1 cup cold water to remaining Jell-O and chill until slightly thickened. Place Jell-O bowl in another bowl of ice and water and whip with rotary egg beater until fluffy and thick like whipped cream. Fold in cream cheese mixture and ¾ cup of Baker's Coconut. Pile lightly in serving bowl. Chill until firm. Top with 1 cup sliced sweetened strawberries and coconut. Serves 6.

Birds Eye Sliced Strawberries may be substituted for sweetened fresh berries.

Products of General Foods

BAKER'S COCONUT

Turns budget cakes into luscious beauties

BAKER'S COCONUT Southern Style

The difference between this...

and this...

is often this...

JOHNSON'S BABY OIL

Mild, pure, made specially to agree with delicate skin—Johnson's Baby Oil helps prevent irritations, soothe and smooth baby's skin after bath and at diaper changes.

JOHNSON'S BABY POWDER

Silky-soft, with a fresh, delicate scent—Johnson's Baby Powder is such a pleasant way to chase away prickles and chafes, keep baby comfy and contented.

Johnson & Johnson

RAY JOHNSON

Children should learn to recognize plants which may infect the skin—should know, too, the simple rules for care of the infection.

"Leaflets Three, Leave it Be!"

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

HEALTH authorities calculate that each summer at least 500,000 Americans have their vacations spoiled for a few days, or sometimes for as much as several weeks, by the painful, burning blisters of poison ivy.

It is annoying enough for an adult to acquire this affliction, but even worse for a youngster, for it is hard to make a child understand that he must resist the almost overpowering urge to scratch. If you live in a section where poison ivy or one of its kindred is prevalent, or if you vacation in a spot where it is found, you should know how to protect your youngsters—and yourself—from infection, and what to do if the poisoning should appear.

Itching and burning are the first signs of ivy poisoning. Usually these occur shortly after the exposure, but may not appear for several days. They are followed within a few hours by a red rash, and later by swelling and blisters which may multiply and become extremely large in some cases. Or the first symptom may be an itchy bump like a mosquito bite, and be mistaken for one.

When the affected area begins to itch and burn, children naturally begin to scratch and rub. A little of the poisonous oil from the plant clings to the fingers and may thus be transferred to the face and other parts of the body. I remember one little fellow who had sucked his fingers after contact with poison ivy, and had serious blisters on his lips and inside his mouth. I have also seen many cases where especially painful blisters have appeared on the tender skin of the genital area.

Since the worst feature of poison ivy is its propensity to spread when scratched, it is a good idea for mothers of children prone to it to train their youngsters to suspect every rash or itchy bump of being ivy soning until it is proved otherwise. them not to scratch anything, but to c to you at once. Dab the affected por with calamine lotion or antihistamine o ment, which you can buy at the drugst If it is a small spot, cover it with a rea made bandage. If the area is wider, an it copiously and then fasten a bandag gauze or other light material well over entire section, making it fit closely but so tightly as to cut off circulation.

This will usually banish the itching several hours. Tell the child to come to

(Continued on Page 108)

DOCTOR BUNDESEN'S booklets, used by many thousands of enthusiastic mothers, cover all phases of baby care. They are:

BEFORE THE BABY COMES (prenatal months), No. 2383, 50c.

First series of booklets, covering first eight months, 50c.

Second series of booklets, covering nine months to two years, 50c.

A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER (breast-feeding helps), No. 1346, 6c.

OUR BABIES (complete book and invaluable supplement to the monthly booklets), No. 1345, 50c.

Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Bringing Up Baby

HINTS COLLECTED BY Mrs Dan Gerber
(MOTHER OF 5)

Mrs. Dan Gerber

Isn't it nice that little playboys (and playgirls) need so little clothing in hot weather? More practical ways to make your washing and ironing chores dwindle: (1) Pick fabrics with a small, over print—they stay cleaner-look-i. (2) Choose seersuckers and cotton jerseys which need no ironing.

* * *

Shady decisions— those are the kind you want to make at the beach or equally sunny places. Where sunshine beats down, your doctor will advise you to keep baby in the shade all the time the first day or two.

* * *

Junior special. You can make a "sundae" in jig-time for that toddler of yours with any one of Gerber's three puddings. Just top off with two teaspoons of baby's favorite Strained or Junior Fruit!

* * *

Water frolic. Tots soon discover how blissful cool water can be during hot weather . . .

FOR OUTDOOR FUN, give your toddler a shallow basin of water to play with. Show how smart you are by making "sailboats" with clothespins!

FOR INDOOR COMFORT, a sponge bath before meals or sleep-time will go a long way in keeping your baby cool and relaxed.

* * *

Who's the lucky tot that's going to get Gerber's Pear Fluff Special? Make one for your angel (and yourself) this quick, easy way:

1 egg white
½ cup orange juice
1 tbs. lemon juice
1 Gerber's Strained Pears

Combine ingredients and beat until foamy. Makes 2 delicious servings! More, many more such recipes in Gerber's 32-page "Recipes for Toddlers." For a free copy, write to me, Mrs. Dan Gerber, Dept. 88-1, Fremont, Mich. In Canada, Gerber-Ogilvie, Ltd., Niagara Falls, Canada.

Ready to put those teeth to work?

It's sheer JOY for tots with a few teeth to discover the toothsome morsels in Gerber's Junior Foods. The tiny, finely-cut particles encourage chewing, help growing tots make the big shift from strained to grown-up foods.

They help in so many other wonderful ways, too. By tempting your baby's appetite with colors that are true to nature . . . by satisfying him with flavors that are friendly and pleasing. All done on purpose, of course, for Gerber's Baby Foods are prepared from fruits, vegetables and meats that are specially selected for babies.

Nourishing, too! Gerber's, who make baby foods—and nothing but baby foods every day of the year, know how to help tots meet their daily quota of vitamins and minerals. Gerber's Junior Foods often have more of these important nutrients than foods cooked and chopped in your own kitchen!

Next time you shop for Baby Foods, Strained or Junior, look for Gerber's and notice how completely Gerber's meet your baby's food needs.

Has your tot tasted our Puddings? Doubly nourishing because they are made with egg yolks and milk. Three tempting varieties to choose from—Custard (Vanilla), Chocolate Custard and Orange Pudding. All velvety-smooth, delicious!

Babies are our business ...
our only business!

Gerber's
BABY FOODS
FREMONT, MICHIGAN

Yes, Mom! These swabs never come loose!

You're sure, with Q-Tips, the original sterilized swabs. They're made of softest, finest quality cotton anchored securely at both ends of the applicator, correctly shaped for gentle baby care.

Q-Tips are sterilized right in the package by the best hospital method. More Q-Tips have been used by doctors than any other prepared swabs.

Don't take a substitute. Take Q-Tips.

Do the job with a Q-TIPS swab!

'Q-Tips' are also a wonderful aid in making up. Wet one end of swab and use to clean make-up and powder from eyebrows. Use the dry end to brush brows shiny. Use 'Q-Tips' also to clean up smeared mascara . . . remove excess lipstick . . . for manicures and pedicures. For beauty's sake, reach for 'Q-Tips'.

29¢, 49¢ and 98¢ pkg.

® Q-TIPS

The original cotton swab ...in the famous blue box

Q-TIPS INC., LONG ISLAND CITY, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 106)

for another treatment whenever the sensation starts up afresh. Each time use a fresh covering. (Larger bandages may be washed and used again.) Ask the child to call you if he is awakened by the itching in the night, and renew the treatment then.

If you are in the wilds and no drugstore is available, soak clean cloths in a cold baking-soda or Epsom-salts solution and apply these to the affected parts, remoistening them when the itching starts again. However, if any member of your family is sensitive to poison ivy, you should take along on your vacation a bottle of whatever lotion or ointment has seemed most effective in giving comfort.

Where a child is old enough to manage the treatment himself, it is a good idea to let him do so. This serves the double purpose of providing relief and also of distracting him from his desire to scratch or rub. In the case of small children, however, the mother must keep a close watch.

When the blisters are large, or the inflammation is widespread and a dark, "angry" red; or when the face or genital areas are involved, the child should be taken to the doctor. He can usually bring relief more quickly and effectively than is possible with home measures. Moreover, unless the doctor's advice is sought and followed in severe cases, the sores may spread and become infected, prolonging the period of suffering and possibly causing disfiguring scars.

Mild cases usually begin to subside within a few days, though periods of itching may recur for as long as two weeks. After the pustules start to dry up and are no longer exuding liquid, it is not necessary to keep them covered. Dabbing with the lotion or ointment will banish the itching for the time being.

Of course the best thing of all is to try to see that your child is protected from contact with any member of the Rhus family, to which poison ivy belongs. If you vacation in the West, for instance, ask the natives to point out to you poison dogwood, poison oak and poison sumac, so that you may keep your own family away from them. Poison ivy, which grows in nearly all sections of the country, is easily identified. Its leaves, dark green and glossy, sometimes two or three inches long, invariably occur in clusters of three. "Leaflets three, leave it be!" is a jingle that has helped thousands of mothers and children recognize this form of Rhus, and keep away from it.

Poison ivy grows in the form of a clinging vine or creeping shrub. It clings to brick walls, trees, fence posts and poles, creeps along fences, paths and roads, grows in patches in fields or in woodlands, and often insinuates itself among innocent flowers and shrubbery. The substance that causes the poisoning is an oily sap, and, alive or dead, every part of this plant is capable of making trouble. Sensitive persons may be severely poisoned just from the smoke of poison ivy that is being burned. Most cases, however, are caused by direct contact with the leaves, in which the oil is brushed onto the skin of the legs, arms or hands.

Poison ivy should be eradicated from yards and other places where children play. If woodlands are infested, you should see that your child wears clothing that covers the arms and legs when he goes on hikes or picnics in the country. (It is safest for girls, as well as boys, to wear blue jeans over long stockings, or other garments which leave no bare skin exposed.) Some children are so sensitive that they can be affected by the oil left on clothing, so all garments suspected of exposure should be thoroughly washed or dry cleaned. If your youngster is highly sensitive, he may even contract ivy poisoning from the oil clinging to the coat of the family dog or cat. This is one source that often baffles mothers who have taken every other precaution, and sometimes it is necessary to give away a pet in order to protect a child.

If you have reason to think your child has been exposed—and the same is true for adults—as soon as possible thereafter wash thoroughly with soap and water. If the affected area is on the arms, legs or hands, as it usually is, use a yellow laundry soap. On the more tender skin of face and genitals a milder soap should be employed, but in either instance lather copiously several times. After washing, apply calamine lotion or antihistamine ointment.

For reasons that doctors don't fully understand, some people are immune to poison ivy. Infants are rarely affected by it, and I have seen relatively few cases of children up to two or three years of age. Mothers of babies and toddlers may be comforted by this thought, but should not count on it too much. Immunity generally vanishes as youngsters get older.

As with other allergies, artificial immunization is effective in a number of cases. If you have a child who gets severe attacks on the slightest exposure, see your doctor about immunization shots. However, they don't work for everyone and you should still do all you can to guard your sensitive youngster from contact with the Rhus family.

One thing you can count on is that when you recognize the symptoms at once and take prompt methods of dealing with them, you can usually confine the unpleasant manifestation to the area of the body where it originated, keep your youngster comfortable for the most part, and have him through with it in a short time.

THE BIGGEST FLOUNDER

(Continued from Page 43)

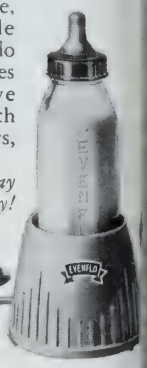
stern, almost hostile inspection of herself. "Do I look casual enough? I want to look strictly casual." That was Bunny's cue to break silence and tell her she looked casual, and Sis would whip out the door, her barn-dance skirt swishing out last, and then Bunny would pad over to the window and watch the car lights make a stage set of the grass and the rugosas, gritting her teeth at the shrieking gears and thinking that next year when she got her license she'd at least be a better driver than Sis. The red eyes of the taillights would move downward and blink out, there would be the rumble of the wooden bridge, and she'd be left alone in a sudden stillness. Crouched on the floor with her arms along the sill, she'd feel terribly lonely, terribly out of it, and then in spite of herself she'd listen to the silence and think she could hear the sea. Of course she couldn't, not unless the weather was really stormy, but the sea had something to do with the silence. You never found that deep kind of stillness except near the sea.

It was quite early Saturday morning—early from a vacation standpoint. Bunny was out on the pier fooling around. She held up a wet finger and decided the breeze would be right for sailing. Then, kneeling, she watched a little fish darting about the gently moving green film attached to a piling. The tide was exceptionally high, and as she bent over, her darkly shining reflection was close. Beneath her hands the boards even now were warm with the body warmth of an animal, and she stretched out flat on her stomach—very quiet because of splinters—to absorb their hard, warm comfort. With one hand she disturbed the tiny universe of the fish, and then the sky steadied back again, the sky and the dark reflection of her head and the pier with the bright narrow stripes of light between the boards.

The pier jarred to a footstep, and she lifted her head toward the approaching figure of a man. He was tall, taller than he should have been because of his aloneness as a vertical; he wore a sweat shirt and short shorts, the kind that athletes wear, and he had the wavy hair that made her sure he was Chris.

"Hello!" he hailed. The planks of the pier plunk-plunked like a xylophone all on one note, until he reached her. "Anything exciting going on down there?"

Get The Best—Ask For Evenflo



Mrs. Russell Jacot R. 14, Akron, O., with adopted son Donnie

Likes Evenflo For Adopted Baby

Hope Jacot gets a kick out of feeding her adopted baby son with an Evenflo Nurser. He goes after his bottle with such zest he empties it in no time. Mrs. Jacot learned about Evenflo from her girl friends who praised it because it is so easy to nurse and so handy to use, both at home and while visiting. Complete Evenflo Nursers 25c. Extra nipples and parts 10c. Attractive Evenflo Layette Package with six 8-oz., two 4-oz., nursers, pkg. cleanser, $2.25.

Costs less than 1c a day to nurse the Evenflo way!

Evenflo®

America's Most Popular Nurser

EVENFLO BOTTLE WARMER $1.89

"IT BREATHES AS IT FEEDS"

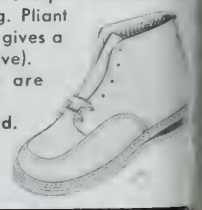
DO YOU NEED MONEY

$35.00 IS YOURS for selling only 50 boxes of our 300 Christmas card line. And this can be done in a single day. Free samples. Other leading boxes on approval. Many surprise items. It costs nothing to try. Write today.

FREE SAMPLES PERSONALIZED CHRISTMAS CARDS STATIONERY NAPKINS

CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. G-5, White Plains, New Yo

Send Them Back to School Foot-Happy!



Step Master SHOES FOR CHILDREN

Let Little Feet BREATHE!

It's the Air Holes in the Lining...

—that keep active little feet dry, fresh ar comfortable . . . Smooth one-piece leather linir insures against chafing. Pliant leather Arch Protector gives a gentle lift (not corrective). STEP MASTER Shoes are good-looking, long-wearing, budget-priced.

Write for Illustrated Leaflet and Name of Nearest Dealer.

STEP MASTER SHOES INC. • Greenvil

rambled to her feet. "Hello!" She'd him altogether different, somehow g, but his face, though bony, was utting nor beetling, his eyes were a m blue—he seemed just nice and more. And his smile made him sud- ry young so you could forget he was st. "You're up early," she began tly, and now was the time to estab- self as a grownup by calling him ut she couldn't. ". . . Mr. Bement." re unfair." His smile was nice. "You o I am, and I haven't the ghost of a ho you are."

Ellen Snow." Right from the start it to talk to him. "You met my sister t."

ought a minute. "Oh, yes. The ryone calls Sis. Oh, you're the one l the Child."

ould have hated him, suddenly and but his smile told her—and she be mistaken—that the joke was on t her. Was it possible? Did he really, nd truly, accept her as an individual, hild, as a person like—like himself? ng back at him, she had the most ful swimming sensation. Only a mo- go she hadn't even known him and seemed like—like a big brother, the ther she'd never had, a brother who augh with her at all those obtuse peo- e felt all warm and relaxed.

'; I'm the Child," she said gaily. wise known as Bunny. I began being at the age of two because I wiggled e."

smile faded into mock seriousness. "I ell you the name I suffered with. Yes, oo. You'd be sym- c. Bub. That's what alled me. Bub."

laughed together. a dreadful handi- But while she d she felt sorry, too, ittle boy with Bub name, and tried to y him with the tall man beside her. ll me, do you do any fishing around Could we snitch one of those dories out?"

iantly she was startled and on guard, 'd put distance and age between them. you wouldn't enjoy it. I haven't any ackle, rods and things. It wouldn't be r you."

hat makes you think so, Ellen?"

name struck against her chest. No one her Ellen. If he had called her "Child" uldn't have minded, because he'd have uotes around it, and "Bunny" she n't even have noticed. Ellen. . . . She d him to say it again.

ELY, not quite sure of what she said, urmured, "An old hand line, just catch- unders and things." Then she pulled f together and said briskly, "Besides, e planning a long sail today."

ut wouldn't we have time right now? s just the kind of fishing I like, because an smoke your pipe and doze off. When the house there wasn't a sound. Every- still asleep."

on't you worry about that!" she d. "If they know you're up they'll be owing their breakfast whole by now. is—you see that kind of sun deck we've over the shed roof, the house up there e knoll? We can see the whole bay from . I'm sure she's spotted you already." hought, And chewing nails because she down here instead of me.

What about tomorrow, then? Is it a You won't forget? What time?" He persistent. He really did want to go. refully inspecting the water line on the gs, keeping her mind steady on practical- not daring to contemplate the miracle r going fishing with Chris, "Tide's high It'll be an hour later tomorrow. Eight ck. Is that too early for you? Fishing's just before the full. I'll dig some clams afternoon when we get back from the -if I go."

What do you mean, if you go? Why dn't you go?"

"There might not be room." She said it as a flat statement, without rancor.

He replied quickly, "If there isn't room I'll stay home," and his voice gave her a hint as to why Sis thought him conceited. But it wasn't conceit or even arrogance. She knew.

She had a vision of his staying home and gave a sudden snort of laughter. "That would fix it. That really would fix it."

FLOATING through the air came the clink of oarlocks against each other, so faint and distant she could pretend not to hear it; for a defiant moment she could refuse to raise her eyes toward the place where the knoll met the sky. Then she gave up. A single-file procession was straggling over the hill, a pair of oars momentary exclamation points against the sky, each figure silhouetted before it dropped down the winding path through the tall grass. Now their voices carried across the water; one of them called, "Hi, Chris!" and a hollow came into her stomach.

Good-by, she told him silently, not daring to let him see her face. It was wonderful.

Bunny rode the boom, steadying herself with one hand against the mast. As she looked across and down on the others they were mostly legs, a whole row of legs stretched stiffly out, a row of sneakers braced against the lee seat. Legs, then an elbow or two hooked at an acute angle over the coaming, then the individual faces with dark glasses or crew hats or blowing hair. Chris sat between Anne and Sis, Doug was next, and Jim was at the tiller.

She felt no shadow of either hurt or jealousy. She'd expected Chris to be miles away the instant the others swarmed onto the pier. She'd known that their moment of intimacy would become more and more improbable, and that even tomorrow's fishing trip would seem nebulous and not quite real. The high, bright voices of the girls had changed the focus sharply, and she and the past minutes had dimmed into fuzzy distance.

There ain't much fun in physic, but there's a great deal of physic in fun.
—AMERICAN PROVERB

But they couldn't take away Chris. He was there for her to look at, very real and somehow easier to see now that he was talking and laughing with the others; she knew for the first time the exact line of his jaw and the way his hair grew from his forehead. It was enough—it was exactly enough to know that he was there, to glance at him from time to time, and to feel the tug of the sail and the lift of the sea.

Chris and her sister were having a marvelous time, and as she watched them laughing and joking she exulted, Good for Sis! She's winning this round! Then the thought struck her, Suppose—suppose he falls in love with her. Then I'd have Chris for always, in the family, my own big brother. Sis really was a terribly nice person. Bunny set to work sorting out all the nice things about her that would appeal to him.

Chris wanted to light his pipe. Sis tried to shield the flame, and finally they crawled under a tarpaulin in the bottom of the boat and came out triumphant, disheveled, laughing.

Then Jim shouted at Bunny to get forward of the mast, they were coming about for the long tack to the island. And as they all settled into place again Chris hesitated, then moved unsteadily up the boat, worked his way past Bunny, and took a stand against the mast. His feet were spread and braced, his hands, clasped behind him around the mast, were near enough for her to touch.

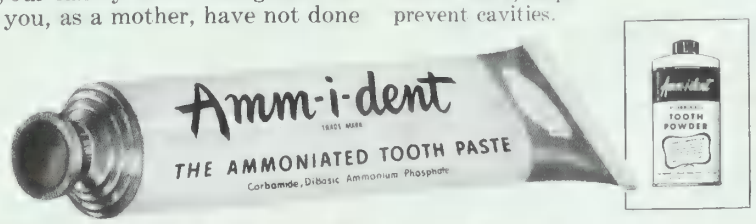
He had separated himself from the others. He didn't talk to her, he hadn't even spoken in passing, had merely given her a small preoccupied smile, intent on not going overboard. He hadn't come up here to be near her. But the fact was—and it was a fact—that they were sharing an experience. He, too, through his hands against the mast and the soles of his feet, through his changing body balance, was accepting the rhythm of wind and sea.

Soon, too soon they would reach the island, he would help make the fire and do

Too bad! This child's mother was "too smart" to believe the ads that told her...

Amm-i-dent Helps Prevent Cavities!

"Just another exaggerated claim," the mother thought when she read that Amm-i-dent ammoniated Tooth Paste could reduce tooth decay. She didn't even call her dentist, who could have told her about Amm-i-dent. She just kept buying the tooth paste with which her family had been brushing—and having cavities—year after year.



More dentists recommend Amm-i-dent

And now she's sorry. At her child's regular dental check-up—more cavities! She wishes she had followed the advice of the dentists of America. They recommend Amm-i-dent ammoniated Tooth Paste and Powder more than any other dentifrice.

If your family is not using Amm-i-dent, you, as a mother, have not done all you can do—all you should do—to help them to have strong, healthy teeth. You can prove it to yourself. Were there any cavities in your family last year? What did you do to help prevent those cavities?

Does Your Present Tooth Paste Do Anything To Help Prevent Cavities?

No ordinary tooth paste, without ammoniated anti-decay ingredients, can do much to help prevent cavities—beyond what the simple act of brushing will do. But Amm-i-dent supplies for many hours the ammonia content found lacking in the mouths of people who suffer from tooth decay. And you don't have to change your brushing habits. Regular brushing at your regular time, with Amm-i-dent, helps prevent cavities.

pleasant, slightly flirtatious things to amuse the girls, and she would be the person of whom they'd say, "Give it to Bunny if you can't eat it. She has an incredible appetite." But right now they were alone together, she and Chris, feeling the rhythm of the sea, sharing. . . .

That afternoon when they returned, wind-whipped and sleepy, the others took naps and Bunny went out to the flats and dug clams, dug them with such fierce preoccupation that she had a whole bucketful, enough for steamed clams for the family that night.

Bunny was out on the pier with all the gear in a neat row beside her—oars and oarlocks, the bucket with the lines in it, the bait can—pretending not to be waiting for Chris. It was early—much too early for a person who had been out late last night. When Sis had slipped into bed cautiously Bunny had opened one eye and called across, "What time is it?" and Sis hadn't seemed to hear, so she knew it had been very late.

CHRIS wasn't coming—of course he wasn't coming. He was sleeping like the others after a late night. He hadn't once thought of the date they'd made to go fishing—yesterday morning was such a long way away, he couldn't have remembered.

She stood on the edge of an abyss of disappointment, but she refused to look into its depths. Chris was entitled to his sleep like anyone else, wasn't he? And men were always saying things out of politeness and then forgetting they'd said them.

Bunny was out on the pier merely to have a look around, as she often did. The fine weather had brought her out—although it wasn't such a good morning at that, it was one of those whitish ones that hadn't yet made up its mind. Maybe that was why he hadn't come; he'd decided it was going to rain.

The bay seemed asleep, the salt marshes were passive, there wasn't a movement anywhere. A screen door slamming far away sounded like an echo.

"I won't watch the path," she whispered. There was a narrow gap in the grass at the top of the knoll; that was the path down which he would come. But he wasn't coming. "It's bad luck to watch for him. It's ——"

Resolutely she turned away, counted the fishhooks, poked the head of a clam until it drew its serpent neck back into the shell. He wasn't coming. But it didn't matter. She'd go fishing by herself after a while. She'd catch the biggest flounder ——

It was so quiet that a rustle of the shore grass could be heard, but it couldn't be he. It must be a dog nosing through the marshes. Even when the pier vibrated to a step it couldn't be he. She refused to look around. It was one of the young kids who'd seen her out here and had come to beg a ride.

She looked out toward the entrance of the bay, her eyes squinting to find its outline through the whiteness, and she thought she could make out the nun shape of the channel buoy, and he said, "Good morning," slightly formal, slightly amused.

"Oh, hi." She gave him a quick shy glance and couldn't say another word, she was so completely undone.

"How are you, Ellen?" he said gently, as if he knew that the sound of her name, Ellen, although it struck her almost like a blow, would release her.

"Oh, I'm fine." She had sudden command of herself. "But I'll bet you're not. You were up awfully late. Did you have a good time?"

"Fair to middling." With three casual words he dismissed last night and closed the whole great gap of hours that had come between them. She stood contemplating the miracle, almost afraid to move. "How about it? Weren't we going fishing today?"

She smiled back at him, openly and radiantly now, then bent to pull in the rowboat. The pulley on the mooring post creaked and the boat swam slowly toward the pier.

She barely remembered to let him help her into the stern seat, and then he was at the oars rowing out into the bay. Settling herself to trim the boat, she leaned back, and one by one the little tensions broke, like so many elastic bands giving way. There wasn't one thing about him strange or frightening; his figure looked pleasantly familiar, the long legs with the knobby knees, the spare hands gripping the oars. And everything she said and did came easy, as if she were suspended, floating. Talk came easy. She wasn't conscious of how she looked. Her happiness had lost its sharp localized ache and was spread out through her body in an even warmth. And she knew, with that mysterious sense she'd had before, that Chris was happy too.

"I used to be a great oarsman," he bragged and feathered his oars not too successfully, then shifted on the seat for excuse and examined the oar blade, and they both laughed. He rowed easily, with a man's strength of arm, although she didn't approve of the jerk he put on the end of the stroke. "Guess I'll peel off. This is hot work."

His body was young and very white, and somehow vulnerable because of its whiteness—as if a coat of tan would be a kind of armor.

"You'll have to put your shirt back on when we start fishing," she admonished him, squinting into the bright-white sky. "This haze will give you an awful burn."

DO YOU KNOW WHAT TO DO?

IF:

You get pink candle wax on your white taffeta evening dress?

Johnny's cut finger bleeds all over his new white wool jacket?

Dye from a figured bathing suit runs into a good white cotton blouse?

A copper flower bowl has tarnished your best tablecloth? Should you launder or treat first, and with what?

The answers to these and dozens of other stain problems are found in booklet No. 1328, SPOTS AND STAINS. Send 15c to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Use order coupon on Page 24.

"Is this about right, skipper?" he said at last.

She took bearings on the buoy and the distant pier and said it was, and he rocked to the bow and threw out the anchor. As the rope eased out and the boat drifted back with the tide she cracked a clam against the gunwale, baited the hooks, and passed him a line.

He had lighted his pipe almost at once, but he didn't look comfortable up on the middle thwart, he didn't look right, the way she'd pictured him.

"Change places, will you?" she said, like an order. "I don't like the stern. The fish bite better up near the bow."

This was right. She glanced at him, casually and with a casual smile, as if they'd fished together for years. He sprawled across the stern seat, pipe in mouth, his hand with the line limp over the stern.

"Now you can doze off the way you wanted," she told him, teasing him a little, almost daring him to doze off.

He understood her but didn't answer, merely smiled back at her with squinty eyes, and said he thought he had a nibble. I do hope he'll catch something, she thought. A big one. I do hope it'll be a successful trip.

She caught the first fish, a small flounder.

"Will you look at that!" he exclaimed, as if it were astonishing to find fish in the sea, and offered to take it off her hook. She almost refused automatically, then passed it along to him. It was quite pleasant to have someone else doing the chore.

"Toss it down there under you," she told him. "It'll keep alive in the bilge water."

Chris had the next bite and pulled in a minister fish that puffed and swelled into a yellow-and-white ball. When he heaved it back again it bobbed for a second or two, then deflated and sank.

They chuckled about it. From time to time the flounder in the stern gave a flap, and Chris peered down between his legs to look at it. Occasionally another boat came by at hailing distance, its oars clucking in the oarlocks. "Any luck?" . . . "So-so," and everyone would wave.

It was all very real. And yet it was completely unreal, like being in a dream.

A pull on her line made her jump. She gave a quick twitch and began hauling in. Oh, but it was heavy. It could be something big—but maybe it was only seaweed or junk. And then, peering down, she could see it, white then dark as it turned on the line. Up it came in the resigned way of flounders, and Chris shouted, "Quick, pull it over!" and rushed to help her.

"Jeepers! Isn't it a whopper!" she yelled. "Did you ever see such a big fish? It must weigh four pounds."

"Five, I'll bet."

It really was the biggest flounder. She was terribly excited. And then she glanced at Chris and glanced away again. He was working on the hook and smiling in amusement at her, at her childishness, her excitement. He thought she was funny—and everything was ruined. She couldn't bear it. She wished she'd never caught the fish.

As if to steady himself he touched her arm, and she knew she must look up at him again, even with her lip caught between her teeth. He didn't say a thing, not with words. But he said as plain as plain, "Of course I'm amused. You're very . . . appealing—excited like that. So don't be silly." She drew in her breath almost like a sob.

At that instant a boat came by, and he turned from her abruptly and shouted, "Take a look at this, will you!" holding up the flounder. The people in the boat whistled and called back, "Some fish!" and he stood waving the fish, with a grin like a triumphant small boy's.

Like a small boy—and he wasn't putting it on. He was excited, too, about the big fish. That smile of amusement had been a man's smile, but there was a small boy inside him, too, and he stood right beside the small girl in her, bellowing about a fish.

"I was the one that caught it!" she called out to them, and the strangers, the lovely strangers cheered and waved.

She baited the hook again and tossed it over.

Chris settled back in the stern seat and struck a match. "It's a wonder the pipe didn't go overboard. Quiet, there!" he said sternly to the flounder under the seat.

Chris caught a medium-sized flounder; she caught one too small to keep. And suddenly she thought, This is the happiest moment of my life. I've never been so happy, and I'll never be so happy again. It made her want to cry, almost. If only this day could go on and on forever!

But it would remain. It would always be there for her to take out and look at whenever she wished, whenever she needed it.

She hadn't said one word aloud, but Chris took the pipe out of his mouth and answered, "This is something to stow away for the long winter evenings, isn't it?"

HER voice wasn't quite steady. "As long as I live, I won't forget it." She had to say it, she had to whisper his name urgently, "Chris! Chris!" but there wasn't any more to say. And as if he hadn't heard her, or as if he knew the words she couldn't say, he turned away and pulled up his line.

"Hand me another clam, will you?"

Then at last they rowed home, not talking much, and as he helped her out of the boat Chris asked, offhand:

"How old are you anyway, Ellen?"

For a wild instant she considered lying to him, but only for an instant. He had bent to take her hand, and his eyes were exactly level with hers. She looked into them, very brave. "I'm fifteen years old. Fifteen years and four months."

He laughed gently at the four "You'll keep," was all he said and s up onto the pier.

Bunny sat in her dark corner Gloucester hammock where she coul the dancers. She didn't expect Chris looking for her. She didn't even wan ask her to dance. It wasn't that afraid of her dancing, although tha tiny part of it. If she danced with hi turn into just another girl like the He'd mix her up in his mind with th wouldn't be clear and distinct, sitting dle a rowboat seat, in her blue jeans.

SHE watched him tensely, collectin detail and tucking it away carefull memory. He danced beautifully.

She sat very quiet in her dark cor any moment someone would discover pack her off to bed. It was late.

Then Chris was standing ove "Thought I'd find you somewhere he said. "I wanted to tell you good- leaving very early in the morning. Jin ing me a lift up."

She found her voice and said, "I' to you as you go by. You know our sur I'll be up there."

"Oh, but it'll be too early!"

"I get up early," she replied, a trac born.

He laughed, then stood looking d her. At last he said in a different ton had fun, didn't we?" She couldn't a her lips couldn't even form his name, And still he stood, and then, as if in ence to her thought, he bent towa Stopping halfway, abruptly, he reach and gave her shoulder a hard little s "Good-by, Ellen."

It wasn't yet morning. Much too Bunny turned over in bed, toward th dow. She must wait until the sky be lighten. If you shut your eyes the tim faster. But what if she dropped off to The horror of waking to broad dayligh the knowledge that he was gone ——

At last she got up, gathered her c stealthily, and went to the bathroo dress. Sis, in the other bed, didn't mo

It was cool and damp out on the sun and still too early. The birds had fi their first tune-up and were waiting n the sun. It was very quiet.

Suppose he didn't look up and se Suppose he'd forgotten her completely had a wonderful time with the others late last night, how could he remembe and yet he said her name, Ellen, in a special way. But it was only because h kind. He was kind and sympathetic, for her because no one else paid he attention.

But he'd said, "You'll keep." Why h said that? What had he meant? If he h meant anything, why had he said it? then that moment out in the boat they'd shouted over the fish together, a ple of kids, and the other moment when weren't kids at all and she'd whispere name and he'd turned away quickly t his hook, because ——

But she was fifteen years old. It al came around to that, again and again. could she expect? What did she want? then suddenly very tired, almost exhau she whispered, "Let him look up as he d by. That's all I want. Just to have him up at me."

The morning was so still she heard th start. She heard it come along the roa was opposite the house now, and she hear men's voices. There they were i roadster; Jim was at the wheel and Chri turned toward him, away from her.

They were past the house, past the with the sun deck, and Jim talked and nodded in agreement. He had forgotten They were completely past, going dow road.

Then with a sudden movement he tu looked back and saw her, waved and w again, waved until the car dropped int hollow and rumbled out of sight acros bridge.

THE

NARROW MARGIN

Even Mrs. Beale never knew how narrow it really was...

THE TELEPHONE on Fred Conlin's desk rang. He picked it up. "Conlin talking."

"Mrs. Conlin talking," the voice on the other end mimicked. "I just wanted to know if you'd be home for dinner at the regular time tonight, Fred."

Fred glanced at the calendar on his desk and said, "Looks as if I will, Mary. Anything special?"

"Well, I was wondering if you could pick up Nancy on the way. She's over at Susan Beale's birthday party, and it will be over about six. Would you stop for her?"

As Fred Conlin was driving down Locust Street toward the Beale house it occurred to him that Susan Beale must now be ten years old—the same age as his own daughter, Nancy—because they were in the same grade at school.

And if that was so, then it was already nine years since Susan's father was killed in that accident up state . . . nine years since he had gone to tell Susan's mother about the provisions her husband had made for her and the child.

He remembered how Tom Beale had kept wanting to put off talking about more life insurance—first "until he was better fixed," then "until next summer," and finally "until business picked up a little." But Fred had kept right on—and it was the additional New York Life insurance Tom Beale eventually did take that had made all the difference to his family. Fred was sure that even Mrs. Beale never fully realized by what a narrow margin she and Susan had missed being deprived of so many things that mattered . . .

Fred stopped the car and waved to Mrs. Beale as Nancy came running down the path.

As they were driving home the child said, "Dad, Susan had such a nice party today."

Fred smiled. "I'm glad to hear that, Nancy." He drove in silence for a moment, thinking how good it was to know that Susan would be able to have many, many nice birthdays just like the other children. Then he added, "Yes, Honey, gladder than you think . . ."

NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
51 Madison Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Naturally, names used in this story are fictitious.

FROM THE COLLECTION OF BLANCHE SMITH

Early Staffordshire tea set with a Clewes platter shows the New York Zoological Gardens. The Chelsea-type tea set was collected piecemeal.

Teapot Treasures

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

FOR a century and a half, shiploads of china in all imaginable shapes and patterns, made by famous makers, poured into America. Almost every home had its corner cupboard filled with Wedgwood, Spode, Leeds or Staffordshire.

Strictly speaking, of course, most of early America's family "china" was soft paste and semisoft ware, glazed and decorated, correctly referred to as "dinnerware." True china is porcelain, hard and translucent. In the early days it was more ornamental than utilitarian. Today, everything is classified as "china."

If you are a beginner, you should acquire an old-china reference book with plenty of illustrations for comparison. By identifying your piece with a known one, you can usually discover the name, the maker of the pattern, and the approximate age of your find. For further pointers on china collecting, see Page 114.

Typical of the delightful teapots collectors find in unexpected places. In the top row center is a Ben Jonson teapot which holds one gallon.

HAROLD FOWLER

Silver and platinum luster made in England from 1790 to about 1820 in imitation of precious metal was called the "poor man's silver," and is a collector's prize.

Smart Wives Choose Those Heavenly Bibb Sheets

YOU MAKE THE PRETTIEST PICTURE in a glamourous setting of Those Heavenly Bibb Sheets—so soft, so smooth, so snowy-white

Heavenly Values too!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

BIBB COMBED PERCALE
LADY BALTIMORE,® TYPE 140
KENNESAW,® TYPE 128

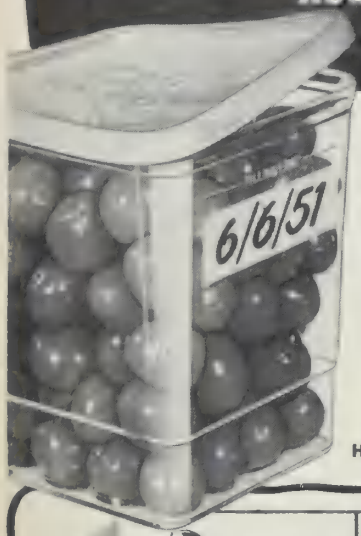
Bibb Sheets
WITH THAT HEAVENLY FEELING

EXQUISITELY TEXTURED . . . Heavenly to touch, these lovelier, longer-wearing BIBB Sheets bring blissful nights—joyful good mornings.

BIBB Sheets are the very finest you can buy in the three most popular types:

LADY BALTIMORE®—the finest quality muslin sheet made. Close woven, with more than 140 threads to the square inch for extra strength and amazing long service.

BIBB COMBED PERCALE—luxurious, silken-smooth texture. Lightweight, yet wonderfully strong and long wearing. Easy to handle and to wash. Economical to have laundered.



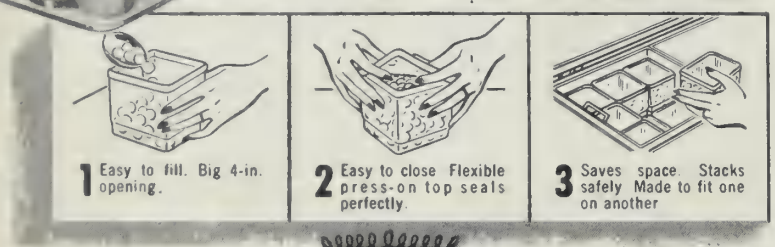
KENNESAW®—a beautiful muslin sheet designed for the thriftiest budgets—exceptional service at low cost.

You'll go starry-eyed over these Heavenly Values . . . offered at budget-saving prices this month. Ask for BIBB Sheets—today's smartest buy.

BB MANUFACTURING COMPANY • • • MACON, GEORGIA • NEW YORK • CHICAGO • PHILADELPHIA • AKRON • GREENSBORO, N. C. • DALTON, GA.

Amazing Plastic Discovery!

New airtight refrigerator container keeps foods fresh and firm . . . days longer!



Sensational new kind of food container, called FREEZ-TAINER, is made of strong transparent plastic. Flexible press-on top seals airtight. No more dried-up leftovers or icebox odors. Saves those expensive foods so essential to the defense effort.

Perfect, too, for storing frozen foods in your home freezer or locker. FREEZ-TAINERS are moisture-proof, leakproof, spillproof!

Today, buy a few of these handy new containers at your favorite dealer's. Use them for everything. You'll love them.

Handy 16 oz. and 25 oz. sizes.

1 Easy to fill. Big 4-in. opening.

2 Easy to close Flexible press-on top seals perfectly.

3 Saves space. Stacks safely Made to fit one on another

CROWN

Freez·Tainer

CROWN CORK SPECIALTY CORP. Division of Crown Cork & Seal Co., ST. LOUIS 15, MO.

I've got the sweetest refrigerator!

in Half the Time with Soda...

NO SCRUBBING... NO RINSING!

● No more "icebox odor!" Soda sweetens as it cleans, removes sour, musty odors that adhere to enamel. Just sprinkle soda on damp cloth and wipe inner surfaces. Spots and spills quickly disappear. Soda emulsifies greasy film, cleans without scouring. And there are no suds, no grit to rinse away. Wash ice trays in soda solution. Arm & Hammer or Cow Brand Baking Soda is pure Bicarbonate of Soda, U.S.P. Couldn't be safer and costs less than ½¢ a week. Recommended by 22 leading refrigerator manufacturers.

Write for FREE COOKBOOK. Church & Dwight Co., Inc., 70 Pine Street, N. Y. 5, N. Y.

Ripe Olives... in Salads

Elegant!

Try this

Yerba Buena Salad

Cut ½ cup ripe olives from pits into large pieces. Stir olives, 1 tbsp. chopped green sweet pepper, 1 tbsp. chopped green onion into 1 cup cream-style cottage cheese. Salt to taste. Peel, core 4 medium-sized tomatoes; cut into halves crosswise. Put halves together with filling of cheese mixture. Serve on salad greens. Top with parsley sprig. Serves 4.

ELEGANT—that's the touch ripe olives add when you serve them in the olive bowl, when you use them in your cooking. Write for free booklet of Elegant Ripe Olive Recipes: Olive Advisory Board, Dept. D-8, 16 Beale Street, San Francisco 5, California.

RIPE OLIVES from CALIFORNIA

CUT OUT AND PASTE ON CARD FOR YOUR RECIPE FILE

(Continued from Page 112)

Pointers . . .

- European and American teapots do not date earlier than 1700, and any china made even fifty years after that date is rare. Very little early china was marked by the maker and identification is made through comparing your piece with illustrations of similar pieces already authenticated.
- Borders are one of the best clues in identifying old china, for each maker had a variety of stock borders which he used with varying scenes and designs. One maker has left a list of 25 borders he was using in 1774.
- Oldest cups are without handles, have deep saucers and were small, for China tea was expensive. Substitutes for tea were brewed from bark and leaves of various kinds.
- Popular and therefore abundant a hundred years ago was Staffordshire china with scenes of American cities printed brown, mulberry and green. Also, po political figures from 1840 on were combination with one or more of th stock borders.
- Flowing blue was America's e china a century ago and is still not to find in many communities. Old wil also was abundant, and both plat tureens as well as plates are still hidi country cupboards.
- There are no standard prices china, either when buying or selling. the rarest pieces have been bought at sales for a few cents each, and th zealous collectors never pass up ar tunity to look in at wayside shops ondhand stores. Any collector will the story of every "find" in her c and each experience will be a unique, adventure with, of course, a happy again—don't yield. I can almost guarantee that in a few days she'll be sleeping through the night. If, by the way, she starts crying the minute you leave her snug and secure in her crib, try timing yourself for ten minutes before you go in. Likely as not she'll be asleep before the ten minutes are up." There was a silence as he poured himself another cup of coffee and lit a cigarette. "Another thing," he began again. "I feel that you and your husband are definitely overanxious about the baby, and you've got to watch this, as it will be harmful to her in the long run because she'll tend unwittingly to take advantage of your anxiety."

OUR OWN YOUNG MARRIEDS

(Continued from Page 45)

"I know we are," said Dawn, "and I've been trying to guard against it." Her eyes twinkled, and she began to laugh. "As a matter of fact, a few days ago I heard a loud crash come from her room. I rushed in and saw she had fallen out of bed onto the floor. She seemed all right, but I went to the phone and called the doctor anyway. 'Diana's just fallen out of bed,' I said, 'is there anything I should do?' There was a long silence, and then the doctor said slowly, 'Mrs. Norman, that's the first normal thing that baby's done since she was born!'"

Brother-and-Sister Rivalry

Betty Gray combines her job at the JOURNAL with caring for an active young son and daughter, and managing a large apartment.

"Our most serious problem," she said, "has been rivalry and jealousy between our son, three and a half, and our baby girl, one year old. It started right after Jennie was born, but we sent Stevie to his grandmother's for a visit, and the situation was eased for a bit. Then when she started to walk around and demand more and more of our attention, his resentment flared up again; he doesn't like guests to pay special attention to her, and since he has the physical advantage over her, he pushes her around or hits her when he gets a good opportunity. She senses the situation—just like a woman, my husband says—and teases him; takes his toys, pushes over buildings he is making. I can tell that Stevie is really churning inside, and it seems to me that he is more upset than he should be over the whole thing. I've tried keeping them apart; letting him play in his own room with a chair in front of the door so that she can't get in. Also, I've tried to build up things for them to do together—getting him to help me with her bath, for instance. But nothing has done much good."

Doctor Hohman nodded slowly. "This is a common situation," he said, and Betty Hoffman, the mother of three- and five-year-old sons, sighed her agreement. "Keeping the children separate all the time," he said, "is no solution. They've got to learn to get along, and parents should try to break up the pattern of children fighting, early in their careers. But what you should do, when Steve starts in on the rough business, is to put him in his room by himself and let him stay there for as long as half an hour or so. Don't explain; he'll like an argument and will know that as long as you are talking yo mean business. Many parents have b cess with using the word 'gentle' as a lus to good behavior; make it stand f If fighting starts and he does not res the word 'gentle,' isolate him; it is on a word stands for action that it h meaning for a child. There should conditioning on the positive side, rew him for good behavior. When he, stance, is gentle toward her volunta should be praised."

Patterns of Development

Ellie Simmons was at Doctor Ho left—very young-looking with her blo cut like a little girl's and in her lapel a of cornflowers that matched her blu Her baby, "F. P." (for Frederick Po is seven months old.

"Our only problem so far is th was recently weaned, and was a lit upset about that. We fed him on de and he settled on a four-hour sche perfect baby," she laughed.

"The question of demand feedin difficult one," said Doctor Hohman your case, it seems to have worked pe well, but there is always a possibilit some preposterous schedule of feedi be established; one that is hard o mother. It's best, for instance, to cut o night feeding as soon as possible, to pr the mother's strength. Does he sit up

Ellie nodded. "Stands up, too," sh proudly.

"In connection with this, it always a me," said Doctor Hohman, "how few p know the normal development patte their babies . . . at what age a baby sho doing what."

"Isn't there, though," asked Betty "a normal variation from the 'norma terns'?"

"Of course," said Doctor Hohman just about everything—but a baby sho sitting up alone by the age of six or most seven months. By the age of one he should have four words—usually 'ma and 'daddy' and two others with de meaning. At twenty-one months, he s be putting words together. Parents babies are not using short sentences b age of two should take them to a doctor tested."

Betty Hoffman broke in here. "I am ticularly interested in this, Doctor Hoh because one problem with our three- five-year-old sons, besides the rivalry tion which we have already gone into, is neither of them can pronounce his L's— say 'yeave it ayone,' things like that, wonder if I should do something about give them a chance to grow out of it."

"Don't worry about it yet," said D Hohman. "It's not necessary to bother pronunciation defects till children are their sixth year. After that, a little consi drill will probably take care of it.

"What about you?" he asked, turni Nora O'Leary Smith.

'his doesn't affect my son Stephen, who's two," said Nora, "but what do you about television for children?"

'he worst thing about television, I
:," he answered, "is that when children
h it, they are having something done hem, rather than doing something. It fore abolishes the desire to work, and onal inventiveness. Also many programs ad, and are preoccupied with guns, and at deal of violence. Only occasionally, if efully picked program is used as a sedaor as a reward for good behavior, is ision of benefit to a child, in my on." All of us, by now, wanted some coffee, and a tray of fresh cups was ght in from the kitchen. "Another thing is connection," said Doctor Hohman, ng himself to sugar, "is that most par-don't know how to play with their chil-
, and this leads children to depend more more on movies, television and such. In most people don't really enjoy their ldren. Some parents' interest stops with pride of having borne a child. Of course are prepared to be interested in taking of their physical needs, but not of their ation and emotional needs. Children t have parental interest in their learning warm participating in their need for vity and play. If the child is placid and going and not demanding, the average nt can enjoy the child because he has to t little effort. But if the child is very ve or demanding, and easily gets into ble, ire is quickly aroused and then nag-, scolding and too often angry spanking
w. Unfortunately, the little real enjoy-t the parent felt is dissipated and then res-tion and boredom and irritability envelop parent. Children are quick to sense ental boredom and lack of interest and then try to get attention and affection more bad behavior. It soon becomes a e."

o you ever believe in spanking?" asked ty Hoffman.

No!" was the emphatic answer. "Only e child is so out of control that nothing is possible. As a matter of fact, in most s, spanking can satisfy a child's desire for ntion and self-dramatization; and bes, spanking is nearly always done in er, and anger is seldom reasonable. Chil-n deserve reasonable, measured parental avior."

Jennie," said Betty Gray, "although she nly a year old, is ready for a little disci-
e. For instance, I've taken away most of small things in the living room, and put n out of reach, but there is a shelf of ks that must stay where we can get at n, and she can't resist taking them out throwing them on the floor."

"When she plays with the books, isolate her in her room for half an hour," said Doctor Hohman. "It'll work like magic if she's at all like most children. You have heard me recommend only one form of punishment—isolation. Isolation is the best method of depriving an action of the rewards children want most—attention, affection and dramatization."

"Another thing," said Betty. "Is it all right to send my three-and-a-half-year-old son out to play alone? We live here in the city, in one of the big housing developments, where there is plenty of space to play in."

"It all depends on the neighborhood," said Doctor Hohman. "I don't see why more young mothers don't get together and take turns supervising groups of their children while they are playing. And the same thing for baby-sitting. If a scheme like this were well organized, it would work beautifully. And mothers would get a chance to see other people's children misbehaving as well as their own, which is good."

Making Friends With Your Children

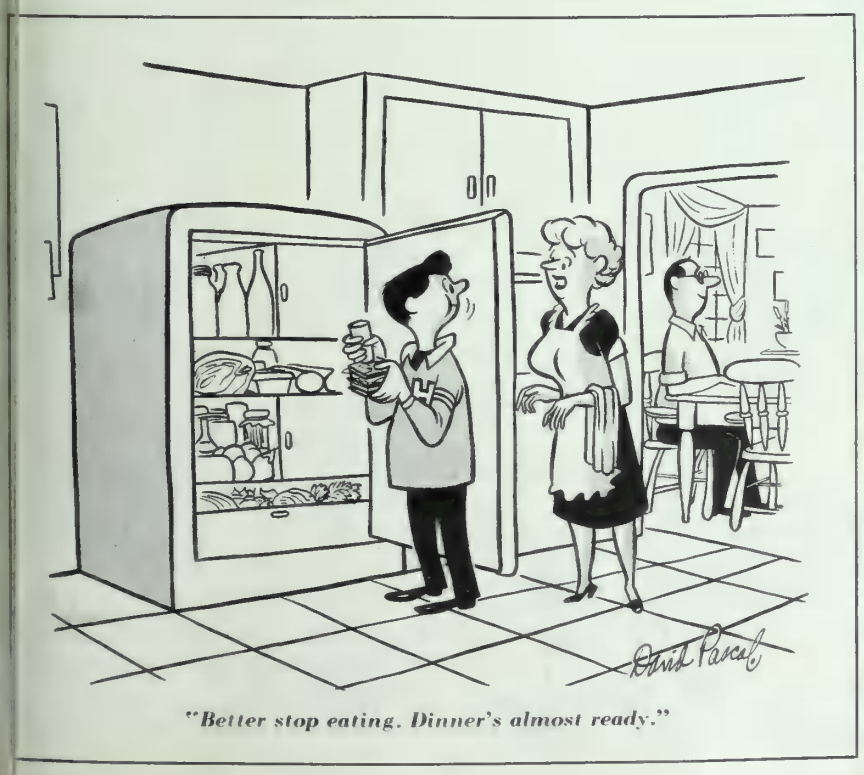
"The best advice I can give you," said Doctor Hohman, "is to make friends with your children. I can't stress this too much. Make contact with them. In fact, I think it would be a good idea if there were nursery schools in every public school so that the older students might make contact with the younger ones, and get experience in handling children that will be valuable to them later on."

"How can we do this?" we all wanted to know. "What concrete suggestions do you have that would help us in making friends with our children?"

"First of all," he said, "you must be incredibly patient. Children have an enormous amount of energy, and they have to do something with it.

"Never say a thing, and not follow through on it if it is at all possible.

"Learn to smile at children; don't jump at them; be calm and quiet.



"When you don't know what to do, do nothing.

"Do all kinds of things with them and show interest; paint, build with blocks, go on jaunts together, set time aside to play together. Children must have your time—that goes for fathers as well as mothers.

"When you play with them, get down on the floor with them, get down to their height level.

"Talk to them about all kinds of things as you would to a friend. Whether they understand all of it or not, and even if they are tiny babies, you're establishing a feeling of communication that is invaluable."

THE END

"Better stop eating. Dinner's almost ready."

SEND HIM OFF WITH AN HONEST MEAL

NOT "FLIMSY" FOOD!

AND HERE IT IS!

NABISCO SHREDDED WHEAT ...100% WHOLE WHEAT...

WITH MILK IT'S AMERICA'S GREAT BODY-BUILDING BREAKFAST!

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Serve the naturally nourishing breakfast that makes sense — NABISCO SHREDDED WHEAT! All whole wheat, as Nature intended, with bran and wheat germ left in! With a zesty goodness only honest food like this original Niagara Falls product can lay claim to! Get some — now!

THE BREAKFAST FULL OF POWER FROM NIAGARA FALLS

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

(Continued from Page 31)

country you drive through that do not have some kind of outdoor fireplace in nearly every yard. America has really moved outdoors, and this is a fine thing. To eat a leisurely meal under a wide serene sky makes living more gracious.

Connecticut has picnic tables, fireplaces, benches, stacked firewood in dozens of places along the roads, and on any summer day we can see families unpacking their picnics and setting forth the sandwiches. I love to see them, for it seems to me a symbol of our belief in pleasant family living, our faith in the future. How much better for the state to build those little havens than to placard the country with "Verboten"! The trees cast a green shadow over the tables, the quick cool brooks are just right for the children to wade in, the firewood kindles well.

Mamma was an inveterate picnicker, she never minded what was fashionable. Our picnics were not very restful, however, for father always wanted to drive miles and miles over some hideously bumpy road, climb at least three barb-wire fences, build a huge fire, and then eat as if the house had burned down and we had to get back to dig in the ruins for the silver. He always preferred some spot beyond a No Trespass sign, which made mamma and me nervous. Often we leaped nimbly ahead of a charging heifer. Or else he wanted to eat right in some farmer's front yard. Then when the farmer came to chase us off, father would end by sampling his well water, telling him the history of his land, and lugging a few rocks back to the car. Not restful for us at all. But mamma would get out the old black frying pan just the same at a minute's notice.

Our picnics today would be too tame for father. And our small charcoal fire he would have none of. His fires were real fires. He would stagger from the woods with a whole fallen tree and cry triumphantly, "Look out, Grace! Look out, Gladys!" We looked out. The fire would blaze. It was hard to get near enough to cook over it at all. And then father would lug pails and pails of water, sweat and panting. "You have to be sure it's ou he would say, flinging the fifteenth pailful the sodden, smoky ashes. "Got to be s Start a forest fire if you aren't careful."

Sometimes I wish as I lay the neat fra furters on the grill that I had father's re less exuberance. It's fine to be comforta and practical, but it was exciting to be w father.

When the goldenrod and chicory come o I have such a wistful feeling. For they are t signature of summer. The pure feathe spikes of gold and the sky-cool blue of t chicory flowers are lovely, but they speak September. Summer is so short; has it ways been so brief?

I hurry over to Mr. Sears for another ar ful of dazzling gladioli. The long blossomi stalks are exquisite—the white, the deep v let, the sunset colors. All the beauty in t world seems to be distilled into one pu shape and color and texture. I feel humble feel grateful to God when I carry such boun in my arms.

After a very hot burning-glass day, t faint coolness comes from the woods with smell of leaf mold and hidden fern. The ev ning is very gentle, the birds quiet down a the cockers dig a last desultory hole in t lawn and then go to sleep beside it. The ca yawn and stretch their graceful bodies a get a mouse look in their inscrutable ey George is milking. Fireflies spangle the tw light meadow. The nicotiana sends a flo tide of fragrance from the quiet garden. J pokes around the vegetables, finding anoth whole bushel of squash, but that is for t morrow's work.

I think of my friends all over the worl the known and the unknown, and I ser them the sun gold of the goldfinch wrappe in the fragrance of the white-and-rosy nicot ana, and pinned together with a star.

But Little Sister and Jonquil send pa marks brown with fresh-dug earth, whic they say, is most wonderful.

BLOWING HOT AND COLD

(Continued from Page 55)

Ready for anything. It may be 99° in the shade when you plan a meal, and cold enough for shawls and mufflers when the time comes to serve it. So you better watch it and be prepared. August isn't always torrid, so, if your meal is to be a cold one, it's well to have a hot soup ready just in case.

The simple menus I've planned for you this month should come in handy almost any day, hot or cold. Save you some time, too, I hope, for there are many things that are more fun to do in August than dreaming up something new to have next Tuesday. There are only three, for you will want to picnic or porch-eat some of the time. Take your choice. Mix them up and be as original as you please. Only remember, it's the time when vacationers are likely to drop in and you'd better be set. Once they get there, they're apt to stop a spell. And, if it's like other summers, you won't lack for visitors. (Home folks like to eat too. Appetites grow with the year.)

A supper for six. Or it could serve a dozen or even sixty—according to which branch of arithmetic you favor. True to our word, we have a hot soup ready to start with.

CORN-AND-CELERY SOUP

Cut and scrape 2 cups fresh corn from the cob. Simmer in 3 cups milk until the corn is tender. Add 2 cans condensed cream-of-celery soup, 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, and season with a little salt and pepper. Simmer together a few minutes until heated through.

One thing I'm not. I'm not stingy. In fact, I'm that original shirt-off-her-back girl—especially if the shirt has reached a certain stage. But no matter. I am generous wit chicken. We used to raise them, and, whe the neighbors got too disagreeable abou certain habits you can't break a chicken o we'd give the complainers a chicken pie ho from the oven, and that kept them quie I'm still generous with chicken, and here' one more two-legged dish:

CURRIED CHICKEN SALAD IN TOMATO PETALS

Steam a 5-pound roasting chicken. Don' boil it. Cool. Remove the meat from th bones; cut into largish pieces. Don't dice fine Add ½ cup diced celery, 1 cup diced tart peeled apple, 2 teaspoons grated onion, ½ cup seedless grapes, split in half. Blend 2 teaspoons curry powder with 1 cup mayonnaise and ¼ cup light cream. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt and a good sprinkling o pepper. Then add ½ cup toasted shredded almonds. Mix well; chill. Cut 6 tomatoes into sixths—almost but not quite through. Place tomatoes in lettuce cups, then fill with spoonfuls of chicken salad. Garnish with parsley

Chickens have livers. I do not know any riddles anent the chicken and the liver. care nothing about that old chicken-or-the egg gag. But I can take chicken livers o leave them alone. And, in this supper busi ness, I've taken them, and here's what I have done with them:

STUFFED EGGS WITH CHICKEN LIVER

Fry 3 strips bacon until crisp. Drain and crumble. In the bacon fat, sauté a liver from one chicken until tender. Drain. Dice into small pieces. Cut 3 hard-cooked eggs into halves. Sieve the yolks and combine with 3 tablespoons mayonnaise, 1 teaspoon minced

…ve… teaspoons chopped parsley, ⅛ tea… …oon… ushed dried tarragon, ¼ teaspoon …ion… lt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Moisten …th … easpoons cream. Mix well. Fold in … … d chicken liver and fill the cooked …itel… rough a pastry tube. Sprinkle with …pril…

…ere… little more to be said about this …al, …xcept that an easy way to serve …ter… lon for picnics or summer parties is …sti… s. Square off your melon in a rindless …ick… d cut into pieces about 5″ long and …sq… re. Insert a wooden skewer in each …ce… watermelon for a handle. Hang on …the… handles" and the juice will go where …will…

…re… e go—one, two, three. All of us …n … …vily on cold cuts in the hot-weather …so… Whether we choose to bake our ham … t… key or take tongue, corned beef and …n… … of a can and pick up all the summer …sa… s at the delicatessen, we still have to …ve… me sort of salad relish to go along …h… em. Doing a quick turn, we've put …s… d relish in a ring mold which goes well …h… y cold cuts. This is a new twist, and …y… ng bride will learn that the molded …g i… omething she should know as well as … … ows her wed…g… ng. You will …e… hat, just in …e, … e've started off …h… tomato soup. …ve… a choice of …rd… breads, and …e'… meal that will …nc… you in good …ad… blow it hot or …w… cold at the …m… nt of your …ic… The dessert is …p…, too, as it …u… be on an un…di… able day in …gu….

…PICKLE RING

…i… 1 nine-ounce …c… wchow pickles …op coarse. Mix …h… cup chopped …led ripe olives, …e… chopped green …p… and 3 cups …p… d celery. Blend …]… nt mayonnaise, …a… espoons chow…w… ickle juice and 1½ teaspoons grated …» Soften 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin …up cold water. Dissolve gelatin over …ter and cool slightly before adding it …h… vegetable mixture. Mix well and chill …il… lightly thickened. Pour into a 1½-…r… ring mold and chill until firm.

…ote—or not. If you think of a com…e… is only something cooked, forget it. … are more than one. My favorite is …s… l fresh fruit on rice. Have the fruit …l… he rice hot. Do what you wish and …a compote. You won't go wrong. And …ve it, here is:

…RESH-FRUIT COMPOTE WITH COCONUT

…ogether cantaloupe balls cut from 2 …oupes, 1½ pounds green seedless …, picked from the stems, 1 pint red …rries, and orange sections cut from 6 …s. Sugar the fruit and fold in ¾ cup …led coconut.

…tart right—keep right. The first … of our third menu is my favorite …n. And this time soup.

…ICKEN SOUP WITH SCALLIONS

…ans cream-of-chicken soup add 2 cups …n broth—canned clear chicken broth …ups water to which 2 chicken-bouillon … have been added. Heat. Just before …g, add ⅓ cup thin, sliced scallion tops. …2 minutes more. Serve with croutons or … crackers. Have them small. And hot.

… is a mousse? If you are asked the …is of the word "mousse," do not be thrown. It's not always a dessert, and it may be a jellied mold. Good red salmon is our choice for this one, and a more appetizing dish for a hot day is hard to come by.

SALMON MOUSSE

Drain two 1-pound cans salmon. Flake the fish. Soften 2 envelopes gelatin in ½ cup cold water. Heat 1¼ cups water with 2 bouillon cubes to boiling and dissolve the softened gelatin in it. Blend in 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ cup vinegar, ¼ cup lemon juice, 2 tablespoons sugar, 2 teaspoons grated onion and 2 teaspoons prepared horse-radish. Cool until the gelatin thickens slightly. Blend in 1⅓ cups mayonnaise, salmon and 1 cup coarsely chopped ripe olives. Turn into a 7-cup melon mold. Chill until firm. Unmold on a chop plate. Garnish with wilted cucumbers in lettuce cups and lemon halves filled with avocado cream. And if you don't like your cucumbers wilted, let's not. Let's have 'em crisp.

Avocado Cream: Blend ½ cup sieved avocado (½ of an avocado) with ½ cup thick sour cream, ½ teaspoon salt and a dash of Tabasco sauce.

Salute to summer. Peaches being at their best, and some ever-bearing raspberries are no doubt still to be had, let us give summer a final salute with:

PEACH-MELBA MERINGUES

Beat the whites of 2 eggs with a pinch of salt until stiff but not dry. Add ⅔ cup superfine sugar, a tablespoon at a time, beating well after each spoonful, so the sugar will be well dissolved in the egg white. Last, add 1 teaspoon vanilla extract and ¼ teaspoon almond flavoring. With a pastry bag and the rosette tube end, make 6 high rings, 4″ in diameter, of meringue on a greased cooky sheet. Bake in a slow oven, 225°–250° F., for 1 hour, until meringues are crisp. Turn oven off and let the meringues cool off slowly in it for 1 hour. (The meringues may be made on any yesterday or the day before.) Pick out ½ cup perfect berries from 1 pint red raspberries. Crush remaining berries and put in a saucepan with ¾ cup water. Simmer 5 minutes; strain through a fine sieve or cheesecloth. Add ⅓ cup sugar mixed with 4 teaspoons cornstarch; cook until thickened. (Frozen red raspberries can be used when fresh are not available.) Stir in the perfect red raspberries when the sauce is cool. Serve a peeled fresh juicy-ripe peach half in each meringue with the red raspberry sauce poured over it.

Survey with more than a compass. We now survey the fruits of our labors. We don't need any highfalutin tripods and compasses and those fancy gadgets I forget the names of to see the little peas grown into imposing bowers hung with beautiful green prisms, like chandeliers in the marble halls of dreamland.

And we needn't squint through shimmering glass to glimpse the high-hung tomatoes in their lush and scarlet gorgeousness, waiting to be plucked and to have the wind-blown dust brushed from their lovely coats and eaten under the shade of the cherry trees. You needn't necessarily wait for cut glass and silver, although those have their uses and their destinies.

The green beans and the yellow wax beans are ready for the hand of the plucker, and the cucumbers, royalty among vegetables, bask under the shade of the imposing corn—and such corn! No matter what the weather—here's to summer! THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Straw in an Ill Wind

By Georgie Starbuck Galbraith

I'm wrong, you're right: that's that,
you say;
No further words we'll squander.
My love, against a bitter day,
Here's something you might ponder:

Your headstrong arrogance is such
I long to kick or strike you.
For though I love you very much,
It's getting hard to like you!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Tomato-Cheese Macaroni

It's new 'n' EASY 'n' QUICK! Yes, and August is an ideal month for this tempting dish that's a meal in itself at any lunch or supper. Try it today! The folks will love it!

1 can (1¼ cups) Campbell's Tomato Soup
½ cup milk
2 cups grated sharp cheese
¼ cup finely chopped parsley
4 cups cooked macaroni
2 tablespoons buttered bread crumbs, if desired

Heat soup, milk and 1½ cups cheese over low heat; when cheese melts, add parsley. Blend with macaroni; pour into 2-qt. casserole. Top with remaining cheese and buttered bread crumbs. Bake 20 minutes in a hot oven (400° F.). Makes 6 servings.

Make it with America's favorite tomato cooking sauce!

Smoother...Richer...Better-Tasting!

DELICIOUS AS A SOUP... AS A POUR-ON SAUCE AND IN COOKING

Yes, Campbell's Tomato Soup is used more than any other brand of any tomato product—as an ingredient and pour-on sauce in every day cooking! That's because women everywhere know that food tastes better when they cook with Campbell's. Use it double-rich, double-thick—just as it comes from the can. Campbell's Tomato Soup is made from the world's choicest field-ripened tomatoes—luscious and juicy—blended with rich table butter and delicate seasonings. The finest tomato sauce you can buy—Campbell's Tomato Soup!

Yes ... CAMPBELL'S TOMATO SOUP MAKES THE BEST TOMATO COOKING SAUCE YOU EVER TASTED!

FREE COOK BOOK
50 PAGES
99 DISHES
FULL COLOR

Mail coupon to Anne Marshall, Campbell Soup Company, Dept. L 20, Camden 1, N. J.

NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____
ZONE_____ STATE_____

Jell-O Patio Salad

There's just nothing as cooling in summer as a shimmering Jell-O salad—unless it's an air-conditioned movie! In this newest Jell-O salad there are crisp vegetables, tart seasonings, and the taste-tingling goodness of Lemon Jell-O. Put all together (and so easily, too!), they add up to swell summer eating!

1 package Lemon Jell-O
1 cup hot water
1 cup cold water
1 cup diced tomato
½ cup cooked Lima beans
½ cup diced celery
½ teaspoon grated onion
2 tablespoons vinegar
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce

Dissolve Jell-O in hot water. Add cold water and chill until slightly thickened. Combine vegetables and seasonings and let stand about ½ hour to marinate. Fold into slightly thickened Jell-O. Turn into 1-quart ring mold. Chill until firm. Unmold. Garnish with tomato wedges and water cress, if desired. Makes 6 servings.

Cool, Cool for hot, hot days!

Jell-O Parasol Pretties

Isn't it fun all the wonderful ways you can serve Jell-O to the youngsters? Yes, Jell-O is the most convenient dessert around! Imagine how the young ones will love these pretty paper parasols—just as they always love the rich fruit flavors of Jell-O.

FROSTED LIME SHERBET

1 package Lime Jell-O
1 cup hot water
½ cup sugar
2 cups milk
1 cup light cream or top milk
¼ cup lemon juice
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
Dash of salt

Dissolve Jell-O in hot water. Add remaining ingredients. Freeze in tray until partially firm. Remove to bowl and beat with rotary beater until fluffy. Return to tray and freeze until firm. Freezes in 5 to 6 hours. Serve with custard sauce. Makes about 1 quart.

Strawberry-Pineapple Fluff

A hat designer would call this dessert a "creation"—we call it just another unusual way to enjoy the wonderful goodness of Jell-O. Pamper lazy summer appetites tonight with this newest Jell-O dessert. We think it's going to be a big favorite!

Dissolve 1 package Strawberry Jell-O in 1 cup hot water. Add 1 cup cold water and chill until slightly thickened. Reserve ⅓ cup. Whip remaining Jell-O as directed on the package. Fold in ½ cup diced canned pineapple. Turn into serving bowl. Spoon the ⅓ cup slightly thickened Jell-O on top. Garnish with additional pineapple. Chill until firm. Serves 6.

JELL-O FOR Red Letter DESSERTS

JELL-O IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK OF GENERAL FOODS CORPORATIO

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FONS IANNELLI

"A man is never wealthy until he is married," says Mario Occhialino, 34. "I mean by wealth a home, wife and children." And thrifty management adds bank account, new car, television.

UNHARRIED HOUSEWIFE

Meet the Occhialinos, of Poughkeepsie, New York, who feel a schedule must allow "time to just enjoy living." by BETTY HANNAH HOFFMAN

Dear Editor: I love reading the How America Lives section of your magazine. You tell about such interesting housewives—harassed women who keep working from morning till night, but who never seem to get caught up. After reading one of these articles, I always realize how lucky I am.

You see, I'm quite the opposite. I have a husband and two sons (8 years, and 4) to take care of, and I do all the work, including washing and ironing, in a five-room flat. Yet I have lots of time to read all the latest books and magazines, see all the good movies, gallivant around in the car, and even take a nap every afternoon (I have had tuberculosis, and this last is a "must"). My work is always caught up, and my house is always spick-and-span. My husband brings home $72 a week—he's service manager in the shop of the oldest automobile dealer in America—and I save $10 every week, faithfully. Our new car was paid for in cash, and we have a couple of thousand dollars in the bank.

It's all a matter of routine, and budgeting. Sometime, if you would like to do an article on a homemaker who has lots of free time, I'd love to tell you all about it.

Sincerely yours,
ROSE C. OCCHIALINO

LAST month the JOURNAL brought you the story of the harassed housewife in Akron, Ohio, whose three very young children totally disorganized her days. This month we present a household where the handling of children, housework and money is organized down to the last careful detail. Three things come first with the Mario Occhialinos, of 40 Parker Avenue, Poughkeepsie, New York, in this order: the family, good health, and keeping out of debt.

Not on the priority list are: activity outside the family for the wife, a college education for the children, a home of their own. On $80 a week for a family of four you can't have everything, figure the realistic Occhialinos, who have, however, achieved a family life which is warm, purposeful and exciting.

Mario Occhialino, thirty-four, is foreman of the service department of an automobile agency, with six mechanics under him, all working under the constant goading of impatient car owners. Yet when Mario comes home at night, weary and grease-coated, he lays aside the day's irritations with his coveralls. "If I didn't, I'd quit and start digging ditches tomorrow," says this sunny-natured Italian-American with a smile as wide and warm as the Adriatic.

Along about five o'clock every night, Mario begins thinking about some family project for the evening. In the wintertime it is apt to be cards and games or reading

HOW AMERICA LIVES

Payday chore: sorting money into envelopes labeled "Rent," "Food," etc. Rose always puts a little more than needed into each envelope, sometimes "borrows"—but never from the envelope marked "Savings" ($10 a week).

"I like nice things, don't like to pay full price for them." Rose buys everyth g but the children's shoes at sales, always for cash. On a particularly good y in clothing she often stocks up in quantity in various sizes for future with his two young sons, or cooking up a big batch of popcorn f a session with television. In the summertime, the whole family cl s out of its steaming third-floor flat and works in the vegetable gar n. or they all hop in the car and go swimming at a nearby public pool r just lie on the grass at College Hill to watch the stars come out. S h an evening invariably ends up at Rose's parents' big back yard f a cool drink and lots of lively talk, with eleven grandchildren scamper g underfoot.

Skilled stenographer Rose "gets bored with housekeeping at times," knows latter, too, is a skilled job; admits "The family comes first."

Mario says he neither worries nor plans, and he takes a dim view f any job which interferes with his enjoyment of the family. "Of cou e if a really good opportunity came along, I might feel differentl " When someone suggests that he start his own gas station, he po nts out this would mean working Saturdays and Sundays. "Uneasy lies e head that wears a crown" is one of his favorite quotations. He s content to let Rose do the planning and managing and saving. "A m n is never wealthy until he is married," says Mario. "What I mean wealth is a home, children and a wife." He also means a very tidy b k account which he probably never would have accumulated on his u

Mario's devotion to his attractive, beautifully spoken wife Ros s such that he declares that if he ever lost her, he would never ma y again; in fact, if he hadn't found her, he never would have marrie t all. Rose dismisses with a laugh these noble protestations from r good-looking guy, but admits in private that she is so crazy about h that she does everything she can to keep him feeling just that w

Mario thinks that his Navy training and experience (as machinist's mate second class) help in his present job. Hired four years ago by the auto agency, he is now head man of their service department at double the salary he received to start.

Sundays are spent with Rose's family. Soon after she became engaged Mario, tuberculosis put Rose in a sanatorium for eight months. Mario wa faithful visitor. "I often think how wonderful he was to stick by me like tha ument gets out of hand now and then when the oy has immediate appeal for both brothers. A ill bring family disciplinarian Rose to arbitrate.

"He's spoiled," Rose says of Richard. "A stubborn cuss, just like his mother!" Mario claims. Both smile; mostly the boys are sunny-tempered, well behaved.

Because he is easier to reason with than four-year-old Richard, Teddy makes most of the concessions to family peace. "Just for the time being," Mario assures.

Rose has good reason to believe in the single-minded devotion of husband, for they had been engaged only two months when she covered she had tuberculosis. "Most men would have scooted right n," she believes. "How many men would risk having an invalid e? But Mario gave up his job in another town and moved right in h my family, supporting himself with odd jobs, so he could see me the sanatorium every day. I was out in eight months, but I don't ieve I could have done it without Mario's constant encouragement."

Mario says, "When Rose phoned me she had tuberculosis she was nost hysterical. I knew that even if I never saw her again after she s well, this was the time to stick with her." Then, with a grin, "You
, I knew perfectly well how she felt about me."

The Occhialinos have now been married for ten years and have two ys, Teddy and Richard, aged eight and four. The older boy resembles dad, with a bright, outgoing personality, blond hair and blue eyes, hough he is pure Italian on both sides of the family. Richard, four, a walloping broad-shouldered 55 pounds of half roughneck, half oy, with dark hair, and eyes "like black olives," says Rose.

From the moment they were born, the children have been taught to obedient, careful of things, and always considerate of others.
ecause Rose requires a two-hour nap every afternoon (the lesion in r lung is completely healed, but she is taking no chances), she makes hard take a nap at the same time. This means that by nine o'clock night Richard is still wide awake. Both boys go to bed together, but rio is president of the Fathers' Club at the parochial school where bright ht-year-old Teddy is at the head of his class and (like his mother before him—skipped two grades) "the kind of pupil every teacher delights in having."

"More demonstrative" than Rose, Mario also has the rare ability to put aside irritations of the working day and enjoy wholeheartedly whatever evening fun the family chooses, from popcorn and TV to swimming or gardening.

Any holiday is occasion for a family reunion dinner, complete with homemade wine. The Occhialinos' family group is so large and congenial that they find little time for other social activities.

"I've risen a little higher in the world than my father—I hope my boys will go higher than me.

after the older one is asleep, Richard is allowed up for half an hour with his parents. He calls his special time "beating Teddy." Teddy understands the situation, but also mildly resents it. He is delighted when Richard fails to take a nap in the afternoon and so forfeits his special privilege.

Some might feel that perhaps Rose has made the boys overly careful. She is so germ-conscious that the boys hesitate to put in their mouths a piece of candy which has fallen on the ground.

Rose's insistence upon strict obedience, however, makes for an unusually harmonious household. The children come to meals promptly, go to bed when they are told, and ask her permission before they touch so much as one jelly bean in the candy dish on the buffet. This spring a traveling carnival came to town and pitched its tents just a block from the Occhialinos' flat, down near the freight tracks. For five nights the children could hear the tantalizing music of the carrousel and see the glitter of the Ferris wheel against the sky. Rose told the children they could go just once, and gave them each a quarter. They went the first evening, had a wonderful (Continued on Page 128)

Though the lesion in her lung is completely healed, Rose takes no chances with health, hers or her family's; naps every afternoon, gets nine hours' sleep each night, pays strict attention to her diet.

Man's flocks and herds

The earliest written records since the dawn of civilization bear eloquent testimony to the preoccupation of man with his flocks and herds. The propagation of meat animals brought forth the best thinking of those primitive days, for the threat of famine was ever-present. Man's earnest groping for knowledge in the field of animal husbandry availed him little until research methods were available which substituted fact for fiction. Although management practices and breeding methods steadily improved, little was accomplished in either prevention or arrest of animal diseases until very recently. Now rapid progress is being made. Lederle has made available many effective agents for the prevention and control of infection in animals, and has originated startling advances in the fields of animal nutrition and chemotherapy. Lederle research has produced such outstanding contributions to livestock raising as SULMET* Sulfamethazine, sulfaguanidine, AUROFAC Vitamin B_{12} and Antibiotic Feed Supplement, aureomycin, and a number of equally useful products. In the field of immunology, Lederle vaccines and sera for animals are known wherever livestock are raised.

It is not by mere chance that America leads the world in the practical achievements that flow from industrial research. Under a system of free enterprise which has, since the inception of this republic, consistently encouraged the application of man's knowledge and skills to economic and scientific problems, large organizations have been enabled to bring about those great concentrations of scientific personnel and technical equipment necessary to eliminate many hindrances to man's economic development.

Lederle

(Pronounced Led'-er-le)

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. TRADEMARK

LEDERLE LABORATORIES DIVISION AMERICAN Cyanamid COMPANY 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20, N. Y.

MOTHERS!

GIVE YOUR FAMILY THE FRUIT THEY NEED.
THE WAY THEY LIKE IT!

Made from California's finest fruits—the ready-to-serve way to give your entire family its daily fruit requirement! Luscious as a food drink ...and in punches, sauces, dressings, sherbets, desserts! Write for free recipe folder, Dept. L.

Heart's Delight
Brand
The Original
FRUIT NECTARS
APRICOT · PEACH · PEAR

RICHMOND-CHASE COMPANY, SAN JOSE, CALIF.
Packers of Heart's Delight and Diet Delight Foods

NOW you can DIET DELIGHTFULLY with Diet-Delight

Brand
DIETETIC FOODS

PACKED WITHOUT ADDED SUGAR OR SALT
APRICOTS · CHERRIES · PEARS · PEACHES
FRUIT COCKTAIL · ASPARAGUS · SPINACH
Available at most food stores at economical prices

DELICIOUS MONEY SAVERS

By
LOUELLA G. SHOUER

GOOD cooks usually like to cook, but not all good cooks lik[e] budget. Rose Occhialino says, "It's my job to set as good a tabl[e] I can on the money I have to spend. I really like to cook and plan [the] meals, although doing the dishes and cleaning up after a meal so[me]times gets me down. Ours are a combination of Italian and Ameri[can] dishes, but most of the special things I make are naturally Italia[n]

Tomato project. The one garden surplus the Occhialinos can is tomatoes. Last summer they put up 53 quarts—ample for Rose's sauces and Italian specialties through the winter. Because their own vines didn't produce enough for their quota, they went out to a farm one day after a storm, waded through mud, and picked all they wanted for 50 cents a basket. At nine o'clock that night they were still canning. Incidentally, Rose puts a leaf of basil into each jar when she adds the salt. If you can buy or beg some basil when you do your own tomato canning, give the basil treatment a trial—we recommend it.

The garlic-and-parsley duet. Practically every one of Rose's specialties, you will notice, starts with "fry garlic and parsley in oil." She learned this seasoning trick from her mother, who comes from the province of Tuscany, near Florence, Italy. After a week of trying these recipes, we, too, were completely won over to its rightness. The flavor of the garlic or the oil, if you use olive, is never evident when the dish is finished—but the blended flavor is wonderful. Could it be the parsley that does the tempering?

VEAL RISOTTO

(Approximate cost, $1.09)

Fry 1 split clove garlic and 1½ tablespoons chopped parsley in 2 tablespoons salad oil, then add ¾ pound stewing veal cut into ½" cubes. When the meat is well browned, season with 2 teaspoons salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper and add 1 quart canned tomatoes—or, if you have plenty of fresh ones, a good number of these, skinned and cut into pieces. Cover and simmer until meat is tender (1–1½ hou[rs] Add 1 cup raw rice and from 2 [to] cups canned chicken broth. C[ook] covered, until rice is tender and [all] liquid has been absorbed—about [15] minutes. Serves 4.

Soup while you sleep. An aftern[oon] nap is a must for Rose. Practic[ally] every Friday she makes a big po[t of] Roman bean soup for supper [for] hearty one and meatless. "I put [the] soup on to cook right after lunc[h]," Rose says. "It simmers along whi[le I] rest."

ROMAN BEAN SOUP

(Approximate cost, 50¢)

Pick over and wash ½ pound Ro[man] beans. (Roman beans are speckly r[ed] Cranberry, kidney, pinto, or any [other] beans, for that matter, will do if [you] can't buy Roman beans. Cover wi[th] quarts cold water and add 3 st[alks] celery, 3 carrots and 1 onion, cut [up]. Cover and simmer 1½ hours until [the] beans are almost tender. (Here's y[our] chance for forty winks, if you're [time] minded. That hammock's going [to] waste.) In due time, fry 3 tablespo[ons] chopped parsley and 2 cloves ga[rlic] crushed or minced, in 3 tablespo[ons] salad oil. Add to soup with 1 [can] canned tomatoes. Season with 4 [tea]spoons salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper ⅛ teaspoon dried basil or ¼ teasp[oon] chopped fresh basil, if you have Cover and simmer half an hour m[ore] until beans are tender. Remove 2 c[ups] of the whole beans with a slotted sp[oon] and save for later use. Put the remain[ing] beans, vegetables and juices throu[gh] food mill or sieve. Add ½ cup was[hed] raw rice and cook until rice is ten[der]. Reseason to taste with salt and pepp[er]. At this point you can either put [the] whole beans back into the soup o[r] you are receptive to ideas, hoard th[em] till next day. In any case, serve

J. DI PIETRO

Rose Occhialino's Roman bean soup gets off to a good start.

so› in large bowls with grated Par-mian cheese to sprinkle on top and lo› of fresh Italian bread to eat with
t. This makes about 7 cups.

SECOND-DAY ROUNDUP

(Approximate cost, 97¢)

Sc›on and brown 4 pork chops. Add 2 ›ps leftover bean soup. (There will ›come left if you are only four and di›'t have seconds.) Add the 2 cups sa›d-out beans. Cover and simmer u› l chops are tender, about 45 min-u›. If you had put back all the beans u› the soup when you made it, this nture, too, does well by the chops.

Thrifty surprise. Now you wouldn't l›k a so-called tough cut, such as ›nd of beef, would make a tender ›n roast. Rose didn't either, until sh› tried it. But if you like your roast
›f rare and consider rib or sirloin ›st too much of a luxury, this is for y›. A 3-pound piece of eye of the ›nd costs in the neighborhood of
$›and will serve 4 persons 2 meals.
He's how Rose goes about it:

EYE-OF-THE-ROUND ROAST BEEF

(Approximate cost, $3.23)

S›son a 3-pound piece of eye of the ›nd with salt and pepper. If your ›cher has not wrapped a thin layer ›uet around the roast—this, by the w›, is a boneless cut, no waste—s›inkle chopped suet over the top of t› roast to keep it moist. Put it in a r›sting pan and sprinkle chopped ›on over and around the meat.
Bast in a moderately slow oven
3›° F., approximately 2 hours—to t› rare stage, which you can judge
b›t by using a meat thermometer.
Mke gravy from the onion and drip-›gs in the pan. "Once when I forgot t› put onion on the roast, we all won-›ed why the gravy didn't have its u›al good flavor," Rose says. "And ›en you carve the roast, keep the ›f slices very thin, if you want it to ›tender."

Remember this one! Rose's father, who lives nearby, has an herb garden. She can go over and snip a few fresh herbs for her cooking whenever she's of a mind to. There's plenty of mint and sage, fragrant basil for her tomato sauces and her favorite herb, rosemary—"Particularly good," she says, "sprinkled on the roast pork before you put it in the oven or to flavor our favorite chicken dish."

CHICKEN WITH ROSEMARY

(Approximate cost, $1.59)

Season a chicken, cut up for frying, with salt and pepper. Simmer—here we go again—1½ tablespoons parsley, chopped, 1 onion, chopped, and a big clove of garlic, minced, in 2 tablespoons salad oil. Spoon out the vegetables and save till later. Add 3 tablespoons more salad oil and fry the chicken in it until golden brown. Add 2 tablespoons butter or margarine to the pan, sprinkle a little more salt and pepper and ¼ teaspoon rosemary over the chicken. (This is dried rosemary, which you can buy in a jar. You may not have rosemary on your shelf now. But it's in most grocery stores and well worth adding to your spice and herb collection. If you're lucky enough to have rosemary in your garden, use 2 teaspoons minced fresh rosemary. It's the rosemary that gives this dish its specially good flavor.) Now add ¼ cup cider vinegar diluted with ¾ cup water. Mrs. Occhialino uses sauterne wine instead of water and vinegar. Put back the fried onion, parsley and garlic. Cover and braise down until the chicken is tender—about ½ hour—adding more liquid as needed. Thicken juices with a little flour and water, blended smooth.

Serve chicken and the good gravy with cheese rice. Toss 3 cups hot cooked rice with 6 tablespoons grated Romano cheese, ⅛ teaspoon pepper and 3 tablespoons melted butter or margarine. This is heavenly tasting, and Mrs. Occhialino serves it with practically all meats, in place of potato.

HOW AMERICA LIVES

"Lookie! WAFFLE CREAMS"

Give yourself a cookie-thrill! Creamy-filled golden wafers make NABISCO WAFFLE CREAMS inspired eating! Like all cookies from NABISCO, they're world-beaters! The red NABISCO seal leads you to all the heavenly kinds, in regular or cellophane packs! Don't miss any of 'em!

When you buy cookies in cellophane - you can't see flavor! But you know it's there when you see the red NABISCO seal

NABISCO

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Only one soap gives your skin this

Exciting Bouquet

And Cashmere Bouquet is proved extra mild . . . leaves your skin softer, fresher, younger looking!

Now Cashmere Bouquet Soap—with the lingering, irresistible "fragrance men love"—is proved by test to be extra mild too! Yes, so amazingly mild that its gentle lather is ideal for all types of skin—dry, oily, or normal! And daily cleansing with Cashmere Bouquet helps bring out the flower-fresh softness, the delicate smoothness, the exciting loveliness you long for! Use Cashmere Bouquet Soap regularly . . . for the finest complexion care . . . for a fragrant invitation to romance!

Complexion and big Bath Sizes

Cashmere Bouquet Soap

—Adorns your skin with the fragrance men love!

HOW AMERICA LIVES

THE LAST WORD!

Are you up to date on the latest word pronunciations? Check yourself on the following list:

Controversial	1. Contro-VER-shal	2. Contro-VER-sial
Harass	3. Ha-RASS	4. HA-rass
Despicable	5. DES-pikabl	6. Des-PIK-abl
Employee	7. Employ-EE	8. Em-PLOY-ee
Pianist	9. PEE-uh-nist	10. Pe-AN-ist
Protein	11. PRO-teen	12. PRO-te-in

All pronunciations are correct, but if you checked numbers 1, 4, 5, 8, 10 and 1 you are using preferred pronunciations!

Sound Yourself

WHEN pretty Rose Occhialino visited the JOURNAL Worksh recently we were impressed with the way she glided gracious and effortlessly through innumerable introductions to staff member All Journalites, from secretaries to editors, were treated to a friendl spontaneous smile, a firm handshake and Rose's use of the individual name. She promptly endeared herself to the young people. How By remarking simply and sincerely, to one girl, "With that shinir hair you belong in the beauty department," and to another, "I mu remember to pin a flower on my dress, yours looks so pretty!" Eve her briefest discussions with editors were flatteringly highlighted wit accurate references to their specific pages.

People do not acquire such engaging qualities of personality b chance. When Rose was asked how she managed to remember th various names and duties of the people she had met, she answered, " purposely took a JOURNAL refresher course in advance of my trip." B reviewing pages and studying editors' names and photographs, Ros equipped herself with a firm conversational footing for her visit. Sh delighted the people she met, and won a reputation for genuine courtesy

It's All in the Family

With little effort and no cost, all of us can improve what we hav to say as well as the way we say it. Domestic Relations courts repo the most common reason a husband gives for leaving home is "m wife's nagging voice." Dr. James F. Bender, speech authority, tell

THE ANSWER IS YES

Do you speak as courteously to servants as you do to friends?

Do you regularly add to your vocabulary by looking up definitions of unfamiliar words you hear or see?

Do you keep your voice natural and conversational when telephoning?

Even if you know what the other person is going to say, can you let him finish without interrupting?

Do you depend on your choice of words rather than the volume of your voice to win an argument?

TIPS ON TALKING

If you have an important telephone call to make, rehearse out loud what you plan to say. Words are always mor persuasive, authoritative or convincin when presented unhaltingly.

When you are unsure of the nam of the person to whom you have jus been introduced, ask to have it re peated or spelled out, if necessary. I flatters others to know you really care

If you are a working girl, learn th special words and phrases which ar a part of your company's business. I makes you a more valuable employee

Read something each day. Ten o fifteen minutes with a book of poetry the editorial page of your newspaper o a chapter on child psychology wi make you a more interesting person and give you something to talk about

DONALD STUART

Rose Occhialino enjoys a dinner date with her husband, Mario, dresses for it with special care. Discussion of the day's "worries" is abandoned in favor of small talk, gaiety and laughter!

Out

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

s that children learn their speech habits from their mothers. Probbly your husband is perfectly happy and possibly you like the vay your children sound. But with such emphasis on the imporance of vocal harmony at home, it might be fun—and helpful—to liscover the way you sound to the people who mean the most to ou. Following are some of Doctor Bender's suggestions for detectng and perfecting your sound effects:

Is That Me?

Most women's voices are higher than their owners suspect. Often hey are shrill or nasal. An entertaining, if not always gratifying, way o find out about yours is to have a recording made which can immeliately be played back for you. But if you prefer to make your disovery at home, try this: Stand in the center of the bathroom, cup your ears until they make right angles with your face and talk to the ile. The words should bounce back with clarity and pleasant modulaion. Still feel unsure? Then ask someone: your mother, husband, lose friend or boss; someone who wants you to be your most attracive. If the answer is less than complimentary, then it's time to tune up!

Here's How!

Did your voice sound dull, monotonous? It is possible, you know, or the most exciting idea or the tenderest thought to sound humdrum and unconvincing if delivered (Continued on Page 139)

Sound others out. Interest yourself in other people by asking them questions about themselves, their work, hobbies, children, favorite vacations. If you listen attentively, you will be sure to find a mutual bond of interest which makes for genuinely good conversation.

Make a conscious effort to talk at an easy, conversational pace. Nervous spluttering betrays your self-consciousness, makes others feel uncomfortable too.

Think out your thoughts before you begin talking. Hanging phrases, such as "er-ah," "what I mean is," "it seems as if" weaken your story, make you appear vague and unsure of yourself.

Fall into the mood of the party. Invading a purely social affair with a monologue on your political views or household problems won't encourage second invitations.

Don't overuse the personal pronoun. It makes you appear selfish, ungracious and bossy to refer constantly to "my car," "my house," "my children," "my plans."

Dress appropriately for the occasion. Self-consciousness about your clothes or grooming can make the most promising evening a shattering experience! If you are unsure about the type of clothes which you are expected to wear, it is perfectly correct to check beforehand with your prospective hostess.

Weathervane*

...TO WEAR FROM SEASON TO SEASON

THE SUIT WITH THE INVISIBLE PRICE TAG:

wonderful looking, perfect-fitting Weathervane, in the rayon suiting Celanese* weaves for us. Unbelievably, only $25.

Weathervanes tailored by*

Handmacher

Solids, checks, cross-dyes; sizes 10 to 20, 7 to 15 and young Proportioned Plus sizes, 10+ to 20+. At one fine store in your city. For its name, write Handmacher-Vogel, Inc., 533 Seventh Ave., N. Y. 18

PAT. REG.

PEQUOT
PLUS-SERVICE
SHEETS
PILLOW CASES

PEQUOT
Fine Combed
PERCALE
SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES
OVER 200 COMBED THREADS PER INCH

Cool, soft, yet oh! so sturdy that's Pequot Plus-Service—more than 144 threads per inch. Sweet, deep sleep also has been woven into every one of the more than 200 threads per inch in Pequot Fine Combed Percales! Small wonder Pequots are so popular for summer slumber!

To help you select the right sheets, send for new booklet "Do's and Don'ts"—it's FREE!

PEQUOT MILLS
Dept. L-5 • Salem, Massachusetts

More than 40 million
PEQUOT SHEETS are continuously in use

"The Nation Sleeps on PEQUOT SHEETS"

UNHARRIED HOUSEWIFE

(Continued from Page 122)

time, and never asked to go again, although their cousins and other friends haunted the place.

In parochial school Ted gives every indication of being like his mother, "the kind of student every teacher delights in having." A full year younger than his third-grade classmates, he stands near the top of his class. "Just where he should be," says Rose.

Rose and Mario see to it that their children have plenty of good times. "You have to put yourself in the child's place sometimes," believes Rose. "For instance, you can't expect children to be quiet as mice when grownups are talking and they're bored to pieces."

Boredom is a negligible part of these boys' lives. The neighborhood swarms with children of all ages and there is always a game of cowboy or baseball or marbles to be had simply by running down two flights of stairs. Rose loves to get outdoors herself, and every morning and afternoon takes the boys out visiting or shopping. All of her four sisters and her parents live within walking distance, and she also has the family car at her disposal every day.

Rose Cortopassi Occhialino is one of five daughters of an Italian couple who emigrated from Tuscany to New York in 1910. Her father, a poor tenant farmer, came here in hopes of improving his lot. Gradually he picked up a smattering of trades—carpentry, plastering, painting—and although he cannot read or write, he put five girls through high school and one of them through Vassar, owns two houses (made into six apartments) in Poughkeepsie and a farm in Italy.

Papa Cortopassi has turned the gray dirt of his Poughkeepsie city lot into a picturesque bit of old Italy with fig and peach trees, a grape arbor, and herb garden for making his own wine vinegar. The spacious ground-floor Cortopassi flat is always alive with bustle and laughter and the aromatic smells of garlic and spices. An unmarried daughter lives with the elderly couple and takes care of Mrs. Cortopassi, who has never fully recovered from a stroke a number of years ago. (The stroke occurred the day after she learned that Rose had tuberculosis.) Rose is intensely attached to her family, and not a day passes that she doesn't visit her mother. So close is the family that Teddy and Richard call two of their aunts "Mom Edith" and "Mom Alga." Indeed, with all the events of this huge family, with five daughters, four sons-in-law and eleven grandchildren—the birthdays and anniversaries, the baptisms and confirmations—Rose and Mario have little time left for people outside the immediate family.

Rose, who was always smart and quick to learn, skipped two grades in school and graduated from high school at fifteen with all the top honors in the commercial group. Her parents' beliefs on how to raise a family, based upon the customs of their Italian childhood, frequently made her resentful. "In high school, I was supposed to be home from all dates by ten-thirty. When I began earning my own living, I had to turn over my whole pay check to mother."

Rose is proud of her Tuscany heritage, and very sensitive on the subject. "Some people tend to look down on you just because you're Italian. I never let them get away with it. I worked with a man once who was very mean to the Italian stenographers in the office. One day I told him, 'For a man as well educated and well known in Poughkeepsie as you are, you're about the rudest man I ever met.'" From then on, Rose got the courtesy and respect her work deserved.

Mario's father emigrated from Peso, Italy, and married the daughter of his Albany landlady when she was fifteen and he was thirty-five. He still runs an elevator in an Albany office building. Mario was the oldest of six children and finished high school in 1934, just in time to meet the depression head on. He took whatever jobs he could find—laborer, distributing handbills, painting, clerking, working in a print shop. In those days, if you found a job that paid twenty-five cents more, you walked across the street and took it." His lowest-paid job was butchering meat from 7:30 in the morning until 10:00 at night for $2 a day.

Rose met Mario when she had a civil-service job with the Public Health Department in Albany. He had an apartment with his sister Edith and another girl. The place was always crowded with young Italian boys in search of free refreshments and of innocent fun. They kept telling her about Mario. "You'd like him," they'd say. "He's tall and he reads books." One night when she came home from a movie with Edith, one of the boys announced, "Mario's upstairs."

Rose walked over to the hall mirror and fixed her hair. "Just like it was all predestined," murmured Edith. Rose continued unhurriedly upstairs. "In a minute I saw the wide white smile of his and that dirty blond hair, I thought, 'There's the man I'm going to marry.'"

Mario, who was broke and out of work, entertained no such thoughts, although he was immediately attracted by the way Rose spoke, and moved, and looked. Dating was difficult, as Mario had absolutely no money and it never occurred to Rose to do such an unwomanly thing as to foot the bill. Instead she put her ingenuity to work and entered all sorts of contests to win them free movie seats and prizes. The first prize they won was a living-room suite. They sold it.

The next prize was a radio. By this time Mario was sufficiently launched upon the road to matrimony to suggest that they keep it.

Rose was eighteen when they met, a willowy slender five feet eight, weighing only 120 pounds as against her comfortable 150 pounds today. Away from their mother's watchful eye, the two sisters snatched meals on the run, worked hard at their jobs, and seldom went to bed before midnight. Rose was soon feeling way below par. It was a great surprise, therefore, the day a routine chest X ray revealed a moist lesion in her lungs; there was TB in the family and Rose had always secretly dreaded it. Luckily, the disease was discovered in such an early stage that her eight-month stay in the sanatorium was almost pleasurable. She had no cough, no sputum, no symptoms of any kind. Because the public sanatorium in Poughkeepsie was full, she was allowed to stay at a private institution at half rates ($18 a week) and enjoyed a bedroom and sitting room of her own.

Next Month

HAVE you dreamed of burning bridges behind you, pulling up your stakes, and starting all over again? Would you have the courage to do what Harry Hulce, of Gary, Indiana, did—throw over a white-collar job to become a laborer again in order to bring health to your wife and the great open spaces of the West to your three children? Don't miss this inspiring chapter in the September issue.

A NEW START IN LIFE

By ROGER BUTTERFIELD

How America Lives, in the September LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

WHAT WE BELIEVE IN

ROSE OCCHIALINO, a Roman Catholic, feels a close personal relationship with God and the saints. "I believe in God, though I think I could be more religious than I am," she confesses, "and I am a firm believer in doing unto others as you would that they should do unto you. I thank God often for all my blessings. I have so many things to be grateful for—my continued good health and being able to do what I have in spite of tuberculosis; a wonderful husband, two lovely boys, a nice home, no financial worries—that I would be very smug indeed if I accepted them all as my rightful due. I can't believe that I have so much through just myself. Someone else is guiding us."

Six months after she was discharged, Rose was married. Mario was earning $14 a week as a paint shop in Albany. Rose, back in her old job at the Public Health Department, was getting $17. With her customary ingenuity ("Rose is wonderful at writing letters," says Mario), she wrote to Socony-Vacuum and got Mario a job as a service-station attendant for $21 a week. Rose kept on working for another two years, then quit to have her first child. When Teddy was five months old, Mario was drafted into the Navy. The next two years took him from Florida to California and all over the Pacific on a troop transport. As a machinist's mate second class the training he received has been invaluable help to him in his present job.

Rose worried about him so much that she developed severe stomach trouble which disappeared after she left her baby in sister Inez's care and took a job. She supported herself and the baby on her $1575-a-year salary and saved almost all her $80-a-month allotment. When Mario returned, they were able to buy their first car.

For the past four years Mario has been working at the Van Benschoten Auto Agency (Dodge and Plymouth) in Poughkeepsie. The owner, who started the business as a bicycle shop back in 1891, believes he has the oldest auto shop in the country. Mario was hired as a lubricating man at $40 a week, is now head man of the service department at double the salary. On dance nights Mario collects tickets at the Tennis Club where he is well known and liked among what Rose terms "the Poughkeepsie Four Hundred." He is president of the Fathers' Club of the parochial school Teddy attends, a Cub Scout leader, and a member of the Knights of Columbus.

Rose, for her part, devotes her considerable skills to homemaking. Occasionally she takes a part-time stenographer's job, more for the stimulus than the money, but finds herself so tired and cranky by the time she is preparing dinner that she soon quits. "After all, the family comes first, even if I do get awfully bored at times with housekeeping." She guards the family's health with great care, paying especial attention to their diet. "Cost is not one of my economies," she says, "using lots of butter over the vegetables. The Occhialinos eat plenty of salads, fresh fruit and a variety of meats, as well as Italian dishes such as hearty homemade soup, spaghetti and ravioli.

Rose takes a two-hour nap every day from one until three, tries to get to bed at night before eleven and stays there nine full hours. Mario co-operates by getting his own breakfast and Teddy's and helping him off to school. Rose reports with clockwork regularity for a chest X ray every six months, worrying about it for weeks in advance. "It wasn't so bad going into a sanatorium at first, but now the idea of being separated from Mario and the children just kills me." Fortunately, she has had no cause whatever for alarm.

Money is Rose's third great preoccupation. Mario has only recently been earning as much as $80 a week, yet the Occhialinos own a car, a $360 television set, a new $250 range, new living-room sofa and chairs costing $325, a brand-new $100 dinette set, and still have more money in the bank than many couples with an income four times as big.

The Occhialinos buy on a strictly cash-and-carry basis. "If we weren't so well off financially," explains Rose, "I might consider having a charge account." She uses the envelope method in budgeting, and here her real genius at managing is displayed, for she always puts more money into each envelope than she needs. First of all, $10 each week for the savings account is tucked away from the $72 Mario brings home. This is one envelope she never touches. However, in the other ones, for gas and fuel, rent and food, there is always a surplus that she can borrow from.

Rose makes it a point of pride never to buy anything in the way of clothing at the original price (except the children's shoes). If she finds a pair of trousers for her boy marked down from $5 to $2, Rose buys not only size 6 but sizes 8, 10 and 12. "I look ahead. I have drawers full of clothes we don't need right now, but will someday."

The Occhialino apartment is, as Rose claims, "always spick-and-span," but she does not tackle house cleaning with the aggressiveness of a woman to whom every speck of dirt is a personal insult. "When I clean," she says, "I do one corner at a time, never disarranging everything in the room at once." Several times a day she empties ash trays or straightens slips covers, but all in an easy, deliberate way. Each night after supper she sets the table for breakfast and puts the water and coffee in the pot. When the television set is turned off, she picks up the empty glasses and crumbs, leaving a neat and straightened room to greet them in the morning. All her housework is accomplished in the morning, generally by eleven o'clock.

Rose used to be an avid movie fan, but since they acquired a television set she goes only about twice a month, picking the pictures with great care. She particularly enjoyed The Bicycle Thief and All About Eve. The Occhialinos read six magazines regularly, and use the local library extensively.

Eventually the Occhialinos hope to own a house of their own, but Rose, with her usual hedging against the future, wants to live on one floor, with an apartment above which they can rent. Mario realizes it will be years before they can afford to build the kind of house his perfectionist wife wants.

They expect to see both boys through high school, and that's all. If they want college, the boys will have to work their way through. The Occhialinos do not believe that parents should be sacrificial door mats for their children. "I figure I've gone a little higher in this world than my father," says Mario, "and I hope my boys will go higher than me. But it will be mainly through their own efforts. And that's the way it should be."

THE END

HOW THE OCCHIALINOS SPEND THEIR MONEY EACH WEEK

Food	$25.00
Utilities (including phone)	5.50
Milk	4.50
Rent	6.00
Insurance	4.00
Fuel (kerosene)	1.00
Church and charities	1.00
Papers and magazines	1.00
Clothing and gifts	4.00
Recreation	1.00
Drugs	1.00
Car upkeep	2.50
Mario's allowance	4.00
Mario's cigarettes	1.50
Savings	10.00
	$72.00 *

Mario's take-home pay per week*

RUG Magic by OLSON

SAVES YOU UP TO 1/2

THERE'S A LOVELY NEW RUG IN YOUR OLD RUGS and CLOTHING

IT'S ALL SO EASY! Free Catalog tells how you send your material at our expense to Olson Factory, where we shred, merge, wash and sterilize immaculately clean, reclaim the valuable wools, etc.; then bleach, card, spin, dye and weave deep-textured,

TWO-SIDED BROADLOOM RUGS

Any Width up to 16 ft. seamless, any length, in your choice of 52 colors and patterns:

Tweed Blends — Solid Colors
18th Century — Floral, Leaf
Early American — Embossed
Oriental Designs — effects

NEW RUGS IN A WEEK
Satisfaction guaranteed. Over 3 million customers. We don't have agents or sell thru stores. Our 77th Year.

Chicago New York San Francisco

Mail Coupon or 1c postcard

FREE Catalog in Colors

OLSON RUG CO., R 19, Chicago 41, Ill.

Mail Catalog of Rugs, Model Rooms Free to:

NAME .....

ADDRESS ..... ©ORC

TOWN ..... STATE .....

DON'T LET THE "Ghost of the Past" HAUNT YOUR BATHROOM!

Drive this daily menace from your bathroom with fresh, fragrant VANISH that

- Goes to work the instant it hits the water
- Cleans with a fast agitating action
- Releases an air freshening fragrance on contact with water.

Open VANISH with a flick of the finger with its new Expellid Opener —easy, quick, no fuss or muss. Get this bathroom necessity from your grocer today.

Double-Action VANISH makes bathrooms fragrant as it cleans

Ask your dealer for ELF, sensational new drain opener and deodorant

THIS IS YOUR HOME

(Continued from Page 56)

life when Tony had his appendicitis operation. Now they had been married almost three years, and she rarely thought about Dirk. All of it had receded into another life—the apartment in Greenwich Village, the newspaper friends, the gay celebrations, and the hours, even days, when she would wait for him in a nightmare of suspense.

She had followed his career, of course, and read the notices of his second divorce and third marriage. She had seen his pictures in the papers, and knew that he still had that young, gaunt look that used to make her heart turn over.

But it had been a shock as well as a surprise when he had written last spring from Paris, after a silence of six years, asking to have Tony for a visit.

She could have refused. Legally she could have kept her child separated from his father. But of course Tony had seen the newspaper clippings and read the books too. She hadn't wanted to deny him that; she had never wanted to deny him anything. And so she had had to let him go.

Now the separation was almost over, and it was strange that the relief of that could be a real pain, the kind you feel when your fingers, numb with cold, begin to thaw. Now they would have Tony back again. Bill loved him every bit as much as she did, and they would have again their energetic, eager, uncommunicative little boy, with his dark hair, his questioning eyes and his perennial layers of dirt. Once more she would find a BB gun in the front hall, a baseball glove on the living-room table, and perhaps a pair of sneakers under the sofa.

And all those things you took for granted until the day when there was no baseball glove, no disreputable sneakers and no self-absorbed, excited little boy to strew them around. . . . Ellen tossed Kate's blocks back into the pen. When she turned around, suddenly, incredibly, they had arrived.

Inevitably, those first few minutes were blurred into a series of pointless exclamations. "My, how you've grown!" . . . "Does she walk yet?" . . . "How was the trip?" . . . "I have a Moorish sword!" Tony's kiss was shy, but he hugged her hard.

Ellen could see in Bill's eyes the same relief that was gradually easing the tension in her own heart. Because Tony hadn't really changed. He had grown some, and he had a French beret and a new suit of clothes. But essentially he was the same—active, eager, bursting with vitality.

After a quick inspection of his room, the house and the workshop back of the garage, he brought out his baseball glove and ball and wanted Bill to toss him a few. But Bill had to go down to the hospital for a few minutes.

"We'll save that till after supper, son," he said, rumpling Tony's hair. Then he got back into the car. "I'll try to be on time for a change," he called to Ellen.

She smiled. "We'll believe that when we see you!"

But she knew, as she never had with Dirk, that Bill wanted to be with them whenever he could. Now he waved cheerfully, and she watched him drive off, his kind, intent face already concentrated on the job ahead. Bill Rutherford had a quiet way of accepting things that Ellen was never quite able to understand. Sometimes one of his patients would die following an operation. When that happened the squarish lines of his face would settle into a different kind of heaviness. But almost at once he would be himself again—cheerful, humorous, seemingly undisturbed by the conflicting demands of his life.

Ellen picked up Kate. She said, "We're having hamburgers for supper. But first I'll have to bathe the baby."

"I'll go call up Dickie," Tony decided.

From upstairs she could hear him talking on the telephone to his best friend. After a while she found herself listening intently to everything he said. "Sure, I went in a plane lots of times. . . . Yep, our car goes ninety miles an hour. . . . One time dad and Gloria took me to London."

Dad and Gloria. Ellen felt again that vague uneasiness. Tony had always called Bill by his first name, but he loved him the way any child loves his father; she was sure of that. Their relationship had started when he was five, and had his emergency operation; but over the years it had progressed through all the give and take of family life until it had become to Tony as natural as the air he breathed and the clothes he wore. And to Bill she knew it was the same.

"Well, I'll be over tomorrow," she heard him say. And then he yelled up the stairs, "Mom, I have to go see about the tires on my bike!"

"All right, darling." And suddenly she hugged Kate hard, feeling close to tears, because it was so good to have him back.

Later on Tony hung around the kitchen and watched her make the corn pudding. He said, "Dad showed me how to eat snails."

In spite of herself, Ellen longed to ask questions. She wanted to say, "What does your father look like now? Does he still have that vivid way with him, that knack of making you feel like the most important person in all the world?" She wanted to say, "What is his house like? And his wife—is she beautiful? That one picture I saw was only so-so!"

She said finally, "You had a good time, didn't you, Tony?"

"Sure." Tony's dark eyes were dreaming now. "One time we flew to a place where they had a lake, and went in a speedboat. Dad let me steer."

We reach the divine through someone, and by dividing our joy with this one we double it, and come in touch with the Universal. The sky is never so blue, the birds never sing so blithely, our acquaintances are never so gracious, as when we are filled with love for someone else. —ELBERT HUBBARD.

Suddenly Ellen was overcome by memories of what Dirk Hammond could do to a person he loved. When he was in the mood he could give you a sensation of life being heightened, a curious, intensified awareness, so that the possibilities of fulfillment seemed limitless. At those times his dark blue eyes would have a special look, intimate and adoring, so that for a while you would feel that you were the only person who mattered in his world. Once, before Tony was born, he had left her alone for three days, ill and almost penniless. But when he came back he brought yellow roses and a kind of tender elation, too, treating her as though she were a queen. And the relief and happiness of that had been almost more than she could bear; so that she had thought, It's worth it, because Dirk is different from other people. No one else could be like this—ever.

After a while she said tentatively, "I imagine you must be very glad you went."

"Gosh, yes! Dad says he doesn't know how he ever got along without a son."

Bill got back sooner than she'd hoped, and she said, "I'm afraid he's been a little spoiled. Dirk gave him all kinds of excitement over there."

Bill grinned. "Don't worry. Kids are adaptable. He'll settle back into the old routine before you know it."

She said with relief, "I suppose that's true."

"You watch. In a few days he'll have forgotten all about the trip."

By the time they sat down to supper Tony had changed to blue jeans, a jersey and the inevitable sneakers. Ellen was glad. Changing into country clothes was part, as Bill had said, of settling down into the old routine. Telephoning Dickie was part of it too.

"Don't tilt back in your chair, Tony," she said.

He brought the legs of his chair do a clatter, and applied himself to th burgers. He made the announcement mouth full. He said, "I'm going to sc Paris this winter, and Christmas we' skiing in the Alps."

The suggestion was so absurd tha didn't register at first. Then, for a br ment, she fought off a queer, unnatura ness. She thought vaguely, What a thing for Dirk to do! And she saw that watching her with concern, trying words to reassure her. Then he tur Tony, and changed the subject.

"The Giants are looking pretty good he said.

Tony nodded. "Dad told me. It was Paris Herald." And then he added th fully, "I think I like horse racing bett baseball. It's more exciting, and you c money."

Bill shook his head. "I can't see mu in watching a lot of horses chase each around a track. Give me a home run any

"Or a grand slam, with the bases ful

Feeling slightly relieved, Ellen went the kitchen to bring in the apple pie.

After supper, while Tony was outsi ing his bicycle, they tried to talk it ov said, "Of course it's out of the ques wouldn't dream of sending him back t

"That's right. You don't take a chil his mother and ship him off on a wil chase like that. Or at any rate, not our

But Ellen could see that he was w "Look at the life he's been leadin there," she pointed out bitterly. trips, speedboats, horse racing ——"

"I know." He ran his hand through h in a gesture of distraction, and stared i empty fireplace. And Ellen thought un It isn't fair to Bill, either. He's made home for Tony when he needed it most.

She said, "I should have foreseen all never should have let him go over in th place."

He tried to reassure her. "Don't wor much. Time takes care of a lot of thing little while he'll settle down, and for about that other project."

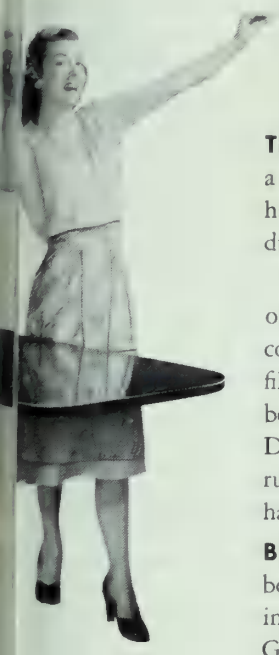
She sighed. "You never know what thinking. What if he should resent our ing him here?" And suddenly she sa the situation was intolerable. She said fully, "His values will be confused, to For instance, when we try to discipline make him do homework and all that

"It's a problem, all right," he agreed ily. "You can't explain much to kids they resent something you're reall against it."

She wondered what he meant by that he trying to suggest that it would be be send Tony away than have him at holding a grudge against them? And th phone rang, and Bill had to leave fo hospital.

While she was unpacking for him night, Tony showed her the letter from But first he showed her his trophies Moorish sword, an air pistol, a fine le wallet, and some books in French that h learning to read.

"I talked French a lot," he said. fun." And then he said, "Here's the dad wrote about me going back the school."



Ellen took the letter and said mechani "Don't forget to brush your teeth." Sh trying to hold herself in check, so tha wouldn't hug him hard and say, "Da darling, how can you bear to leave mother?"

When he was finally in bed, she too letter to her room and went over it se times. It was long, carefully written, quite evidently sincere. "Our son made hit over here," Dirk wrote. "He certainl plenty of what it takes—brains, abilit that. I'm glad he isn't all polished up lik French kids. Give me an American youn every time!"

(Continued on Page 132)

New beauty for furniture—

A hand-rubbed look with a few easy wipes!

Thousands of women have discovered a new way to give furniture a lasting hand-rubbed look—almost as easy as dusting!

It's O-Cedar Dri-Glo, the new, non-oily silicone polish for furniture. Dri-Glo covers wood with an invisible, glass-like film that brings out all the rich, natural beauty of the grain. A polish, not a wax, Dri-Glo eliminates the hard work of rubbing—gives furniture an expensive, hand-rubbed look that lasts for months.

Big 6-Room Size—98c. A 10-ounce bottle of Dri-Glo does all the furniture in the average 6-room house. Buy Dri-Glo today where you buy your cleaning supplies.

Hand-rubbed look by O-Cedar Dri-Glo. Piano by W. W. Kimball Company

Shines in 60 seconds—lasts 60 days or longer. You simply smooth on Dri-Glo, let it dry, polish surface for 1 minute or less. The lovely luster lasts months.

eautifies blond woods as well as rk woods. Dri-Glo is a clear, color-s silicone polish that brings glossy w luster to any wood. Fine for finest rniture.

Dust can't cling to furniture polished with Dri-Glo. One wipe with a dry cloth gets all the dust off Dri-Glo's smooth, non-oily silicone surface.

Hot coffee won't mar a Dri-Glo finish. You just wipe up spills and sticky finger marks with a damp cloth. The rich, hand-rubbed look is bright as before.

O-Cedar dri·glo 98¢

Big 6-Room Size

-Cedar Corp'n
hicago, Illinois

O-Cedar of Canada, Ltd.
Toronto, Canada

A NON-OILY SILICONE POLISH
by the makers of the famous O-Cedar Sponge Mop

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

GUARANTEE! Your money back if you aren't completely satisfied Dri-Glo lives up to every claim made for it here.

Which Hair Problems Do You Have?

Try this new Glamour-Treatment!

Used by professionals for problem hair! A creamy lotion—not sticky or greasy. Makes your wave behave—leaves hair soft, shining! ★ Rich in Lanolin to soften dry hair or stiff, fuzzy permanents. ★ Ends loose dandruff worries. ★ Deodorizes for between-shampoos freshness, fragrance.

RICH IN LANOLIN!

50¢ and $1.00 plus tax

new LUSTRE-CREME Hair Dressing

Now – 1034 Dry Cleaners Have a Secret that Makes Colors and Patterns Like New Again!

It's Sanitone, the better kind of dry cleaning. Try it for your children's back-to-school clothing.

You can see, feel and smell the difference in Sanitone Dry Cleaning. Like-new look and texture are restored. No stale cleaning odors, even perspiration gone! Clothes stay clean longer, last longer, too! Your Sanitone dry cleaner guarantees that all your family's garments will be cleaner, brighter, fresher. Try it today!

• • •

If your dry cleaner doesn't offer Sanitone Service, have him write to Emery Industries, Inc., Sanitone Dept.

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

Look for this symbol, the sign of a better kind of dry cleaning, in your classified phone book.

Sanitone Dry Cleaning Service

EMERY INDUSTRIES, INC. • Cincinnati 2, Ohio

(Continued from Page 130)

In spite of herself, Ellen was warmed by the words. Of course it was easy enough for a man to come along and claim his child, once the hard early years were over. Nevertheless, Dirk's approval had always done that to her—given her a lift, a feeling of well-being.

"Tony wants very much to come back," he continued. "I know the decision is in your hands, Ellen. But a winter abroad would give him an invaluable background, not only in languages but in other ways too. Besides, I can see now that it isn't right for a child to be deprived of his father."

She went to bed finally, but she couldn't sleep. Phrases in the letter kept repeating themselves; and she saw images too. The most vivid was Dirk and Tony in a speedboat. They were going fast, and there was a spray, and their faces were alive with that same unbridled vitality. She thought, But all these years Bill has been a father to Tony. He's given him security and a home, and someone to turn to. And that is what a child needs most.

She turned on the light, finally, and tried to think. But the confusion didn't get any better. Six years ago she had resigned herself, somehow, to the divorce; three years after that had come her marriage to Bill, and this good, happy life for which she was deeply grateful. But now all that had been split apart. Now she was two people, and one of them was the woman who would never quite forget Dirk Hammond, or the way he had made her feel. . . . She turned again for another look at the close of his letter.

"Ellen dear," he had written, "don't think I have ever forgotten you, or that I will ever cease to be grateful for the wonderful job you have done with our son. I know that you had a rough time of it, and that I wasn't much of a husband. But Tony is one result of our marriage that we can both be proud of."

How easy, how easy for Dirk to write that now! And yet, reading the words, she felt close to tears.

Bill came home finally, and she saw that he was tired, and that his face had that older, withdrawn look. He told her briefly, "An automobile accident. One of them may pull through." Then he fell asleep.

The weeks that followed were increasingly painful, and after a while Ellen began to see that there was no easy solution to what was happening. She wrote Dirk several letters, trying to base her objections not on her own dread of being apart from Tony, but on a very real desire for his welfare. Dirk's answers were logical, persuasive, and tempered by a friendly spirit of co-operation. He had a good home for the boy right now, he wrote, and had already entered him in a fine school. The chances were that this opportunity wouldn't arise again; next year he might be sent to India, Egypt or Timbuktu. He hinted also at the fact that, since she had had ten uninterrupted years with their son, this one concession seemed little enough to ask.

To Tony he sent foreign stamps and post cards. The pictures on the post cards were all action scenes, depicting the fun they had had together already, linked with glowing promises of more fun in the months ahead.

As the weeks passed Ellen became aware of a curious lassitude, almost an acceptance of defeat. Whatever happened now would be wrong. But Tony's resentment would be the worst of all. Her efforts to talk to him were unrewarding; most of his thoughts and feeling she gleaned from overhearing his conversations with Dickie. She listened shamelessly to the two boys while they played and talked together. And soon she realized that a single thread wound through every conversation, for Tony talked constantly of Dirk. The concentrated fun and excitement during the summer had certainly contributed; but it was easy enough to see that Tony was involved now in a form of hero worship, a very real bondage to his father.

Finally, one day in late September, while they were raking leaves together, she said, "If you really want to, Tony, you can go back to Paris this winter."

"But of course I'm going!" He stopped raking and looked at her in surprise. "Why, dad said—that is, he has it all arranged."

Ellen smiled uneasily. "But this is home, Tony," she told him. "Don't forget that."

He scuffed at the leaves. He said, won't miss me too much, mother. Not Kate here." But for a brief momen thought she saw a shadow of guilt in h mature little face. "I'll be back in the spr he pointed out hopefully. "And I'll be h next summer."

Darling, darling, she thought, this sho be happening to you. It shouldn't happ any child! Finally she said, "Just the I'll miss you dreadfully. We all will. So decide to come home ——"

"Oh, but I won't!" And he added puzzled tone, "The best thing of all wou if you could come too. Then we could skiing Christmas."

"That would be best," Ellen agreed she wondered what her young son thought, how much he understood.

Between herself and Bill the subj Tony's departure became gradually mo ficult. They tried to be matter-of-fact i discussions—but the constant referen her first husband weren't easy to h Once, while they were talking of Dirk the strong hold he'd taken on Tony, B a sentence hanging in mid-air. He lool her closely, then walked across the roo put his hands on her shoulders.

"Does it still hurt you to talk abou Ellen?" he asked, and there was an current of strain in his tone.

She said quickly, "Of course it doesn only Tony I'm thinking of!" But she that Bill wasn't fooled, that he, too, f vague unhappiness that had recently possession of their lives. She said, alm emphatically, "I wish I'd never seen Hammond in my entire life!"

He tilted her chin then, and looked i eyes and walked away. And though sh he wasn't satisfied, she couldn't think thing else to say.

The last week of September was d entirely to Tony—his clothes, his ticket, a haircut, the dentist and the Much of this had been gone through spring too; but now there was a fee permanence, something drastic and doomed about it that Ellen hardly contemplate.

Once or twice she said to him, "Wh you stay home this year, Tony, and France another winter?"

But invariably he was astonished, ing the suggestion as more or less of And she saw that even Tony's age was them. Right now he was at that stage where the days pass in a series of c images, without any clearly defined p tive.

She stopped trying to question h probe into his state of mind. She told that he was an individual, with a righ own life. But that wasn't altogethe either; ultimately he was her respons

She sewed name tapes on all his though he assured her that that wasn' sary. "We have about eight maid there," he said, "and one of them do ing all day except sew things."

And though he wasn't exactly b she saw that it was all part of the Tony was lazier now about making and helping with the dishes; and it hard to detect a touch of childish arrog his manner.

For a going-away present, Bill bou a camera, and naturally the little boy to start right in using it. Because they more than anything else to make him they put their other plans aside, and s hour out in the yard taking picture posed Kate in her sandbox, and Ton bicycle, and Ellen and Bill, standing the car. Tony was leaving in three that all the time they were taking Ellen had a feeling of suspended tim they all four were—nothing was changed. And yet a month from n picture of Tony astride his bicycle have a special meaning. And she th despair, Families should never, separated!

nally Tony and Bill retired to the swing ot ne terrace to study the camera; and it was jit then that a boy came by on a bicycle, a handed Ellen a cablegram. She held it in h hand a moment, and glanced across the la n at Bill. But he was taking out a new roll o m, saying, "We'll have this all set, so you c snap a few on the airfield."

"And when I land too," Tony said eagerly. "I take some of dad meeting me."

Ellen tore open the cablegram then, and s ned it hastily.

U AVOIDABLE CHANGE OF PLANS NEW AS- S NMENT REQUIRES CONSIDERABLE T AVEL ALSO GLORIA UNWELL SO DON'T T NK WISE FOR TONY COME AFTER ALL T L HIM TERRIBLY SORRY PROBABLY N CT YEAR AM SENDING PRESENT BY BOAT L E TO TONY DIRK

She read the cable through a second time b ore she turned and looked again at her h band and her son. They were still bending c r the camera, both frowning slightly, abs ed in the complexities of photography.
H was in his shirt sleeves, his trousers
b gy, his hair sprinkled slightly with gray, h high, intelligent forehead creased by the h izontal lines that had become by now so f miliar to her. Tony was wearing shorts and a triped jersey, and beautiful new sneakers.

Feeling dazed, she turned back to the c le. "Probably next year," Dirk had wired.
A d that, for Tony, would mean hope def red. But then, Dirk had always had a tale for easy postponement. Innumerable t es, after he'd let her down on some treas-u d plan, he'd say, "Never mind, darling.
N xt month we'll take a trip together!" Or e e, "Tomorrow I'll come home early, and w 'll have dinner at Luchows!" But the trip n ver materialized—when the time came he w uld simply have forgotten. Generally the d nner didn't materialize either. . . . Because, j st as now, Dirk had meant the promise
w en he made it, in some surface compartm nt of his mind. But his self-absorption was s great that the needs of others could never p netrate into the real fiber of his life.

FINALLY Ellen started across the stretch of l wn with the cable in her hand. But she felt a though she were about to deal to Tony the s me sort of casual cruelty that had played s ch a big part in her first marriage. She saw t e eager light in her little boy's face, and she r membered too well how he was going to f el. Because when he heard the news the l ht would go out, but Tony would keep on h ping. For years to come he would be subj ct to the whims of his father.

She thought angrily, Dirk had no right to b ild him up, play on his emotions like that, m ake him dependent and trusting. But the ans wer to that was easy enough. Dirk wanted to b loved, without the burden or responsibility o love; and so he had learned how to turn his a fection on and off whenever it suited his n eeds.

She wondered why she should be so angry n ow, when, during her marriage, she had felt i mply inadequate and helpless. But perhaps i was different when you had to be the one to i flict the hurt. And certainly Tony was in n o sense to blame.

She sat down beside them on the swing, and put her hand on Bill's arm. And she saw with surprise that the communication between them was so complete that already there was in his face a certain alertness. Under the relief and anger she was aware of a new and almost painful love for this man who was her husband.

She said carefully, "A cable just came, Tony. A boy brought it on his bicycle."

"From dad?"

She shivered nervously then, because when he spoke of his father Tony looked almost too happy. And Dirk wasn't worthy of their son's love. Underneath that easy charm of his there was no foundation at all, no substance; nothing that a child could count on, nothing that was even very real. But how could Tony know that?

"Yes. It's about your trip," she said.

BILL took the cablegram and scanned it. "Never mind, son," he said quickly. The camera was beside him on the swing, and now he picked it up and weighed it in his two hands. "There's been a change of plans, that's all. But we'll figure out something just as good."

"You mean I'm not going?"

In Tony's face there was real anguish; and she thought stupidly, They say children don't suffer the way we do. If only that were so!

"Not now, at any rate." And then Bill added firmly, "Probably never, Tony. I wouldn't count on it if I were you."

Tony started trying to read the cablegram then, and she saw that he was very pale, so that his freckles stood out abnormally. "He's sending me a present," he said finally, in a flat dull voice that repudiated such an easy panacea. "And he says probably next year."

"I wouldn't count on it, son," Bill advised again. "We'll make other plans instead. The four of us. Right here."

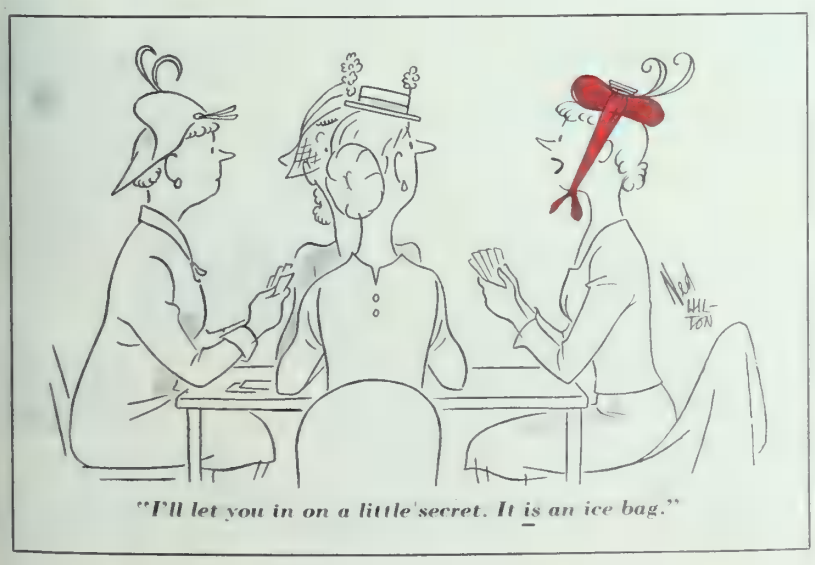
But Tony wasn't interested in that, either; and she realized that the shock was so great that he wasn't even able to cry. He protested finally, "But just the same we're going skiing Christmas! Dad promised me! He promised!"

Ellen said heavily, "I know, Tony. It's hard when you've counted on something." She went into the kitchen and brought out some cold drinks.

Bill said, "Why don't you and your mother go to the movies tonight? If I can get away from the hospital in time, I'll join you."

Tony nodded listlessly, but a little of his normal color was coming back.

Bill lit a cigarette. "It's a pretty good picture, some sort of western. Isn't that right, Ellen?"



"Yes, that's right," she said. And she wondered if he would learn in time how much she loved him. "I think I feel like a good western," she said.

Tony began to cry then. "But he promised, mother! He promised!"

"I know, Tony. But you see, his plans were changed. He says so in the cable."

"He could have had me anyhow!"

Ellen turned back to the kitchen so that Tony wouldn't see her face. Because what he said was true enough. She had no faith in Dirk's glib explanations, either; and she wondered now why she ever had. THE END

"I'll let you in on a little secret. It is an ice bag."

Say it With Flowers-by-Wire

Flowers add a graceful touch to bread-and-butter customs.
Flowers-By-Wire speed across the miles, to smile a "Thank you", after you've gone.
A beautiful bouquet can carry a wealth of gratitude anywhere . . . telegraph-fast.
And it's such a proper thing to do!

*Look for the FAMOUS MERCURY EMBLEM.
It means guaranteed delivery,
through 15,000 F.T.D. and INTERFLORA
MEMBERS . . . throughout the world.*

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY ASSOCIATION
Headquarters: Detroit, Michigan

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY
INTERFLORA

Nothing else does it so well

Sani-Flush is made for this one purpose — to clean toilet bowls. It works chemically. No messy scrubbing. Also disinfects, and removes the invisible film which is there whether you see it or not. Quick, easy, sanitary. Just follow directions on the familiar yellow can. At all grocers. The Hygienic Products Co., Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

Now PERFUMED with a mild, fresh fragrance

EASIEST, CLEANEST, QUICKEST WAY TO KILL INSECTS

Only $1.59
Other sizes 79¢ to $3.95
Prices slightly higher in Canada

Touch-of-thumb releases a fine spray—reaches even hidden insects!

BRIDGEPORT AER*A*SOL† INSECTICIDE is tops in killing power and speed of action—always ready for instant use!

Kills flies, mosquitoes, gnats, moths, roaches, silverfish and many other insects. It's the insecticide for virtually all household insect pests.

Buy it now at your drug, grocery, hardware or department store. †Trade Mark

BRIDGEPORT BRASS CO., Bridgeport 2, Conn.
*World's Leading Producer of Aer*a*sol Products*

LET THE SECRET DIE

(Continued from Page 35)

The war ended. One by one the children were taken away by parents who were strangers to them. For Crystal no one ever came. Crystal pitied the children who had but one mother. Crystal had fifty-three mothers, all of them gentle and soft-spoken, all of them selfless and kind.

The reverend mother herself undertook the greater part of the girl's education, and Sister Fidelia had charge of her clothes and her general physical welfare, clucking like a happy hen. Sister Ambrosina taught her home nursing. Sister Mary Clare taught her embroidery and darning and how to make altar cloths. The gay little kitchen sisters taught her cooking and the laundry sisters showed her how to iron and they taught her, too, to sing the sad songs of old Ireland as they worked.

No one realized the girl was growing up.

It was Sister Fidelia who came in one day, clucking, shocked. "As we came down the main street, mother, a man on a lorry whistled at her!"

Then the reverend mother took a look at Crystal, and she knew why. Crystal had grown up. The carroty hair was suddenly a warm chestnut gold, her eyes reminded the reverend mother of the eyes of the little roe deer that had sometimes looked in at the windows of a Scottish castle, long long ago.

Crystal herself noticed no change, and whether she was plain or fair she had no idea. In summer, the straight blue linen frock she wore did nothing to encourage female vanity. In winter, the stout blue serge and enveloping cape were handy coverings, and rendered her shapeless as the sisters themselves.

But the hair! There was no disguising that. It flamed out under the little cap she wore. And lorry drivers outside the gates had started to whistle!

A friend of mine overheard her small son, five years old, offering to explain to his four-year-old sister how babies got their navels. Wondering what information he had picked up "in the gutter," she did a little eavesdropping. This is what she heard: "When God finishes making little babies, He lines them all up in a row. Then He walks in front of them and pokes them in the tummy with His finger and says, 'You're done, you're done, you're done'—and that's what makes navels."

The reverend mother, who knew what she knew, spent some time in deep meditation and thought. Then she sat down and wrote a letter.

The nursing home was full. They hadn't a spare bed or an empty room, and the sisters were run off their feet. Crystal was helping, this afternoon, by taking round the trolley with the tea trays.

She did not stop at the door of No. 10. No tea tray was needed there and she knew that she must not go in. The kind old judge, who had come visiting there in other days and patted her on the head, and been closeted with the reverend mother in her office at regular intervals, was now in No. 10, and he was dying. Sister Ambrosina was his special. She attended to his ever-diminishing wants.

Mr. Mallilieu lay with his eyes closed. Mr. Mallilieu himself was not really there at all. No one could have guessed it, but Mr. Mallilieu was twenty years old again, and he was in a punt on a wide river, and there was a girl with him. She wasn't a startlingly pretty girl or anything, but she was the one he should have married. He had had a nickname for her, and he could not remember it, and this worried him so that he moved his head restlessly on the pillow.

People told him they knew best, the older and wiser people who considered it their duty to interfere. They had not known best. He had listened to them, but in the end it had been a mistake. He had never loved anyone else. He should have backed his own judgment. He had done his best with Amy. She was well connected. She had money and lots of ambition. She had run his life efficiently for him. He had been immensely successful, but he had never been very happy, and he knew that all his life he had been trying to find his way back to the river, and the punt, and her hand in his.

And now he was there at last, and he was devoutly thankful. He heard the tea trolley pushed by Crystal go rattling by, and he thought it was a tram passing the law courts where he had held some of his most famous trials, in a busy world now mercifully far away.

Crystal passed the door, tapped on the door of No. 9 and went in.

In No. 9 Barbara Cappett sat in the sun in the window. She was waiting for her baby. Her pretty face was screwed up into an expression of disgust and resentment. The baby was already a week overdue. I shall probably die, thought Barbara Cappett, and tears of self-pity trickled down her pretty face.

Why had she ever been such a fool? Why had she allowed herself to be caught like this? All our grand schemes and fine plans, ruined! She thought of the fur coat she had meant to have that winter, the trip to Switzerland, the new car. How would they ever be able to afford anything like that now?

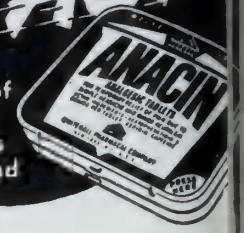
Nothing can stop it. Nothing, she thought, appalled. She was no longer herself. She had been turned into a kind of duplicating machine which must shortly function whether she wanted it to or not. From the bed table, Barry's good-natured boyish face looked at her out of its picture frame. She stared back at him, now almost with loathing. It was entirely his fault, and there he was, going off free and unhampered. She hated him.

"Come in," she said, wiping her eyes.

"It's your tea," said Crystal, putting the tray down beside her. She envied young Mrs. Cappett. It must be fun to have a baby all your own. Crystal knew all about birth, and it was nothing to her. Just two voices in a room where previously there had been only one.

Barbara looked at Crystal, and she hated her, because her hair curled, and her figure was girlish and slim. I once was like that, and I hadn't the sense, thought Barbara, to look out for myself. Once my hair was bright like that, and it curled, and look at it now. A handful of hay. She gulped and looked at Crystal. She wanted, suddenly, to warn her: Have nothing to do with men, or look what will happen to you. Look at me! I was pretty once.

She didn't say it. She gulped back her too ready tears, and picked up the teapot and wished the girl would go.



In Room No. 8 Miss Alicia Jones was recovering from the removal of two bunions. She told herself that more than half her troubles in life had come to her because of her ugly feet. After this, everything was going to be quite different.

But for those bunions, she had managed to convince herself, Mr. Challice would have proposed to her, and she, not that empty-headed little Moira King, would be honeymooning with him in Switzerland. Miss Jones was one of those people, she told herself, who have never had any luck. Her parents had been separated and Miss Jones was apt to blame everything on that, forgetting she had been sixteen years of age before her mother finally decided that to expect her to support her husband as well as her child was too much.

"Your tea, Miss Jones," said Crystal shyly. She never could say just why, but Miss Jones always made her feel uncomfortable.

"How nice," cried Miss Jones, very bright, noting there were only two pieces of cake

RELIEVES PAIN OF HEADACHE • NEURALGIA NEURITIS FAST

The way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend

Anacin® relieves headache, neuralgia, neuritis pain fast because Anacin is like a doctor's prescription—that is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proven, active ingredients in easy-to-take tablet form. Thousands have been introduced to Anacin through their own dentist or physicians. If you have never used Anacin, try these tablets yourself for incredibly fast, long-lasting relief from pain. Don't wait. Buy Anacin today.

CASH OFFER

WOMEN wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Holiday, Jack and Jill, Country Gentleman and other popular publications. You can earn big commissions—devote spare or full time. For details write to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
624 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

MAKE MONEY FAST
Sell Christmas Cards, Gift Items, Stationery and Everyday Cards
Make AMAZING PROFITS calling on friends, others. Show 7 leading 21-$1 Christmas and Everyday boxes. Religious. Comics. Currier & Ives. Secret Pal Cards. Gift Wrappings, Ribbons, Rain Sandals, Name Holders, Napkins, Telephone Directories, Children's Cards and Books. New items galore.
No Experience Necessary
Thousands succeed. WRITE TODAY for actual SAMPLES On Approval. Special offer and bonus plan for your club or church group.

Hedenkamp & Co.
361 Broadway, Dept. [illegible]
New York 13, N.Y.

NEW cushion plastic tightens LOOSE FALSE TEETH
Stop slipping, sliding and sore gums! Chew and enjoy all foods. Reline your plates at home with DENTUR-EZE. Not a paste or powder, but a cushion plastic that lasts weeks. Thousands delighted. 59c & 98c tubes. If druggist hasn't it, send check or m. o. to DENTUR-EZE, 902 John St., Seattle 9, Wn.
ONE APPLICATION LASTS FOR WEEKS

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

EASY EXTRA DOLLARS
For Your Spare Time
Sell Midwest Christmas Cards
Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards, 50 for $1. Everybody buys. You keep up to 50c profit. $1 Christmas Assortments. Big line: Executive Secret Pal, Gift Wraps, Stationery, $1 Children's Books, others. Plan for organization Party Plan. Free Imprint Samples, Assortments on Approval. No experience needed.
MIDWEST CARD CO., Dept. M
1113 Washington Ave., St. Louis 1 also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars 25¢ and 50¢. Buy Moss at your druggist.

CORNS
REMOVED BY MOSCO
Your money refunded if not satisfied. The Moss Company, Rochester, N.Y.

BRIDAL
Fabrics at Wholesale
Write for FREE catalogue and swatch book
Schenfeld & Sons
97 Hester St. (Dept. L-5) N. Y. 2, N. Y.

nvinced that Crystal had eaten one plate outside the door. "Can't you ?"

n very busy today," Crystal said, lov- be busy.

ey do keep you on the trot, don't Just at an age when you ought to be a bit of fun. You know!" said Miss coyly. Then seeing the girl's look of e, she said dryly, "Or maybe you in a dump like this."

don't think this is a dump," Crystal er. "I love being here. I want to stay ll my life."

ow don't tell me they are going to a holy sister out of you!" cried Miss "Why, with your looks, you might ywhere. Why, it's against nature. You to go around, see life a bit, fall in stal said nothing. She had already in love, but no one knew it, not even verend mother. It was a beautiful se- e hugged to herself and it made life erful.

s Jones poured out her tea, and de- l Crystal, avid for gossip.

ell me, the old boy in Number Ten. slipping his cable, isn't he? Such a fa- man he was too. I remember reading out his criminal cases. Most eloquent s. There was one speech he made, I re- ber, it was that case where the man his wife and cut her up small and her in the cellar, oh, horrible it was," Miss Jones, enjoying every moment of But you'd be too young to remember. man was hung and quite right, too, but nny to think it's the old man's turn now, for all he was so famous and t. And that baby in Number Nine arrived yet? Fancy."

e wave of discomfort she always felt in Jones' room crept over Crystal again. nd that woman in Number Seven. 's she here for?" pursued Miss Jones.

am not allowed to discuss the pa- s," said Crystal, as she had been taught ss Jones snorted angrily. That child a good slap, she thought. Nothing but a nt brat anyway, come from dear knows e. Now, I wonder! I wouldn't be a bit sur- d if it wasn't one of the sisters, for all their ness. Yes, I bet that's it. It's always safe to follow your intuition in these mat- I bet I'm right, just as I was over Moira , at the office. Her telling me she was Mrs. yne, when all she had been was the old s mistress for years! I saw through that, all was queer that her telling Mr. Challice t it as a good joke should have had the result it did, though, mused Miss Jones, enly bleak, suddenly hollow. For off he and within a month he had married a. When everyone, including Miss s herself, had been convinced he was t to propose to Miss Jones. The memory a constant annoyance to her, like a nag- tooth. She was quite quite sure that e had not had those bunions, and come a broken home, it would never have ed out the way it did.

STAL tapped at the door of No. 7. Just e never could get out of Miss Jones' fast enough, so she always wanted to r in Mrs. Damon's.

rs. Damon wasn't young, but Crystal ght her lovely. She had a wide forehead, eyes and the sort of smile that made feel at home with her right off. She had e in to have a little operation she hoped ld land her in the fix in which young . Cappett now found herself. She and kie wanted a family so badly. This ned to be a sort of last chance.

Pour it out for me," said Mrs. Damon.

he smiled at the girl, and watched her, king how wonderful it would be to have owing-up daughter.

So lazy I am. Lying here like a cat and ng other people do things for me," said s. Damon.

rystal did not think she looked at all like t. She thought she looked like a rose. A at the end of summer, she thought sud- denly, before the first frost had come to the garden, and she wished unhappily she had not thought that, and could not say why.

"Do you know what I am going to do?" said Mrs. Damon, sipping her tea. "I am going to ask the reverend mother to let you come and spend your holidays with me one day. There are ponies to ride, and a swimming pool. Would you like that?"

Crystal nodded shyly. If she were going to stay with anyone she would have liked it to be with Mrs. Damon, but she knew in her heart she could never go away. She was in love. She had to see him every day. Now that the trays had all been delivered, her golden moment was approaching.

When the door closed behind Crystal, Mrs. Damon lay back among her pillows and did a bit of daydreaming too. She wondered what the girl's story was, and where she came from. "She is one of our problems," the reverend mother had said one day, half smiling, half sadly, but she had said no more. I might help, Mrs. Damon smiled to herself.

THE smile died suddenly, and she winced and drew her breath. There it was again, that stupid little pain. She had never told anyone about it, not even Doctor Paton. She had always felt so certain that if she ignored it, it would go away. Sometimes it did, for months, and then when she had almost forgotten about it, there it was again.

It's nothing, she told herself firmly. Nothing whatever. Best just forget it.

In the big airy kitchen, Crystal stood patiently waiting, holding out a square tin tray. Sister Rubina filled a mug with hot tea and set it there. She spread two thick slices of bread and butter sparingly. Sister Rubina was adept at making a little go a long way. She paused for a moment, looking about her. A wire rack of saffron buns stood cooling on a side table. Sister Rubina took one, split it, put a dollop of jam inside it and handed it to Crystal.

"That's for you, me darling," she said.

Crystal went off carrying the tray carefully, but she did not eat the bun. She put it on the tin plate beside the bread and butter. For him. There was so little that she who longed to do so much could do for him, but at least she could give him her saffron bun. With jam.

The corporal was digging in the cabbage bed. He was a ramshackle figure, an old soldier with a vast hooked nose and fierce blue eyes that were always suspiciously red and inflamed on the morning after payday. He was hardly a romantic figure, but a girl of seventeen with a loving heart must park it somewhere. Crystal loved him because he was so fierce, so lonely and so generally battered. Perhaps she saw in him, for the last time, a sad ghost of that old gay charm that had made him a devil with women, in other days when he was upright and smart in his uniform, and off to the wars. He lived in the cottage just outside the convent gates, and kept the garden tidy and saw to the convent bees.

He took his tea tray from Crystal with a grunt. "Cold, as usual," said the corporal, taking a drink.

"I came as fast as I could. They are very busy today," she said breathlessly. "Maybe they kept it standing."

She waited a hopeful moment as she always did, thinking the day must come when he would unbend and say something friendly to her. Today was obviously not the day, so she turned and went.

It was not much to hold to, for twenty-four hours, but it was all that she had, and at least she could dream. She dreamed that she inherited a vast fortune from her long-lost parents, and went to the vegetable garden and told the corporal the good news. It was all his. He would have new shirts, and a warm thick coat for the winter, and he would also have a fine new suit.

The corporal would have been very surprised if he had known about all this devotion, for he had never so much as looked at Crystal. He did not care about young girls. He was not a very good man, and he was

ATHLETE'S FOOT IS NO JOKE!

Time-tested Absorbine Jr. "WET-DRY" method goes to work at once to help relieve Athlete's Foot!

Don't wait until raw, red, burning toes signal you that Athlete's Foot has struck! Use Absorbine Jr. now!

This antiseptic liniment dissolves stale perspiration products on which Athlete's Foot fungi thrive—kills all the fungi it can reach! Its drying action helps heal cracks between the toes!

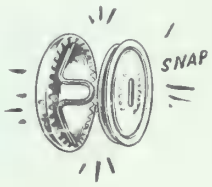
During hot weather when your feet perspire most, use Absorbine Jr. every day. Only $1.25 for long-lasting bottle wherever drugs are sold. For free sample bottle, write W. F. Young, Inc., 415 Lyman Street, Springfield 3, Mass. Wonderful for non-poisonous insect bites, minor sunburn.

America's No. 1 Relief for Athlete's Foot

Also used by thousands for comforting relief from sore, aching muscles, neuralgic and rheumatic pain

ABSORBINE JR.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping



Paris says

COVERED BUTTONS

Make fashions personal

Now—with Prims Cover-your-own Buttons and Buckles, it's so easy to add that final fashion touch to your sewing craftsmanship. No tools! No paste! No sewing! Just snip the fabric—place it over the button—snap the two sections together. Presto! Covered buttons . . . the custom touch for dresses, gloves, hats, pillows, upholstery.

Choice of various sizes and styles, 25c a card at button counters everywhere. (Slightly higher in Canada.)

HOME SEWERS prefer Prym's Nobility snap fasteners for dependable service.

The Original Prims Cover-your-own BUTTONS · BUCKLES

Pretty Prims buttons on Vogue hat pattern 7130, mated to buttons and buckle on Vogue classic 7478.

always incredibly thirsty. In the town they were surprised he was kept on at the convent, and they wondered if the reverend mother knew he often sold the convent honey for the price of a pint.

The reverend mother said a man who had fought in all the wars the corporal had fought in was entitled to a little honey from his country, if he needed it.

In No. 10 old Mr. Mallilieu heard the birds in the garden singing, the way they used to when he was a boy.

"Her name. What did I call her?" he said aloud, for it bothered him that he could not remember.

In No. 9 Mrs Cappett felt a hopeful qualm and touched the bell. It was nothing. Just another false alarm. She began to weep with rage and frustration. "Why can't some of you do something?"

Male footsteps sounded in the passage outside and she thought it was Barry, the cause of all her woe and misery, coming to see her, and she beat her pillow, and almost shouted:

"No, no. Don't let him come in. I don't want to see him."

"It's not your husband at all," said Sister Fidelia patiently. "It's the colonel come to see his wife next door. You ought to take shame on yourself, a big girl like you, making so much fuss."

Miss Jones had also heard the footsteps. She opened her door a chink and peeked out. So that's him, she thought, and a fine, handsome, upstanding figure of a man he is too. She heard Mrs. Damon's voice:

"Darling, how lovely!"

After that there was silence. Something fishy, thought Miss Jones. Don't tell me that old married people carry on like that. Now I wonder ——

Mrs. Damon held her husband's hand against her cheek. "There is nothing to look so grim about, Dickie. Honestly there isn't. It's the simplest thing. Dozens of women have it done. This time tomorrow I'll be back here in my little bed, my sorrows all behind me."

"I don't like it. I hate the whole business," he said roughly. "I'd rather have abandoned all hope of having children than go through this." He was always cross when he was anxious about her.

She took a cigarette out of his case, and lit it for him, and put it between his lips. "Think what fun it will be, darling. A year from now we might be fixing a gate across the stairs." She managed to talk away gaily and brightly. Only much later that night, when he was leaving her, just for a moment she almost broke down. "Darling, I do adore you so. More and more than ever. Thank you for everything—all our lovely times."

Sister Fidelia, making her way down the passage, was nearly mowed down by him, a large man walking blindly, as if he could not see. She opened the door of Mrs. Damon's room and looked in quite anxiously, but everything seemed all right.

"Now would you believe it, that tiresome corporal has slipped and fallen down in the town, and put his shoulder out. Just when we need him. Just when we're so busy, we're all after needing three pairs of hands apiece," she said, hurrying off.

The reverend mother had had a tiresome morning. There had been an interview with the corporal, off work for a week just when they most needed him. I suppose I ought to send him away. He isn't really a very suitable person for this place, she thought—but he was old, and had nowhere to go.

She had in front of her now a letter from the reverend mother of one of their houses in Geneva. They had been in correspondence about Crystal and her future. The reverend mother in Geneva wrote, "I can well appreciate your problem, and think your plan to send this child out of the country, where it is not impossible she might one day be connected with what is best forgotten, is a wise one. Here she would be a young girl amongst other young girls, and her story will, of course, be known to no one save myself."

Crystal tapped at the door and came in. The reverend mother smiled at the girl, surprised again at the change in her.

She went back in mind to that winter's night when the police had brought the child in. She remembered the words of Mr. Justice Mallilieu, who had tried the horrible case and condemned a criminal to death. He had given her certain papers.

"Whether you tell her or not is for you to decide," he had said. "The poor child has a dingy heritage. Take care of her."

That was many years ago. Now, by some quirk of fate, they were all three together once again under the same roof, but old Mr. Mallilieu was dying, and could be of no use to her—and Crystal had grown up, and whatever decision had to be made, the reverend mother must make alone.

Crystal had no misgivings. Recently she had told the reverend mother she wanted to become a sister herself, and she thought perhaps it was this they were to talk about now.

The reverend mother picked up the letter. "In Geneva we have, as you know, another house belonging to our order. Sister Fidelia goes there at the end of the week for her month's rest. You will go with her, and remain there for a year."

Crystal's heart seemed to stop beating for a moment. "Mother!" she exclaimed. "You can't do that!"

"But you will enjoy it. There will be skating, other young people, you will learn to ski, you will learn French."

"No, mother. No. I want to stay here always. This is my life."

"It is your life because you know no other, dear child. You need young companions for a change."

"I don't. Oh, I don't. Mother, please, I have the vocation. I told you that long ago." She flung herself on her knees, hiding her face against the rough serge of the reverend mother's habit.

"Naturally if you have the vocation you will return to us. But a year in Switzerland first."

"A year?" sobbed Crystal. "I shall die."

The reverend mother laid a hand on her head. "For the moment we will not speak of it, then, but you should think it over and try and be sensible. And if you change your mind, come and tell me."

"I shall never change my mind."

The reverend mother's old, wise eyes twinkled, and she said quietly, "My child, in the course of a lifetime you will change your mind many times."

When the door had closed, the reverend mother sat for a moment in stillness. Now what lies behind this? she wondered. To be sure, Crystal might have the vocation. It was too early to make such a decision. In her own heart the reverend mother knew she hoped the child would marry. But there seemed little chance of the girl's ever meeting anyone there inside the convent walls. It had been partly from this point of view that the Geneva project had seemed such a good thing.

Later, perhaps, thought the reverend mother. Meantime there was no point in insisting, and making the child wretched.

A figure moving beyond the window caught her eye. It was Crystal, taking the corporal's lunch to him on a tray. Since his accident his lunch as well as his tea had to be taken down to him. Such a dear, helpful child, mused the reverend mother, watching her fondly.

One week later Sister Anastasia bustled into young Mrs. Cappett's room, arms full of medical equipment. At last, she thought, and thank goodness for that. She passed the trolley that was taking Mrs. Damon down to the theater for another X ray. Mrs. Damon, very cheerful and composed, gave her a smile as she passed.

Miss Jones opened her door a crack. It was the third time in a week that Mrs. Damon had gone down to the theater. Something was up. And I bet, thought Miss Jones, I know what it is too. One of those illegal operations. At their age, they would not be likely to want any children.

She teetered uneasily around, learning to walk all over again. Her feet still hurt, and the shoes she insisted on wearing were just a trifle too tight.

"That's right," said Sister Fidelia, looking in on her. "Keep on practicing, dear. You'll soon be back where you were before."

Miss Jones leaned on the window sill, feeling a sudden chill. She did not want to be back where she was before, she wanted to be somewhere else entirely. I've never had any luck anywhere, she thought again. People seemed to like her for a while, and then they dropped her. Mr. Challice had not been the only one. Why? Somewhere there must be a man for her. To look at, something like the colonel who visited the woman next door in No. 7.

In Room No. 10 Sister Ambrosina bent over the bed. "Mr. Mallilieu. Can you hear me, sir? Would you like to see a clergyman?"

He turned his head on the pillow. "It's too late. Much too late. That should have happened long ago, only I was very foolish. When you are young, you should have the courage to take chances," said Mr. Mallilieu.

That remark struck Sister Ambrosina as strange, and she repeated it later, a little bewildered, to the reverend mother. It was clear enough that he was rambling in his mind.

He was smiling now, looking oddly peaceful, even rather amused. He put out a hand and caught idly at a scented bullrush. The punt was drifting slowly down the river, and he noticed the shadows were beginning to deepen a little. But it did not matter. She was there beside him, her small hand in his, though he could not see her. Presently, thought Mr. Mallilieu, the moon will rise. Then I shall see her again.

Sister Fidelia was calling over the garden, "Crystal, dear. Crystal! I shall have to ask you to go down to the chemist for me. I need the things immediately. Oh, dear, that tiresome corporal! Just when we need him so badly."

It was wonderful to be out in the world alone and free. It was a sunny morning, the sort of morning that should have made anyone feel happy and lighthearted—but Crystal had too many troubles. The one she loved was suffering, and there was little she could do for him. And over her there hung like a cloud this threat of being sent away to Geneva.

If she were only older, and already a sister, she would be allowed to look after him as Sister Rubina did. Oh, why do people say it's lovely to be young? Crystal wondered. It isn't lovely at all. The things you long to do you may not do.

There was a crowd in the chemist's. Crystal amused herself by looking into the showcase. She did not notice the tall man with very black hair who was buying a bottle of lotion, but he noticed her, and stood looking at her, forgetting to collect the change laid out for him on the counter. He had at that moment the strangest sensation of a dream come true and he wanted to put out his hand and touch her hair, just to be certain he wasn't still dreaming.

His leave had, on the whole, not been a great success. He had hoped rather much from the old country than the old could had to give anyone since the war. He had found the women too hard and bright and competent for his liking. They scared him. He had practically decided, after his duty visit to his last remaining relation, to go right back to Australia.

He turned, and slowly picked up his change, aware his heart was hammering. When he looked round again, she had gone. He turned to Mrs. Batson, who helped her husband in the shop. "Who is that girl with red hair?"

She hesitated for a moment, eying him suspiciously, but he seemed a nice, honest young man, and not the kind to be up to anything. "It's the girl from the convent. Crystal, they call her. They've had her there a child. I've often thought it's not much of a life for a young thing. But she seems happy enough, I will say."

He stood in the street, looking up and down, with a heart full of hope, but there wasn't a soul to be seen.

But his luck was in. When he went into the stationer's to buy a paper, there she was, buying a packet of cigarettes. That astonished him, and his heart sank. From a distance he watched her pay slowly, in pennies and sixpenny pieces. Then off she went up the hill, and the convent gates took her.

"Bless you," cried Sister Fidelia, taking the basket, and never noticing the telltale bulge the cigarettes made in her pocket. "Here's the corporal's lunch tray, if you will be a dear girl and take it now."

She had hoped they would let her take him his lunch. Today was a special occasion because she had done what she never had done before, she had bought him a present. She laid the packet of cigarettes on the tray and went off down the garden.

Someone was sitting on the low lichen-covered wall beside the lodge gate. Someone so like the corporal in build that for an instant she thought it was the corporal. Then that spraining his shoulder and getting a chill had done something to him, had given him back his youth. For this was the corporal, but it wasn't the corporal. The hair was thick and black instead of ragged and gray, the skin was wholesome tanned brown instead of weather-beaten and leathery. But the eyes were the same astonishing blue, and the nose jutted out in the same bold, commanding fashion. And to make it still more strange, he smiled at her as though he,

(Continued on Page 138)

Life is a Picnic By CORNELIA McCOOK

THE best argument against shyness I ever heard is one a mother gave her teen-age son. The boy was intelligent and painfully shy—a combination which is usual; he seemed to find it impossible to talk in any group other than his family circle. When his mother told him that he should make an effort he shrugged and said that "all that dumb chitchat" bored him. She didn't rationalize, as so many mothers do, that he would outgrow it, or that he was just too bright for his contemporaries. Instead she gave him a stiff lecture.

"Getting along with people is like going on a picnic," she said. "If you went on a picnic and one person brought the sandwiches, another a chocolate cake, and so on, and you went and didn't bring anything—that wouldn't be very nice, would it? And you'd feel pretty uncomfortable. It's the same thing with people. If you sit like a lump in a group or at a party, you're not bringing anything to the picnic.

"Not everyone has the same talents and personality, very luckily. The world would be a dull place if everyone cracked jokes the same way or looked the same; if everyone was a football player or everyone a chemist. Some people bring potato salad, and others pickles. There will always be people who like and need whatever you have to contribute."

Since she wouldn't let him get away with thinking himself specially privileged not to make an effort, he did try. He started with the contribution any shy person can make—an understanding of other shy people. He learned to talk to them and found out that they were as grateful for attention as he would have been in their shoes. The rest came naturally, as it always does: the discovery that everyone likes to be liked and that respect and politeness breed—friends.

At important . . . breathtaking moments like these . . . are you sure your underarms are always sweet . . . always dry?

Smart girls use FRESH Cream Deodorant regularly . . . It really stops perspiration troubles. And keeps them stopped. Continuously!

That's because FRESH contains ingredients which become re-activated, and start work all over again when you need protection most!

Are you always Lovely to Love?

Don't take chances! See how effectively FRESH protects you. Make this simple test: Put your present deodorant under one arm . . . FRESH under the other. See which stops perspiration troubles—prevents odor better!

New...For head-to-toe protection, use new FRESH Deodorant Bath Soap . . . prevents body perspiration odor, yet mild and gentle . . . contains amazing new soap ingredient Hexachlorophene, reported in Reader's Digest.

"I am a better teacher for having taken a Greyhound Tour"

—says Miss Cosby L. Smith, Hundred, W. Va.

"I had always dreamed of adventuring through New England's historic places, and Canada's beauty spots. On my Greyhound 'Amazing America' Tour, I found it a tonic to health and a happy change from mental concentration. I have never seen so much in such a short time. Best of all, I was free from the worry of searching out places to go and hotels in which to stay."

GREYHOUND

A LOT MORE TRAVEL FOR A LOT LESS MONEY!

COMPARE ...and you'll wear

SNO FO

THE ORIGINAL STORMCOAT

FIRST FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY

SNO FO ... First Name in Stormcoats ... First Name in Outerwear

Excel Garment Mfg. Co.

Minneapolis

SNO FO ... at all fine stores, or write Dept. "G" knew her. He held out his hands and took the tray.

(Continued from Page 136)

"It's your dinner, Uncle John," he called back into the house. "Come and get it."

The corporal appeared, red of eye and grumpy as ever, nicely trussed up with one arm in a pure white parcel arranged by Sister Rubina new every day. He picked up the packet of cigarettes and glared at them.

"What's this?"

"I—I brought them for you. A present," said Crystal, suddenly embarrassed.

The corporal threw them ungraciously onto the bench outside the door. "Never smoke the things!"

There was a short silence. Then the young man picked them up. "I do," he said. "Will you give them to me instead? That is, unless you'd like to smoke them yourself?"

"Smoke them?" she said, and her eyes grew wide with horror. "Why, I don't know what would happen to me, if I was caught smoking them."

"Well, then, I'll keep them," he said. "The first present I've had for years. Don't you mind about him. He's always grumpy. Besides, his shoulder hurts him. Even when I was a boy, I remember him being that way."

"Then you lived here as a boy?"

"I owed my chance in life to them, up there," he said. "Wait awhile, and I'll walk back there with you. I have to visit the reverend mother. I'm a black sheep returned."

When the young man had gone, the reverend mother went to the window and stood in the sunshine, her old face serene. Just now and again, when life seemed too complicated and difficult to be borne, something like this would happen. She saw the small boy he had been, defiant and rebellious, standing in that very room beside her desk. I always had a soft spot in my heart for the bold ones, the naughty ones, she thought. She remembered how many people had wanted him sent to a reform school. It was she who had stood out against it, and managed to arrange for his going to Australia to a family she knew out there. She had been right. The boy had not only made good—he had had the grace to come all the way back from Australia to visit her, and thank her, and to see his old scoundrel of an uncle, to whom he owed little enough.

So that among the many tangles and bothers of the day, this one interview stood out for her, like a golden thread woven into the pattern. For the rest, Mrs. Cappett had had her baby. It had been a long and difficult birth, but now she was over the worst of it. And the charming Mrs. Damon would go out—for a time—at the end of the week. A shadow passed over the reverend mother's face at the thought of that case, and she closed her eyes for a moment. Miss Jones, from No 8, was going out today. The reverend mother passed quickly over Miss Jones, for she might not dislike her. It was forbidden. The old judge would shortly leave, also, but by another door. She thought again how strange it was that the three of them, who all played a part in that tragedy of long ago, should be under one roof again, and she the only one of them to know it.

As she turned away from the window, she saw Crystal going through the garden in the end of the sunset, taking the corporal his tea.

The young man was sitting on the bench outside the lodge door, for all the world as if he waited for her, and he detained her there for a long time, and talked. He told her about his farm and the sheep that looked like a great sea of white wool when they were herded together. And he told her the fine life it was, but lonesome, with never another soul for miles, and no one to cook his meals.

Then he walked back slowly with her through the garden, and she had no idea how time had passed, until Sister Faith rang the Angelus. She slipped late into her place in chapel, and hid her hot face in her hands, hardly knowing now what it was she prayed for. All she knew was that something beautiful and exciting was coming nearer and nearer, and that when she went to the lodge next day, he would be sitting there on the bench beside the door. Waiting for her. To the corporal she never gave another thought.

In Room No. 9 Barbara Cappett was busy nursing her baby. Morning sunshine gilded her hair. Barbara herself had a made-over all-brand-new look, fresh and clean as the child she held in her arms.

She looked down fondly at the small head tucked in close to her breast. Why, she thought, I was mad. What in heaven's name can have made me imagine I didn't want him? He is the image of Barry—he is just little Barry with my nose and eyebrows, and a spit curl I had when I was a kid. And the fuss I made, she thought. Really, I don't know how I shall ever look the reverend mother in the face again. I behaved like a horrible spoiled child and all they ever did was just smile at me. And in the end, what was it, after all? Nothing so very terrible, or if it seemed so at the time, I can't remember much about it now, thought Barbara. And look what I have got!

In Room No. 7 Mrs. Damon lay very still. The surgeon had been in to see her, and had just gone. He had tiptoed out, miserably closing the door behind him, his young face drawn. He had been so upset and bothered that in the end it was she who had to help him out, and comfort him.

"Supposing I'd come any sooner, would it have made any difference?" she had asked.

He did not think so, and went into endless technicalities. She let him run on, not listening with any great care to what he said, because now it did not matter.

"How long," she asked at last, very practical, "do you give me?"

"Not more than a year. Not less than six months."

She smiled at him consolingly. It was hard on him, having to tell a woman of her age a thing like that, and he hated it. "Well, now. Look, I don't want you to worry about it," she said. "There's only one thing. I don't want my husband to know. I shall tell him," said Mrs. Damon, "all in my own good time."

The surgeon went away, closing the door very quietly behind him. Well, thought Mrs. Damon, lying back among her pillows, that's that. Beyond the window she could see the chestnut trees in the garden, now almost stripped of their leaves. I shall say nothing to Dickie at all. Not until right at the end, mused Mrs. Damon. Anticipation is always so much worse than a thing when it actually happens. We shall have another spring together—even maybe another summer. No one can have everything. We were the fortunate ones, she thought.

The door of No. 8 stood wide open. Sister Fidelia had the feeling that it needed a specially good airing. Miss Jones had gone.

Things were quieting down, after the rush of the last weeks. Most of the rooms on the first floor had emptied now. Old Mr. Mallilieu had not yet gone, but he soon would. The colonel had taken Mrs. Damon away that morning. She had left a great bunch of roses behind her. Their scent filled the whole room. Sister Fidelia had carried them down to the reverend mother's office, together with the little note thanking them all for their help

Ruth, aged six, had been naughty all day and wound up by being very rude to the little girl next door when she came in to play.

That night at bedtime Ruth's mother said, "I've tried hard to make you a healthy, good child, Ruth. I've tried to teach you to be kind and courteous to others, especially guests. In spite of all the trouble I've taken with you, you're still disobedient and rude."

Ruth looked at her mother a minute thoughtfully and then remarked, "What a failure you've been, mother!"

NOW... Real SALON-TY Home Facial

SEE EXCITING BEAUTY APPEAR IN 10 MIN

...whenever you want to look your b

Think fine salon clay facials a luxu Then try one at home . . . for pennies w Hopper White Clay Pack. It's so ea So wonderfully effective! Just smooth Hopper White Clay. Let dry. Rinse. 10 minutes, your skin looks clearer, fin delicately aglow . . . you feel refresh and relaxed. Money back if you're n delighted. *25¢ to $1. Also 10¢ trial si

FOLLOW UP your Hopper Home Facial with extra-soft-ening Hopper Homogenized Facial Cream. *plus tax

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF Guaranteed by Good Housekeep IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THER

HOPPER® white clay pa HOME FACIAL

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW AND SENSATIONA CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 $1 With FREE S

MAKE Extra MONEY FAST

SUPERB SATIN VELOUR & METALLIC Show rich New Cards never before offered . . . Gets orders fast! Gorgeous Christmas Cards with Name 50 for $1.25 up. 80 Assortments. Personalized Book Matches. Stationery. Gifts. Sevens $1 boxes on approval. IMPRINTS FREE. Write now!

PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 113-K, St. Louis

Callouses

Pain, Tenderness, Burning Are Quickly Relieved

You'll quickly forget you have painful callouses, burning or tenderness on the bottom of your feet, when you apply Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. Thin, soft, wonderfully soothing, cushioning, protective. Separate Medications included for quickly removing callouses. Try them!

Dr Scholl's Zino-pad

LET'S FACE IT!

YOU GET $2

FOR SELLING ONLY 50 B CHRISTMAS CARDS to your f and fellow-workers. 21 for $1 and $1.25, with name on. You make up on each box. Send for Selling Pla samples on approval. Costs nothing

MERIT CARD CO.

370 Plane St., Dept. 73, Newark,

IF you're TAL you need this FREE Style Bo

It's the story of Lane Br "Over 5'7" Shop" specializ Glamour clothes in TALL s to 20 . . . the newest dresses. jackets, suits, lingerie, neg blouses, skirts, slacks . . . to f TALL figure to perfection priced like fashions in "r sizes."

Mail coupon for your Free Style Book Today

Lane Bryant

Lane Bryant, Dept. 729 H J
465 Fifth Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.
Please send me your "Over 5'7" Shop" Style Boo

Name.....

Street.....

City.....State.....

...adness. "I only hope that when my ...omes," wrote Mrs. Damon, "I shall ... kind friends to help me across!" It ...artening when you got a few words of ...iation. People did not always re... ...r.

T... reverend mother put Mrs. Damon's ... a big bowl and carried them to the ...v. Two figures passed by, indistinct in ...thering twilight, and she saw it was ... l and the corporal's nephew, and she ..., her eyes very soft. You schemed and ...d, instead of just learning to trust. ...earched this way and that for a solu... a difficulty—and in the end it came ...in entirely different direction, where ...ever thought of looking. She remem... the young man's pleasant, earnest ...is he talked with her that morning: ... know I'm much older than she is, ...r. Thirty, and she's seventeen. But ...uit one year, two, whatever you think ...ary. You see, I came to the old country ... for a wife, and I'd almost given up ...ill that morning I saw her come into ...emist's."

...as what in my heart I always wanted ...r, thought the reverend mother. How ...e that this had come to them through ...id scoundrel the corporal, whom every... ...ld her she should have sent packing ... ago. The reverend mother smiled to ...f. I shall tell him to come back next year ...etch her. Next year the child will be ...gh...n. The question of an outfit and a ... would raise a few fresh problems, but ...e that, too, would be taken care of. ...re was another and more pressing ...em she had to attend to. She opened ...ife, and took out a bundle of papers. ...ther you tell her or not is for you to ...," the judge had said. She remembered ...he had said after that: "A dingy heri... for a child"—but in all the years ...al had been with them, there had been ...n of any taint. She had grown up sound ...weet and good. She wished old Mr. ...lieu were well enough for her to consult ...gain. But he wasn't, and she knew the ...on would have to be hers, alone.

She picked up the documents reporting the case, carried them to the grate and put a match to them, her mind suddenly made up. It was best forgotten, drawn up the chimney by the draft, a mass of charred paper that was presently scattered to the four winds.

Someone tapped at the door urgently as the last scrap whisked out of sight. It was Sister Fidelia.

"It's Mr. Mallilieu, mother. Could you come, please? He wants to see you, he says—to thank you."

Just for a moment the reverend mother looked at her, half bewildered, for it was uncanny, that message coming just when it did.

"I'm coming, sister," she said.

In old Mr. Mallilieu's room the lamp was shaded now. Old Mr. Mallilieu stirred and turned his head on the pillow, and she went and stood beside him. He opened his eyes and looked at her, but he did not see her, or the darkened room and the shaded lamp. He was drifting now, very peacefully but rather faster, down the river. It seemed to have widened suddenly, and he realized this was a part of it that was not familiar to him any more.

Not that it mattered, for she was there beside him, the only one he had ever loved, the one he had been waiting for all his life. He held her hand a little tighter.

The clouds parted. It began to grow slowly lighter. To his pleasure and astonishment, Mr. Mallilieu realized it was not, after all, the moon coming out. It was dawn breaking on an entirely new day. He turned his head then, slowly, and at last he saw her there beside him. She was as she had always been. There was nothing extraordinary about her. She wasn't even startlingly pretty, but she was the only one for him. He remembered even the silly name he had had for her, long years ago.

"Tilly!" he cried, delighted.

The reverend mother stood beside the bed, with Sister Ambrosina, who had been his special, opposite her. Then Sister Ambrosina turned slowly away, and went into the chapel and lit the tall candles on the altar.

SOUND YOURSELF OUT

(Continued from Page 127)

...shallow monotone. Here is an exercise ... courage flexibility, build concepts for ...itions and add flavor to your words! ...e any sentence in an exaggeratedly low ...tone, then repeat the sentence using ... highest vocal pitch. Say the sentence ...al times (high and low), making sure ... is no break in tone. Repeat for five ...tes, three times a day.

...o shrill? Try learning to breathe for ...y. Your breath supports the tone of ... voice, giving it quality and resonance. ..., shallow breathing often produces ... metallic sounds. Central breathing ... calls for the co-operation of your chest, ...ragm and abdomen is the best means ...oducing prettier sounds and prettier ...re. Try this exercise each morning be... arising:

...e flat on back, knees flexed, arms resting ...des. Breathe in deeply through your ... feeling your chest and diaphragm ex... . Now exhale through your mouth with ...parted on a good loud "ah-h-h." Relax ...pletely. Repeat eight times.

...ere's another. Co-ordinate your ...hing with your walking. Shift into your ...iest posture, head and chest high, shoul... back and down, spine straight. When ...walk, inhale s-l-o-w-l-y and fully to the ...t of six steps, then exhale s-l-o-w-l-y to ...same number. Practice regularly until ... can do this automatically and com...bly.

...e you a word muffler? Lots of people ...her their words and sound inarticulate ...ly because they do not open their mouths ... enough when they talk. You should be ... to open your mouth the width of two fin... without strain to your jaws. If you ..., try these exercises to relieve con...tion in your throat and face muscles: Let your head roll in slow, wide, lazy circles with your jaw hanging loose, your tongue relaxed. Pretend exaggerated yawns. Fill your cheeks with air, purse your lips and puff until the air is gone. Slump into a lazy-dog position, shoulders drooped, chest caved in, back curved. Now s-l-o-w-l-y straighten out—and up! Indicate "yes" by nodding your head up and down in exaggerated movements, then swing to "no," side to side.

Sing for your sound effects. Many of the speaking voices you hear on the radio attribute part of their lovely lilt to practicing scales and humming special sounds. Try singing the vowel sounds—da, de, di, do, dum. Hum the m, n and ng sounds, feeling the vibration against the roof of your mouth. And don't forget the scales, using your full voice range up and down—and often!

Husband-and-wife-at-home voices. Do you ever accuse your husband of talking too loud? Does he often tell you to "speak up"? Your inaudible sounds are probably as annoying to him as his manly booms are to you. In either case, here is a way to detect—and perfect—your marital tones at home. Ask the man in the house to sit at a distance six feet from you. Now talk to him as you ordinarily would. (No cheating on this occasion!) Next, send him to a distance of fifteen feet and talk to him again. Now, shoo him out to the kitchen or bedroom and ask him a question. If, at all three distances, your words reached him clearly and pleasantly, count your voice as an important part of your wifely appeal. But he may be frank enough to say you sounded too loud in the living room or indistinct when he was out of sight. If so, make a conscious effort, from now on, to adjust your voice volume in relation to his proximity. Now it's your turn to test him!

THE END

Dental Research Indicates You Can Help

Prevent Tooth Decay With COLGATE Ammoniated Tooth Powder

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Yes, Colgate's Great Dentifrice Gives Extra Protection As It Cleans Your Teeth—and Breath!

1 REMOVES ACID FILM usually associated with tooth decay! Laboratory tests indicate that when you use it regularly as directed, Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder may help you avoid pain, worry and expense of needless tooth decay.

2 TEETH LOOK CLEANER, feel cleaner immediately. That's because Colgate's foamy cleaning action removes dulling film ... well teeth get naturally, sparkling clean.

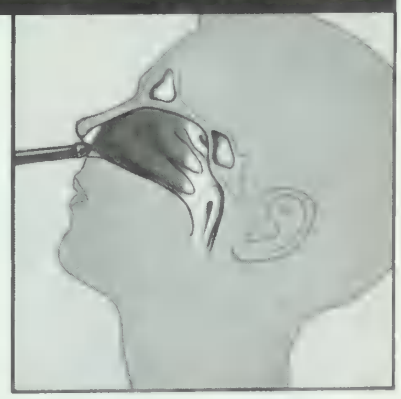
3 CLEANS BREATH, TOO . . . Removes tiny food particles that cause much bad breath. Has ... minty, mouth-refreshing flavor that even children love!

Get Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder today for the whole family. Available at any toilet goods counter.

4 oz. 47¢ 2 oz. 27¢

With A Flavor The Whole Family Will Enjoy

When you get drops . . .



Get an Atomizer!

Remember—many doctors say Atomization reaches more of the infected areas!

● Your physician will probably tell you—an atomizer applies medication to your nose and throat more efficiently than drops alone.

Make sure you get the most from your treatment with an atomizer—a DeVilbiss Atomizer. Your druggist will be glad to show you the extensive line of DeVilbiss Atomizers—there is one for every type of treatment and solution. If you are using "drops"—use them right, in a DeVilbiss Atomizer! The DeVilbiss Company, Toledo 1, Ohio, and Windsor, Ontario.

DeVILBISS

THE FINEST IN ATOMIZERS, NEBULIZERS, AND VAPORIZERS

Shish kebabs broiled with spicy sauce, a hearty salad to match outdoo appetites; finale, date-walnut pie.

Conversation Piece

by Ruth Mills Teague

If the weather won't co-operate on outdoor dining, shish kebabs are as easily done in the kitchen broiler

STUART

AN OUTDOOR cooking party with shish kebabs as the pièce de résistance is sure to be a smash hit. Most people like to have a share in the cooking—that's part of the fun—and with shish kebabs each one not only cooks his own but arranges it too. I know of no better way to get a party rolling happily than to provide each guest with a long wooden-handled skewer and a choice of delicious titbits to impale, and let him go to it, every man to his taste. Since this clearly has some decided advantages for the hostess, too, what are we waiting for?

Salted almonds and chutney-and-cheese-stuffed celery will provide something good but not too filling to eat while the fire burns down to a bed of coals. This meal won't involve a heavy cooking schedule and you may want to prepare the (Continued on Page 142)

How to make Potato Salad De Luxe

ook and cut into dice enough potatoes to make 4 ps. Prepare 1 c. diced celery, 2 tbsps. chopped mento, 2 tbsps. chopped onion, and 4 tbsps. opped pickle. Measure out 2 tablespoons of the ckle juice to add when mixing the salad.

Blend in the pickle juice, salt and pepper to taste, and ½ cup of Kraft Mayonnaise. Deluxe potato salad demands deluxe mayonnaise, the delicacy and richness you get in Kraft's. Luxuriously rich, Kraft's is true mayonnaise at its finest.

Arrange lettuce on a round chop plate, pile the potato salad in a mound in the center, and garnish with hard-cooked egg halves. Roll slices of bologna into cornucopias, fill with chopped pickle relish, and arrange on the lettuce around the salad.

True mayonnaise at its finest!

TRUE MAYONNAISE because it is made solely of fine oil and eggs, fragrant vinegar and seasoning . . . nothing else.

. . . AT ITS FINEST because Kraft is generous with the costly salad oils . . . gives you mayonnaise that's luxuriously rich. Because Kraft insists on really choice ingredients, blends them in just the right proportions for most delightful flavor. And because Kraft's own special beater gives velvety smooth texture. Next time, do try Kraft Mayonnaise.

on't miss TV's most famous dramatic show!
KRAFT TV THEATRE
every Wednesday evening, NBC-TV.

Kraft KITCHEN FRESH Mayonnaise

Going to make

WAFFLES?
POPOVERS?
SHERBET?
WHIPPED POTATOES?
SPONGE CAKE?

Make them the easy (and better) way—with the new

G-E Triple-Whip Mixer!

Dust will never settle on this mixer because you'll use it every day! It's easy to use—it's easy to clean—it's perfect for enough recipes to fill a cookbook!

New, improved speed selector—up front in plain view—lets you choose just the right amount of power for any mixing job! There's no guesswork!

Built-in light shines into the bowl, spotlighting those delicate mixing jobs. A 2-quart and 4-quart bowl—plus a no-clog juicer—come with each mixer!

Three beaters—beating from center to side of bowl—give you ideal mixing action. And because the beaters have no center shafts, they're easy to wash and dry!

Whip-Tip for Aug.: After you've squeezed your orange juice—a few seconds in the mixing bowl will give it a new lilt and sparkle!

Write for Triple-Whip Recipe Book. 56 deliciously tempting recipes. Address General Electric Company, Box L8, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

Specifications subject to change without notice.

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

(Continued from Page 140)

almonds yourself. I'll go into the process later.

There can be as many versions of shish kebab as there are cooks who concoct them, and they are all good. But the quite simple one I'm going to suggest is hard to beat and it's comparatively easy on the pocketbook. Lamb, eggplant, bacon and red and green sweet peppers are the ingredients, plus a highly seasoned barbecue sauce which is brushed on the kebabs before and during the broiling. For an added touch you might have some large mushroom caps, one or two for each plate, which can be cooked in a pan or skillet. It makes my mouth water just to talk about this dish. I do think shish kebab is one of the prize foods of the world.

The other main dish will be potato salad.

Buttered hot rolls and bread sticks will complete the main part of the meal. If they are wrapped in aluminum foil, heated in the oven and then wrapped in a large bath towel, the rolls will stay warm for a long time.

On the dessert we'll let ourselves go and have date-and-walnut pie. I can't say this is a light dessert, but I can safely say it's so good that no matter how enormous your shish kebab may have been, you'll want a big piece of date-and-walnut pie as a finale.

Now to recipes, which are planned for six people. Unless you have a tremendously big outdoor fireplace, six is about as large a number as you can handle conveniently.

CHUTNEY-AND-CHEESE-STUFFED CELERY

To 6 ounces cream cheese add 1 teaspoon vinegar, 1 tablespoon cream and 1 teaspoon curry powder, and work into a smooth paste. Add 5 tablespoons Indian chutney cut into small pieces, blend thoroughly and store in refrigerator. The mixture will be quite gooey, but when it is cold it will harden to the right consistency. Chill some short pieces of celery in ice water until very crisp. An hour or so before the party, dry the pieces of celery and fill them high with the cheese and chutney.

TOASTED ALMONDS

A couple of days in advance, blanch 1 pound almonds and spread them out to dry. To blanch, cover almonds with boiling water, let stand 7 minutes, drain, cover with cold water and slip off skins. When thoroughly dried, put them in a skillet with 2 tablespoons butter or margarine and cook over low heat until they are a delicate brown. Turn often with a pancake turner and shake skillet so they will be evenly browned. Salt well and spread on several thicknesses of paper towels.

SHISH KEBABS

Ask your butcher to slice a small leg of lamb into steaks 1″ thick. Cut the steaks into chunks approximately 1¼″ square. Obviously you won't get too many perfect squares, but this is an approximate shape and size to aim at. Use only the nicest pieces, allowing 4 chunks of lamb for each shish kebab, and have a few extras to play safe. What is left over, which will be quite a lot, will make a fine meal another day. (The last time I made kebabs I pressure-cooked the lamb that was left over, removed it from bones, added some peas and carrots and cooked fluffy dropped dumplings over the top.) Cover lamb squares with a mixture of two thirds salad oil to one third vinegar and let stand in refrigerator overnight. This will make the meat more tender.

The day of the party cut eggplant into slices ¾″ thick and then into 1¼″ squares, cut red and green sweet peppers into 1¼″ squares and cut thin slices of bacon in half, then fold each half three times to make squares.

My idea of filling a skewer for a fine hearty shish kebab is bacon, pepper, lamb and eggplant in sequence repeated four times and ending with an extra piece of bacon. Push everything together tightly on the skewer. For 6 shish kebabs, that would mean 24 pieces each of lamb, pepper and eggplant and 30 pieces of bacon, but I advise having a few additional pieces of everything.

The makings for the kebabs can be arranged on a large tray, and they will look surprisingly attractive—perhaps a row f folded bacon pieces at either end of the t with alternate rows of the lamb, eggpl and red and green peppers between. And can garnish liberally with parsley with feeling that you're being too fancy, beca people eat it like rabbits. When the tra arranged, cover it with wax paper, store refrigerator and carry it, still covered, to scene of the cooking.

If you decide to have the mushrooms, them in a skillet with some melted butte margarine. When all the kebabs are cool and people are serving their plates, put skillet over the fire for a few minutes.

BARBECUE SAUCE

In a saucepan melt ¼ pound butter or m garine, add 1 large clove garlic, finely minc and sauté a minute or two. Add ¼ c vinegar, ½ cup chili sauce, 2 tablespo Worcestershire sauce, ¼ cup water, 1 t spoon salt, ½ teaspoon freshly ground bl pepper and 1 tablespoon mono sodi glutamate. Bring to a boil and add 1 teaspo cornstarch blended with a little water a boil a minute or two.

The kebabs should be brushed generou with the sauce before and during the broili A 1½″ paintbrush makes an ideal implem for applying the barbecue sauce. Cook time depends on how well done you like y lamb. I like it a little on the rare side, everyone to his own taste—and that goes the arranging of the shish kebabs too.

DATE-AND-WALNUT PIE

Make piecrust by whatever method you li My favorite is the boiling-water method cause it's so quick and so completely depe able. Here's the recipe which will make 3 shells. Pour ½ cup boiling water over 1 c shortening and beat until creamy. Sift bef measuring 3 cups flour—preferably c flour—and sift again with 1 teaspoon salt a ½ teaspoon baking powder. Stir shorten into flour, work into a ball, wrap in wax pa and store in refrigerator. It is too soft to r until it is chilled. The remainder of the dough will keep in the refrigerator for at le a week, or it can be frozen and kept m longer.

Use the deepest pie dish you have. Lin with piecrust, rolled ⅛″ thick, and build as high a rim as you can.

To make the filling, cream together tablespoons butter or margarine, 5 w packed tablespoons light-brown sugar an tablespoons flour. Add 1¼ cups corn sirup teaspoon salt, ¼ cup water and 3 beaten yolks. Beat with rotary beater until blend Stir in 1 cup dates, cut into fairly la slivers, and 1 cup walnut meats brok into pieces. A pair of scissors is a lot eas than a knife for cutting the dates. Fold 3 stiffly beaten egg whites and spoon m ture into the uncooked pastry shell. Bake a moderately slow oven—325° F.—for minutes. Serve very cold with a topping unsweetened whipped cream and a garnish nut meats.

Service. Now a word about the weath which will do as it pleases, no matter h clever a manager you are. If the party planned is called because of rain, don't le throw you. Just turn your party indoors a cook your shish kebabs in the range. Preh the broiler, put the loaded skewers on a coo sheet very near the broiler and cook. Lea the oven or broiler door open—if you're us the long spears you couldn't do otherwis but even if you're using short skewers, wh are okay for indoor cooking, it's a good id to watch carefully and turn the kebabs soon as one side is browned.

But let's assume the fates are with you, t weather is fine and you are going to cook the open. This party is easy on the hoste especially in the service department. E what little there is to do should be carefu planned, and here the good old habit of l making is invaluable. If everything that w be needed has been written down and doub checked before you leave the house for t outdoor cooking scene—be it close or fa you can relax as completely as if you w guest, not hostess. THE E

IP NDERWOOD sandwiches are p picnic favorites. For variety ix it with cream cheese, peanut utter, or mayonnaise.

NDER WOOD
DEVILED HAM
E ORIGINAL—ALL FINE HAM—
ZESTFULLY SEASONED
F 86 years America's favorite spread

RN THE MONEY YOU NEED
LNG SUNSHINE CHRISTMAS CARDS
ds and Neighbors buy on sight America's Leading 21
r 't. with many DECORATIVE LINED ENVE-
ES 1. NEW! DIFFERENT! 100% Profit. NOV-
YROMEKOTES, NATURE PRINTS, CHRIST-
ELLY, Religious, Gift Wraps, Stationery. Surer
e prints 50 for $1.25. Big $1,000. Sales Contest.
ul Money-Making Plan for Clubs. SAMPLES ON REAL.
UNSHINE ART STUDIOS
t. E-8, 115 Fulton Street, New York 38, N.Y.

KITCHEN Bouquet
TO MAKE GRAVY
EXTRA RICH·
BROWN·DELICIOUS
It's easy to make your gravy extra-rich, extra-brown, extra-delicious every time. Just stir in Kitchen Bouquet! Ah! What rich, brown color and how it brings out that true meat taste! Adds no artificial flavor. Good cooks have used Kitchen Bouquet for over 70 years.
COSTS SO LITTLE —ADDS SO MUCH!

BABY KILLER

(Continued from Page 53)

feeding another, were potential killers. When they washed, it was cursorily, in tepid water.

One hundred and thirteen women delivered their babies in that Buffalo hospital during the hot month of August, 1947. Fifty-seven of these babies contracted diarrhea. Fifteen lost their lives.

The expectant mother will ask what was wrong with that Buffalo hospital. How could such an epidemic occur in these days of sterilization? What about antiseptics, the hospital's precautions against infection? A scandal like this in a hospital sounds, to most people, incredible.

Unfortunately there was nothing unusual about it. Figures show that between 1200 and 1500 babies under one month old annually die from diarrhea. But these are only the official figures. "A large number of deaths among the newborn which should be accredited to diarrhea," explains Dr. Albert E. Heustis, Michigan health commissioner, "are signed out as prematurity, pneumonia or other diseases." Prematurity has long been a convenient tag to hush up the scandal of a diarrhea epidemic. A Massachusetts health officer, suspicious because of the large number of premature deaths reported by one hospital, investigated to discover that an epidemic had been raging for a month. But no one had bothered to notify the authorities.

The question becomes even more urgent. How could this happen? Curiously enough, diarrhea epidemics are partially the result of progress. When women decided to have their babies in a hospital, they made childbirth vastly safer for themselves. They protected their babies, too, by bringing them within swift reach of oxygen, incubators, blood for transfusions.

But they created a new problem, group living for infants. And they created it at a time when our hospitals were least able to solve it. Twenty years ago only one out of every three women was delivered in a hospital. Today nine out of every ten go to the hospital to have babies—and many more women are having babies.

Hospital facilities have been overwhelmed by this onslaught of babies. During the depression and the war years few hospitals were built. Hospitals were understaffed and equipment was meager.

WOMEN shopping for a maternity hospital were not aware of these dangers. They chose a hospital because the visiting hours were generous, or the food good. How many women thought to investigate the quarters where their tiny infants would live? It was natural to assume that everything would be well taken care of. The first indication that things were not going well would be a sick or dying baby.

The lack of hospitals, of adequate space and help, of enough equipment, was not the hospitals' fault. Not so easy to explain, however, are some of the contributing causes discovered in the wake of diarrhea epidemics.

Milk has been unclean. In Washington, D. C., formula bottles were discovered spoiling because the refrigerators were out of order.

Nipples have been dirty. In one Midwestern city the sink in which they were washed was also used by the scrubwoman to clean her brushes.

Hands have been germ-spotted. In New York City investigators found nurses drying their hands on a common towel that was seldom changed.

Hospitals have temporized. Many authorities believe that the only successful method of stopping a diarrhea epidemic is to close down the nursery or even the entire maternity unit until all the sick babies have been discharged and a thorough cleaning job done. But hospital officials, fearing scandal, loss of revenue, have knocked unscientifically on wood, and kept the doors wide open.

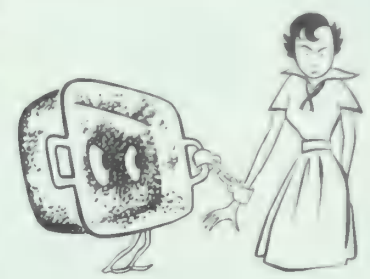
IN many cases, "just a few more deliveries" has meant a few more deaths. In one Illinois hospital the staff prayed, delayed, discussed for days, then took the decision to close down its maternity service. The last-born baby didn't have a chance. "We closed down," the superintendent recalled later, "just after a baby was delivered, at eleven o'clock at night. It took that baby only thirty-six hours to develop symptoms and it lived just forty-eight hours."

Slowly, hospitals have been learning from incidents such as these. Slowly they have been learning to build up a sterile wall around each newborn infant so that no germ can break through from the baby in the next bassinet. Hospitals are now adopting in infant nurseries the hand-scrubbing technique of the operating room, terminal sterilization to make the bottle safe, individual aseptic care of each infant in his own bassinet.

Chicago licked the disease first, a full ten years in advance of other cities. In 1937, after an outbreak which killed sixteen babies, Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, the health commissioner, got tough. He ordered a sweeping revision of his city's sanitary code and told his hospital inspectors to crack down hard on violators. Almost immediately Chicago saw results. Although individual infants have died from diarrhea, because no one as yet knows how to stop the first case, Chicago has had no epidemic of infant diarrhea for the past thirteen years.

Since then other groups have jumped in to lick the epidemics. The Children's Bureau in 1943 issued a pamphlet laying down standards for a newborn hospital nursery. The American Academy of Pediatrics prepared another manual of standards and organized local committees to investigate hospitals and work for high standards. New York revised its sanitary code and, in the two years since, no babies have died in an epidemic of diarrhea. Since 1946 over a thousand new hospitals have been built, partly with Federal funds that stipulated the very highest standards. For the first time, in the last five years, every state has some form of hospital licensing.

Changes in the care of newborn babies have also been brought about. You may be surprised to find that your hospital, if it is really top-notch, does not give your baby a bath, does not weigh him daily after the first few days, and takes his temperature once daily instead of every six hours. This leaves



Lullaby

By Elizabeth McFarland

Lay your dove head down
On my love-warm breast;
War and war's alarm
Grant this simple rest;
For the world, though deep and wide,
Suffers every man his bride.
Sleep, my love, there's naught to hide
When love's confessed.

Evil like a darkening tide
Rises round our bed.
Violence breeds in the stars,
Ocean upon ocean wars,
And waves count the dead.
Sleep, my love, I'll compass keep.
Strength will gird you as you sleep;
Be comforted.

May God give all some sweet surcease:
A bride, a buoy, a raft of peace.

Handcuffed to crusty pans?

New "Shine meter" tests prove BRILLO
gives TWICE the SHINE
in HALF the TIME!

A sturdy Brillo pad-with-soap makes dingy pans sparkle! Outshines all cleansers tested!

No soaking. No scraping!

A square Brillo metal-fiber pad polishes off gummy scorch—quick!

Brillo's jeweler's polish makes aluminums shine! Brillo every day keeps your whole kitchen spotless.

Brillo now lasts longer!
More Shines in Every Pad!

RED box—soap-filled pads
GREEN box—pads plus cake soap

more time for individualized care to prevent infection.

You may be even more surprised, if you are not nursing, to find that baby and his bottle are brought to you for feedings every four hours, instead of the baby's being fed in the nursery. With our present shortage of nurses, individual feeding of every infant is impossible in many hospitals.

Rooming in, the system whereby a mother and infant are kept together during their hospital stay, is growing in favor as a means of cutting down epidemics. Duke Hospital in Durham, North Carolina, began this over three years ago and, out of 1700 babies, only four have had infections sufficiently severe to require removal to an isolation nursery, and only one has had diarrhea.

All these steps are helpful, of course, but they by no means remove all possible danger. If you are about to have a baby, you would do well to ask several pertinent questions:

Are there specially trained doctors, an obstetrician, and a pediatrician preferably, in charge of the maternity division, and available for consultation if needed?

Are there facilities for separating sick from well infants? Is there also a suspect nursery to which a baby can be removed if he shows signs of illness?

Is the formula prepared in a separate room, apart from the kitchen? Are there facilities for sterilizing bottles in a modern way, and a specialist to supervise their preparation?

Is there a place in the nursery for proper hand washing, with plenty of soap and hot water?

Is there a trained nursing supervisor who can teach other personnel how to care for babies, who has the authority to remove an ill baby without wasting time in red tape?

Having made sure of your hospital, you can protect yourself by obeying its rules. You're only hurting yourself and your baby if you try to sneak in an extra visitor or suggest that a friend remain behind for when the baby is brought in for nur Hospital administrators complain "country-club" atmosphere many expect of their maternity hospital. who sit on beds, throw their coats ar chairs, and leave shortly before the brought out from the nursery are a contact which may be one factor spread of disease.

If friends with a cold or diarrhea visit you, tell them bluntly they welcome. More important, report doctor any illness or diarrhea you m suffered in the week or so prior delivery. Babies can be infected b mothers during the trip through th canal. If the hospital knows of your you will be delivered in an isolatio and your baby separated from other to prevent any infection from spread

To protect your baby, you must alert for symptoms of diarrhea dur first week the infant is home. Delay in s and treating this disease may mea infant's life. If he has four or mor stools in a day, especially if they are sive or leave a watery ring on the d he fails to gain or starts losing weigh drowsy, hard to waken, refuses food, c doctor at once. Do not worry, how a breast-fed baby with no other sign ness has more than four stools a day

Far better than treatment is prev As Mrs. Public, your voice raised abuses where they still exist in hospi series will carry heavy weight. Rem too, that hospitals do not deliberate ace the infants entrusted to them. T ditions revealed here have been due of funds, lack of trained personnel, aries, outmoded buildings, ignorance you can help better such conditions, have struck a blow in defense of your The demand for action should not a not wait on tragedy. TH

STOP, I KNOW YOU!

Do you, Billy?

YOU'RE THE "VOICE WITH A SMILE"!

You're right—I'm your telephone operator. But there's more to my job than just a cheerful voice. I'm here to help get things done. And when there's an emergency, I'm a ready and sympathetic friend.

AND POLITE, TOO!

Of course, courtesy is an important part of telephone service. But don't forget—most people are courteous, too. That helps a lot. Everybody gets better service when there's co-operation all along the line!

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Other Views, Prices and Sizes of Vogue Patterns on Pages 50 and 51

Vogue Design No. 7394. "Easy-to-Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 7333. Skirt; 24 to 30 inches waist measurement. 40c.

Vogue Design No. 7476. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 7285. One-piece dress and dickey; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. 60c.

Vogue Design No. 7441. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 6999. "Easy-to-Make" jacket; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 7198. Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 6994. Skirt; 24 to 30 inches waist measurement. 50c.

Vogue Junior Design No. 3425. One-piece dress; 11 to 17, 30½ to 34½. 75c.

Vogue Design No. 7478. One-piece dress and dickey; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

7333 7394 7476 7285 7441 69

6994 7198 3425 7478

Printed i

Modess .... because

She wears the cleanest clothes in town

. . . her mother swears by TIDE!

♪
She wears the cleanest clothes in town –
So does her doll named Nancy.
(Tide does the most terrific job
On all clothes – plain and fancy!)
♪♪

Tide GETS CLOTHES CLEANER THAN ANY SOAP!

P.S. PREFER TO SKIP RINSING?

With Tide you can skip the rinsing, and save all that time and work. Just wash, wring out, hang up. Tide will give you the cleanest possible no-rinse wash!

NO SOAP—NO OTHER PRODUCT SOLD THROUGHOUT AMERICA WILL WASH AS CLEAN AS TIDE!

CLEANER CLOTHES! When you rinse out a Tide wash you've got the cleanest clothes in town. Cleaner clothes than any other woman will get with any soap of any kind. Here's why! Tide not only gets out the ordinary dirt, but also removes dulling soap film. That's the miracle of Tide!

WHITER, TOO! Tide has been tested time after time against all leading washday soaps. And tests—made in hardest water—prove that Tide gets clothes cleaner and whiter than any soap! What's more, after just one Tide wash, soap-dulled colors actually come brighter!

WASHDAY PROOF! Millions of you women have proved Tide's miracle. You've seen the proof in your husband's cleaner, whiter shirts . . . in your own bright wash prints. And, with all this, Tide is kind to your hands—milder than ever before. Get Tide today for the cleanest wash in town!

SATISFACTORY OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

RED ROPE MAGAZINE BINDER
Manufactured by GAYLORD BROS. Inc.
Syracuse, N. Y.
Stockton, Calif.

DES'
OME

JOURNAL

SEPTEMBER
1951 · 25c

THE MAGAZINE WOMEN BELIEVE IN

BURLINGAME
PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

be Measure of Reading Pleasure

COMPLETE NOVEL

River Garden of Pure Repose

by Grace Boynton

Enchanting story of a great Quaker woman who lived in the China of yesterday and today.

COMPLETE LIFE-STORY

I'm a Lucky Guy

by Frank Gilbreth

anus history of one half the author team of Cheaper by the Dozen.

A House Worth $20,000 . . .

Cost to you $9,175 . . . Can be built today

How Sparkling can you be?

For teeth that Sparkle bright . . . the answer is IPANA!

the answer is Ipana!

IT'S TRUE—a sparkling, successful smile depends on a healthy mouth—and here's how cleaning teeth with Ipana helps keep your whole mouth healthy!

1. TEETH. Brush all tooth surfaces thoroughly with Ipana. To reduce tooth decay effectively, no other tooth paste—ammoniated or regular—has been proved better than Ipana.

2. GUMS. Brush teeth from gum margins towards biting edges. Ipana's active cleansing foam helps remove irritating debris and soft calculus from gum margins—where they can lead to gum irritation and disease.

3. BREATH. Brushing with Ipana sweetens breath instantly—and Ipana's brisk, invigorating flavor makes your mouth feel wonderfully fresh.

Yes, cleansing with Ipana helps keep your whole mouth a-sparkle with health—so get Ipana today!

For breath that's Sparkling fresh . . . the answer is IPANA!

For Sparkling popularity . . . the answer is IPANA!

A Product of Bristol-Myers

For the Smile of Beauty

Parkay Margarine is a perfectly delicious spread!

This is the good and simple reason why so many of your neighbors serve Parkay at every meal. They have discovered that Kraft's long experience in making fine food products has created a margarine that is unsurpassed for freshness . . . unexcelled for flavor. Be sure Parkay is on your market list next time you go shopping.

You can buy Yellow Parkay, each quarter wrapped in "Flavor-Saver" aluminum foil, in all markets where state laws permit the sale of colored margarine. In other markets, Parkay is packaged in special Color-Kwik bag or with coloring enclosed in separate envelope.

Laugh with "The Great Gildersleeve" every Wednesday evening—NBC

VOL. LXVIII NO. 9

Journal Contents

September 1951

Journalities

BORIS

Grace Boynton

Ideas of what makes "the full life" vary, but if you were to ask GRACE BOYNTON, who has certainly lived one, she would tell you about her New England ancestry, her home in Medford, Massachusetts, where she was born and now lives, and her years of travel, study and teaching in China—and fail to mention her own gentle, indomitable spirit which makes all the difference. Readers will learn of that between the lines of her novel, The River Garden of Pure Repose (Page 38). In 1919 she sailed for China, under an appointment of the missionary organization of Congregational Churches, and taught in Yenching University in Peking for thirty years. For twenty years her hobby has been the study of Chinese gardens—a little-known and fast-vanishing branch of Chinese art. ▪ JEAN TODD FREEMAN says her story, The Green Scarf (Page 10), is "fiction based on fact—it changed from a basic experience in the writing process." Jean was graduated from Mount Holyoke this year. Other than writing, her interests are dancing (ballet) and riding—especially her own colt, Tennessee Tango. Her home is in Hattiesburg, Mississippi. • The JOURNAL presents LAURA WINSTON, who knows about love. "I'm twenty-three," she tells us, "born in Auburn, New York. I am the product of many Wood Hollow Halls, and my love life during these formative years consisted of a half-dozen Clarence Rassmussens. The only flaw was that I adored all six of them. Their letters, complete with 'ha-ha's,' thrilled me. (See Devotedly, Patrick Henry Casebolt, Page 46.) I've always wanted to write and I began at the age of thirteen, submitting stories to magazines under my brother's name. He was a football player and I thought his name would carry more weight than mine."

Jean Freeman

Laura Winston

Novel Complete in This Issue

The River Garden of Pure Repose — Grace Boynton — 38

Stories

The Green Scarf — Jean Todd Freeman — 10
Carry-on-Johnny — I. A. R. Wylie — 42
Devotedly, Patrick Henry Casebolt — Laura Winston — 46
. . . And Have Not Charity — Mary Elizabeth Vroman — 48
Melville Goodwin USA (Fifth part of seven) — John P. Marquand — 54

Special Features

The Lesson of Korea — Dorothy Thompson — 11
"I Love You" — Charles Ingerman — 11
Take it Easy, Darling — Robert N. Taylor — 34
I'm a Lucky Guy — Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr. — 44
There's a Man in the House — Harlan Miller — 64
Women Without Children—Victims of a New Disease — Gladys Denny Shultz — 65
What are People Really Like? — The Daly Sisters — 102
How America Lives: New Start in Life — Roger Butterfield — 183
The Make-Believe Twins — Phyllis McGinley and Roberta MacDonald — 196

General Features

Our Readers Write Us — 5
Under-Cover Stuff — Bernardine Kielty — 16
Working Mothers . . . San Diego's Problem Child-Care Centers — Margaret Hickey — 25
Reference Library — 26
Making Marriage Work — Clifford R. Adams — 28
Ask Any Boy (Sub-Deb) — Edited by Jan Weyl — 30
Fifty Years Ago in the Journal ▪ Journal About Town — 37
Ask Any Woman — Marcelene Cox — 84
Diary of Domesticity — Gladys Taber — 179
This is a Quick-Quitter — Munro Leaf — 198
The Child Who Wheezes — Dr. Herman N. Bundesen — 203

Fashions and Beauty

The New and You — Wilhela Cushman — 56
Clothes You Wear Again and Again — Ruth Mary Packard — 60
Color is the Reason — Wilhela Cushman — 62
Two Looks for Fall — Nora O'Leary — 66
Reducing . . . for Your Type — Dawn Crowell Norman — 68
$100 Teen-Age Wardrobe — Nora O'Leary — 188
Bibs, Aprons and Place Mats — 228

Food and Homemaking

Just Help Yourself — Ann Batchelder — 70
Line a Day — Ann Batchelder — 72
Conversation Piece — Ruth Mills Teague — 92
Make the Most of Aluminum Utensils — 110
Best I Ever Ate (Easy Sponge Cake) — Mrs. Florence Readman — 169
Baking on a Budget — Louella G. Shouer — 190
For Goodness' Sake! — Nika Standen — 216
Ways and Means — Margaret Davidson — 224

Architecture and Interior Decoration

Cost $9,175 . . . Worth $20,000 — Richard Pratt — 50
Money Savers . . . for Furnishing a Large Room — H. T. Williams — 52
Mirror Magic — 104
Prize Crochet — Henrietta Murdock — 135

Poetry

Elizabeth McFarland 78 • Alma Roberts Giordan 90 • Hannah Kahn 95 Julia Collins Ardayne 110 • Dan G. Hoffman 120 • Mary Ballard Duryee 139 • Elizabeth-Ellen Long 148 • Georgie Starbuck Galbraith 161 Sara King Carleton 176 • Oliver St. John Gogarty 202 • Robert P. Tristram Coffin 214 • Helen Harrington 218

Cover Photograph by Wilhela Cushman

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address:
LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1951 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered as U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries, 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company, Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert L. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Traxler, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Vice-President and Director of Research; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

If they love clothes—and you love to save...

GET A NEW SINGER SEWING MACHINE

■ Discover how easy it is to make pretty clothes at half of store prices with one of the new SINGER* Sewing Machines. Finest machines of 100 years! New models sew forward and back, even baste over pins.

■ Choose your favorite style—traditional or modern, cabinet or portable. Every SINGER is built to last a lifetime. Service available from any SINGER SEWING CENTER. Above: Queen Anne model.

■ You get a sewing course under an expert instructor when you buy a new SINGER. Also: basic set of attachments. And many others are available for every detail from appliqués to zippers.

■ Just-the-right notions—everything you need at your SINGER SEWING CENTER. Everything from pinking shears to braid. And SINGER will make buttonholes, cover buttons, make belts at tiny prices.

These back-to-school sister outfits—pretty, practical little jumpers and blouses—are made from Simplicity Patterns 3649 and 3647.

Choose yours today! Prices from $89.50

MINIMUM DOWN PAYMENT BUDGET TERMS LIBERAL TRADE-IN ALLOWANCE

The SINGER SEWING CENTER above is at 1010 Nicollet Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn. More than a thousand others from coast to coast. For address nearest you, see classified phone book under SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY.

FOR YOUR PROTECTION, SINGER sells and services its Sewing Machines, Vacuum Cleaners and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" Trade Mark and "SINGER SEWING CENTER" on the window, and never through department stores, dealers, or other outlets.

YOURS with every new SINGER

- Course in home sewing. A series of lessons under expert SINGER instructors at your local SINGER SEWING CENTER.
- Basic set of SINGER* Attachments, including hemmer, gatherer, ruffler.
- SINGER Warranty of manufacturing perfection.

A CENTURY OF SEWING SERVICE 1851 1951

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

100th ANNIVERSARY

*A Trade Mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. Copyright, U. S. A., 1951, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved for all countries.

Our Readers Write us

Help Still Wanted

Oak Hill, Ohio

Dear Editors: Thank you for printing a How America Lives article about a mother who does more yelling and spanking than I do. I've just read about Algy Peterson, and she has my sympathy completely. I have four children and not as many housekeeping conveniences as she has. Like Algy, I wait until after the children's bedtime to give a sigh and relax.

Sincerely yours,
MRS. ART CRUSAN

• Most popular How America Lives stories are, invariably, those about wives up to their eyes in trouble. Is this because women love soap opera? Or do women love soap opera because it's so much like life? ED.

A Kiss in Time

Los Angeles, California

Dear Editors: Love makes a big difference with all children, and making a child stay in a room seems a poor way of expressing it. Sitting for just ten minutes reading to a child or building a house or making a scrapbook would save Algy Peterson a lot of grief.

Sincerely,
(Name withheld by request.)

• In for a penny, in for a pound. It's love that makes the world go round. ED.

Democracy Begins at Home

• Following is a condensation of a letter which appeared in the bulletin of the Madeira School Alumnae Association. The Madeira School, Falls Church, Virginia, is a school for girls, generally thought to be "sheltered" from the mundane facts of homemaking and the harsh facts of war. Miss Madeira, the school's unusually sagacious head, gives instead some blunt but sound advice. ED.

Dear Girls: In Communism we have a totalitarian form of government; in a democratic society we have a freedom of choice. When we chose a democratic way of life to live under, we chose the most difficult form that has ever yet been invented. The opposite side of a democratic society is responsibility. Unless a very large majority of the people in a democratic society take an active and vigorous part in the life of that society, it will not function properly and it will not last. Its success depends upon how many care.

In the last Federal election only 51 per cent of the possible voters went to the polls. That meant that 49 per cent were indifferent and stayed at home. This is a pretty dreadful story. In 1800, when there was not a paved road in the whole country, 80 per cent of the voters went to the polls. Our early passion for our country seems to have grown cold.

Now we have the possibility of another great war on our hands. If war should come, we shall be devastated. No one will be either safe or secure. We must be prepared to find a way to live in serenity, if not in safety. So I am urging you all to have gardens: to work in them with your own hands, to grow the food you will eat; then to become excellent cooks and have what I like to call deep family life. By deep family life, I mean enjoying one another by reading aloud as a family; playing games together; hearing good music every day, and bringing in friends. Family life is the richest thing in this world.

I am one who believes that we shall not have a World War, either now or in the future. Perhaps it is fortunate for us that we have the atom bomb, for it may become a deterrent to war. We have a choice between the atom bomb and trying to find a way to get on with people all over the world. I feel bound to say that it is harder to find a way to get on with people than it is to use the atom bomb. We must demonstrate a democratic society on a finer scale than we have ever done. We must gird our loins for greater strength of living than we have ever done before. Unless a very large per cent of the educated and intelligent people in the country take a part in its life, we shall not survive.

LUCY MADEIRA WING

Happy Work

Omaha, Nebraska

Dear Editors: Your How America Lives is so interesting and enjoyable that I wonder who gets the greatest thrill out of it—the photographer, the writer, the editors of the JOURNAL, the people who read the magazine, or the people about whom the article is written?

Sincerely,
MRS. EMIL KUBIN

■ Our feeling is that everybody has more fun than the stay-at-home editors, but even that is a pleasure. ED.

Shapely Armful

Brooklyn, New York

Dear Editors: When you see my baby's picture, I just know you'll want to further adorn your magazine with it. She's 2 years old and 35 inches tall. She weighs 38 pounds, which makes her a shapely armful, as you can see.

The smaller doll is probably a boy.

Yours very truly,
MRS. I. CRACCHIOLA

Lackadaisical Lovers

Rome, Italy

Dear Editors: Is it true that the American man considers love and love-making a secondary thing to be taken in doses, coolly, like pills prescribed by the doctor? No wonder, then, that the American woman becomes irked and authoritative. She, perhaps subconsciously, is only giving vent to frustrated feelings. It's logical that she should find other ways to channel her affection and love when the man, more

New IVORY FLAKES
with Radiant Action
keeps lovely clothes lovely far longer

Give yourself a lift in your leisure hours . . . dress your prettiest while you relax! Why shouldn't you? New Ivory Flakes will keep your precious "at home" washables sparkling bright, washing after washing.

You see, new Ivory Flakes has "Radiant Action"—an entirely new kind of beauty protection for fine washables. So when you change to gentle care with pure, mild Ivory Flakes, your nice washables will keep their radiant, brand-new beauty through more wearings and washings than you ever thought was possible!

Why take chances? You know your fine washables are safe in Ivory Flakes! It's the soap millions of mothers use for baby's clothes, when only the mildest soap will do. It's the only flake form of baby's pure, mild Ivory Soap. So kind to hands in the dishpan, too. Get a box today!

Longer wear for nylons!
Change to gentle care and use pure, mild Ivory Flakes. Then you'll keep stocking colors fresh up to twice as long!

If it's lovely to wear...
it's worth Ivory Flakes care

99 44/100% Pure!

Now you can deep-fry all foods at home.....

as Expertly as the World's Finest Chefs!

DOUBLE ORDINARY SIZE

JUMBO FRY-BASKET (9 x 9 x 4½ inches) provides greater frying capacity. Enables you to deep-fry as little as you want or as much as you need for average family servings ALL AT ONCE.

Yes, it's fun to keep house the PRESTO way!

Deep-fried foods, the kind usually served only in the world's finest restaurants, can now be made right in your own kitchen . . . easily, quickly, economically, with the amazing new PRESTO Automatic DIXIE-FRYER!

How the family will go for these golden-brown, crispy, full-flavored deep-fried taste-thrillers! Whether it's chicken or doughnuts, steaks or shrimp, fish or fritters, onions or okra, croquettes or canapes, potatoes or hush-puppies, PRESTO deep-fried delicacies always have that "French chef" appeal!

Exclusive, exact, PRESTO automatic temperature control prevents soggy, grease-soaked foods, and over-heating of shortening. And, you can use the same shortening, over and over again, without transfer of food flavors! For best results in preparing deep-fried foods every time, use a PRESTO Automatic DIXIE-FRYER!

Get your PRESTO DIXIE-FRYER wherever quality electrical housewares are available.

AUTOMATIC TEMPERATURE CONTROL KNOB . . . Once set, this highly accurate thermostat automatically maintains proper heat for best frying results. 200-400 degree range for frying all foods.

CAST-IN LONG LIFE HEATING ELEMENT . . . Sealed type heating unit in sides, leaves a cool well below heating unit . . . prevents burning of collected food particles. 1350 watts AC only.

FLO-RITE DRAIN SPOUT . . . For extra convenience and safety in removing shortening . . . makes cleaning and storing of shortening for repeated use a fast, simple process.

GIVEN . . . Included, at no extra cost with every PRESTO DIXIE-FRYER, a beautifully illustrated 40-page instruction-recipe book on deep-frying of all foods . . . more than 100 individual recipes.

Give ELECTRICAL HOUSEWARES . . . First Choice for Every Gift Occasion

NATIONAL PRESSURE COOKER COMPANY, Eau Claire, Wisconsin ©1951 N.P.C. CO.

Made by the Makers of World Famous PRESTO COOKERS and PRESTO VAPOR-STEAM IRONS!

frequently than not, is not receptive to those things.

It takes more than a mirror to understand women—American women in particular. I have met American women behind the front lines, in offices, in hospitals and in social work, and I can truthfully say that I admired their way of thinking and seeing things. I admired their morale, their work and, above all, their frankness, which no European-born-and-bred woman has.

Cordially,
PAOLO SUMAN,
Conte Di Cesana

• It is our considered belief that American women are wonderful—but we reserve the right to believe that many are more wonderful than others. ED.

Blood Bank Pays Dividend

Dem Haag, Netherlands

Dear Editors: Miss Hickey's feature on the Red Cross bloodmobile has reminded me to count my blessings especially fervently again today. Last spring I flew home to have our long-desired second child. "Home" is an Illinois community in the area served by the St. Louis blood center. The eight pints of blood I received undoubtedly saved my life and my child's. The blood bank made it possible for me to have as much blood as I needed as soon as I needed it. And though one doesn't count cost where life is concerned, it was wonderful to know there were no professional donors to pay.

Sincerely,
JAYNE S. MILLER

• Anyone who has not, at some time, donated blood—unless medical reasons prohibit—is a stinker, a no-good, and ought to be run out of town on a rail! What we mean is that such a person certainly isn't doing his part. ED.

Are Divorcees Glamorous?

Hackensack, New Jersey

Dear Editors: One of the things that have often puzzled me is where authors get their models for divorcees. In the ten years since my own divorce I have, through my work, become acquainted with well over 100 divorcees—in the Midwest, California and Washington, D. C., as well as metropolitan New York—and only one of them in the least resembles the brittle, irresponsible creatures that women's magazines are so fond of portraying. Most divorcees I know are hard-working women, too busy trying to be both mother and father to their youngsters—too exhausted from bringing home the bacon and cooking it too—to be even as sociable as the married women who are their neighbors. The average divorcee is not particularly glamorous, and I would like just once to see a writer dramatize the hundreds who are uncomplainingly and courageously paying with their mature years of life for a mistake in judgment (of one kind or another) of their youth.

Sincerely,
BARBARA WHITMORE HENRY

• Glamorous or not, sociable or not, the facts are that chances for remarriage for the divorced are, age for age, greater than for the widowed and even greater than for the girl who has never married. For the divorcee of age 30, the chances of eventual remarriage are 94 in 100. This is more than 50 per cent greater than the chances for the widow of the same age, which are 60 in 100, and almost double the chances of eventual marriage for a spinster of age 30 (48 in 100). ED.

What Christian Science Really Is

Boston, Massachusetts

Dear Friends: We are reluctant to write to you with regard to Mother is a Schiz, by Rita Eng, in the May issue of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, because we are well aware of, and respect, a writer's right to interpret life as he sees it. On the other hand, we feel sincerely that the reference to Christian Science gave an unnecessarily misleading picture of what Christian Science really is.

"When the crisis had passed, Beth said, 'Polly, what good does your training do you if you can't apply the concepts to yourself? Now just lie there and tell your-

(Continued on Page 8)

Avoid soggy crust in pumpkin pie this easy way

—a pie-baking hint from MARIE GIFFORD, Armour's famous home economist

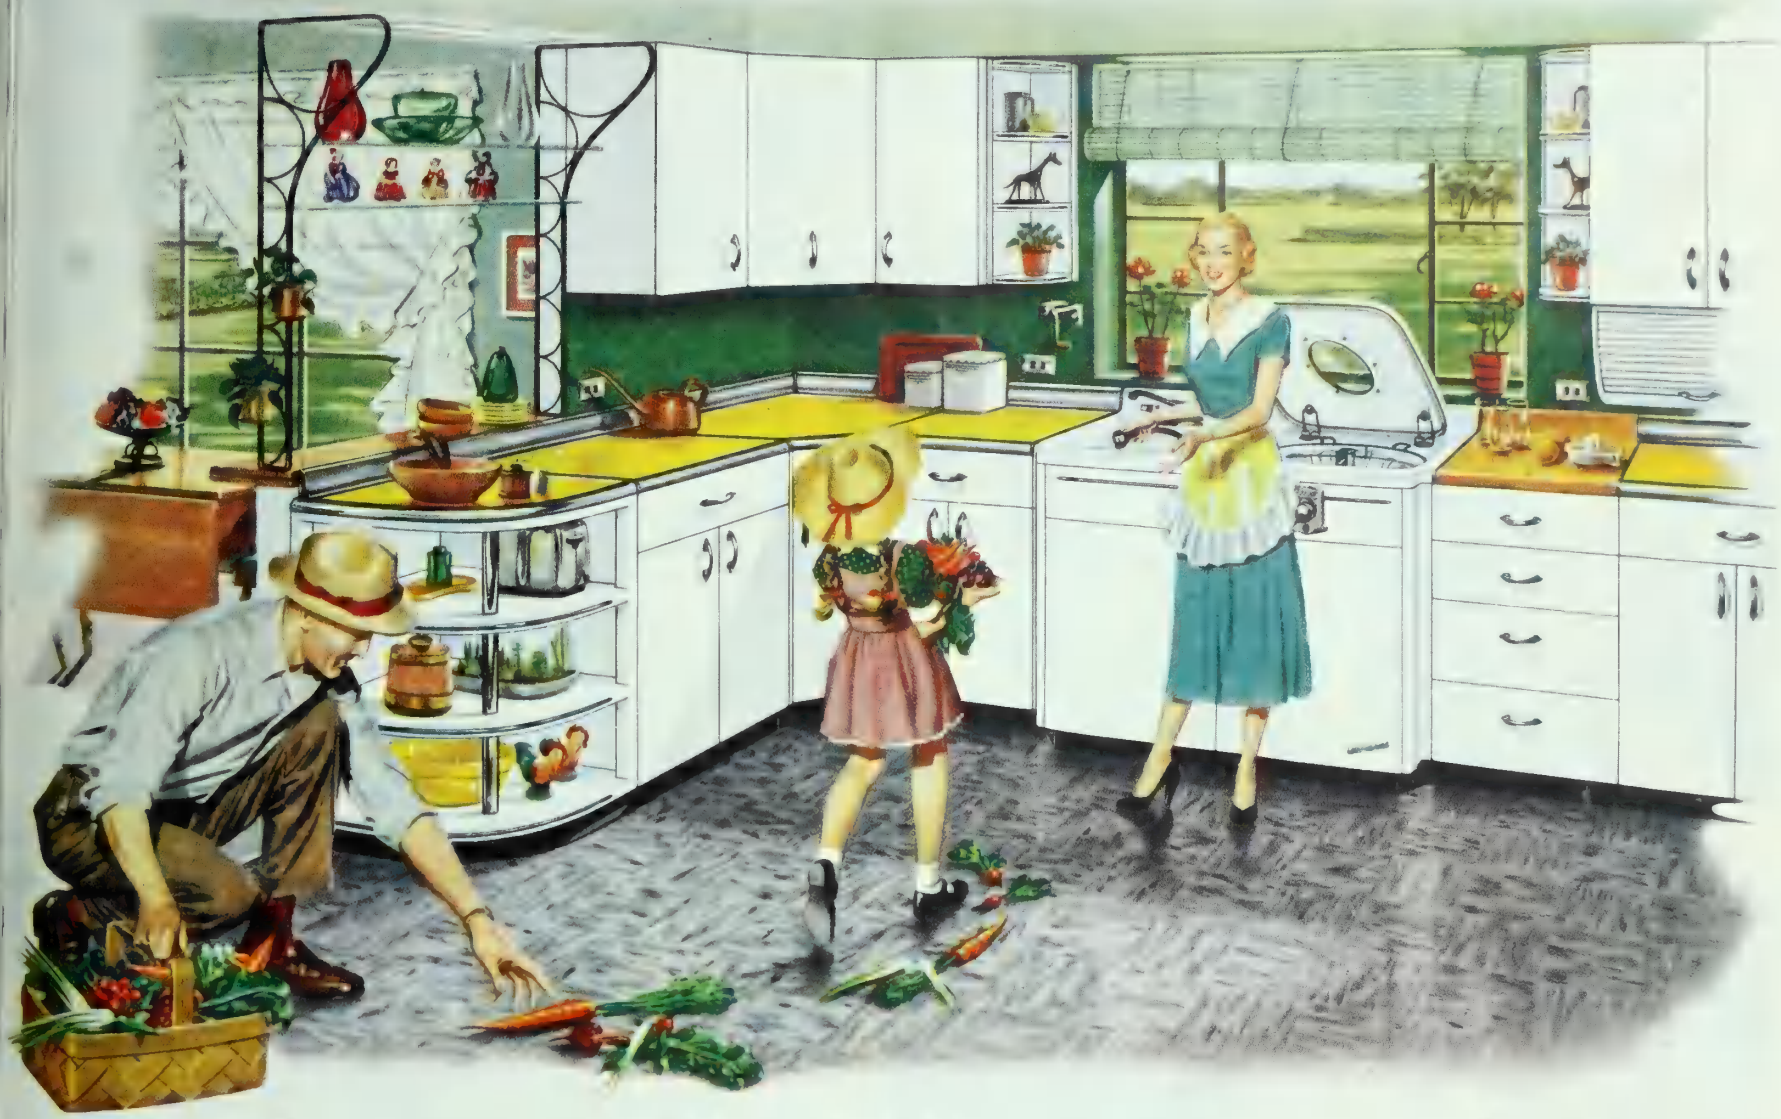
To keep the crust from soaking up moisture in pumpkin or custard pies, spread a little beaten egg over the unbaked crust with a pastry brush or the back of spoon. You can do this economically because you'll later use the rest of the beaten egg to make the filling. Place crust in refrigerator to let egg dry before adding the filling.



And for crusts that are always delicciously flaky and tender, use America's perfect pie lard! It's Armour Star Lard—the lard of pie-baking champions! Next time you visit your grocer's, take home one of the handy, self-measuring cartons of Armour Star Lard. And be sure to try Marie Gifford's famous 5-minute pie crust recipe that's printed on it. With this easy, can't-fail recipe you mix all ingredients at room temperature. Armour Star Lard makes wonderfully light and tender biscuits — makes all your fried foods more digestible, too!

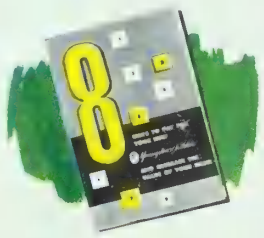
Got a pie-baking question? Just write to Marie Gifford, Dept. 462, Box 20, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois. She will help you with any pie-baking problem you may have. Write to Marie Gifford, too, for an interesting free booklet of her favorite baking recipes.

Armour Star Lard

—the new-type lard that stays fresh without refrigeration. Remember, lard saves you money, too!

The house with a Youngstown Kitchen is worth more!

The minute your Youngstown Kitchen is installed you'll set a higher value on your house . . . and so will somebody who would like to own it. And this is lasting value, because a Youngstown Kitchen is of sturdy, die-made steel that stays lovely. So start enjoying happier kitchen living now . . . and increase the value of your home investment at the same time. No home improvement could give you greater pleasure!



Imagine the kind of kitchen you've always wanted . . . with just-right storage space and work areas . . . with garbage completely eliminated . . . with such work-saving marvels as the new Youngstown Kitchens Jet-Tower Dishwasher that completely modernizes dishwashing! This brighter, easier living can be yours because Youngstown Kitchens gleaming, white-enameled steel units are designed to give you a luxury kitchen at piggy-bank prices.

Youngstown Kitchens

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION • WARREN, OHIO

Youngstown Kitchens are sold throughout the World

Call Western Union, Operator 25, and without charge get the name of a nearby dealer.

8 easy ways to buy! Did you know that there are eight ways to buy a Youngstown Kitchen today? Send the coupon for Youngstown Kitchens' famous "Ideas and Decoration" booklet and the new booklet that tells about these purchase plans. You'll find it much easier than you'd thought to have the world's most famous kitchen.

Let your factory-trained Youngstown Kitchen dealer show you your dream kitchen in perfect miniature and how to save on installation. If building, specify a Youngstown Kitchen—you'll save!

Youngstown Kitchens
Mullins Manufacturing Corporation
Dept. L-951, Warren, Ohio

Please send me your "Kitchen Ideas and Decoration" booklet plus "8 Ways" booklet. I enclose 10c in cash (no stamps, please) to cover cost of mailing.

I plan to build ☐ I plan to remodel ☐

NAME (Please print)

ADDRESS

CITY ZONE

COUNTY STATE

© 1951 Mullins Manufacturing Corporation

New Shasta Cream Shampoo

Sparks your hair with brighter, richer color

Blonde hair gleams with bright gold

Brunette hair dances with dark fire

Red hair takes on burnished glory

Gray, White hair shines with silver

Not a tint! Not a dye! But a super cleansing shampoo that makes even dull-looking hair sing with brighter color

A DAZZLING LIFT! New lanolin-enriched Shasta Cream Shampoo glorifies your natural hair color. It does not add artificial color to your hair, but gives your own true color a dazzling lift.

"SUPER" CLEANS HAIR! New Shasta contains an amazing sparkle-giving cleanser that "super" cleans your hair. This super cleansing action is the secret of the shining, sparkling color after your Shasta shampoo. For Shasta leaves each strand so radiantly clean the natural color sparkles like sunshine streaming through a clean window pane.

SHASTA IS SAFE! Yet for all its color-sparkling magic, Shasta is safe. Lathers out color-dulling grime. Leaves in precious natural oils your hair needs to be soft, healthy, glamorous.

MAKE THIS CONVINCING TEST TODAY

BEFORE SHAMPOOING, snip off a lock of hair. Put this lock aside while you shampoo the rest of your hair with new Shasta.

AFTER SHAMPOOING, when hair is dry, compare the unwashed lock with your soft and radiant Shasta-washed hair. If not convinced that new Shasta sparks your hair with brighter, richer color, return the jar to Procter & Gamble and get your money back in full.

Big economy jar 4 full ounces 89¢
also 57¢..... 29¢

NEW COLOR-SPARKING Shasta "SUPER" CLEANS SAFELY
DOES NOT ROB HAIR OF NATURAL OILS

(Continued from Page 6)

self over and over, 'I'm not sick, I'm scared. I'm not sick, I'm scared.'

"'That's Christian Science.'"

Just for the record, Christian Science neither ignores sickness nor does it consist merely of trying to tell oneself that one isn't sick. It does heal sickness through correcting false concepts in human thought and bringing to light man's real nature as a child of God.

Sincerely yours,
GEORGE CHANNING,
Manager, Committees on Publication
The First Church of Christ, Scientist

The Trouble With Parents

Boulder, Colorado

Dear Editors: Mothers and fathers are quite a problem sometimes. But other times they are quite useful things, as when you get very sick or have big problems to decide.

Parents are always bothering. If you want to go out, you have to stay in. If you want to stay in, you have to go out. Another thing is that they talk too long. We want to ask something, but we know it is rude to butt in, so we just have to wait our turn.

Parents are always disturbing children from their play to do something. Another thing, they give out free spankings, and that makes me mad.

Sometimes, us children run into difficulties, then my parents blame me for things whether it is my fault or not. But I can see their point of view, for I'm the oldest of our five kids, so I have most responsibility, but I also have the most allowance and privileges and things like that.

Yours truly,
CONNIE PEPER
Age 10

• No comment. ED.

When the Past was Still Future

Oakland, California

Dear Sir: According to 50 Years Ago in the Journal, in 1901, there were no electric refrigerators, irons or phonographs. No electric irons? I doubt. In the winter of 1887–1888, an egg was fried for me on an electric plate. No electric phonographs? Possibly correct, but very improbable. In the summer of 1878, at Marietta, Ohio, I talked into one of the first three phonographs made by Edison, and heard my speech repeated. It does not seem likely that the phonograph waited 23 years for electric power when electric streetcars were operating in the 1880's. I have before now encountered young folk to whom 50 years ago seemed like the prehistoric past. I distinctly remember Grant's first presidential campaign in 1868. Yours truly,
LINCOLN DARROW

■ One of the hardest things for people to believe is that people 50 years ago lived and loved—and called each other harsh names—very much as people do now. This despite the fact that everyone knows that, in half a century, we—you and I—are all going to be those queer old people who lived 50 years ago. Imagine! ED.

On the Ball

The Duke's Cottage,
Rudgwick, England

Dear Bruce and Beatrice: This is the season of fairs, when every village green suddenly sprouts a roundabout (or carrousel), swing boats, and a terrible thing called a jungle ride, on which you tear round an undulating course on a crocodile or tiger which emits fearful wailing bellows. There are rifle ranges and hoop-la stalls (the prizes are no longer what they once were) and a thing where you throw tennis balls and knock things down and then they are yours. This particular stall recalls poignantly to me a day when my children were small, and I took them to the fair, and Jock anchored at this particular stall. He was rather good with a ball. After he had won the best box of chocolates, a bottle of eau de Cologne, quite a decent doll which he gave to Mary, and a safety razor which he said he would save up for the future, the stall keeper drew me aside and said savagely, "How much to take the little —— home!"

Love to you all,
DOROTHY BLACK

Skin beginning to look dry?

after 25
drying skin begins to show!

IT'S NOTICEABLE the way skin often begins to look drier after 25.

At about this age, the natural oil that keeps skin soft and fresh starts decreasing.

You need a special replacer to offset this drying out. Use this special Pond's lanolin-rich Dry Skin Cream.

See below how this quick un-drier works to soften and repair common dry skin troubles. Begin to get this wonderful help—now!

Little Dry-Skin Puckers under lip make your mouth look "set," older.

To Relax—Always at bedtime help supple this dry skin with softening Pond's Dry Skin Cream, smoothing in well from center of lip out and up to corners. This rich cream is homogenized to soak in better. Feel it begin to soften your dry skin right away.

Tiny Dry Lines Etch In between your eyes, on forehead.

To Smooth Down—Circle on plenty of Pond's lanolin-rich Dry Skin Cream. Work it firmly up between your eyes—out over eyebrows to temples. Leave a little of this special-rich cream on overnight for extra softening help.

start using Pond's Dry Skin Cream today.

Rich in lanolin, it is homogenized and has a special softening emulsifier.

At night: work this rich cream in generously. By day: use very lightly under make-up. Get your jar of Pond's Dry Skin Cream right away! 98¢, 55¢, 31¢, 15¢ (all plus tax).

THE LADY MAUREEN COOPER says: "Pond's Dry Skin Cream is superbly rich—quite the nicest I've used."

"Let the tide take her out... I WON'T!"

WHAT A DAMNING thing to say about a pretty girl out to make the most of her holiday! Attracted by her good looks, men dated her once but never took her out a second time. And for a very good reason*. So, the vacation that could have been so gay and exciting, became a dull and dreary flop. And she, herself, was the last to suspect why.

How's Your Breath Today?

Unfortunately, you can be guilty of halitosis (unpleasant breath) without realizing it. Rather than guess about this condition or run a foolish risk, why not get into the habit of using Listerine Antiseptic? Rinse the mouth with it night and morning, and between times before every date where you want to be at your best. It's efficient! It's refreshing! It's delightful!

To Be Extra-Careful

Listerine Antiseptic is the extra-careful precaution because it freshens and sweetens the breath . . . not for mere seconds or minutes . . . but for hours, usually. So, don't trust makeshifts effective only momentarily . . . trust Listerine Antiseptic. It's part of your passport to popularity.

*Though sometimes systemic, most cases of halitosis are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles. Listerine Antiseptic quickly halts such oral fermentation, and overcomes the odors it causes.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL CO., St. Louis, Mo.

BEFORE ANY DATE...

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC

...it's Breath Taking!

They wear the cleanest clothes in town

. . . "Mother" swears by TIDE!

♪♪
They wear the cleanest clothes in town–
It's Tide that does the trick!
It's Tide that keeps both Pop and Junior Looking mighty slick! ♫

Tide GETS CLOTHES CLEANER THAN ANY SOAP!

No soap—no other product sold throughout America will wash as clean as TIDE!

CLEANER CLOTHES! When you rinse out a Tide wash, you've got the cleanest clothes in town . . . cleaner clothes than any other woman will get with any soap of any kind. And here's why—Tide not only gets out the ordinary dirt, but removes dulling soap film, as well.

WHITER, TOO! Tide has been tested time after time against all leading washday soaps. And—tests made in hardest water—prove that Tide gets clothes cleaner and whiter than any soap! What's more, after just one Tide wash, soap-dulled colors actually come brighter!

WASHDAY PROOF! Millions of you women have proved Tide's miracle. You've seen the proof in your husband's cleaner, whiter shirts . . . in your own bright wash prints. And, with all this, Tide is kind to your hands—milder than ever before. Get Tide today—for the cleanest wash in town!

P.S. PREFER TO SKIP RINSING?

With Tide you can skip the rinsing, and save all that time and work. Just wash, wring out, hang up. Tide will give you the cleanest possible no-rinse wash!

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Ladies' Home JOURNAL

Bruce Gould
and Beatrice Blackmar Gould
Editors

...S AND CHICKENS ON SILK, CHINESE 960-1280 COURTESY METRO. MUS. OF ART

"I Love You"

A Lesson in Basic Semantics for a Beloved Daughter

By CHARLES INGERMAN

Much depends on whether the man who says, "I love you," is married or single, especially if he's married and you're single.

In a canoe on a placid lake with the moon shining and music from a portable radio sweetening the night air, it may mean no more than: "We've escaped the old folks, baby. Give me a kiss."

It may mean: "Let's hit the trail for Gretna Green, darling," or it may mean it's time to hide your savings-bank passbook.

It may mean: "I want you."

Some people think it sounds better in translation—Italian, Swedish or Hungarian.

Many an otherwise satisfactory husband has gone to his grave without warming his wife's heart enough with these magic words.

One observation is that women put more stock in it than do men.

There's a curious convention: some men think any philandering acceptable conduct as long as they say, "I love you," to only one woman—or only one woman at a time.

Many a man has come to his silver-wedding anniversary with only the foggiest idea of what the little woman means when she says it. Many a woman too.

It may mean: "I'm glad I'm alive"; "I'm glad you're alive"; or even, "I'm glad we're alive."

It may mean, depending on the circumstances and the tone of voice: "You're dead right"; "You're dead wrong"; or "You shouldn't believe me under oath."

(Continued on Page 202)

The Lesson of Korea

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

THE great experience of the twentieth century that requires digestion is that war no longer serves any ends—ideological, material or spiritual.

It does not serve society, but destroys it; it does not serve the state, but absorbs it, along with the whole of human culture. It does not release the heroic virtues except in isolated instance, nor purify the human mind and heart, but brutalizes, and makes vicious and callous.

This is, above all, what women must communicate to the world—and communicate it free of censorship or propaganda for official policies.

The war in Korea will not have been fought in vain for those who will learn its lesson. On that Asian peninsula great powers have clashed. One may assume that neither side anticipated the extent or duration of the conflict. The surprise attack from the north, launched without warning or declaration of war, held every promise of immediate and definitive success. Political aspects were beclouded by a war between two states, each of dubious legitimacy.

Korea, under the remote suzerainty of China until, in the last century, it was conquered by Japan, had been "liberated" during World War II by Russian and American troops. The two occupation armies faced each other at an artificial dividing line—the 38th latitudinal parallel. At no time was Korean unity an issue, either between the great powers or the Koreans. Both North and South Korea desired unification.

So in January, 1948, a commission was empowered by the General Assembly of the United Nations to supervise election of an all-Korean national assembly. It was refused admission to North Korean territory. Instead, a communist government was set up there, and the formation of a "People's Army" was announced. In May elections were held in South Korea, and the Republic of Korea proclaimed in that part of the country. Thus, two states came into being—each to some degree under the aegis of foreign armies of occupation.

(Continued on Page 14)

Executive Editor, Mary Bass ▪ Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman
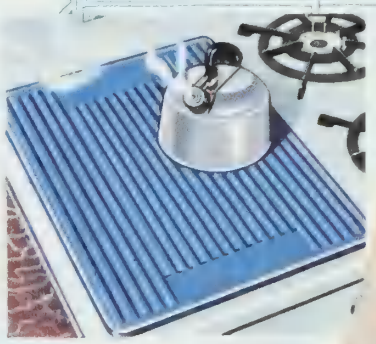
Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Jan Weyl
Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd
Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray, Elizabeth Goetsch, Robert N. Taylor, Elizabeth McFarland, Charles Stryker Ingerman, Elizabeth Crawford
Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Iris Wilken, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Wilson, Victoria Harris, Helen Schmidt Kennedy, Cornelia S. McCook, Rosemary Jones, Virginia Carr, Sallie Eager Kubly, Lee Stowell Cullen, Jeanmarie Dunn, Elizabeth W. Graham, Isabel G. Phelps, Pauline Stieglitz, Erma W. Kelley, Janice H. Bauder, Dolores Knapp, Dorothy Robinson

Help yourself to more free time with wonderful, work-saving Rubbermaid!

Couldn't you use extra working space on top of your stove? More room in your cupboards? Something to protect your china from hard knocks, . . . or to help you with the dishes?—You'll find them all right here on this page . . . and on the Rubbermaid counter in your favorite store.

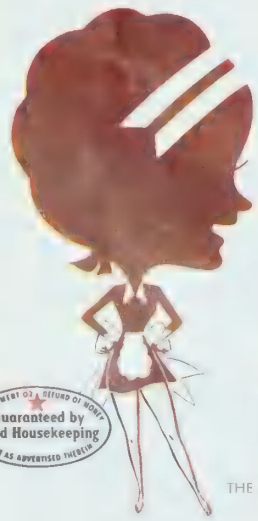
YOUR SHELVES—CUSHIONED WITH COLOR! Rubbermaid Shelf-Kushions are permanent rubber shelf liners that protect your dishes, quiet your cupboards, wipe clean with a damp cloth. Molded plate rail in rear holds stand-up dishes, raised ribbing keeps glassware from fogging.

YOUR CHINA — STORED SAFELY AND SMARTLY! Rubbermaid Plate Racks and Rubbermaid Cup and Saucer Racks save cupboard space, make dishes easy to get out and put away.



YOUR DISHES—DRAINED DRY IN A WINK! Rubbermaid Deluxe Dish-Drying Combination features deluxe dish drainer with stand-up silver holder, extra-wide draining tray with room for pots and pans. Just stack your dishes, rinse with scalding water, and they're dry in minutes!

YOUR SINK—PROTECTED AGAINST DISH BREAKAGE! Rubbermaid Sink Liner Mats cushion the bottom and sides of your sink bowls, protect surfaces, save dishes. Sink Divider Mat pads the danger spot between twin sinks, cuts down on dish breakage.



YOUR STOVE — PADDED FOR ADDED WORK SPACE! Rubbermaid Stove Top Protector Mat keeps your stove surface free from scratches and chips, gives you an extra work surface. Ribbed for ventilation. Won't soften, peel, or warp, no matter how hot the pans you set on it.

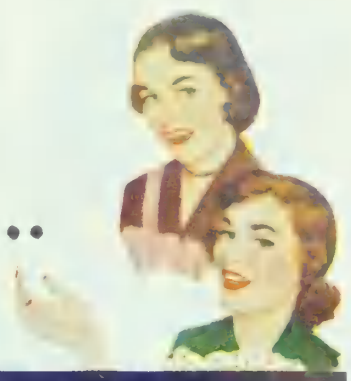
YOUR DUST PAN—STAYS PUT WITH NO STOOPING! Rubbermaid Dust Pan grips the floor so securely that you don't have to stoop when you sweep. Noiseless, can't scratch floors or furniture.

You can see the complete Rubbermaid line wherever housewares are sold in the United States and Canada. Write for free folder showing the original, complete, home-tested line of rubber housewares.

FOR LONG-LIFE RESISTANCE TO HEAT, SOAP, GREASE AND WEAR, ASK FOR GENUINE

Rubbermaid

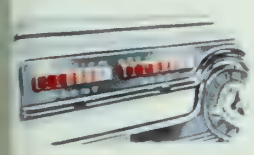
HOUSEWARE



Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

THE WOOSTER RUBBER COMPANY • DEPT. L-30, WOOSTER, OHIO

DON'T JUST TAKE OUR WORD FOR IT!...



Let your own cooking show you...

...no one makes ranges like

MURRAY

R CONTROL Heat Tuning! Push-ns, colored from red to pink, you select quickly any of the ctric-heat intensities of each e unit!

AT OVENS are porcelain enam-e have easily-cleaned rounded rs. Fog-free double windows p models!

IUM PORCELAIN resists acids tains. Lemon acid, for in-e, does not leave etched, dirt-ng marks!

GAS RANGES for you, from one of the world's finest plants, by the makers of over 2,000,000 highest-quality major home appliances!

Each of the 6 gracefully-styled models is full of Murray improvements to make your cooking finer than ever . . . your range-cleaning easier than ever! One-piece tops eliminate seams! High broiler is more convenient for you; truly smokeless! And every Murray range is all welded to give you many years of dependable performance.

ELECTRIC RANGES combining all the delightful features you want for easier, better-controlled cooking! You'll enjoy the new, simple, color control heat tuning, the high-speed 7-heat surface units so quickly cleaned, the dependable Robertshaw automatic thermostats, the economy of full Fiberglas insulation!

Any one of the 7 beautiful new models you select will give you long years of care-free, reliable service.

DEPENDABLE CONTROLS (Robertshaw) for excellent results every time! Interval Timer (audible) is built into accurate electric clock.

HIGH BROILER (gas), swings out to you—extra-convenient, extra-large! Smokeless...fats can't burn to cause offensive odors.

For Your Information!

The Murray Corporation of America, Home Appliance Division
Dept. L-9, Scranton 2, Pa.

Send details to help me plan my new Murray Kitchen, including Murray Cabinets and Sinks.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone____ State____

Get the iron that's got to be good!

Guaranteed

5 full years

BY

Arvin

HIGH-SPEED HEAT WITH THE SPLIT-SECOND COMEBACK

1000-watt element is cast into aluminum sole plate for instant, uniform heat distribution; irons faster, irons better.

THIS AUTOMATIC CONTROL MEANS WHAT IT SAYS

Large dial shows the correct heat for any fabric; Automatic Heat Control holds that heat; saves current; saves time.

Give an Arvin!

Think of an iron so dependably built that it can be guaranteed —not for 90 days—not for a year—but for five full years! A beautiful iron — packed with easy-ironing, time-saving, work-saving features to add hours to your leisure! That's the Arvin automatic electric iron—built to bring new ease and comfort to you, every ironing day for years and years! See it at your dealer's! Arvin Industries, Inc., Columbus, Indiana (Formerly Noblitt-Sparks Industries, Inc.) Model 2100 illustrated: $12.95

Model 2200, Arvin Automatic Iron, $11.95; Model 2300, Arvin Dual Control Iron, $14.95. All Arvin Irons guaranteed five full years!

(All prices subject to change without notice.)

Also makers of Arvin Electric Housewares, TV, Radios, Car Heaters, Metal Furniture, and Ironing Tables.

LIGHT, COMFORTABLE CAREFREE FOR KEEPS

Weighs only 3 lbs.; saves you hundreds of pounds of lifting every year. Heat — not weight — does the work.

A FLAIR FOR FRILLS AND FANCY WORK

Arvin's tapered point and flared edge solve all problems of buttons, tucks, and pleats. Shaped to save work!

NEVER THE TWAIN SHALL PART!

Arvin's safety-locked cord is anchored for keeps, jerk-proof and secure. Unbreakable rubber plug for longer life.

(Continued from Page 11)

For nearly two years there was an uneasy peace between the two states. The American and Russian forces departed, each leaving organized armies behind. The United States did not encourage the building of formidable South Korean forces. They were hardly more than a frontier guard. But the North Korean People's Army was trained as a strong offensive force. When it attacked in June, 1950, its successes were immediate. It was obvious that, without assistance, South Korea would easily be conquered and another state added to the already vast communist dominions whose guidance and direction are centered in Moscow.

Something had to be done, assuming that the premises of the United Nations were worthy of support—and on those rested the whole of American policy. So troops were sent from Japan, followed by troops from the United States, and from other countries. The battle was on.

Seldom—as a London Times military correspondent put it a year later—"has there been a war in which fortunes have swayed so frequently and so violently." Yet a decision could not be reached within the confines of Korea on either side.

This realization impelled the hearings in Congress: to extend or not to extend the war. The whole world was distressed. Outside the United States, UN countries feared that a long, indecisive war might disastrously affect their fortunes. Realization was widespread that a war with China proper might continue forever, given equal will on both sides. The frightful destruction wrought by the opposing armies upon Korea itself, the immense loss of civilian life, the millions of homeless refugees appalled every conscience.

> They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety.
> —BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

One could not say, in the grave words of Lincoln's Second Inaugural Address, "Both sides invoke the same God," for communists do not invoke God, but only the "inevitable historical process" and the dialectics of their materialist philosophy. Yet both sides do invoke the same ideals. Each—with whatever mental reservations—proclaims the sovereign independence of nations. Each has abjured, in the United Nations Charter, resort to force. Each declares itself to be "fighting for peace." Each champions "democracy." Each claims to protect the economically oppressed.

Each side is fearful of the future—and the Korean war cannot have encouraged the hopes of either for an easy victory in any general war, or, for that matter, of any victory at all.

I DO not assume for a moment that the lesson of Korea is lost on Russia. There are, to be sure, voices predicting that this year or next, when the Soviets have built up an atomic stockpile, they will launch satellite armies against Yugoslavia or Germany. There are even those who think that we should manage, somehow, to provoke an attack, wage a "preventive war" and "get the dirty business over with."

I, for one, do not anticipate such action from the Soviets. Nor am I sure that, in the minds of Soviet leaders, there may not be dawning an inkling of forces at work in the universe, hitherto uncomprehended in their philosophy. I believe that Soviet leaders are genuinely afraid—however hateful and aggressive their words may continue to be. It is difficult for a leadership trained for a generation in an idiom to speak in any other. Whatever advances may be under way in Soviet atomic science, they must know that advances here are even more rapid.

On the credit side of the balance sheet in Korea must be put some elements of restraint shown by both sides. Although there were public demands for the use of the atom bomb, it was not used. In this war there was no cry for "unconditional surrender," nor did General MacArthur's statement, "In war there is no substitute for victory," awaken public response, from those who so enthusiastically tribute at his home-coming. Rather human heart responds, "There must substitute for war."

The extent to which the Soviet U encouraged and aided the Red Chine not exactly known. Yet there were signs from last spring onward that the sians, if they could achieve it without of face, would like the war to end wit having to commit their own forces. sides, it was apparent, feared the exten of the conflict.

IF Korea teaches any lesson at all, that the days of decisive wars are over Russian in his senses can believe that Eurasian land power, or combinatio them, could defeat the United States North America, or win anything from a struggle.

No American in his senses can be that the United States could defeat Soviet Union or the great land mas Eurasia, or win anything from suc struggle.

And no one in his senses can believ day that a people can be "liberated war fought on its soil.

War, which is the art or scienc destroying the enemy, has, in fact, rea such perfection that it has become ut senseless, destroying not only the en but all alike. Even were decisive vic possible, it would offer the victor not but the intolerable burden of pouring wealth, work, labor and men, indefini to maintain its Py victory.

The engines of mo war are even destro all previous concept military strategy— as the traditional or the necessity of b near the "poten enemy." Soon there be no part of the world that canno assaulted directly from any other without intervening way stations. Ar to assume, then, that one or the othe the great powers will assault the oth— for no conceivably desirable end?

That is to assume that the world is r by maniacs. It is, in fact, ruled by lim and, for the most part, mediocre men, r of them very much afraid. For their fulness, and even for their mediocrity should, perhaps, be thankful. Hitler, i way, was a genius, but his fate and the of his country recommend less genius more common sense.

Thus the war in Korea, which threate to set off a world war, may more rea ably prove to be only a postwar convul following half a century of war, if its le is fully grasped.

However it ends—or may have end we shall not have the peace that prophets have proclaimed in vain for th sands of years. Neither side will h realized its hopes. The lion will not down with the lamb, nor a little child them, for such a peace would require a versal act of conversion and determina to do unto others as one would that ot should do unto oneself.

But if a Cold War is turned into a C Peace, even on the restraining basis mutual fear, and precarious coexiste that is a step forward.

If gradually more and more people come aware that it is not the end t justifies the means, but the means always determine the end—that will step forward.

If, after a century and a half of ramp materialism, promoted not first by the R sians, but by the most advanced Wes peoples, there comes a new spiritual aw ening; if once again large numbers of pe not only believe, but really know, t those who seek righteousness will ach adequate material rewards from natur

(Continued on Page 215)

Parties are more play and less work with Samson folding furniture

Sets up in a jiffy . . . No cloths to launder . . . Spills wipe right off!

Parties practically give themselves with Samson. No cloths to launder, for Wright Tones are company colors, and oh, what eye-appeal they have!

Let drinks splash, olives drip . . . it doesn't matter. Spills wipe right off Vinyl Samsontex upholstery with a damp cloth. And once the meal is over, tables are cleared in a jiffy . . . ready for bridge or what have you!

Samson folds faster and easier than your umbrella. Tables are strong enough to stand on; made with electrically welded, tubular steel frames and legs. Spring-cushion, posture-shaped chairs give honest-to-goodness comfort. Keep extras on hand for parties! You'll find Samson folding furniture on sale at your favorite department or furniture store.

MOSS

COCOA

LIME

PEACOCK

MIST

CORAL

WRIGHT TONES, the most stunning colors ever seen on folding furniture.

Deluxe Spring-cushion Folding Chair, $8.95
Deluxe Folding Table, $13.95
Deluxe Set: table and 4 chairs, $49.75
Economy Set; 5 pieces (not shown), $34.75

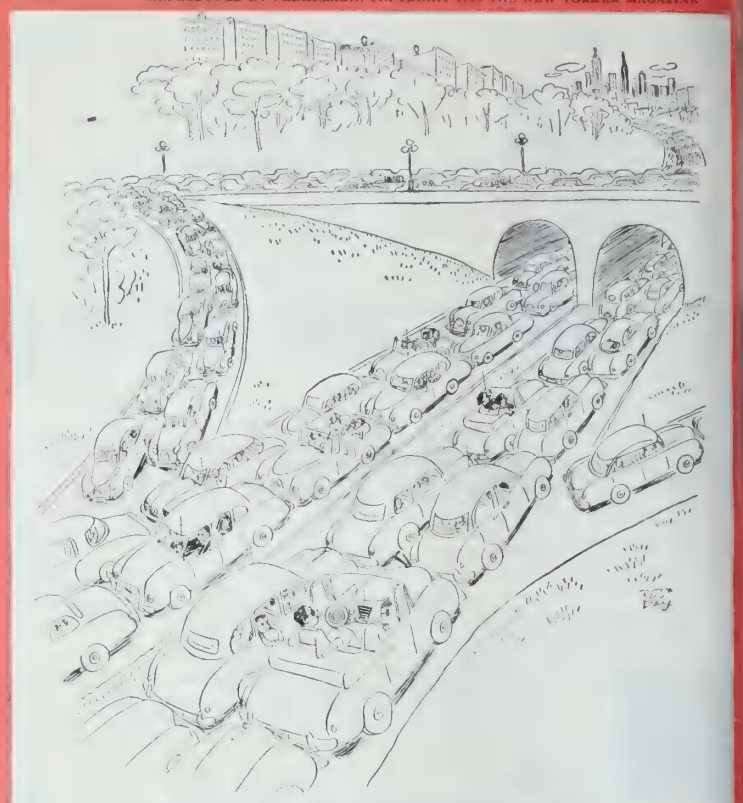
Strong enough to stand on!

There's a Samson institutional chair for every public seating need. For special quantity prices, ask your local authorized Samson Contract Dealer. Or write Shwayder Bros. for the name of the nearest you.

Shwayder Bros., Inc., Furniture Division, Detroit 29, Michigan.
Also Makers of Samsonite Luggage, Luggage Division, Denver 9, Colo.

Give.. Fostoria

MADE IN U.S.A.



Century has the timeless beauty of fine things. It's American handmade, classic in conception and so inexpensively priced that you can give, or keep, as much as you like without pinching your holiday budget. Especially nice for brides who will cherish Century for every day . . . correct for any entertaining occasion. Especially nice for those who like simplicity for table settings . . . the simplicity of shining crystal edged with glistening dewdrops. Century is available in over 70 useful pieces. Open stock at the better stores everywhere . . . because Fostoria has a quality that everyone likes.

FOSTORIA

FOSTORIA GLASS COMPANY • • • MOUNDSVILLE • WEST VIRGINIA

REPRODUCED BY PERMISSION. COPYRIGHT 1950 THE NEW YORKER MAGAZINE, INC.

"Keep tuned to this station for the latest information on traffic conditions."

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

ON September 11, one hundred and one years ago, Jenny Lind's first concert took place at the old Castle Garden in New York. The prices paid nowadays for theater tickets no doubt sound scandalous to out-of-towners (who actually are the ones that pay), but they are as nothing to what P. T. Barnum managed to get for Jenny's concert. He'd given her a fine build-up. There were thousands of people down at the dock to greet her, torchlight processions, and so many serenades that she had to change her hotel. Tickets for the concert were auctioned off, and the first one sold for $225. A mere pittance. In Boston, the extravagant city, the first sold for $625!

And speaking of processions, the big traffic jams, in New York at least, are almost always concerned with personalities. One day this summer traffic was held up for an hour and a half during rush hour because a man climbed to the highest tower on the Queensboro Bridge and threatened to jump! It took a priest and three policemen to talk him out of it and finally to lure him down with the promise of a steak and a ticket for the ball game. The officer who was most effective was the one who tried to reason with the would-be suicide on the fifteenth story of the Hotel Gotham a few years back (see the movie, Fourteen Hours).

•

You don't have insomnia because you are unhappy, says Dr. Martin Gumpert, in THE ANATOMY OF HAPPINESS. "An unhappy life situation which is well understood," he says, "does not usually interfere with sleep. Sleep comes to the heavy heart as a

(Continued on Page 18)

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

TV Sunday Night Supper starring Gorham Chantilly

IT'S NEW to put your wedding present sterling to work for a living...to make your cherished Gorham* Sterling tea tray the focal point of a casual Sunday night buffet. Fill your tray with fragrant brown bread, sharp cheese, cold meats and crown it with a relish-filled pineapple mounted on a sterling compote for an eye-filling, taste-tempting centerpiece you can eat. Ask your Gorham dealer for a free diagram for setting this table.

It's new to background your table with coral and brown and serve the hot dishes in earthenware casseroles. Your Gorham "Chantilly"* is the magic that pulls this whole scheme together. Chantilly is such a satisfying pattern...a beautiful blend of traditional elegance and modern adaptability. And so easy to own. A six-piece place-setting (knife, fork, teaspoon, salad or pastry fork, soup spoon, and butter spreader) costs only $29.75 (incl. Fed. Tax).

Ecy way to complete your Gorham set! Tell your ir nds and family that you want Gorham Sterling as a ft on special occasions and don't be shy about tell- in them your pattern choice. Sixteen timeless pat- te s from $29.75 to $39.25 (incl. Fed. Tax).

Ask your Gorham dealer to show you Gorham's new exclusive one-piece sterling knife handle. Doesn't dent if you accidentally drop it—no seams to discolor—remains rattle-resistant.

Giving or getting you'll be proud

"IT'S Gorham STERLING"

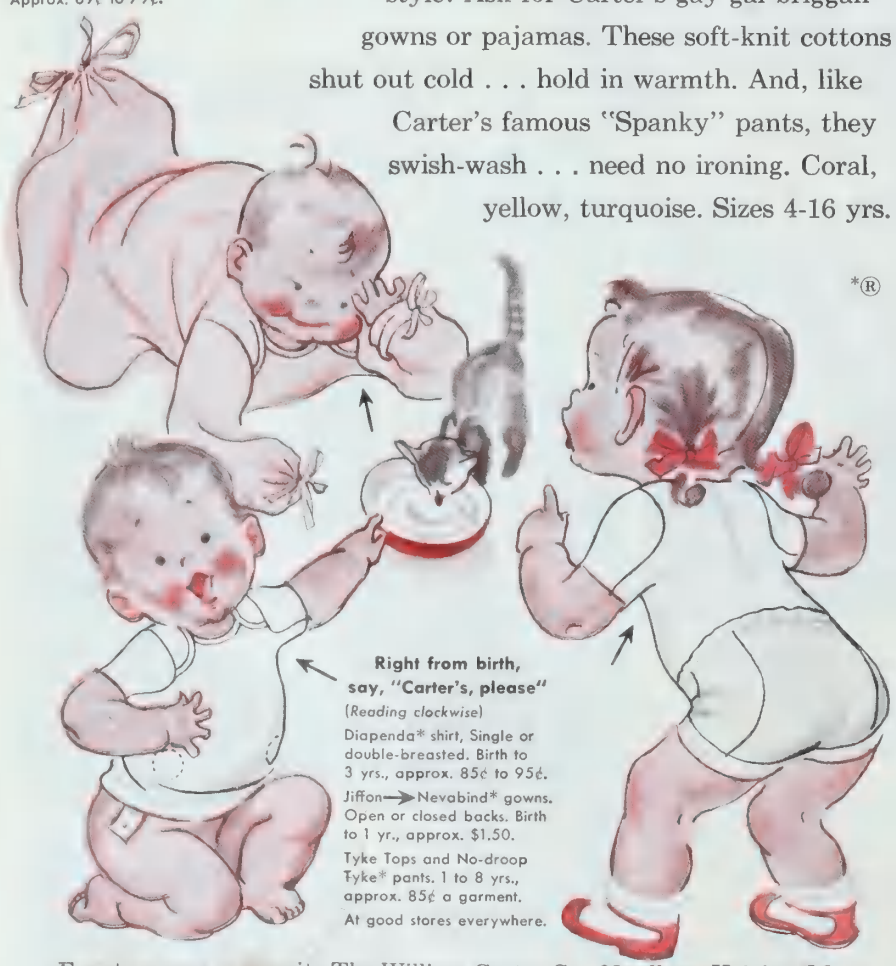
A erica's Leading Silversmiths Since 1831

ALSO MAKERS OF GORHAM SILVERPLATE, GORHAM SILVER POLISH, GORHAM BRONZE, GORHAM ECCLESIASTIC WARES. *TRADE MARKS. COPYRIGHT 1951 BY THE GORHAM COMPANY.

Carter's Puss in Boot-ifulls

Gown approx. $3.75. Smocked shoulders. Elasticized waist and wrist ruffles.



Saucy peplum pajama twin. Elasticized wrists, ankles, waist. 2-piece. Approx. $3.75.

Puss wears "Spanky" pants which you can buy in a rainbow of colors. 2-16 yrs. Approx. 69¢ to 79¢.

Hi, grade-schoolers! . . . here comes dream-talk, college-style! Ask for Carter's gay gal-briggan gowns or pajamas. These soft-knit cottons shut out cold . . . hold in warmth. And, like Carter's famous "Spanky" pants, they swish-wash . . . need no ironing. Coral, yellow, turquoise. Sizes 4-16 yrs.

*®

Right from birth, say, "Carter's, please"

(Reading clockwise)

Diapenda* shirt, Single or double-breasted. Birth to 3 yrs., approx. 85¢ to 95¢.

Jiffon→Nevabind* gowns. Open or closed backs. Birth to 1 yr., approx. $1.50.

Tyke Tops and No-droop Tyke* pants. 1 to 8 yrs., approx. 85¢ a garment.

At good stores everywhere.

For store near you, write The William Carter Co., Needham Heights, Mass.

(Continued from Page 16)

salvation, as a vacation from reality. We find the deep and blessed freedom of sleep after difficult achievements, after victory over disease, after strokes of fate and loss; we also find it as an ingredient of happiness after the ultimate effort of making love. But indecision, anger and confusion, suspicion, secret and suppressed despair, hopeless frustration and hate, guilt and loneliness are the demons of our sleepless nights we have to exorcise."

Doctor Gumpert talks to the reader as a physician to his patient. He approaches the problem of individual happiness from the medical point of view in a sound, honest, sensible book. He is the author, you will remember, of YOU ARE YOUNGER THAN YOU THINK.

•

Some time back this column wondered aloud what happened to the sex-education program for parents in Bridgeport, which prompted Dr. Mary Steichen to write us about the experiment along the same lines in Great Neck, Long Island, New York. As school physician she initiated it, the Board of Education sponsored

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"This concludes our study of that wonderful bird, the stork. . . . Are there any questions?"

three talks, and various lay groups of the community, including the Catholic Church, co-operated. The lecturers were well-known educators, the hall was filled to capacity each time, and they hope to have a follow-up soon.

•

Thomas B. Costain has now written the second book in his triumphal pageant of England, THE MAGNIFICENT CENTURY. This is history with a sparkle. In the first volume, THE CONQUERORS, we had England from the Norman conquest, 1066, to Magna Charta ——

William the Conqueror,
Then William his son.
Henry, Stephen and Henry
And Richard and John.

Now we have the thirteenth century, the building of the great cathedrals, the beginnings of Parliament, the great figures—William Marshal, Roger Bacon, Simon de Montfort—the long reign of Henry III.

This was Merrie England. In summer the whole village kicked a ball or frisked around a Maypole. In winter they fastened the bones of animals to their feet and skated on frozen ponds. They played a game with a crooked stick in which they clouted a ball about a sheep field (no need for golf links). They bowled and shot the mighty longbow.

Women were what really mattered. What with the men at their Crusades or at war in France, the women ran the households, took care of the finances, superintended the planting and harvesting of crops. In cities they kept shop,

(Continued on Page 20)

Edwards

THE SHOE FOR

BACK-TO-SCHOOL

Jack and Jill are in love . . . with Edwards exciting back-to-school styles! Jack goes for that husky, just-like-big-brother's look . . . Jill for the pretty, trim styling. Mother loves them all, for she knows there's long wear and easy comfort built into every pair. And she knows Edwards dealers fit them in a way her family doctor would approve. See them at fine shoe stores, coast to coast.

Edwards

Edwards

THE SHOE FOR CHILDREN

314-22 N. 12th St., Phila. 7, Pa.

Thorough* enough

for Junior's jeans

Safe* enough

for Sister's best

No other washer works like Frigidaire to get clothes really clean!

Only Frigidaire gives you the thorough cleansing action of LIVE-WATER Washing

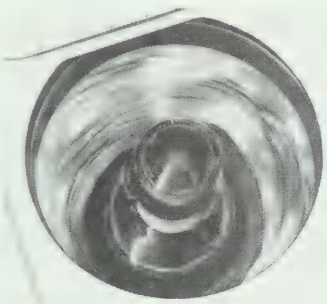
THE FIRST TIME you actually see Live-Water Action you'll know, instantly, why the Frigidaire Automatic Washer gets clothes so clean—yet is so safe for all your fine fabrics!

It's a totally different, more gentle washing action! For foaming currents of hot, sudsy water do all the work . . . there's no rough rubbing or tugging to wear clothes out. These Live-Water currents—created by short, fast up-and-down strokes of the Frigidaire Pulsator—surge through your clothes, gently lifting out dirt and floating it away.

Clothes are never half-in, half-out. They're always completely under water—being penetrated again and again by the cleansing currents. The dirtiest things come quickly clean—with no harsh rubbing against metal parts to wear them out. And rinsing is just as gentle, just as thorough—because the same surging Live-Water Action is used for two clean water rinses.

eautifully at home in kitchen, utility room or aundry! The Frigidaire Washer has clean, lovely styl-ig—with a new high back panel. So vibration-free it oesn't need bolting down. Also shown above is the Frigidaire Electric Water Heater—available in round and table-top models, in capacities from 30 to 80 gallons. Ask your dealer, also, about the Frigidaire Electric Dryer and Frigidaire Ironer.

sk your Frigidaire Dealer to show you the wonderful Frigidaire utomatic Washer—and the other Frigidaire Appliances for kit-hen and laundry. Look for his name in the Yellow Pages of your hone book. Or write Frigidaire Division of General Motors, Dayton 1, Ohio.



rigidaire reserves the right to change specifications, or discontinue models, without notice.

Frigidaire Automatic Washer

he only one with all-porcelain finish

Touch the Dial—Frigidaire washes even nylons, woolens and rayons automatically. No waiting at the machine to cut washing time short. Just set the Select-O-Dial to the right time and the washer does the rest.

Your wash is lighter and easier to handle—with Frigidaire's Rapidry Spinning. It gets clothes so dry that many come out ready to iron at once. No other washer gets more water out of clothes than Frigidaire.

Cleaning up is easier because Frigidaire is the only washer finished in Lifetime Porcelain—inside and out. Outside cleans with just a damp cloth, stays new-looking for years... inside cleans itself automatically.

Van Raalte

GLOVES · STOCKINGS · UNDERTHINGS

COSTUMES: BONWIT TELLER

The shorter your sleeves, the longer your gloves— of Amersuede by Van Raalte*

Fashion has its eye on your shorter sleeves—and your Amersuede gloves rise to the occasion for fall and winter. It's a fashion that will last—just as Amersuede will last. For Amersuede is double-woven—a clever rayon that looks like suede. feels like suede. washes in a wink. In pastel or shock shades. From left to right: demi mousquetaire, $3.00: slipon. $1.65: longest glove, $4.00: mid-arm slipon. $2.25. At better stores.

*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. —and Van Raalte is famous for stockings and underthings, too.

"BECAUSE YOU LOVE NICE THINGS"

(Continued from Page 18)

slapped careless apprentices, and drove shrewd bargains.

Clothes, of course, were very important, as aren't they always when women are in a position to make them so! It was the day of the long train—and we mean long, with a page to hold it up. The priests preached against this frivolity, but milady continued to wear her train longer and more elaborate, in spite of the fact that invisible demons rode upon it, and that every so often she had to stop and shake her skirt vigorously to dislodge any grinning imps that might be clinging to it.

•

DIZZY, THE LIFE AND PERSONALITY OF BENJAMIN DISRAELI, EARL OF BEACONSFIELD, by Hesketh Pearson, is excellent reading. Certainly Disraeli was one of the most picturesque figures of the nineteenth century, and Hesketh Pearson takes on his biography with the same aplomb with which he tackled such characters as Dickens, Shaw and Oscar Wilde.

Though there was some early hesitation about accepting Disraeli into

Mary Anne Disraeli, Viscountess Beaconsfield

London's exclusive Grillion's dining club, he was asked to join in 1863 and did so, though he knew he would be bored—"A dozen prigs and bores (generally) whispering to their next-door neighbors over a bad dinner in a dingy room." It was Disraeli's settled opinion that a men's dinner party, in middle life, was horrible. And we're inclined to agree with him.

Twenty-four years earlier Disraeli had married Mrs. Wyndham Lewis. Their first dinner party after the honeymoon was en famille with a party of Rothschilds, Montefiores, Alberts, Disraelis—"Not a Christian name," said Disraeli, "but Mary Anne bears it like a philosopher."

The married life of the Disraelis, Mr. Pearson says, was serenely happy. "Dizzy has the most wonderful moral courage," Mary Anne used to say, "but no physical courage. When he has his shower bath, I always have to pull the string."

"She is an excellent creature," said Disraeli, "but she never can remember which came first, Greeks or Romans."

•

A vote as to the greatest living novelist today would almost without question put Thomas Mann at the head of the list. And now there is no excuse (such as "too long" or "too erudite") for not reading the world's greatest writer, be-

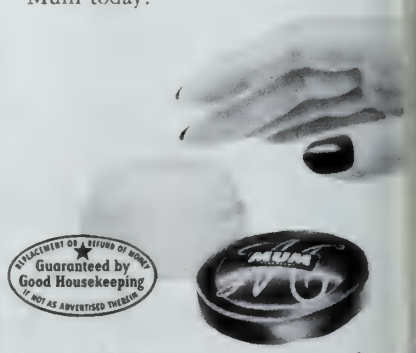
(Continued on Page 23)

New finer

MUM

more effective longe

NOW CONTAINS AMAZING NEW INGREDIENT M-3 TO PROTECT UNDERA IS AGAINST ODOR-CAUSING BACTERIA



•

When you're close to the favorite m in your life, be sure you stay nice to near. Guard against underarm odor t new, better way!

Better, longer protection. New Mu with M-3 protects against bacteria t cause underarm odor. What's more, keeps down future bacteria growth. Y actually build up protection with regu exclusive use of new Mum.

Softer, creamier new Mum smooths easily, doesn't cake. Gentle—contains harsh ingredients. Will not rot or d color finest fabrics.

Mum's delicate new fragrance was c ated for Mum alone. And gentle n Mum contains no water to dry out decrease its efficiency. No waste, shrinkage—a jar lasts and lasts! Get n Mum today!

New MUM cream deodora

A Product of Bristol-M

Spangle

Poinciana

SPANGLE—Simple, uncluttered lines make this shoe an alert accessory to every costume.

POINCIANA—This sabot strap shoe is smartly crafted for real walking comfort.

She appreciates value She wears Vitality SHOES

Ragtime

Damask

Temple

Elegant

This year the woman of wisdom knows that the well-spent dollar is the dollar that buys not a bargain, but value. She invests in shoes so intrinsically good . . . so thoroughly quality. Vitality Shoes are built of finest leathers on truest lasts . . . detailed to give her great returns on her investment . . . smart fashion, maximum comfort, long wear.

Yes . . . she appreciates value . . . and she wears Vitality Shoes . . . always!

Vitality Shoes and Vitality Wanderlust Shoes

Complete Range of Sizes and Widths

RAGTIME—The intriguing lines of Ragtime have a definite knack for flattery.

TEMPLE—Graceful lines make Temple adaptable to many moods and costumes.

DAMASK—Reflects the new Fall trend toward upswept lines.

ELEGANT—Intricate cut-outs for sure flattery—a cushiony platform for real comfort.

Vitality Shoe Company, Division of International Shoe Co., St. L[illegible]

Member of one of America's historic families, Mrs. John E. du Pont Irving says

"I live in Wilmington... I sleep in Utica"

Lovely Louise Irving is an imaginative hostess. The appointments of her charming Montchanin home speak for her faultless taste. "Utica-Mohawk sheets and pillow cases are my first choice," Mrs. Irving says, "because I'm particular about quality, and I like to get the very best I can for what I pay". Utica-Mohawk sheets and pillow cases will be your first choice, too, if you appreciate the finer quality and longer wear of truly fine appointments.

COSTUME BY JANE DERBY, INC.

A UTICA MOHAWK PRODUCT

Symbol of Quality for over 100 Years

THE SOCIAL REGISTER OF THE LINEN CLOSET...

UTICA BEAUTICALE® SHEETS	regardless of price...you can buy nothing finer
MOHAWK COMBED PERCALE	each night proves their luxury...each year their economy
UTICA MUSLIN	woven extra strong...to wear extra long
MOHAWK MUSLIN	the thrift sheets of the nation
HOPE MUSLIN	neat, nice...low in price

Mrs. Irving's bedroom is a study in soft greys and rose. Her sheets and pillow cases are ..... Utica-Mohawk.

ON THE WASHABLES
YOU BUY...

ON THE LAUNDRY WHICH SERVES YOU...

THIS SEAL ASSURES PERFECT
WASH-ABILITY

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF LAUNDERING
CERTIFIED WASHABLE

Be sure . . . instead of sorry. Look for the Certified Washable Seal of the American Institute of Laundering on every washable you buy. It means it's washable in every respect . . . without any qualifications! And send your washables to one of the 4000 better laundries that display the Seal. They'll give your washables the best of care.

American Institute of Laundering
Joliet, Illinois
A NON-PROFIT RESEARCH CENTER OF THE TEXTILE-LAUNDRY INDUSTRIES

(Continued from Page 20)

cause THE HOLY SINNER, once you've hurdled the first dozen pages, is completely fascinating (and we use the word deliberately). It is the story of Good Pope Gregorius, a story that involves and describes the greatest sin that mankind knows, but does so without offense, a story of deep penitence with passages of unforgettable beauty and superb humor.

(Sometimes it would be a pleasure to list the books one does not like. MR. BELUNCLE, by V. S. Pritchett*, is one, and all books by* Henry Green: LOVING; LIVING; NOTHING.)

•

The nearest possible approach to the Middle Ages to be found in the twentieth century is probably in a monastery. In I WAS A MONK, by John Tettemer, there is a full picture of that austere, ascetic existence.

It seems incredible, but it's true, that in this hard-boiled scientific day and age, the Passionist monks still chant the Divine Office in choir: at Matins (midnight), Lauds (break of day), Prime, Tierce, Sext and None (six, nine, twelve and three o'clock), Vespers at six o'clock, and Complin at nine. To make getting up easier, they sleep in their habits. They wear them night and day, and on going to bed remove only sandals and belts.

But for all that, the monk's life with its regularity, its absence of worry and frustration, the mind at peace and the spirit content, seems, from where we sit, like a preview of heaven.

Father Ildephonsus remained a Passionist monk for twenty-five happy years, at the end of which time he was formally released at his own request—released from his three vows of poverty, chastity and obedience, and from his oath to persevere in the order till death. For those interested, this represents a remarkable document.

•

There's usually a good mystery on hand, and usually a good Irish novel.

This month's recommend for the best mystery is one that came out a longish time back but is worth looking up: THE 31ST OF FEBRUARY, by Julian Simon. We were disappointed in the Manning Coles, NOW OR NEVER.

The Irish tale, a dark one, is CALL FOR A MIRACLE, by Benedict Kiely*. If one could understand how it is the Irish can be so amusing and so tragic at the same time, one would comprehend a race. The Russians (in novels) can be quite as tragic, but never so amusing.*

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"It wasn't any one thing I wrote you about. I was just curious as to what sort of father a boy like that might have."

are you wearing a morning backache* on your face...?

Haggard . . . ? "Drawn-and-tired" looking . . . ? Stop blaming your housework or job and put the blame for that fatigued tension where it so frequently belongs . . . on an out-dated, "spineless" mattress! . . . a major cause of the miserable "Morning Backache" 3 out of 5 Americans endure! Dangerous muscle strain can result from a mattress that sags and "slouches"! Replace it now with the revolutionary firmness, the supreme support of the new Sealy Firm-O-Rest Posturepedic Mattress . . . scientifically designed to refresh you with spine-on-a-line sleeping luxury.

HERE'S THE CULPRIT! . . . the too-soft, sagging mattress that lets "the vital third" of your body sink into dangerous muscle strain. You often wake up more exhausted than when you retired, a "morning backache" candidate!

THE SOLUTION! . . . The SEALY FIRM-O-REST, scientifically "prebuilt" for spine-on-a-line comfort. Firmer, more conducive to relaxation . . . SEALY FIRM-O-REST meets healthful sleep needs.

ADVERTISED IN AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION PUBLICATIONS
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Sealy
FIRM-O-REST
POSTUREPEDIC MATTRESS

SEALY, Inc., Dept. LH
666 Lake Shore Drive ▪ Chicago 11, Illinois
Gentlemen: Please send me without obligation a free copy of the booklet, "The Orthopedic Surgeon Looks at Your Mattress."

NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____ ZONE_____ STATE_____

666 LAKE SHORE DRIVE, CHICAGO • FACTORIES IN PRINCIPAL CITIES

There's nothing quite like Soft-Weve ...
— So very soft — So very firm !
The softness you want — the firmness you must have! Soft-Weve combines them both. It's so clothlike in texture we call it "water woven"! If you've never tried this superb two-ply bathroom tissue, do so next time! You'll like it.
Soft-Weve
Soft-Weve
Cleansing tissue soft ... yet toilet tissue firm — because it's double !
"SOFT-WEVE" REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT
Edited by MARGARET HICKEY

Working Mothers.....

San Diego's Problem

Is substitute care of small children ever good enough to justify mothers' taking jobs when not forced by economic necessity to do so? Teachers and psychologists point out the dangers to parents and children. Many hold that the family well-being is based on the mother's staying at home. Is it wise, therefore, to invest public funds to expand child-care centers? The Public Affairs Department explores these problems in San Diego, California.

IT was after five o'clock, but the three- and four-year-olds were still in "school." They were there because their mothers work. The writer, watching quietly from a corner, was wondering how they felt about it.

A three-year-old whirled up to her, grabbed her frantically around the waist, and thrust a mop of curly blond hair in her skirt. The attack was so sudden that the visitor instinctively put her arms around the baby and lifted her up, but she was not prepared for the tense strangle hold of thin little arms and legs clinging as if for dear life. Here, at least, was one answer. This child needed physical closeness and affection, even from a stranger. A brisk, kindly teacher rescued the visitor by bundling all the children off for a sing around the piano.

"We have to change activities every few minutes at the end of the day," she explained. "The children get restless waiting for their parents. Some of them have been here since six this morning."

If the four aircraft manufacturers in San Diego had their way, there would be more children in child-care centers and more young mothers in factories. The industry wants women who were "factory broke" in World War II whether they've acquired children in the meantime or not. Many mothers are so eager to get back on a payroll that they leave home early in the morning, taking their little children to wait with them while they apply for jobs at the factory gate.

Those who've been rehired say the work is tougher now. There's more standing than there was in 1944 (Continued on Page 96)

Child-Care Centers

By MARGARET HICKEY

TRAGIC results during the nation's period of peak employment in World War II were the neglect of children and the rise of juvenile delinquency. As defense plants and other employers sought desperately for workers, thousands of mothers of young children took jobs. But neither public nor private child-care plans met the needs of all the children. Incompetent friends and relatives were pressed into service. Exorbitant prices were paid to overcrowded, understaffed private-nursery centers. Older children ran wild after school hours, and it was not unusual to read of babies found locked in cars, parked near the defense plants in which their parents worked.

Again the tightening supply of man power and the growing needs of defense production are drawing young mothers into the labor market. Before risking the experiences of the last war, parents of young children should weigh the hazards carefully. Who will care for their children? Is additional income important enough to incur the dangers separation from home brings to a very young child? The community, too, must face its share of responsibility if industrial mobilization of young mothers is encouraged.

Already employed are 1,625,000 mothers, 1,701,000 of them with children too young to attend school. Yet there's no state in the Union with enough centers for small children, either publicly or privately supported. Domestic service, scarce and dear, is not to be afforded by the average working mother.

Substitute Care Comes High

Some of the larger cities provide funds for child care, but at present only California, Washington and Massachusetts have state-supported (Continued on Page 96)

These children express their longing for their mother in this final parting at a nursery-school window in San Diego, California. They will not see her again until her day's work is done.

LEONARD NADEL

While his father works at the naval base in San Diego, Ken stays in a state-supported nursery school. During the day he has just about everything a child could wish except more time with dad.

Only one soap gives your skin this

Exciting Bouquet

And Cashmere Bouquet is proved extra mild . . . leaves your skin softer, fresher, younger looking!

Now Cashmere Bouquet Soap—with the lingering, irresistible "fragrance men love"—is proved by test to be extra mild too! Yes, so amazingly mild that its gentle lather is ideal for all types of skin—dry, oily, or normal! And daily cleansing with Cashmere Bouquet helps bring out the flower-fresh softness, the delicate smoothness, the exciting loveliness you long for! Use Cashmere Bouquet Soap regularly . . . for the finest complexion care . . . for a fragrant invitation to romance!

Complexion and big Bath Sizes

Cashmere Bouquet Soap

—Adorns your skin with the fragrance men love!

Reference Library

Gay wardrobe additions as bright as autumn leaves.

● 2683
WAIST-LENGTH SWEATER. Rib-knit pattern. Use heavy yarn. 15c.

2565 ●
BELTED CAPE. Collarless, belt attached in back. 15c.

● 2682
CABLE-KNITTED CARDIGAN. Lightweight, fitted waistline. 15c.

2685 ●
KNITTED JACKET. Checked design to knit in two colors. 15c.

● 2678
TRIMMING DIAGRAM. Address included for buying kit. 15c.

2690 ●
BERET AND SCARF. Use jet or braid trimming on black velvet. 15c.

● 2657
CROCHETED CLOCHE. Band is done in metallic yarn. 15c.

2641 ●
WOOLEN JERSEY HAT. Crownless, trim with ball fringe. 15c.

We will gladly send any of these patterns if you'll order by number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes. Allow two to three weeks for delivery. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Each coupon is redeemable for five cents in the United States. Please address all requests to Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

ORDER BLANK

PATTERN NUMBERS

Name_____
(Please Print)

Street_____

City_____ Zone_____

State_____

The DAINTY

The DOVER

Take 10 steps...

and you'll discover they feel as beautiful as they look

The WESTWOOD

Red Cross Shoes

This product has no connection whatever with The American National Red Cross

The CELEBRITY

The CARESS

The SADDLE-UP

America's unchallenged shoe value $9.95 to $12.95

The United States Shoe Corporation, Cincinnati 7, Ohio. These shoes are manufactured and distributed as Gold Cross Shoes in Canada by B & L Shoes, Ltd., in England by Somervell Bros., Ltd., in Australia by "Gold Cross Shoes" (Aust.), Pty. Ltd., in South Africa by Eddels (S. A.), Ltd., in New Zealand by Duckworth, Turner and Co., Ltd.

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

The woman who wants to marry, and doesn't, may be her own stumbling block.
How can she learn to feel at ease with men?

Why Some Women Don't Marry

WHEN a woman passes her thirtieth birthday without marriage, her chances of finding a husband are very slim unless she makes some fundamental changes within herself. For after this age, men suitable for her become steadily fewer, while the traits which interfered with her marrying become more fixed and more obvious.

Some of these traits have been objectively identified in two independent studies comparing wives and single women over thirty. Though the results are particularly significant for women in this age group, the same characteristics influence the marriage prospects of women at any age. So, if you are still single and wish to marry, study the differences listed here, with a view to self-improvement.

As a group, unmarried women are distinguished from wives by:

Lack of ease in the society of men. Some girls try to conceal their nervousness and tension in masculine company by talking and laughing too much and too loudly; others go to the opposite extreme and withdraw into a shell, if not into a corner. In either case, their presence is anything but relaxing, for they communicate their own uneasiness to men. Too little masculine companionship, in such casual associations as school or business, is often responsible. One approach to improvement is to cultivate friendships among much older or much younger males. The poise developed in talking to these "ineligibles" will gradually carry over into all your masculine associations.

Self-consciousness about sex. Some women, and girls as well, seem not only embarrassed but even frightened by the fact that they are women. They visibly shrink from the most casual physical contact, even brushing hands, and seem to avoid any mental contact. Stiff and unsmiling in expression, they are unresponsive in conversation and unyielding in manner. Such behavior can only convince a man that the girl neither likes nor trusts him—and he is not likely to force his company on her often or for long.

Pursuit tactics are often adopted by the overanxious woman. It is futile for her to make the telephone calls and suggest the dates, to interpret a casual compliment as a declaration of love; and still worse to seek a commitment by encouraging too intimate petting. Such methods cheapen a woman and frighten a man; though they occasionally snare a husband, the outcome is seldom happy.

Masculine appearance. While downright homeliness detracts from a woman, few individuals suffer from so severe a handicap. But many spinsters suffer from a handicap they could avoid, that of creating a masculine effect in looks and deportment. Femininity is always an appealing quality in a woman. Mannish hair styles, severely tailored suits and harsh hats do not enhance it.

This summary cannot cover all the traits which distinguish the confirmed spinster from the marrying type, but the headings suggest the major kinds of mistakes to avoid. Guided by them, and by the quiz, perhaps you can identify—and correct—the traits which may keep you from marrying.

Preparing for Problems

THE first few months of marriage bring a new appreciation of the realities of domestic life. One June bride described the situation in this letter: "Tom and I are very happy together and we want to stay that way. But several couples we know are already having difficulties, and they started out happily only a year or two ago. Can you help me avoid some of the troubles they are having?"

Her friends' problems, as Alice went on to describe them, are much the same as those found in thousands of marriages, whether recent or long-established. Certain types of difficulties are common to almost all marriages, and are a potential source of friction between every husband and wife. It is not possible to avoid all problems, but it is possible to prevent them from disrupting harmony. What is required is that each partner develop an understanding of the other's point of view, and a willingness to adapt to it. The bride who wholeheartedly devotes herself to promoting this understanding is preparing her marriage to achieve happiness, and to withstand adversity.

Managing money. No matter how large the income, money matters are a source of friction unless they are governed by a mutually satisfactory plan. But in evolving the plan, the needs and tastes of both partners must be considered. In trying to please your husband, be governed by his individual preferences, rather than by your ideas of what men like. He may consider an evening's bowling a greater treat than a steak dinner. If so, settle for a casserole.

Social life can be one of the most rewarding aspects of married companionship, if it provides for the tastes, capacities and friendships of both. The bride's previous activities and circle of friends are a natural part of the couple's shared social life, but they should not dominate it, nor absorb all the husband's leisure.

Relationships with in-laws, to be harmonious, require that each partner respect the family ties of the other. A bride puts her husband on the defensive if she criticizes his family, and invites resentment if she shuns his relatives but welcomes her own. At the same time she and her husband should recognize that their claims on each other outweigh those of any outsider, whether related or not.

Outside interests, independent of home or job, are essential for self-expression. Though a bride will not be able to maintain all her previous interests, she can continue some, and will be a more rewarding companion if she does. By the same token, she should encourage her husband to continue some of his previous hobbies and activities.

Satisfactory sexual adjustment depends in large part on the capacity to forget self. Important though responsiveness is, far more important is each spouse's desire to please the other.

Problems which arise in marriage, whatever their nature, can be regarded as a challenge to understanding. If approached in this spirit, difficulties can become a bond instead of a barrier. For married love matures through sharing experiences, good and bad.

Will You Marry?

Research shows these questions to be crucial to your chances of marriage. If in doubt, answer yes rather than no. (Wives also may find this quiz helpful if they fear a rival.)

Are You

1. Rather critical of other people?
2. A very ambitious "get-ahead" person?
3. Frequently moody, depressed or "out of sorts"?
4. Prudish or inclined to feel sex is disgusting?
5. Deeply attached to or dominated by your mother?
6. Disappointed in most of the men you meet?
7. Too busy to take time out for fun?

Do You

8. Feel men try to boss their wives?
9. Go to relatively few social events?
10. Dislike children or find them annoying?
11. Have a jealous or possessive disposition?
12. Lack sex appeal?
13. Think most men take advantage of women?
14. Try to get your own way?

With even four "yes" answers, your chances aren't too good for holding either a sweetheart or a husband. Use your wrong answers to guide you toward a more insightful approach.

Do You Agree?

My husband is wonderful and we get along beautifully, but I am missing happiness since I don't love him. Shouldn't I divorce him?

No, the trouble is in yourself. Stop chasing a will-o'-the-wisp, seek counsel, and grow up. In the process, you may learn to love—an ability that you have never had.

top fashion for you

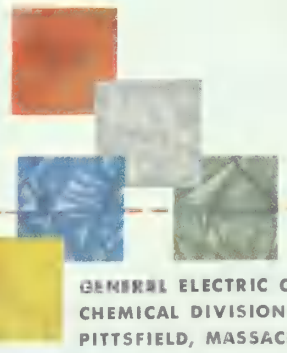
THE SICILIAN BAROQUE HAT BY JOHN-FREDERICS

Green "Cross Current" G-E Textolite top on table by Chromemaster Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

top fashion for your dinette

Yellow "Pearl" G-E Textolite top on table featured by Alden's, Inc., Chicago, Ill.

Gray "Pearl" G-E Textolite top on table by Kuehne Mfg. Co., Mattoon, Ill.



TABLES WITH GENERAL ELECTRIC TEXTOLITE* TOPS

G-E TEXTOLITE TOPS AWARDED FASHION ACADEMY GOLD MEDAL FOR DISTINCTIVE STYLING!

Patterns are so smart, colors are so handsome, it's no wonder the coveted Fashion Academy Award went to General Electric plastics tops. And they're practical, as well as pretty. They're heat-, stain-, and scratch-resistant, sparkle at the touch of a damp cloth. Remember, when you're in the market for a dinette, be sure to ask for G-E Textolite, to look for the G-E Textolite label!

* Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Write for ACTUAL SAMPLES

Just send 10¢ for samples of "Pearl" pattern—shown above coupon—one of many popular dinette patterns.

You can put your confidence in

GENERAL ELECTRIC

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY
CHEMICAL DIVISION
PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

I am enclosing 10¢ for samples of G-E Textolite plastics tops for dinettes in the "Pearl" pattern. Please send me, also, free color folder.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone____ State____

ask any boy... his opinion and he has plenty to say:

Should a girl ever date a boy who is younger than she is?

"That's happened—and it's okay if the boy is a kid who's mature enough for the girl. In some schools girls are actually driven to it because the older boys get disillusioned with dating or something, and only the younger boys will take them out. If a boy and girl like each other, and the girl isn't more than a year older, what's the difference if they do go out on dates together?"

How should a girl act if she spills a cola or makes some other faux pas?

"She shouldn't have a breakdown, or moan about it all evening. She should try to pass it off lightly—'There I go spilling a cola again,' or 'There are holes in these glasses'—and if she spilled it on the boy, she should help him wipe it off, and tell him she's sorry. Then she should forget it—and the boy will too."

What's the best way to refuse a date so you don't hurt the boy's feelings?

"This depends on whether you want the boy to call again, or are trying to brush him off. When a girl doesn't want to date a fellow, she should get the idea across to him. Maybe they've been out a couple of times and she's not interested in any more dates. She could say—in a nice way—'I'm sorry, Bill, I like you, but I just don't think we hit it off as a couple.' Or if they've never had any dates and she wants to say no, she should be honest—'I'd like to be friends, Joe, but I'd rather not go out on dates. There's someone else I like.' A fellow feels foolish calling again and bothering her when she doesn't want to go out with him, and if she just says she's busy, he probably would call again. On the other hand, if she really is busy that night and wants him to call again, she can show him that easily by telling him she's awfully sorry she has a date, that she would have liked to go otherwise. If she knows the guy well enough, she could even say, 'Maybe we could go some other time.' If he's interested, chances are he'll call again a couple of nights later for another date."

Should a girl ask a boy she doesn't know very well to a dance?

"This depends on how well she knows the boy. He might think she's bold unless they've talked to each other or been in the same class. He should at least know who she is. It would add to his ego that a girl he hardly knew wanted to go with him—and there's no sign he has to accept unless he feels like it."

Do boys like girls to wear make-up?

"No boy likes to be seen with a girl who cakes her make-up on with a putty knife—or a 'ghost rider' who doesn't wear any make-up at all. Lipstick and a little powder on a girl show a fellow that she really cares what she looks like when she's out with him. Also, when a girl goes out on a date, she should avoid a few other things that embarrass fellows—false fingernails, real fingernails that are extra-long and lacquered with bright red polish, stockings and high heels when all the other girls are wearing socks and low heels, and dangling earrings. In fact, earrings of any kind are out of the question in school, and a girl should use only small ones on dates. Teen-age girls should stick to their types, and not try to dress as if they're twenty."

How can you let a boy know you like him without chasing him?

"Tell your best friend and let her hint subtly to the boy—'Sally's a sweet girl—have you ever had much chance to talk to her?' Or if she knows the boy quite well, she might even suggest, 'Why not take Sally out sometime? I think you'd like her.' And then change the subject so the guy doesn't feel embarrassed or as if he has to take the girl out. Another thing the girl herself could do is look up the guy's schedule and make it a point to be where he is so she has a chance to talk to him—and to get him to notice her. Or if he works in the local drugstore, she could drop around there a few times. She could get her best friend to give a party and invite him with some other fellows; she could ask him herself to a school dance where it's okay for girls to invite boys—'I like the way you dance. Would you go to the prom with me Saturday night?'; she could really show her interest by finding out what things he likes and then casually asking him questions about them without letting him know she found out beforehand. How much—or how little—a girl does to kindle a guy's interest would have to depend partly on his reaction. If he likes her, he'll act friendly and take it from there—but if he doesn't respond and she keeps on hanging around, then she is chasing him, and no guy likes that for long. If a boy really wants to go out, he'll find a girl he wants to go out with."

by Joyce Behr, age 19

"I hope it's not Philander, he's always so anxious!"

by Joyce Behr, age 19

"It's the same when I quarrel with Mervin. It leaves me like a hollow shell!"

What's the best way to tell a boy you have to be home at a special time?

"How a girl tells a boy doesn't matter so much—it's when she tells him that counts. A guy likes to know the curfew hour at the beginning of the evening so he can plan the fun to fit the time. Boys don't mind curfews, but they do mind being told about them at the last minute."

What a girl!

We polled a cross-section of teen-age boys on their "dream girl," and here's what they had to say, just as we received it:

Her name is Barbara. She's 17, weighs 110, is 5'4" tall. Her hair is blond and short, her eyes are blue. She's easy to get along with, understanding, friendly, talks easily, and has a good sense of humor. If she can look at a boy "in a sweet way," he'll like it, and if she can "act stupid unconsciously," that's even better. To be a good date, she should dance well—preferably a "slow fox trot, or if she's real sharp, the Charleston or Valentino tango"—and she should "give a guy a break by not letting him spend more than a couple bucks for a special date unless he lets her know that he's got more green cabbage than usual. This is the greatest sin of some girls." Most of all—"She should like me!"

Feeling sorry for yourself because you have to wear glasses? Actually you can look prettier than before. To find out how and why, send 5c to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania, and ask for GLAMOUR FOR GLASSES, No. 2268.

what can you lose?

you can lose a few inches of waistline, the bulge over your ribs, the bumps on your hips by this simple Jantzen method of redistribution... this marvelous new Jantzen figure-fixer with light breathe-easy boning knit right in the top... with very smoothing panels fore and aft... with the lightest, airiest nylonized® nylon net sides (the magic new absorbent, silky-feeling nylon). Girdle or panty-girdle, white only, 7.95 to 10.00... at most stores.

Jantzen®

nylonized nylon girdles panty-girdles and bras

"forever uplift" is a special Jantzen magic present in all Jantzen bras. Concentric stitching creates a perfect shape and holds it through wearing and washing, feels wonderful, too. White and pink in nylonized nylon 3.50 and 3.95... in finest cotton broadcloth 2.50.

You'll get compliments every day for coffee made the Wear-Ever way. Why? Because every Wear-Ever coffeemaker incorporates the results of exhaustive research by a great American university to determine the exact coffee pot construction to give you perfect coffee every time.

YOUR FAVORITE FRY PAN

It's Wear-Ever, of course! Like all Wear-Ever aluminum utensils, it's preferred for fast, even heating that means better cooking results.

Worth waiting for

Because of the big demand for aluminum, your dealer may be temporarily out of stock of some types and sizes of Wear-Ever utensils. Ask him to save the utensils you want from his next shipment.

WEAR-EVER TACUCO ALUMINUM TRADE MARK

WEAR-EVER Aluminum

© TACUCO 1951

THE ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSIL COMPANY, DEPT. 1809, NEW KENSINGTON, PA.

Take it Easy Darling

Daddy will fix dinner.

By ROBERT N. TAYLOR

DRAWINGS BY THE AUTHOR

DARLING, forget the kitchen. It's time you enjoyed a meal you didn't cook yourself. Suppose you take it easy. I'll look after Susan and Robbie. Know how it must be living in a small-fry world all day long.

You'll help daddy, won't you, kids? We'll let mommy have some time to herself. Good idea, Susan! You can watch Robbie. Yes, sir, you're our big four-year-old. What? How could daddy make such a mistake . . . four and a half, of course. Susan! You mustn't tease Robbie. He can't help being only two; you were only two once. Why, yes, daddy was once . . . and mommy. The cat will be two in December.

The poor gal seemed ready to collapse; guess I didn't take over any too soon. Lucky my nobler impulses come to the fore when the occasion arises. It doesn't hurt a man to pitch in now and then although it seems to me she gave in too easily . . . after all, I work hard ——

What, dear? Yes, I see you have put the roast in. Scrub the potatoes? And put them in in ten minutes? And watch the children? Watch the children. Why must mothers exaggerate their children's naughtiness?

Now to demonstrate why all good chefs are men! Wo-wo-wo-wo, wo-wo-wo-wo? Susan, why does Robbie say wo-wo? Oh! And you want water too? How often busy mothers deny so simple a request. How can anyone be too busy to refuse a child water? You what? You want a big glass? Why not drink two small glasses? Your brother seems happy with a small glass, why can't you —— Oh, you're big and he's small. . . . Robbie, don't share your water with the cat!

This family should eat salads more often— not just a lettuce leaf and a few tomato slices, but a real salad, one that shows the true creative touch, a thing of beauty and exotic taste. First, some crisp green lettuce, now the firm white meat of apples, orange slices, the tang of tuna fish bordered with the soft tropic yellow of bananas. Only a man with a chef's instinct could know to trim such a salad with slices of dill pickle. Now for a cherry at the top. Out of walnuts! How can anyone do a good job without the proper tools?

Robbie, get out of the sink! No excuses for him, Susan, he doesn't have to do everything the cat does. Oh, he loves the cat? But you are good? Yes, I know you are a good little girl. Daddy knows you can set the table. I have seen you set the table; that is very clever, very grown-up. Yes, you may set the table now. You don't think we should put the butter on yet? Might as well, dinner won't be long. Very well, here is a big glass of water for you and a small one for Robbie. Robbie! You deliberately poured yours on the floor. Susan, let's not laugh at such a naughty boy. . . . Discipline, that's what we need around here. Time we returned to the old-fashioned methods of child rearing. . . . Perhaps I should make him call me "sir." . . And to think that my own wife is willing to s by while I get the Sunday meal. Perhaps hard-working man should spend more of h time in slippers and robe with pipe and boo

What, dear? Yes, I put the potatoes o Yes, Susan, daddy just told a fib. Daddy sorry. I know you always tell the truth. Yes, am a naughty daddy. No, Susan, it will jus upset your mother if you tell her about the p tatoes. Robbie, put the butter down. I know Sue, you told me not to put it on the table Suppose you just lift that blasted cat off th table. I don't know what blasted means! Susan Stop saying blasted! It is not a nice word

No, dear. I don't need any help. I know I'm getting hungry too.

H'm-m-m-m-m, these potatoes are still hard Too bad I forgot them. Maybe if I push th heat to 600 ——

Susan, why is Robbie crying? Well, we're a hungry. Takes a while to make a good dinner

Sorry, cat, but if you insist on wrappin yourself around my ankles you deserve to b stepped on. Come on, out you go! Robbie you mustn't hit daddy. Yes, kitty go out. No Robbie no go out. No, kitty no come 'side Stop that screaming and kicking your feet

Now to dump these frozen beans into som boiling water. Guess three packages will b enough. Better hadn't try creamed carrots Haven't had any decent ones for years, though Maybe if I just cut up a few raw ones ——

Robbie, please don't put the silver under th rug. See what you can find in the toy box Susan, help Robbie find something to play with. I do not make you do everything!

Thanks, Robbie. No, Susan, we won't nee to wash the silver, the floor is pretty clean don't you think? No, no need to ask mommy Maybe the floor is dirty when mommy re washes the silver. Rewash? Rewash means t wash again . . . to rewash. Well, we are no going to rewash anything tonight, young lady

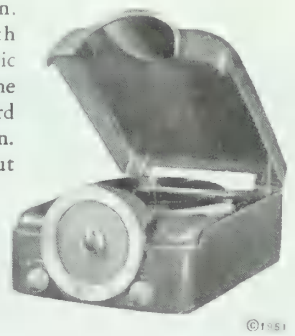
Now, wife, prepare to enjoy a rare feast That? Why that is your salad. It should b sprinkled with walnuts. Since there were n walnuts, I sprinkled it with coconut. Yes, suppose it is unusual, but after all, you de serve our best efforts. . . . Your butcher hasn' been giving you very good meat lately; thi roast seems awfully dry. Perhaps if I try th other side. Let me just slice off some of th meat which is so well done. Guess you're right I do seem to be halfway through the roast Better to overcook than undercook, though The potatoes took a long time. Susan!

Let's not make a face like that, Susan If you don't like the salad, just eat the res of your dinner. The beans are not burned they are just a little bit brown. My, you don' have milk, do you? Daddy will bring you eac some. What did you say? Good boy! Robbi said thank you. He does not have a large glass than you. No! Absolutely not! N more water! Where did that blasted cat com from? Put her out right now! Robbie, take th bread out of your ear! Susan—— THE EN

Only Zenith Quality

COBRA-MATIC Radio-Phonographs give you these vital safeguards for the future!

First . . . Zenith's exclusive Cobra-Matic goes far beyond any 3-speed record player! For the Cobra-Matic plays not just 33⅓, 45 and 78 R.P.M. records of any size, but any record speed from 10 to 85, including the coming new 16 R.P.M. for full-length operas, stage plays, even novels! Lets you select the exact speed for perfect pitch, tempo, tone quality, or for accompanying with voice or musical instruments. Only two simple controls —the simplest automatic record player ever invented!



Second . . . Zenith combinations bring you the ultimate developments in radio . . . Super-Sensitive FM that far surpasses usual FM in static-free tonal beauty and reception range, plus Zenith Long-Distance AM, and superlative speakers built entirely by Zenith. In the table model shown, the 7½ inch speaker is the largest, most powerful ever used in a Zenith table combination!

Third . . . Exceptionally important in these times, Zenith's quality-control and costlier materials assure you greater freedom from parts replacement and service problems — longer years of truly dependable enjoyment. To safeguard your musical investment, see your Zenith Radio and Television dealer, today!

Above, New Zenith® "Mayflower" Radio-Phonograph Console. Cobra-Matic® Record-Player, Super-Sensitive FM and Long-Distance® AM radio, Broad Range Tone Control. Ample record storage space. Period cabinet, Mahogany veneers.

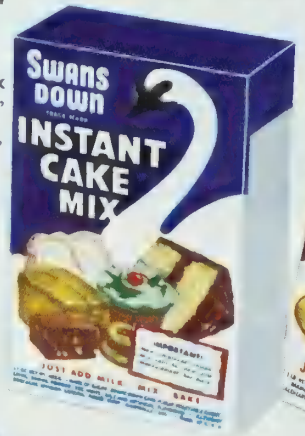
• • •

At right, New Zenith "Saratoga"® Radio-Phonograph table model with Cobra-Matic Record-Player. Compact new design. Super-size 7½ inch speaker gives dramatic new tone quality—the finest you've ever heard in a table combination. Modern swirl walnut plastic cabinet.

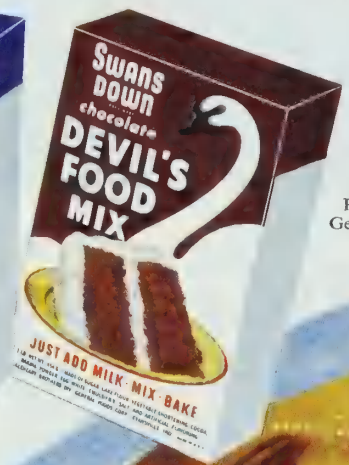
©1951

ZENITH
•LONG DISTANCE• RADIO and TELEVISION
THE ROYALTY OF RADIO AND TELEVISION

Zenith Radio Corporation, Chicago 39, Illinois • Over 30 Years of "Know-How" in Radionics® Exclusively
Also Makers of Fine Hearing Aids



Bridge Club Lunch—The girls will rave, with reason, about Swans Down "Ribbon" Cake! Lovely to look at, heaven to eat, thanks to the extra-luscious chocolate flavor of Swans Down Devil's Food Mix. Bake in a 13 x 9 x 2-inch pan as directed on package. Cool; cut in half vertically, then horizontally, making four oblong pieces. Tint seven-minute frosting; flavor with almond; lavish it on each layer and spread generously on top and sides of cake.



After-the-game Buffet—Reward the teams' rooters with a gorgeous chocolate-frosted yellow layer cake, whisked together in minutes! Only Swans Down new "high-ratio" Instant Mix could make such a high, proud beauty—so Swans Down fine and tender! Recipe is right on the package, with many other grand cake ideas.

Make 'em festive! Make 'em fast—with Swans Down Cake Mixes!

—the only mixes that make cakes "Swans Down good"!

Instant Cake Mix—new "high-ratio" mix for higher, finer, lighter cakes!

Devil's Food Mix—with that super chocolate richness!

Products of General Foods

Company Showpiece—"Swans Down wonderful" cake that wins praises galore! Make spice cake batter as directed on the Instant Cake Mix package. Blissfully easy! Bake in layers. Cool. Then spread tangy orange-juice frosting between layers and on top and sides of cake. Sprinkle top of cake with chopped nut meats.

Back to School—Yummy chocolaty-rich goodies to tuck in a good child's lunchbox. Quick to do the Swans Down Devil's Food Mix way! Prepare grand, good-for-them cupcakes as directed on package. Dress up with fluffy white or chocolate frosting, surprise toppings.

Harvest Moon Festival—Sunnyside-up cake, old-fashioned favorite, better than ever, made the new way, with never-fail Swans Down "high-ratio" Instant Cake Mix. See recipe for pineapple upside-down cake on package. Some folks serve it with whipped cream, but it's sheer eatin' delight as is, when Swans Down Instant makes it!

50 Years ago in the Journal

IN September, 1901, Pres. William McKinley was shot in Buffalo while shaking hands with a young man whose bandaged right hand concealed a revolver. The President said, "Let no one harm him," and died eight days later of gangrene. Actress Maude Adams bought an Oldsmobile, the U. S. Navy replaced homing pigeons with the new wireless telegraph, and H. G. Wells wrote The First Men in the Moon.

In the September, 1901, JOURNAL, Editor Bok maintains that school children are overloaded with work, and often their parents are to blame. "Again and again I have seen parents drilling their children in their studies. I have seen fond mothers do this before breakfast, and again at the noon recess, and fathers keep up the agony under the evening lamp. Their children go to bed with their little brains on fire."

"All women like palms," remarks the author of a piece called Plants That Can be Raised in the House.

"The plain mannish leather belt has been discarded. The belt of silk or satin, sloping in front, shapes to the figure and imparts a dainty, womanly touch to the wearer."

Writes Margaret Sangster in her column called My Girls: "No girl in traveling should make confidants of strangers of either sex, disclose her name, her destination or her family affairs, or make acquaintances on the road. She may, however, show kind attention to a mother traveling with children, or amuse a little wearied one."

Baby's layette: "Her very best bib is French linen with hand-embroidered edge of lace insertion appliqué, with a centerpiece of Valenciennes lace."

"Little Furbelows for Autumn: The artistic effect of this season's gowns will depend upon the tasteful stock and cape collars, the odd girdles, the dressy little bolero jackets, the fanciful vest fronts and the elaborate sleeves."

"Skirts for the street clear the ground. House dresses are slightly trained."

Journal about Town

Gossip about people you know Editors you like and what goes on in New York

MORRIS ENGEL

Journal food pages provide inspiration in Sheila John Daly's kitchen.

THE other day we went up to New York's most modern apartment building, Manhattan House, and saw the kitchen that Sheila John Daly and her husband, Peter White, have completely and colorfully papered with Ann Batchelder's food pages. Sheila John says they're a constant inspiration, while Peter says that any husband who helps his wife carry out a similar scheme will find it well worth while in a culinary way—menus right there when you run out of ideas. In a decorative way, we can only say it makes one of the most attractive kitchens we have ever seen.

The most recent occurrence of the following kind was at the opening of a Jacques Fath collection in Paris, when Eve Curie, whose clothes are made by this great French designer, came over to admire the dress Beatrice Gould was wearing. And once again Mrs. G. had the pleasure of explaining to a connoisseur of clothes that the dress was one planned for JOURNAL readers—by Nora O'Leary, and shown in photographs on JOURNAL pattern pages.

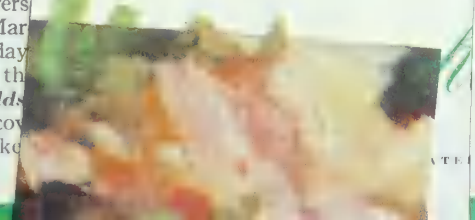
You may be able to make out, by the way, on Nora's pages this month, that there are nineteen different coating, lining and dress materials used to make the clothes shown there. But what you'd never guess is how many swatches of materials had to be looked at before the Pattern Department picked out nineteen that would do. How many? Seventeen hundred and fifty-eight!

Walking down Fifth Avenue the other day, we suddenly saw Wilhela Cushman motioning from the window of a taxi—not at us, but at two attractive girls driving in the same direction, and looking rather bewildered by Wilhela's gesticulating. Then we lost sight of them all in the traffic. The next day Wilhela explained. Always has her eyes open for finer, more photogenic girls to use in fashion pictures. And there all at once, she said, were two who were just what she was looking for. "Took me twenty blocks to make them understand—they'd never modeled before. . . . But I must hurry—they're waiting for me now at the studio."

How famous models were discovered often makes a Cinderella story. We remember when Al Parker was looking for someone to model the young mother for our mother-and-daughter covers. Walked into Charley's Economy Market in Westport, Connecticut, one day and there she was, clerking behind the counter: her name, Debbie Reynolds. you've seen her since on countless covers, in illustrations and ads. We asked Al about her the other day. Seems she went to Europe last September with just enough money for a two-month vacation, and is still there, and modeling triumphantly—the kind of girl who takes her lunch out to the Bois de Boulogne and eats it on the grass. . . . And not to be confused with the cute little Debbie Reynolds you'll be seeing this month in Mr. Imperium with Ezio Pinza.

OTTO



The two Debbies: above, the model; below, the actress, with Ezio Pinza.

E-ISSUE NOVEL

y faces, and war unmasks of a man for a woman.

Visitors who arrive at his Bucks County home and chide Richard Pratt, as a champion of contemporary architecture, for living in an early Pennsylvania stone farmhouse, are led around to the other side—where they find he has added a frankly modern wing.

Ever since Margaret Hickey, who never sleeps in her clothes if she can help it, told us about the time during the war when she was grounded overnight in Pittsburgh and woke up at dawn in the pilots' dormitory, where it seems a hostess had sent her in the dark, we have been trying to find out how far various people, on overnight trips by plane or train, go in for disrobing. Don't ask the names of the ones who hardly even loosen their collars or take off their shoes. They're shy. But we can tell you that on transatlantic flights Trygve Lie changes into navy-blue pajamas, and Frank Sinatra into something a little less conservative; and that when Joan Bennett marches down the aisle from the dressing room to her berth, in a delectable peach chiffon negligee, every woman on the plane turns green with envy.

Ruth Mary Packard sent a little memo about this month's cover. "It reflects the big fall fashion for red and black," her note began. "Most men like red. Most women feel gay in it. We predict many women will love that red jersey dress for its color, its pleats, its price—$39.95. Pat Warren, whose favorite color is red, designed it. Dovima, whom we nominate for Model of the Year, wears it. The hat is a Paris copy by Mr. Alf. The black fox fur is by Maximilian." . . . The phone rang. It was Ruth Mary. "I forgot to tell you," she said, "the dog is a blue-blooded French poodle by Dana."

Men dream twice as often about males as they do about females. Women dream equally of both sexes. Sixty-four per cent of dreams are concerned with apprehension, danger or sadness. . . . Children sleep most soundly during February and March. June marks the peak of their restlessness.

It seemed that Daisy was aware of a power over her—and defenseless against it.

Back to School—Yummy chocolaty-rich ies to tuck in a good child's lunchbox.
to do the Swans Down Devil's Food way! Prepare grand, good-for-them cup as directed on package. Dress up with white or chocolate frosting, surprise top

The River Garden of Pure Repose

By GRACE BOYNTON

ILLUSTRATED BY ANDREW LOOMIS

The Journal Presents GRACE BOYNTON AND HER FIRST PUBLISHED STORY

WILFREDA GRAYSON finished her letter. The stamp would cost so much that she thought she would not buy her usual handful of peanuts when she went out on the street. It was an ordinary refugee letter, written to tell an ordinary refugee story. Jane was not going to live long. Wilfreda read carefully:

Dear Bishop Chambers: A fairly decent journey. The truck lost two wheels, but one is grateful to arrive anywhere in China—especially West China—still intact.

Went at once to Jane. She knows her days are numbered and her one desire is that nobody shall be troubled on her account. She understands she may have days, perhaps months, of freedom from suffering, but that each ordeal brings her nearer to the end.

What do you think of my remaining with her? She is not one of our mission, of course, but the Friends have no one else here, and while all the overworked people in this hospital do their best, Jane must lack attention if I leave her. The most that can be done is to give Jane a room to herself. I think it was originally a supply closet, but it has a window. Here she lies, and my traveling cot has been set up at the foot of the best bed the hospital could find for her—trestles with planks, but free of vermin. There is no such thing as quiet or comfort, nor can she have much attention if I am not here. Let me know whether I may stay. W. G.

Wilfreda slipped the sheet into its envelope and addressed it to The Right Reverend Michael Chambers, Bishop of Ho Si. Subordinates and friends addressed him as "R Square," but Wilfreda, a junior member of her mission, had never ventured to adopt that informality. She was aware, however, that hers was not a usual sort of bishop. His concern over Jane was a case in point. It was not the affair of an English bishop to look after an American Quaker. But R Square, upon hearing of Jane's illness, had sent Wilfreda to investigate and report.

Pushing her stool back from the table where she had made a place to write, Wilfreda rose. She picked up the light—a saucer of crude pottery in which burned a thick wick fed by evil-smelling rapeseed oil—and held it over the figure stretched in the shadow behind her. The face was turned away, but the breathing was quiet. Jane's last attack had left her weak, but she was now out of pain. Wilfreda opened the door and went out into the corridor.

A nurse loomed up in the yellowish darkness created by the lamps which burned at infrequent intervals in the passage. She spoke in Chinese.

"Ther[illegible]nts to see Miss Breasted.

Will yo[illegible]

(Continued on Page 136)

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE NOVEL

[illegible] faces, and war unmasks them all—

Love has mar[illegible]f a man for a woman.

love of money, love of God, and love

The Green Scarf

By Jean Todd Freeman

CON swam her way doggedly out of the fog of three gin rickeys and a champagne cocktail, and felt for her purse. Somebody's hand was waving slightly in front of her, offering assistance. But where was the blue leather purse? Ah, there. Slipped down behind the seat.

She took the hand in hers and pulled herself up. Really, she thought, I should be the one to render assistance, not Toby. They can't fool me. I can count, and I know how many they've drunk. Toby and Greg, trying to drink each other under the table. What's surprising is that they're not both there, and Marian and I dragging them out.

She shook her head, and the dim cool room swirled. Murals merged into murals, the long bar switched ends, and the square aquarium in the center of the room churned with purple and pink monsters. Fish. What in hell—no, what in the world do they have fish for?

Someone answered her, although she could have sworn she had only thought the words. It was Toby, and he didn't know what the hell they had fish for. Con grinned a little bitterly. She pointed her high-heeled shoes toward the door, and amazingly they went that way quite steadily. It was hard to keep from watching them as they walked, a little incredulous of their skill. These aren't my feet, surely. But in dancing school they had said Don't Watch Your Feet. So Con kept her chin up and her eyes on the revolving door.

Revolved into the hot dark night. There was a warm salt breeze coming in from the beach, and stars piercing the sky. Gravel twisted under her feet. There was a regular swishing rhythm, and her eyes went fascinated to where cars were speeding along the beach road, one after another, as steady a stream as the wooden ducks in the shooting gallery. Once a horn honked—a long blast that strangely flatted into the minor as it flashed past them.

Con wondered how much longer she could stand up. If they didn't find the green convertible soon, she might have to sit down on someone else's fender. She shut her eyes, and behind the lids she saw the gold bubbles of champagne rising, rising, rising. . . .

If Lennie could see me, she thought. Drunk. Me, Con, the gal that never touched the stuff. If Lennie could see me, sitting on somebody's sedan fender, just as high as a kite!

Or maybe Lennie had seen her. Because she was on the coast too. Drinking? Con wondered. Drinking champagne cocktails with bubbles that rise and break like skyrockets? Maybe . . . and maybe she's seen me. Because I darn sure couldn't see her. I darn near can't see how to walk.

Toby's hand appeared before her eyes and guided her toward a jumbled sound of voices. Marian and Greg were arguing.

"I'll drive, I said."

"The heck you will. You couldn't stay on the road."

"I told you I'll drive."

"And I said—listen, Greg. I have to make dorm hours."

"Yeah? Well, I'll get you there."

"Let Toby drive."

"Toby? Hell, he's stewed."

(Continued on Page 213)

Wild young fun twisting into tragedy... paralyzing Con with horror.

ILLUSTRATED BY JOE DE MERS

Johnny could mak

Carry-on Johnny

By I. A. R. WYLIE

SHE turned the huge convertible, purr like a pleased cat, between the ste pillars into the Giffords' service drivew
Mr. Clive Gifford, who had had the creatu built in France to his own specificatio called her the Prima Donna. Primro yellow, low-slung, fourteen feet long, f tooned with gadgets and sizzling with Gal temperament, she could, when she felt li it, pass anything on the road. When sh didn't, when a spot of dust or a rough gea shift upset her works, it took the most sens tive handling to get them on the mo again. Liz's father, Jim Hipps, boss of th Hipps Motor Works, and Liz herself were l this time wise to her. The two of them, wit young Johnny Gifford, who had spent a sum mer in France with his dad, ostensibly a quiring culture and a French accent, ha too often crowded together in the Hipps in spection pit or peered side by side into th mysterious maze of wires, piping and spar plugs. Besides, Johnny had a sort of flai for distressed or merely bad-tempered mo tors. It was like a doctor's gift for diagnosis
He had a bedside manner. "Allons, mo petit chou-chou," he would coax with a no noticeably French accent. "Just tell poppa where it hurts," and the stone-cold Prima Donna would suddenly tick over, as though in the midst of a fit of operatic tantrums a bouquet had been handed up to her.

Liz drove past the big lighted house to the parking
lot. Bill Somers, the Giffords' chauffeur,

motor purr . . . . .

but the mechanics of love had him riding for a f a l l .

"I thought you'd run out on me," Johnny told Diana. She pulled back a little to smile up at him.

ILLUSTRATED BY

l was due to spend the night disentangling ly limousines, rakish sports cars and e jalopies, welcomed her sourly.
So you've got the old buzzard on the g again," he said. He helped her slide out n behind the wheel. "Big doings," he erved unnecessarily.
he could hear them. A ten-piece orchesplaying a jaunty fox trot, announced t Johnny had made the grade. He was a nton freshman. His father's alma mater, oding over the tree-shaded little town.
a big gray hen, had at last taken him ler her wing. Liz tossed back her short own curls. The music danced in her art. Besides, she was so darned pleased.
e knew what it meant.
Johnny had told her, perched on her of-e desk, earnest, even a little desperateunding. "I've got to make it, Liz," he'd id, a smear of the Prima Donna's oil on his unt, freckled nose. "I've got to."
Well, there he was. He'd made it. Good r you, Johnny.
Liz strolled back the way she'd come, but en made a sudden little detour so that she ood out, a slender, rather lonely-looking gure in the square of light thrown by the g French window onto the flaming green retch of lawn. In her jeans and sweater she ight have been a boy, peering wistfully nto the window of a candy store.
Bill Somers thought, She ain't exactly retty. But she sure is a winner. Some guy as going to be darned lucky. A head on er too. Everyone knew she ran the busi-ess end of her (Continued on Page 219)

The author,
Lt. Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr.

What secret charm has the man who can yawn through his wedding ceremony, forget to kiss the bride—
and live to tell the story?
You met him in Cheaper by the Dozen and Belles on Their Toes—here is proof that his life is as full and amusing as ever.

Liz (see title).

Betsy
at 8 months—
"midnight-oil burner."

I'm a Lucky Guy

By Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr.

I HAD spent the afternoon raking leaves a tidying up the yard. There wasn't any re reason for me to work around the place on n last day at home, but I wanted to keep occ pied so that I wouldn't think about leaving.

Going away to college had become a fair commonplace occurrence in our family. But it was an old story collectively, it still was a ne story for me. I was nervous about it. I knew couldn't say so, though, because Mother w making considerable sacrifice to send me. was 1929. My father had died five years befor leaving Mother with eleven children—six bo and five girls. I was the oldest boy.

Mother had worked with my father in h motion-study and management-engineering firr Since his death, she had been supporting th family by running the firm. It was generally a sumed that I would take engineering in colleg then perhaps work my way into the firm.

The three oldest girls all had done exceptio ally well at various colleges. Anne had been Phi Beta Kappa at Michigan, which was m destination. Ernestine had edited the monthl magazine at Smith. Martha was an officer c her class and active in half-a-dozen campus a tivities at New Jersey State College for Wome

This Betsy learned from her father?

Behind that grin:
3 years' practice.

The girls seagoing Frank left behind. Grandma Gilbreth, left.

From the day he left,
Frank "looked forward to seeing Liz and Betsy again."

The family took it for granted that the girls' onors and achievements were merely a pre- iew of those that the oldest man-child would arner. At least that was the impression I re- eived, when they finally gathered under the orte-cochere to bid me farewell.

I tried to point out that I had been merely an verage student, scholastically and socially, at Montclair (New Jersey) High School. But the lder girls brushed off my arguments.

"College," said Anne, while Ern and Martha odded agreement, "is different. You'll see. Besides, they still know all about me at Michi- an, and you're my brother, aren't you?"

As for my five younger brothers, they were nanimous in the belief that I was destined for tardom on the gridiron. In view of the fact hat I was six feet, one inch tall, weighed 142 ounds and never had got above the third tring in high school, I didn't think they were eing very realistic.

I kissed Mother and the girls good-by, and ried to appear self-possessed and confident. I limbed into the car and sat behind the wheel. Martha and my young brothers, who were going to see me off at the Newark station, limbed in too. I blew the exhaust whistle and waved my porkpie at Mother. The driveway spit gravel as we took off.

We sat in the automobile at the station until my train arrived. Then the boys carried out my suitcases and ruglike camel's-hair overcoat that was meant to resemble raccoon. They came up one at a time and shook hands. I couldn't trust myself to talk, so I just grinned.

"Good-by," I finally managed. "And, gee—well, thanks for everything."

I turned to board the train. Suddenly, bedlam accompanied by a shower of rice broke out.

"Happy honeymoon," shouted Fred, producing a hitherto concealed cowbell and ringing it.

"Here comes the bride," hollered Dan, beating a kitchen spoon against a kettle top.

"Now you stop that, Bunny Boy," Martha tittered coyly. "You bold thing, you!"

"Aw, gosh, Bunny Girl," Bill whined in a deep bass. "We're married now, aren't we?"

Each shout was accompanied by a new shower. I put up my arm to screen my face, and knocked off my porkpie. I would have chased after them, but the train started to pull out and I had to grab my hat and get aboard.

I was so humiliated that I felt sick to my stomach. There wasn't any relief in the knowledge that the train went through Niagara Falls, or that I had organized a similar send-off for Anne, a number of years before. I wondered vaguely, for the first time, whether perhaps Anne had felt humiliated too.

I had been on Pullmans a good many times before, sometimes alone. Nevertheless, I had been especially concerned about what sort of impression I'd make on the Pullman taking me to college. I had intended to breeze into the Pullman and stop at the drinking fountain to get a paper cup of water, thus showing my familiarity with the facilities. Then I'd tell George, the porter, that I'd leave my shoes out so that he could shine them. Instead, I slunk into the car, with the porter complaining loudly that he was going to have to clean up all that rice I was shedding, and that I'd better go back to the vestibule and shake myself again.

The train had been made up in New York, and most of the passengers were in their berths. But heads were poking out of the curtains. They were leering at me, but especially they were looking for the bride—Bunny Girl.

It was at that moment, which I still think of as the nadir of my existence, that I first saw Sallye.

(Continued on Page 104)

Copyright, 1951, by Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr. This is a condensation of the book soon to be published by Thomas Y. Crowell Company.

"We ran a mighty taut ship— USS Hotel Fort Sumter."

"No man in his right mind would ever let her out of his sight."

During New Hebrides assignment, Frank made many friends (and one enemy).

Reunion— several complications later.

Clarence must have written at precisely the time I wrote to him.
"Read it aloud,"
they commanded.
"Come on, Martha

Devotedly, Patrick

By LAURA WINSTON

The Journal Presents
LAURA WINSTON
AND HER FIRST PUBLISHED STORY

ILLUSTRATED BY Monet

A PAUL JONES is a deviation of the old game of musical chairs, only instead of sitting on what you are in front of when the music stops, you dance with it. That was how I first met Patrick Henry Casebolt. It happened that warm September afternoon Wood Hollow Hall gave its initial tea dance of the year—a fearfully boring affair in the arid surroundings of the gymnasium.

Promptly at one-forty-five, the cadets from nearby Hillside Academy had massed in platoons and marched down the hill to be our guests—white-gloved, red-faced and grumbling.

For a solid hour I was exposed to all the types: the near-bald cadet major from Macon, Georgia: the stuttering fat boy who jitterbugged to Deep Purple; the anemic Chinese who told me I looked like his sister; and half a dozen nonentities. The exception was a dashing boy with round brown eyes and straw-colored hair. His name was Clarence Rassmussen.

They met at a dance.
The orchestra played All or Nothing at All and there he was . . . nothing at all.

Henry Casebolt

At the end of our dance, he took a small red book from the cuff of his uniform and asked if he might write to me. We had danced Temptation together. We had not said a word. And his smile was as warm as a summer breeze by a babbling brook. Write to me? I would die for him—in chains! I rushed off to the side lines to share my good luck with my roommate.

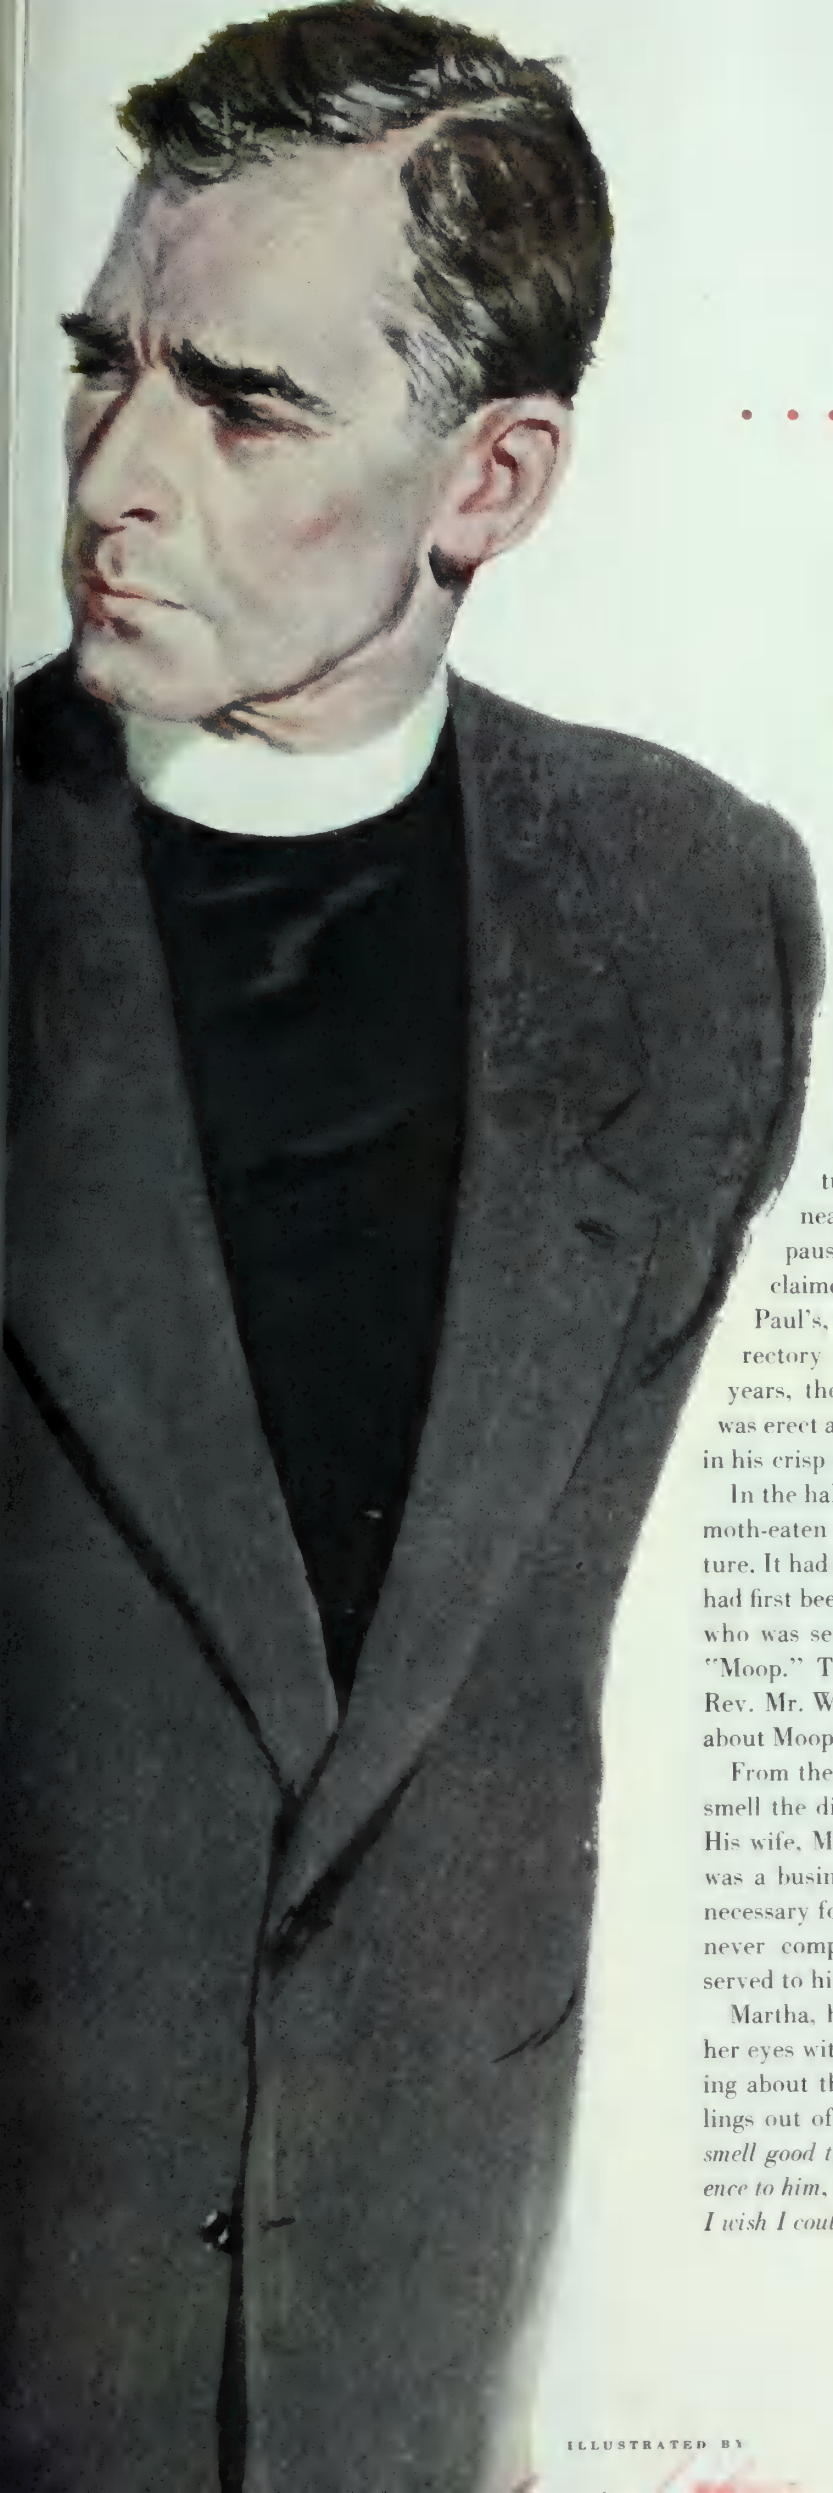
"I thought the Paul Jones was supposed to be an opener," Candy said, completely disregarding the item about Clarence Rassmussen. "We haven't had anything but Paul Joneses and I just had to dance the last number with that midget over there!"

Candy was my age, almost sixteen, and any man shorter than her own six-foot stature was condemned as hopelessly abnormal.

Miss Budde, the chaperon in charge, a thin rail of a woman with giant ankles pushed into a pair of prim English Oxfords, blew her whistle sharply. "All right, everyone," she said; "let's have another Paul Jones!"

Like the automatons we were, we formed the human-slave circle and trotted busily about the gymnasium to the insidious lyrics of All or Nothing at All. Just as the vocalist came to the phrase "nothing at all" the music stopped. I was facing an enormous, redheaded, freckle-faced ruffian who even surpassed Candy Lane's length requirements. He looked as if he were about to burst out of his gold-braided jacket, from whose sleeves his red wrists hung in defiance of all tailoring.

"Greetings," he boomed out obnoxiously. "I am a prince from Paris, and I believe we have this dance."



His name, of course, was Patrick Henry Casebolt. He was indeed from Paris—Paris, Missouri! He clobbered about on my new patent-leather pumps, admonishing me for being so "beautiful," while I, all too aware of the bright red pimple which had arrived on the tip of my nose early that morning, hated him passionately.

(Continued on Page 228)

"You have to love him very hard."
Martha told James' grandson,
"then someday
he will love you back."

"No, we're not going to have another dog,"
James Weatherby said heavily
"Dogs seem to make everybody too unhappy."

. . . and have not charity

By MARY ELIZABETH VROMAN

THE Reverend James Weatherby crossed the street at the intersection of Peach and Smythe and turned west down Peach, past the neat green-and-white houses. He paused before the billboard that proclaimed the unimpressive church was St. Paul's, and then moved briskly on to the rectory beyond. Despite his fifty-three years, there was no stoop in his walk. He was erect and flat-bellied. There was little gray in his crisp black hair. Only his eyes were old.

In the hall he hung his hat on the horns of a moth-eaten deer's head. The head was a fixture. It had been there when James Weatherby had first been appointed to St. Paul's. Theresa, who was seven at the time, had christened it "Moop." There had been a time when the Rev. Mr. Weatherby would joke with Theresa about Moop, but that was before Eben.

From the living room Mr. Weatherby could smell the dinner almost ready in the kitchen. His wife, Martha, was a good cook, but eating was a business with him, like his daily walk, necessary for the maintenance of the flesh. He never complained about the food if it was served to him on time. Nor did he praise.

Martha, brushing a wisp of hair away from her eyes with the back of her hand, was thinking about that. She drew the fat apple dumplings out of the oven. . . . You look good . . . smell good too; not that it will make any difference to him, but Muriel will like them, and Eben. I wish I could get Theresa to eat—to really taste food again. Thinking of Theresa evoked a sudden tight, nameless passion in her. It's been so long. . . . The church people have forgotten almost. And forgiven long ago . . . not that he's let them forget, or Theresa or me or Muriel. I wonder how long Eben can escape. Poor Eben. It's hurt him worst of us all, because he doesn't understand. I can help Theresa a little, but no one will ever be able to help Eben except James . . . if he could ever want to.

Her husband was standing in the doorway, watching her with the strange, intense expression she often surprised in his face when he thought she didn't see him.

"You're home early, James."

"A little, perhaps. Where's Muriel?"

You have two daughters. "She's at school this afternoon, helping Miss Ritchie with the new library books."

James frowned. "Couldn't Miss Ritchie have found someone else to help her?"

"Muriel wanted to, James."

"It strikes me that Muriel finds too many excuses to be away from home. I don't approve of it. She's entirely too young."

"Is it so bad to be young, James, or have you forgotten?"

He ignored that. "I'll be in the study."

Theresa was coming through the swinging kitchen door as he turned to leave. "Good evening, father."

"Good evening." He said it coldly.

She smiled at Martha. "I'll set the table, mom. Visitors?" (Continued on Page 205)

ILLUSTRATED BY

The husband, a research engineer, went all out for this modern design; for its unsentimental looks, clean-cut lines, simple construction. "Livability" won his wife completel

SANDERS, MALSIN & REIMAN, ARCHITECTS; PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Holding the downhill half off the ground on steel posts creates a carport and a lofty balcony outside the living room. An easy house for a difficult, uneven site, and particularly attractive in a wooded situation.

A general booklet, No. 2639, A PRIMER FOR THE OWNER-BUILDER, can be ordered from the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania, for $1. Use order blank on Page 26. To the Easi-Bild Pattern Company, 462 Bedford Road, Pleasantville, New York, send 50c for Shopping Guide, No. 513, to estimate cost of materials; or $5 for both Shopping Guide and Construction Plans, No. 513.

This time the Journal Sweat Equity Plan cuts the price in half! Again it multiplies the money value of owner effort by expert designing, simple methods. Gives clear instructions on how to purchase materials, equipment. Tells how to hire skilled assistance, how to make your own spare-time work really count.

By RICHARD PRATT
Architectural Editor of the Journal

The corrugated asbestos panels (painted gray) happened to be a bargain buy. Outside walls could just as well be plywood or vertical barn siding, the latter shown below.

COST $9,175 . . . WORTH $20,000

A ready-built house this size would have cost $23,500. The lowest contractor's bid on this JOURNAL design was $20,375. But Paul and Virginia went to work the Sweat Equity way. It took nine months to build: 1400 hours of spare-time work. They hired their own masons, carpenters, plumbers, heating men, electricians—all according to Sweat Equity schedule. They used Sweat Equity's complete, explanatory shopping guide for making all purchases. As a result, their labor bill was only $3884.99; their materials and equipment, only $5290.01. . . . Here's the whole idea. Your design has lasting value, your floor plan real livability; the construction is simple, sound and picture-clear. You pay no fees, profits, overhead. You hire and buy direct. You have only one person to please: the owner. And that person is you!

The room for living and dining is traffic-free; can be kept attractive and tidy while multiuse space, with outside entrances and equally convenient to kitchen, is used for informal meals, sewing, ironing, as well as for children's play.

Barn-siding walls can be with or without battens.

Simple methods, modern materials raise owner efficiency, lower costs.

HAROLD FOWLER

MONEY SAVERS for furnishing a large room

There's a way to furnish a large (18′ x 24′) living room at moderate cost:
keep an eye out for inexpensive, well-built stock items:
keep in mind that home- or carpenter-built pieces can sometimes be more budget-wise than ready-mades.

By H. T. WILLIAMS

PAUL and Virginia need seating space for ten or twelve in their large new living-dining room, for they have lots of friends in their young New Jersey community, and love to entertain. These young householders were on the lookout for money savers to make their 18′x 24′ room as complete as possible, with sturdy, well-designed pieces that would be easy for Virginia, the mother of a live-wire two-year-old, to care for. They chose wisely from among the many clean-cut, inexpensive stock items available now throughout the country; the coffee table, for $40, the upholstered club chair, for $89, the two rounded "tub" chairs, for $35 each, are all good buys. The two comfortable end-to-end day beds were ordinary cot springs and mattresses incorporated with carpenter-made frames and legs, and supplied with back cushions (lumber cost $14.90; if you have a bent for carpentering, or if carpenters' rates are reasonable in your neighborhood, you might follow this lead). The big 12′ x 12′ cotton rug is washable and reversible—a real bargain at $134.40. The old wicker porch chairs were a gift from Virginia's mother; with bright new seat pads, they strike an unusual note in a modern room.

(Above) Day beds placed end to end go far to furnish a considerable part of the room's wall space. The unusual throw pillows are covered with 49c rag rugs. Stock-item standing lamp cost $14.95.

(Right) The circular dining table expands to seat six; its leaves drop to push flat against the wall when not in use; $70. Easily accessible storage shelves at right, for linens, china and flatware.

(Opposite page) Cherrywood-and-oak desk-table was made by a local carpenter; lumber cost $15. Ottoman: $24. Sunfast linenlike rayon dress fabric at $1.69 a yard was used for traverse curtains.

FOWLER

The music was that old waltz from "The Chocolate Soldier."
He put his arm around her. "Don't kid me, Dottie."

ILLUSTRATED BY

Melville Goodwin USA

By JOHN P. MARQUAND

In October, 1949, General Melville A. Goodwin became man-of-the-hour when news stories told of an incident in Berlin which could have brought war. I. Sidney Skelton, a "well-known commentator," was asked by Army Public Relations to help with Mel's publicity because I'd known him briefly during my Army days. I was the one, in fact, back in 1945, who introduced him to Dottie Peale, head of the Peale publishing house, when she toured the battle areas in France with a group of writers.

I invited Phil Bentley, magazine writer; his researcher, Miss Fineholt; the General and Mrs. Goodwin; and Colonel Flax all up to the new place which Helen and I had bought in Connecticut. There the interviewing could be done in comfort, and Gilbert Frary, my boss, hoped for good publicity for me.

The General began to tell the story of his small-town background and military career. He married Muriel, his school days' sweetheart, the day after graduation from West Point, and left for France in two weeks. There in front-line combat he made an exceptionally good record.

At this point in the story I had to drive Mrs. Goodwin to New York. Then I lunched with Dottie Peale. She was determined to see the General again, determined—in her words—to "help him." I was afraid catastrophe would be inevitable, but I couldn't stop her.

Back in Connecticut, Mel described the years between wars; how as a peacetime officer he moved from post to post, watched his children grow up, advanced slowly—sometimes by luck, sometimes by merit. We were ready to hear about the General's World War II career.

It was Mel's last day in Connecticut. I tried to warn him about Dottie, but he was already looking forward to having dinner with her in New York that night.

I FOLLOWED the General into the library and closed the door. He had a well-compartmented mind that could move effortlessly from one thing to another.

"Let's get this thing cleaned up, Phil," he said. "I have to be in New York by five o'clock. Where did we break off last night?"

"You were back in Washington," Phil Bentley told him, "in the summer of 1941."

Melville Goodwin laughed and sat down by the fireplace. "It was really hot that summer," he said. "Everyone, as I remember, was sort of crazy with the heat. . . ."

In the final draft of his profile, Phil Bentley came up with only a paragraph on Melville Goodwin's pre-Pearl Harbor experiences:

With his deceptively boyish smile that softened but did not obscure the tough corners of his mouth, Melville Goodwin described those months of shoestring improvisations and basic organizational blueprinting as follows: "The whole crowd were like jugglers in a three-ring circus, keeping pie plates in the air. No sooner did you catch one than you had to get rid of it in time to get the next one that the Old Man was scaling at you, and you couldn't break them either. It was lucky for me I was a fast mover."

He meant by this that he was a sort of liaison trouble-shooter in Washington, shuttling back and forth among high echelons because A. C. Grimshaw, who had already attained a temporary two-star rank, began using him more and more as a second pair of legs and eyes. Grimshaw would send him as his representative to policy conferences on training and plans, and he did a lot of doubling and tripling in brass that summer. He never mentioned Muriel's place in this picture to Phil Bentley, but he did take up the subject of Muriel with me privately.

Muriel, he said, came up from Benning to Washington and they had a few differences of opinion. Of course the whole town was overcrowded. He wanted Muriel and Charlie to stay where it was cool until he could at least find out what the score was. He could not very well afford to keep them in some Washington hotel on a lieutenant colonel's pay, and though Muriel and her mother never did get on well sharing a house together, because both of them were (Continued on Page 74)

Copyright, 1951, by John P. Marquand

Short black-and-white tweed coat. Persian-lamb collar. matching hat. wool skirt. by Christian Dior. New York.

Salt-and-pepper tweed cloak with red, bell sleeves, high velours cloche, by Hattie Carnegie.

Poodle-cloth straight coat with set-in sleeves, by Lo Balbo. Chin-strap velours fez, Mr. John.

Shawl-collared cocoon suit. black-and-white tweed. by Nettie Rosenstein.

ALLIGATOR BAG BY RICHARD KORET, CALFSKIN BAG BY HELEN RAITT.

A big shawl collar to drape around your shoulders, the flash of shock-red or green in a coat, the new aspect of a tweed cloak over an afternoon dress, the new feeling of stepping out in a skirt with flare, slightly shorter—these are first significant impressions of fall '51.

THE NEW AND YOU

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

You are the critic of the new. Your constant question—Is it right for me? Each season certain new silhouettes, details and colors provide the basis for renewing and changing your clothes. This fall, the most notable new coats and suit-jackets are cocoon-shaped, hem-length or hipbone-length, usually in tweed, worn with a narrow skirt. The flat-back coat with bell sleeves, straight or slightly flaring at the sides, often reversible or lined with color, is an important alternate. The fitted coat, belted or princess-line, flares from the waistline. All coats have a warm, wrapped-against-the-weather look. Tweeds are designed for town. In contrast to the loose cocoon-jacket suit, the sculptured jacket seems painted on your figure, has a narrow or a flaring skirt, is worn with a jersey or taffeta blouse, or is buttoned up, stark plain, without a blouse. The newest dress has a skater's silhouette, with a gored bell-shaped skirt and tight bodice, worn over petticoats of taffeta or stiffened nylon net. The fencer's dress with high neck and long sleeves comes in all-black crepe or jersey, the double-breasted coat-dress in tawny beige or gray gabardine. The wool dress, in black or vibrant color, under a long or short coat, is the costume fashion of fall '51. You'll see it in a scarlet-red dress under a black coat, green with green, black with black-and-white tweed, gold matching gold.

The fitted-jacket suit in navy-blue wool, with sleeves set high, side-tilted velour beret, by Hattie Carnegie.

WILHELA CUSHMAN

The New And You

Tiger-tweed cocoon coat, black jersey dress. Omar Kiam of Ben Reig.

Fabrics are full of texture and electrified with color—scarlet and rouge-red, emerald green, stained-glass blue, bright turquoise, and new ginger and shell shades. A coat can be in any of these colors, a velours hat or velvet evening dress most often in red or royal blue, a capeskin glove in tawny gold or red. On the other hand, your costume may be all-black, oxford gray, oxford brown. Gray is still a wonderful basic to count on.

Suit with gored fullness, Nettie Rosenstein. Matching hat, Mr. John.

ess worn with tweed coat is black jersey, blond pigskin belt and buttons.

Poodle-wool jacket, wool dress by Hannah Troy. Hat, John Frederics.

Your hat is a calot, a pillbox, a turban, a side-ilted cloche or toque, often with a big gold stick-pin. One extra-large piece of jewelry has enor-mous chic — a gold medallion, a gold-and-rhine-stone dagger, a choker of big gold or baroque pearl beads. Your bag is box or satchel-shaped with a frame or a flat rectangle, alligator or calf-skin. Your scarf is taffeta or a fold of satin, or a velvet ascot combined with leopard fur.

Wing-shawl collar on a wrapped tweed coat by Pauline Trigere, matching turban.

Ribbed French velvet with mink collar and cuffs. Ben Reig original, by Omar Kiam.

WILHELA CUSHMAN

CLOTHES YOU WEAR AGAIN AND AGAIN

This fall, you'll wear a taffeta blouse or a jersey shirt with a tweedy wool suit, a dressmaker wool dress will be as basic as a crepe, a flecked faille suit will take a new fur ascot or a favorite scarf, the jacketed taffeta will be for day or night. Prices are dollar-conscious. By Ruth Mary Packard

$55.90

$35.00	Suit in flecked rayon faille
3.95	Tilted black velvet beret
12.95	Black calfskin bag
1.00	Hand-sewn, 8-button gloves

FUR ASCOT FASHION, CIVET CAT, $14.65, PLUS TAX

$55.95

Gray wool dress, side closing	$45.00
Visor cloche in black velvet	6.95
Fall-weight cotton gloves	4.00

MUFF IN GLOSSY BLACK FOX, $32.00, PLUS TAX

LEOMBRUNO · BODI

Wool suit, poodle-cloth collar	$39.95
Deeper pillbox, black velvet	6.95
Top-handle calfskin bag	10.00
Gold medallion on a chain	8.95
Washable, wearable cotton gloves	4.00

$69.85

$85.90

$69.95	Taffeta dress, with jacket
6.95	Bow-and-veil dinner bandeau
5.00	Navy blue lambskin bag
4.00	Long white cotton gloves

RAYON FAILLE AND WOOL SUITS BY MARY KAY DODSON; WOOL DRESS AND TWO-PIECE TAFFETA BY LEONARD ARKIN; BOW-BANDEAU, THERESA AHRENS; PILLBOX, ELIZABETH MARKS; FURS BY HAROLD RUBIN; OTHER HATS, MR. ALF; BAGS BY MURRAY SELTZER. MEDALLION COIN PIN BY KENDALL SMITH.

COLOR IS THE REASON

Color is the newest (and the oldest) way of achieving variety in your new clothes, or an effective change for a last-season's favorite. This year the colors are shock colors, deep and brilliant. • By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Sapphire blue, especially in velvet, is a wonderful accent with black furs, or a black wool coat or suit. Double-brimmed hat by John Frederics, fox scarf by Harold Rubin.

The fashion of black and red. Pauline Trigere's black wool dress is worn with a huge boutonniere of red carnations, red capeskin gloves, black jersey turban with stickpins.

Accordion bag in black-and-red calfskin, striped satin scarf, hand-sewn cotton gloves.

Gray fur, worn with burnished gold or any deep bright color. Tina Leser's chinchilla-rabbit coat is lined with wool felt matching Mr. John's new deep-crowned gold cloche.

Emerald green is an important scarf color. Calfskin bag, matching belt and gloves.

WILHELA CUSHMAN

A scarlet-red coat is more basic than you think. Wear it with a leopard turban with a feather cocarde, by Mr. John, or with a black hat. Gloves are hand-sewn capeskin.

The bag of the season is alligator, the jewel oversized, the scarf satin, gloves sand-beige.

COLOR IS THE REASON.

ut the bridge for her bridge matoes, Melba rdonic glances in unison.

ing me her new
, to see if I like d to venture an ne I'd better keep she's vexed if I keep tic whether I like 'em

-end household chores are prob-se as eighteen holes of golf. Espeething I intend to do in the basement p repeatedly to the attic to hunt for some-
, only to wonder, after climbing three flights, what it is I'm after.

t
the worth the gro ma em clean—doubtle neurosis.

●

In my more pessimistic moments I estimate that our youngest inflicts at least $2 worth of damage of one kind or another on our house every day. . . . But fortunately, these are sandwiched between sanguine moods when it seems to me he provides us with at least $5 worth of entertainment daily.

●

Another clue to why we won't have a feminine President for fifty years or more: When men dropped vests from their suits, women adopted the "three-piece ensemble," so they could be sold a separate topcoat with every suit.

●

My coed friend around the corner tells me four years of college have made her sorority sisters more sensible. "When they were freshmen, they set their hearts on men tall, dark and handsome," she confides. "Now they'll settle for husbands short, fair and homely!"

●

Every time I see twenty-four ounces of genuine Vermont maple sirup advertised at $2.50 I'm reminded of my last tour of the White House, when I espied in the pantry a gallon tin of synthetic maple sirup with $1.85 scribbled on it. (So they are frugal in one way!)

●

"What really arouses a wife's suspicion," murmurs Betty Comfort, setting seven quart milk bottles out in the driveway, "is a woman who makes her husband feel too young and wear bow ties too often."

●

Apparently nothing else I've ever said to Junior about cigarettes has impressed him so much as this: that his cigarette money could pay the premium on $5000 worth of life insurance.

Our sentimental neighbor with the $290 camera sneaked up to get a snapshot of his eleven-year-old (in white cross belts) controlling traffic at the school curb. . . . Children giggled, motorists honked, his boy looked stonily away, but he's got a picture he cherishes as one of true historic significance.

●

If a man marries a college girl, one thing is certain to happen to him: she'll force him to eat a lot of salads. Even when I'm away on a trip I have a guilty feeling if I skip a salad; afraid my pet dietitian'll give me a crisp little lecture on greens and vitamins.

A modern mother is one who, rather than teach her small brat to hang up his clothes, prefers to do it for him herself, rather than run the risk of giving him an anxiety neurosis which might someday goad him into throwing a drink in his boss's face.

●

Our eleven-year-old is no smarter than other children. But I'd bet $2 that often the wittiest things said in an evening at our house are his stage-whispered comments in the next room, where he's presumably watching television, on some of the grownups' chatter he overhears.

●

I yielded again this year on our vacation trip to my Princess of Sheer Delight: We never drove more than 350 miles a day. . . . But in exchange I insisted on covering at least 50 miles daily before breakfast, and on cooking at least one meal a day on our gasoline stove, as best I could, under the family's inspired barrage of witty sallies.

●

Secretly I have moments when I think our offspring are smarter than their pa. For instance, I doubt that I'd ever have thought (as Junior has) of using a pair of antlers as a necktie rack.

●

It bothers me that some of our boys' chums' fathers don't make 'em do some chores. Our own boys wouldn't be so restless about doing theirs if their chums didn't sit around needling 'em and telling 'em to hurry or they'll be late to the movie. But I've stipulated no movies, TV or radio till chores are done.

●

In our block it's plain when a girl really likes a boy: She brings him home and fixes him a skilletful of bacon and eggs in the kitchen instead of letting him spend two or three dollars for 'em downtown.

●

A dish of well-browned roast-beef hash never tastes better to me than just after I've seen sixteen ounces of pâté de foie gras at $12.75: it's the vulgar plebeian in me.

●

My nostalgia for bachelorhood dwindles:

When my daughter picks me up at the office without moaning if she has to wait twelve minutes . . .

If my Dream Girl detects that I'm spoofing when I say something preposterous with a dead pan . . .

When Junior offers to work all summer for me at one half the rate he'd charge if hired by any other farmer . . .

If our youngest (eleven) breaks into a smile when he reads something I've written and says, "That wasn't bad, dad!"——And when and if the lure of the club keeps me downtown till six o'clock, a phone call brings me galloping home in ten minutes.

There's a Man in the House

By HARLAN MILLER

Women without Children . . . victims of a new disease

By GLADYS DENNY SHULTZ

THE red-haired doctor from Harvard leveled his finger at his audience of fellow obstetricians and gynecologists. "If you men have daughters and they want to get married, see that they do, even if you have to support them," he said. "Let them start having their babies while they are young. Otherwise, they may never have any at all."

The speaker was Dr. Joe V. Meigs, head of gynecology at the Vincent Memorial Hospital Gynecologic Service, affiliated with the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. The occasion was a panel discussion at a meeting of the American Medical Association. The subject was endometriosis.

Endometriosis is a relatively new disease of women, but one of the most common and most talked of among gynecologists. It has become a frequent indication for surgery. It is held responsible for much of the menstrual and other abdominal pain suffered by women. In its extreme form, it can incapacitate. Most serious and tragic of all, it is believed to account for the inability of many women to bear children.

Dr. Joe Vincent Meigs, of Harvard, is a world authority on the disease, having studied it closely since 1922. (It was only in 1921 that Dr. John A. Sampson first described it as a clinical entity, though cases had been observed as early as 1897.)

"It is my belief that late marriage and infrequent childbearing are the reasons for endometriosis," says Doctor Meigs. "Our young people have been putting off marriage and families because, under our present economy, it is nearly impossible for a young man to make enough money to support a wife and family. Hence endometriosis is an economic disease of our times, and a serious one." The idea of a "new" disease will be startling to most readers, but here is a true case, a disease caused by a new and unusual condition of society.

The disease is important sociologically because its victims are found largely in the educated, successful stratum of society. Failure of these people to reproduce themselves adequately has alarmed eugenists for a generation or more. (For instance, a study of graduates of leading men's and women's colleges showed that they average less than two children per couple. A corresponding group of women with not over four years' schooling averaged more than four children apiece.) Doctors like Joe Meigs, of Harvard, and Clayton T. Beecham, clinical professor of obstetrics and gynecology at Temple University, Philadelphia, another highly rated authority on endometriosis, believe that the newly-discovered disease has much to do with this situation.

"It is noteworthy that the frequency with which the diagnosis of endometriosis is made parallels the increased use of contraception, the emancipation or rise of womankind to careers, and/or late marriage with late childbearing," says Doctor Beecham.

Says Doctor Meigs, "Because of economics, we are allowing our most highly trained young people to protect themselves against having children, when as a matter of fact I don't think they can afford not to have them. For if they do not, the wives come to us gynecologists later on with endometriosis, and we have to struggle and work to try to make pregnancy possible for them."

The malady which, in the opinion of these experts, is as significant from the economic and sociological standpoints as it is from the medical, takes its name from the endometrium, or lining of the uterus. It is this lining which, sloughing off and bleeding each month, causes menstruation.

There are two important theories concerning endometriosis. The one suggested by Doctor Sampson is that cells from the menstruating endometrium flow, or are regurgitated, through the abdominal ends of the Fallopian tubes and implant on tissue in the pelvis. The other theory, a more recent one, considers that the lining of the pelvis can, following irritation or inflammation, grow and produce cells as it did in the formative days of the uterus, tubes and ovaries. The leftover material attempts to create endometrial cells again.

These cells, labeled "aberrant" by Doctor Sampson, have been found in the extremities, in the lungs, the navel, the bladder and the appendix. Ordinarily, however, they remain in the pelvis, around the organs there—the ovaries and their supporting ligaments, the Fallopian tubes, and most commonly of all in the peritoneum, or lining of the pelvis.

Just how the errant material originates and how it is disseminated through the body is a matter of dispute. On the essential point, however, all authorities are agreed, and this is the strange, almost weird feature of the disease. After a girl reaches puberty and begins to menstruate, these cells may group together, form glands and bleed each month, wherever in the body they may be. According to Doctor Meigs, they act like a second uterus.

"Within the last ten years, a very large percentage of my gynecological cases, operated upon for various reasons, have the small, telltale, blue to black

(Continued on Page 198)

Two looks for Fall

by NORA O'LEARY
Pattern Editor of the Journal

Salt-and-pepper tweed is an old favorite enjoying new popularity in the fabric field. It is a substantial fabric which tailors well. Our suit has two details worth special mention: a new notched collar, and pockets over the hipline. Vogue Design No. 7438. 12 to 42.

THE most important decision to make in a season with TWO looks is which look is YOUR look. If you are going to be practical, that decision isn't made simply by looking at pictures, but by considering these many things: Can your figure stand the shorter, more shapely jackets that invariably accompany full skirts? If you are not planning a new winter coat, will last year's do over a full-skirted dress or suit? And, if you are planning a new fitted coat, can you wear it over whatever important clothes you have left from last year? Generally speaking, if you are quite short, straight skirts will be most becoming. If you are tall, chances are you can wear the fuller skirts well. Average figures can wear either, as long as they are not in extremes. Fabric is important in making the most of a silhouette. Straight skirts need firm fabrics that will not "sit" out of shape. If you are making a full skirt in a soft fabric, by all means wear a petticoat under it. The fabric department in your favorite store is bursting with pretty fabrics . . . look for the tweeds and rough-textured ones.

This is our idea of a very feminine suit made in a sturdy fabric . . . especially nice in such a pretty shade. The shaped collar and double-breasted effect look new. A taffeta petticoat to match the lining improves the shape. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 7460. 12 to 20.

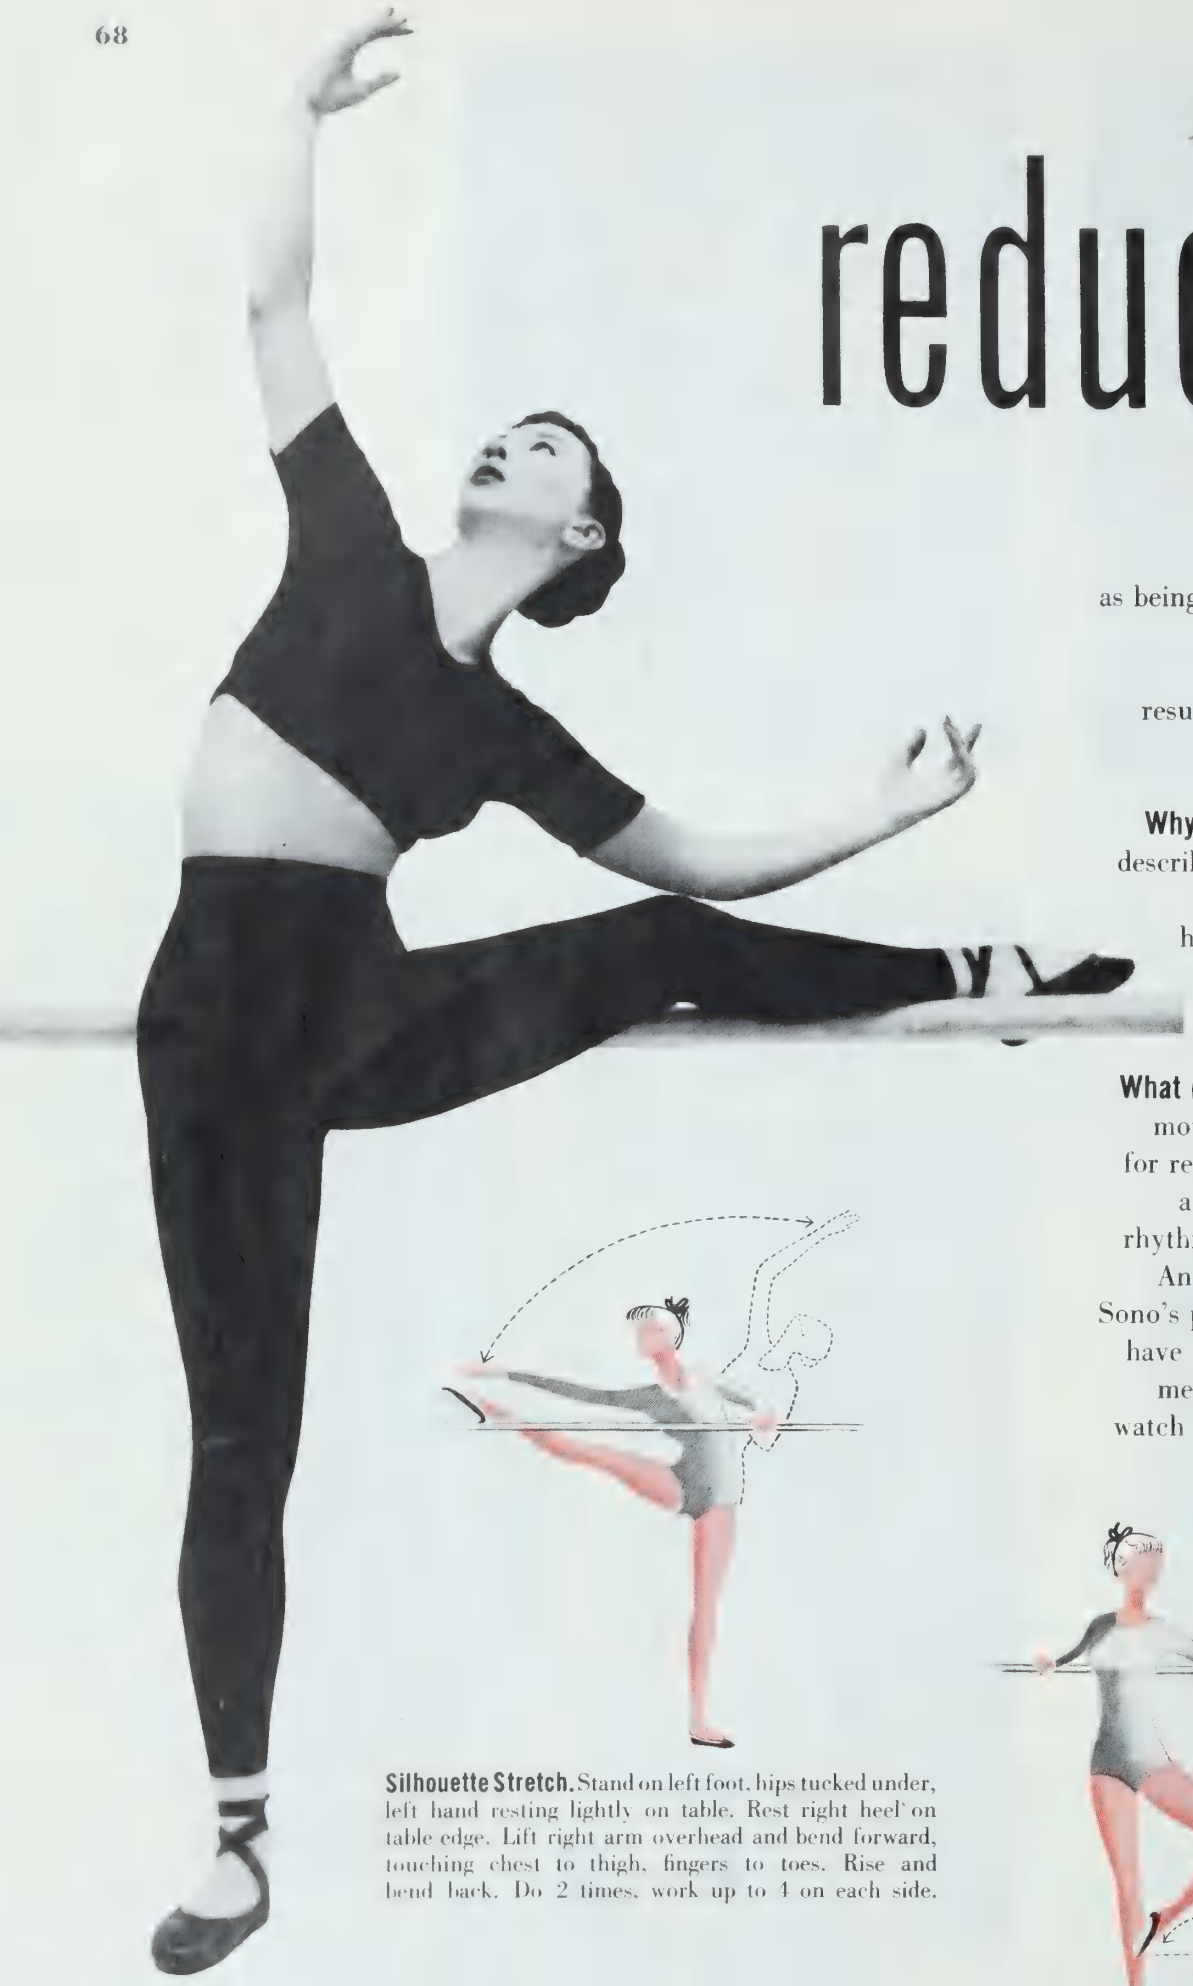
A dress to be comfortable in . . . the skirt has easy fullness, pockets; the buttoned-back tabs at neck may be crossed and buttoned down if you find it more becoming; linked sleeve bands. Vogue Design 7481. 12 to 20.

© VOGUE

A button-front dress is always a good bet. It's easy to slip into and out of, as well as being a practical choice for wool. Pattern includes peplumlike patch pockets—optional. Vogue Design No. S-4243. 12 to 20.

Most of the excitement in new fabrics has to do with texture, and you will notice that we have used several examples. This nubby purple woolen has been shaped into a semiprincess line. Vogue Design No. S-4233, 12 to 20.

MARK SHAW



It's nice to have a coat that slips over a suit without too much bulk . . . just what this coat will do. The long uncuffed sleeves (which we have turned back) are practical and warm. If you are not too good at buttonholes do them on the sewing machine with the attachment. Vogue Design No. 7485, 12 to 20.

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order, * from Vogue Pattern Service, Greenwich, Conn.; in Canada from 198 Spadina Avenue, Toronto, Ont. (*Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

Other views and prices of these patterns on Page 213 reducing...for

If You are Solid. You are usually describe as being a "big" girl or a "sturdy" woman, but no one accus you of being fat, and you seldom get guidance i how to reduce. In fact, diet alone does not produc results; your measurements remain discouragingly firm an unyielding and prevent you from achieving that lith elasticity in your body you would like to hav

Why? Here is the way Nicholas Kounovsky, exercise exper describes the average "solid type." See if you can recogniz yourself! "She is nervous, tense. She does things th hard way. When she bends over to pick up a penny sh uses as much power as she would to lift a heav weight. Her tension increases her muscle tonicity She is creating her own solid weight!

What can you do about it? Sono Osato, delightful dancer an mother of two young sons, gives us her favorite exercise for releasing such muscular tension and bringing new sprin and suppleness to the body. She says, "Do them slowly rhythmically. Feel the s-t-r-e-t-c-h through your entire body And do them regularly, ten to fifteen minutes every day! Sono's photograph, at left, shows how effective such exercise have been in maintaining her own slim modellike measure ments. Try them—cut down on sweets and starches, an watch concentrated flesh become streamlined in a few weeks

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

Silhouette Stretch. Stand on left foot, hips tucked under, left hand resting lightly on table. Rest right heel on table edge. Lift right arm overhead and bend forward, touching chest to thigh, fingers to toes. Rise and bend back. Do 2 times, work up to 4 on each side.

Thigh Stretch. Stand erect, hips tucked under, heels together, toes pointed out. Now flex left knee out to side, pointing toes down to touch right calf. Maintain this position and move left leg, from knee down, to describe a large semicircle. Rotate each leg 5 times, work up to 10.

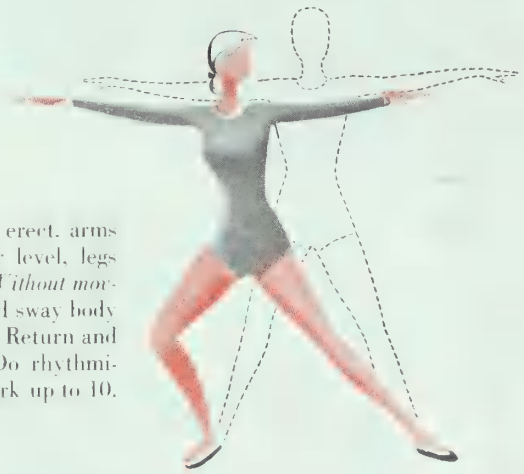
CLAYTON GHOSAY

Diaphragm Stretch. Stand on left foot, toes pointed out, left hand resting lightly on any object for balance. Stretch right leg back, let toes touch floor. With right arm raised above head, bend forward slowly to touch floor with finger tips. Return to upright position and bend back as far as possible. Repeat 4 times, work up to 8 each side.

Hip and Leg Stretch. Stand erect, hips tucked under, heels together, toes out. Rest hand lightly on any object for balance. Keeping heels on floor for as long as possible, slowly lower yourself to "sitting" position. Return slowly and repeat. Do 4 times, work up to 8 times. Follow all exercise directions exactly for prettiest, fastest results.

your type

The pretty young brunette photographed below is Patrice Munsel, Metropolitan Opera star, whose measurements are: bust, 36″; waist, 24″; hips, 36″; height, 5′ ½″; weight, 120 pounds. Here, Patrice is practicing her favorite outdoor sport, bicycling, indoors. Right side up or upside down, this leg-rotating exercise is one of the best for keeping your hips and thighs slim and streamlined!

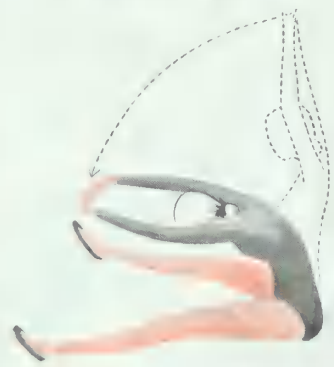


LILLIAN BASSMAN

If You are Soft. Your worries concern an upper-arm bulge, a spare tire, a thickened waist, cushioned hips. One or more of these figure offenders make you appear pounds heavier, possibly years older than you are. Gradually, over a period of months or years, you find your selection of clothes is guided by what they will hide rather than what they reveal. If this is your category, take temporary solace in knowing you have "ample" company—for this is the most common of all feminine figure complaints!

How did it happen to you? If you have added pounds as well as puffs, chances are you have slipped up on your diet—as well as your exercise. But if your weight has remained fairly constant, blame your bulges on lack of proper exercise alone. Unused muscles lose their ability to stretch and contract. They lazily abandon their jobs of holding your tummy in, your waistline taut, your flesh firm. Intelligent exercise nourishes as well as beautifies, increases circulation, allows your body to absorb and assimilate properly the food you eat.

What can you do about it? The twist-and-turn exercises shown below are designed to firm your body and minimize your measurements. If you want to combine weight reducing with them, have your doctor approve a low-calorie diet which you can follow. Begin by exercising ten minutes a day; work up to thirty if there is time. Be faithful to your plan . . . a firmer, more youthful figure will be your reward.



For Firmer Thighs. Stand erect, arms stretched out at shoulder level, legs apart, toes pointed out. Without moving feet, flex right knee and sway body as far to right as possible. Return and repeat, swaying to left. Do rhythmically 5 times each side, work up to 10.

Shoulder Roll. Lie on back, legs apart, shoulders and head lifted from floor, finger tips resting lightly on shoulders. Roll on upper back as far to left as possible, then to right, trying to keep hips and thighs on floor. 10 rolls on each side, work up to 25.

Double Hip Spank. Lie on back, arms out, palms up, legs together. Flex knees and roll on hips and thighs to slap floor, first on right, then on left, keeping upper back flat on floor. Repeat 8 times each side, work up to 16.

Waistline Twist. Sit on floor, legs apart, hands clasped with palms up, arms overhead. Now turn sharply from waist to right, bend forward and reach for right toes. Sit up, repeat, going to left. 1 bends each side, work up to 10.

Menu
(Planned for 8)
Veal Paprika
Noodles with Buttered Croutons
Green Beans
Brown-and-Serve Rolls
Sliced Tomatoes
West Coast Onions
Hot Fruit Compote
Sugared Crullers
Coffee

Just Help Yourself

YOU didn't figure on summer's being over, I hope. It isn't. It's just right for parties and buffet suppers. Not too hot, not too cool. Watching the last birds go gives us exactly that sweet combination of melancholy and nostalgia that the end of summer wears like a veil over her sober bonnet in the evening of the day. It's a time to share the mood with friends and to join with them in holding onto summer for a while. So let's gather round the table with friends we know or with friends we'll make. Just help ourselves, get a second if you can. The hours will slip away, but we shall linger on—until the sun is set, until the moon is full.

A word or two about veal. I'll bet a doughnut to a punched Canadian quarter (both have holes) that you can't remember the last time I brought up the subject of veal as the main feature of one of our meals. Although I don't exactly go into a tail spin about beets, carrots and parsley, veal has a fairly good rating on my culinary list. I have nothing really against carrots either. They are good, all these fruits of the earth, but some of them seem about as exciting as the tail end of a parsnip after its winter siesta in the cellar sandbox.

Since the help-yourself kind of party has become popular, more and more people are searching for a tasty dish that lends (Continued on Page 180)

By Ann Batchelder

STUART-FOWLER

WAYNE ANDREWS

Bethesda Presbyterian Church, Camden, S. C., 1820.

Every Day

By ANN BATCHELDER

1 What is an "important writer"? Is it a man who writes importantly or one who writes of important people or is he—or she—a writer whose work is so important that it is not to be missed by any thinking being? It seems to me that Carlo Levi answers to all these definitions in the affirmative. His Christ Stopped at Eboli was an unforgettable experience. His new book, The Watch, has made long strides ahead of that. He is important on all counts.

2 Italy thinks up more things! This, for instance: Take as much cream cheese as you please, add as much prepared sweetened cocoa as suits your taste. If the mixture is not sweet enough, add a little sugar and you'll come out all right. Pack in a mold, chill overnight and serve with rich chocolate sauce. This is a dessert, not an entree.

3 Always add a little salt to any chocolate dish or drink. It does something good, but never ask me why.

4 It won't be long now before the curried this and curried that will cease to cause the perspiration to start from the fevered brow. No, sir, it'll sound good. One thing you might bear in mind, and that is to serve the chutney in canned-peach halves. Looks well, tastes swell.

5 I love to tell you things that sound sort of wild but turn out fine. So work together until smooth ⅓ cup butter and 1 cup powdered sugar. Add the flavoring of your choice—and please add enough so folks will know there's flavor in it and not hot water. It's the works on hot gingerbread.

6 Thinking up something different for hot waffles, someone suggested a Welsh rarebit. I'd prefer another little nifty. Only this is honey and peanut butter. Can you beat it? If you can, you'd better not beat it very much.

7 Cold vichyssoise is memorable if it's smooth and perfectly seasoned, and honestly cold, but when you add a little grated onion at the last moment, it becomes a godlike food such as the Olympians had their fill of. Be generous, too, with minced chives or cress.

8 And that reminds me that sliced tomatoes are delicious dressed with equal parts of mayonnaise and chopped water cress, not forgetting, of course, the tantalizing taste of basil. That makes perfection perfect.

9 When I eat dinner at your house, I'd like a cold melon to begin with. But don't, I beg you, chill your melon by the cracked-ice routine. It hurts the melon and spoils the flavor. A reasonable time in the refrigerator is all the melon needs.

10 A fine first course is a halved ripe melon filled with little melon balls of a different breed. Add a little ginger ale. A sprinkle of salt for those who want it. Sugar for those whose sweet tooth is in good order.

11 Here's a new one on me, but it may not be to you. It's a fried-bread sort of idea and a smart trick to play on the "brown and serve" clover-leaf rolls. Don't brown. Separate into sections. Fry in deep fat, turning all the while. Drain on paper towels. Dip in sugar and cinnamon, mixed—or better still, in maple sirup.

12 When garlic is needed or wanted (could be either and be right), a garlic crusher is the latest thing. But you can pound the buds in a bowl with a potato masher. The old mortar-and-pestle idea. Pound other herbs along with the garlic too. But keep one masher for this use and hang it in the air or someone may hang you.

13 Black pepper goes with meats and vegetables. White pepper strings along with chicken and poultry dishes, and fish would go swimming again if you tried the black on them. Shellfish whimper for a touch of red pepper, but they can stand more than you can, so be careful.

14 For luncheon or supper, spread hot toast with sharp cheese. On each slice put a neatly poached egg or a spoon of scrambled egg done with anchovies or plain. Garnish with crisp bacon. Pretty good eating, this.

15 Answer to query: An oysterette is definitely not a baby oyster. It is a cracker designed to be eaten with oysters, and one of my favorites. Let me know anything else on your mind.

16 Some like their pumpkin pie straight, some like it with cheese, others like a trimming. To these, we suggest crushing up a handful of lemon drops and folding them into whipped cream.

17 Something pretty to see in a crystal pitcher or glass, and delicious to drink on a nice hot day, is a tiddly-wink, very cold and only one to a customer. This is made by mixing a can of frozen orange juice and one of frozen cranberry juice, adding water as usual. Serve with a cracker of some kind.

18 Most cheese dishes call for a touch of mustard, some are improved by adding celery seed to the rule. (Rule means recipe and recipe means receipt to me. Keep that in mind.)

19 The unexpected guest is, as always, on the way. And such must be fed. One way is to open a can of tuna or crab meat, also a can or two of cream-of-mushroom soup. Heat all together, adding whatever seasoning suits you. Serve on toast or on a bed of cooked rice.

20 For a toasted sandwich that's different from Mrs. Brown's, take a can of tuna, season it with salt, pepper and lemon juice and a careful dash of Tabasco. It's the seasoning that fools 'em.

21 A surprise muffin that will surprise even you, it's so good and easy to eat. Make up a receipt of muffins. Add to the batter 1 cup chopped apples, 1 teaspoon cinnamon and ½ teaspoon nutmeg. Put in the muffin pans and sprinkle with sugar before baking.

22 Tomato-rarebit amandine: Make a snappy rarebit. Serve over a broiled tomato slice on toast, and sprinkle with a few slivered almonds.

23 If you chop crisp bacon fine and add it to peanut butter for a sandwich filling, you've got somewhere, even if it's only to a picnic.

24 A good-looking, delicious-tasting way to serve ice cream is to half fill a halved cantaloupe with lemon sherbet, top with vanilla cream. Sprinkle a little coconut over the top and serve right away.

25 Something that is likely to get talked about, especially if served with chicken or chops, is pepper fritters. Chop 2 green peppers fine, add 2 tablespoons chopped onion, mix in a regular fritter batter and fry by spoons in deep hot fat. Drain and serve hot.

26 To those who eat a regular breakfast, greetings, and may I recommend sautéed mushrooms on toast. Pour the butter from the pan over the toast, add three mushroom caps to a person and serve hot.

27 If he doesn't like spinach this way, then he'll never like spinach. Fry 4 slices bacon until crisp, take out the bacon, drain and break into small pieces. Add 1 pound spinach, 2 tablespoons chopped onions, ½ small can tomato paste, and salt and pepper to the bacon fat in the pan. Cover and cook 8–10 minutes or until spinach is just done. Add the bacon and serve hot.

28 Baked-bean trick No. 37: Sprinkle canned beans with grated raw apple, dot with butter, sprinkle with brown sugar. Top with small pieces of partly cooked bacon, bake in a moderate oven until heated through.

29 Here's something that might make a dessert for that unexpected company that arrived several paragraphs up the page.

30 Break stale sponge or pound cake into small pieces, add chopped nuts and chopped candied fruit. Fold into stiffly whipped cream—flavored slightly. Chill until it is firm.

School Days are SOUP DAYS

ANNE MARSHALL
Director Home Economics
Campbell Soup Company

BY Anne Marshall

MOTHERS of growing children know instinctively what nutrition experts have long insisted—that the school-day lunch is a vitally important meal. Morning energy must be replenished for afternoon study and play.

Authorities say the noon meal should include a hot dish—whether lunch is eaten at home or carried to school. Among the many reasons they give is that a hot dish makes everything taste better.

Well-made soup is ideal for this hot dish. Children really enjoy good soup . . . take to it readily . . . digest it easily . . . and assimilate it completely. Moreover, soup is substantial and nourishing without being heavy. Here are three tempting school-day lunches built around soup. Why not try these quick, easy menu suggestions?

A HOME LUNCH CHILDREN LOVE

Here's an appetizing lunch for your junior or junior miss who comes home at noon. It features this almost-a-meal-in-itself vegetable soup.

Vegetable Soup
Cheese Spread Sandwich
Vanilla Pudding with Chocolate Chips
Milk

. . . Nourishing . . .

SOUP-MAGIC for Youngsters!

For a change—and for extra nourishment! Prepare soups for school-day lunches by adding milk, instead of water, to your child's favorites.

Heat together over low heat:

1 can chicken with rice soup
(or green pea, vegetable, chicken noodle, vegetable-beef, tomato)
1 soup can of milk

THIS LUNCH, TOO, STAYS AT HOME

It's built around that great favorite of most children—nourishing chicken noodle soup.

Chicken Noodle Soup
Potato Salad and Ham Hot Rolls and Butter
Sliced Peaches Milk

THIS LUNCH GOES TO SCHOOL

It includes piping-hot tomato soup—"the soup most folks like best"—in a vacuum bottle.

Tomato Soup
Bologna & Relish Sandwich Carrots & Radishes
Fruit Cake

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Not a soap, not a cream— Halo cannot leave dulling, dirt-catching soap film!

Gives fragrant "soft-water" lather —needs no special rinse!

Removes embarrassing dandruff from both hair and scalp!

Halo leaves hair soft, manageable— shining with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or oily cream shampoos leaves dulling, dirt-catching film. Halo, made with a new patented ingredient, contains no soap, no sticky oils. Thus Halo glorifies your hair the very first time you use it. Ask for Halo—America's favorite shampoo—at any drug or cosmetic counter!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

MELVILLE GOODWIN USA

(Continued from Page 55)

always taking over without consulting the other, he did hope Muriel would keep out of Washington, not that he would not miss her. He pointed out to her in several long letters, which he did not have much time to write, what with all the reports and directives he was always drafting for the boss, that he had no time for family life anyway.

When he was not being sent somewhere around the country, he was at the Department during all his waking hours. Whenever he got back to the room he had rented in "Shorty" Telfer's apartment, he was in his sack in five minutes. Shorty was on the training program then, and Shorty was so tired at night that his wife Beatrice couldn't get a word out of him, and even if there had been time for family evenings, you couldn't tell your wife what was going on because everything was being classified. Of course he must have known subconsciously that Muriel would never keep out of Washington. However, he did think that she might have warned him that she was coming instead of just appearing at Shorty's apartment with Charlie as though she had been air-borne. It meant that for five days Muriel and Beatrice had to share the main bedroom while Shorty took over the guest room and he had the studio couch and Charlie used a bedding roll on the living-room floor. They all used one bathroom, and he was always forgetting about Charlie and tripping over the bedding roll when he got home at night.

Finally they did get settled, because Muriel called up Enid, Bud Joyce's wife. Bud had rented a little house in Alexandria, and Enid told them to move right in. As a matter of fact, Bud and Enid kept Muriel and Charlie right there through the whole war, and they were all still good friends.

It was an added complication when Muriel came to Washington. As Bud said, the gals made up a general staff of their own and began doing long-term planning. Bud with his desk at G-2 and a limited disability was not much for Enid and Muriel to work on, but Melville was really good material for two bright girls. He had done well at both the Staff School and the War College, and Muriel was always thinking in the higher echelons. If there was going to be a war, he did not want to be on any staff. He had been to the tank school, too, as he pointed out to Muriel, and somebody had to fight the war, but Muriel wanted him to be nearer the top and more on the administrative side, where the big brass would see him, instead of being lost in some training area. When people wanted someone, she said, it was only human nature to look around and pick someone in sight instead of down in Texas. He did not have time to discuss these matters with Muriel except occasionally when they went for a walk on Sunday, but Muriel had lots of time to consider them.

ONE night in August when he had a few minutes alone with the chief in his office, he brought up the subject of the Southern maneuvers and expressed a sort of wish, as definitely as you could express such a thing, that he might get down there with a regiment or something, but Grimshaw only said that he was needed where he was and the situation was still fluid.

You could never tell what was in the chief's mind, and he never knew why the chief was keeping him on ice. When he asked for a job in the Philippines just before Pearl Harbor, the chief turned him down flat, and twice that winter when he asked for something in the Pacific, the chief turned him down again. Grimshaw was never a Pacific man. By the spring of '42 he was still sweating it ou Washington. Then suddenly the boss s him out to Arizona to observe desert neuvers, but not to take command of a thing. He got the connection only when w began on "Torch" and he was promoted temporary colonel. Muriel was beginning find him pretty hard to hold when they w in the middle of the North African planni but not until September did the chief say word, and then he dropped it casually.

"MEL," he said, "some of you younger lows will have to be going over. Maybe yo better start thinking about packing."

Two weeks later his orders were cut Paisley, where they were training the arm Muriel had cried half the night when heard he was going to Paisley, because was certain he would be lost down th There were lots of rumors, but "Torc was all top secret. The truth was Mu did not want him to be killed, and it did good to point out to her that it was ab time someone did a little fighting.

Her feelings were hurt when he gave the word that she had better stay w Bud and Enid and not go to all the trouble following him down Paisley.

"But you'll be there a year," she said, "bef you go overseas."

Muriel could not be ri about everything. She o got the point when he f up to Washington to good-by, and of course could not ask him wh he was going. Secret ord never did help home l and curiously enou Charlie was the one w came closest to guess it, because Charlie wa smart kid. He had j turned fourteen and really followed the news.

"Say, dad," he sa "I'll bet you're go after Rommel."

He always remembered this. Cha thought a lot of him and knew he could l anyone.

"No," he said, "I'm going up to the No Pole to help out Santa Claus."

"Shucks," Charlie said, "you wouldn't packing khaki pants along with your wool if you were going to see Santa Claus."

Charlie was smart and he had narrow down the operation. The only thing to him was to believe in Santa Claus and take care of his mother. Actually he had o an hour or two to talk over plans and t was just as well. Sitting there in the livi room in Alexandria looking at Muriel a Charlie, he realized how big the break w going to be, even though it was somethi for which they had all been waiting. He a Muriel had been together ever since he h come back from the AEF. They had be everywhere as a family unit, even as far Tientsin, and now it was all over.

"Muriel," he said, "don't you think would be best for you and Charlie to go up Hallowell?"

"No," Charlie said, "ma gets into arg ments with grandma."

"We don't get into arguments, Charli Muriel said, "but your grandmother is old lady and she has rather fixed ideas. T schools are better in Washington, and may I can be of some help here in Washington. least I'll be able to get some news."

Still, North Africa was quite a way fr Washington.

"All right," he said, "and say good-by Robert for me, won't you? Tell Robert keep his nose clean, will you?"

"You always pick up coarse expression Muriel said, "when you get away w troops."

(Continued on Page 76)

BLUE JEANS

Many noted European cities specialized in the manufacture of some particular kind of cloth. This was the case with Janua (modern Genoa), which produced a type of heavy twilled cotton called jene or jean. Jean became popular for use in making trousers. For many years they were manufactured from undyed jean; then someone made up a batch from cloth dyed dark blue. Such blue jeans were an instant success with workmen, outdoorsmen and, latterly, American youngsters.

—WEBB B. GARRISON.

The Lady Bridgett de Robledo

Her sparkling, beautiful face sends you grace notes about her inner charm

The Lady Bridgett de Robledo has a wonderful look of poised beauty. Her lovely face with its Celtic blue eyes, perfect complexion, mirthful lips—reveals with fascinating charm the inner glow that is her delightful self. Your face, too, is revealing you to others every day of your life. Help your face to show your best self—attractive, charming, beckoning.

Beautiful Lady Bridgett is the daughter of an English Earl, wife of a prominent Colombian diplomat. Lady Bridgett insists on Pond's for her complexion care. She says, "Pond's Cold Cream is the finest beauty care I know."

An enchanting woman within you is at your call

... ready to show everyone how charming you can be

W THINGS can smother happiness more thorghly than that "ugly-duckling" feeling many men have about themselves.

But—you can change into a lovelier, happier you. magic power within can help you. A power that rks through the interdependence of your Inner f and Outer Self—the way you feel, and look. This power beams a happy confidence from you en you know you look your prettiest. But—en you don't show your best self, that glow is affed right out. That is why you can't be offhand out the daily helps that do so much to keep you king lovely, feeling at ease.

"Outside-Inside" Face Treatment

ur face counts on those cream cleansings that p give it a cleanness that looks luminous—and that never dry the skin. And this "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment with Pond's Cold Cream has a genius for freshening your face, making it softer, waking up color! Do it always at bedtime (day cleansings, too). This is the way:

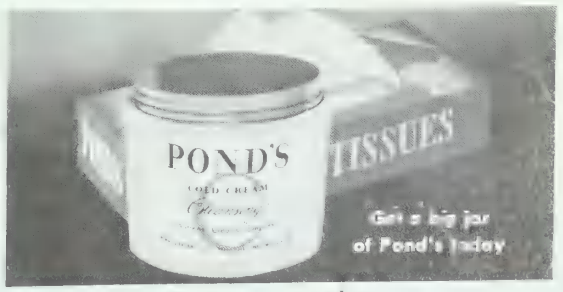
Hot Stimulation—a quick splash of hot water.

Cream Cleanse—swirl light, fluffy Pond's Cold Cream all over your face and throat to soften dirt and make-up, sweep them from pore openings. Tissue off.



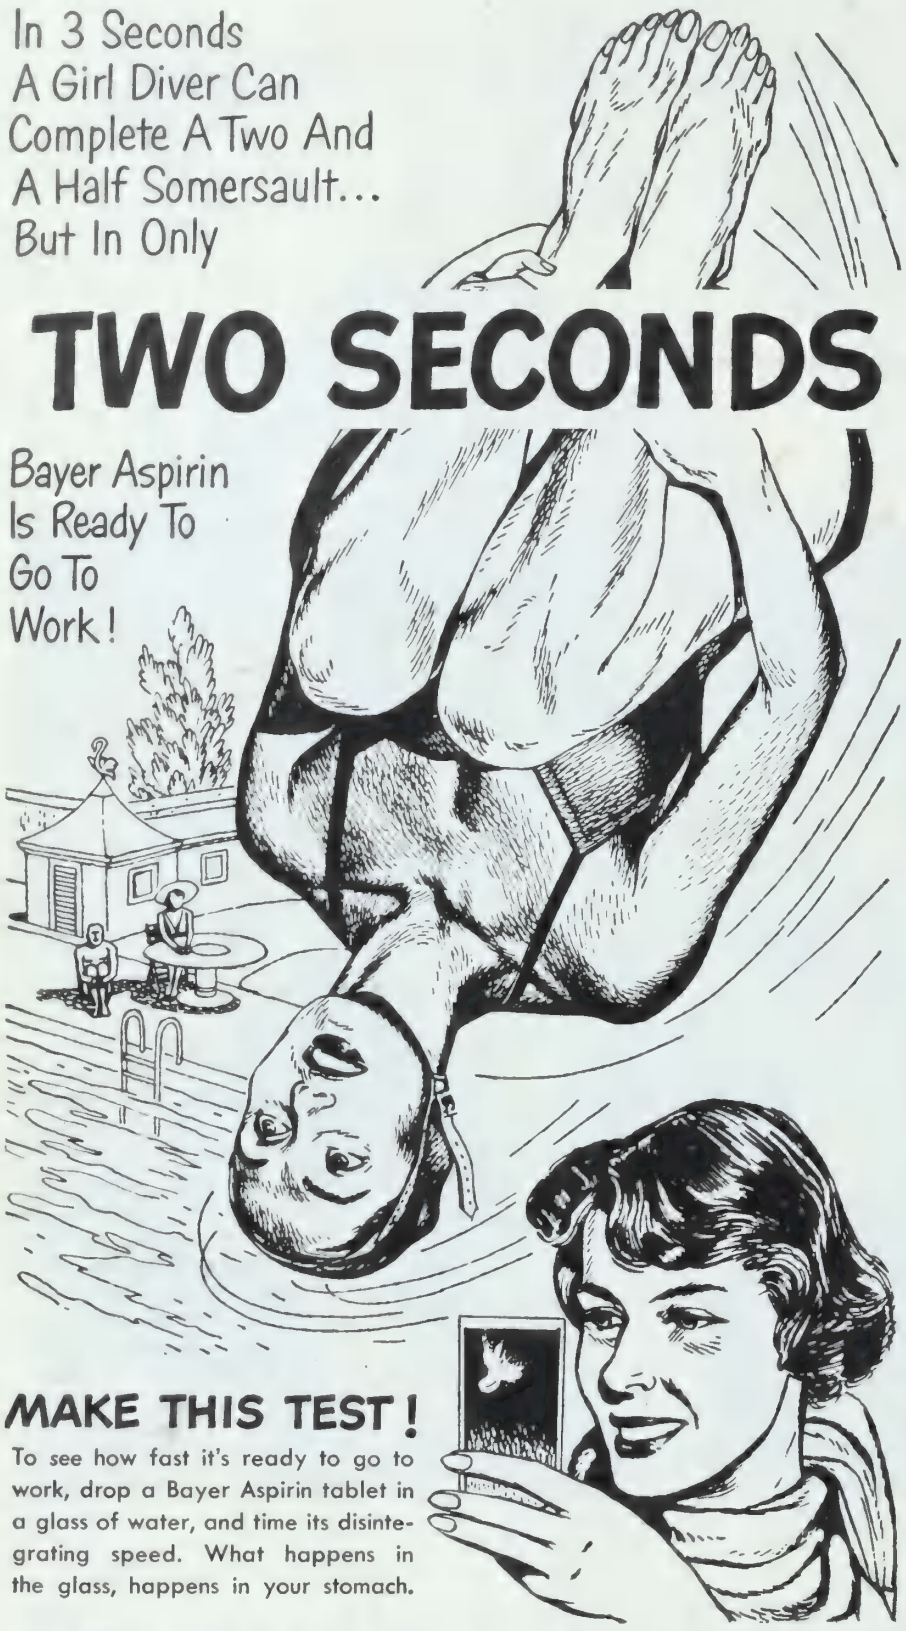
Cream Rinse—do another Pond's creaming to rinse off last traces of dirt, leave skin immaculate. Tissue lightly.

Cold Stimulation—a tonic cold water splash.

This face care acts on both sides of your skin. From the Outside—Pond's Cold Cream cleanses, softens as you massage. From the Inside—every step of this treatment stimulates circulation.

The Lady Bridgett de Robledo says, "For cleansing, softening, smoothing—Pond's is splendid!"

It's not vanity to develop the beauty of your face. When you look lovely, you become charged with a happy confidence that brightens your face with charm—brings others closer to the Inner You.



You hear it everywhere—
"She's Engaged! She's Lovely! She uses Pond's!"

In 3 Seconds
A Girl Diver Can Complete A Two And
A Half Somersault...
But In Only

TWO SECONDS

Bayer Aspirin
Is Ready To Go To Work!

MAKE THIS TEST!

To see how fast it's ready to go to work, drop a Bayer Aspirin tablet in a glass of water, and time its disintegrating speed. What happens in the glass, happens in your stomach.

For really fast relief from ordinary headache, neuritic or neuralgic pain, use Bayer Aspirin tablets. One reason they bring you relief with amazing speed is that they start disintegrating almost instantly you take them. Timed by stopwatch, they're ready to go to work in two seconds.

But fast relief isn't the only reason why it pays to use Bayer Aspirin. Also important is the fact that you can take it with complete confidence. For Bayer Aspirin's single active ingredient is not only so effective that doctors prescribe it for pain relief, but is so gentle to the system mothers give it even to small children on their doctors' advice.

So when you're in pain, don't experiment with drugs that have not been proved by years of successful use. For the fast relief you want —and the dependable relief that's important to your health—take genuine Bayer Aspirin.

NOW... BAYER ASPIRIN IN CHILDREN'S SIZE
New 2½ grain tablets (containing half the amount of regular size Bayer Aspirin tablets) provide proper children's dosage as prescribed by your doctor. They're neither flavored nor colored, so they cannot be mistaken for candy. 30 tablets—25¢.

Because no other pain reliever can match its record of use by millions of normal people, without ill effect, one thing you can take with complete confidence is genuine

BAYER® ASPIRIN

(Continued from Page 74)

"Well," he said, "he'll know what I mean."

"And what's your final advice to me?" Muriel asked. "What about my own nose?"

"Muriel," he said, "you always did have a pretty nose."

"I wish you wouldn't behave as though you were going to a surprise party," Muriel said. "I just wish you didn't make me think that you're glad I won't be around."

"Now, Muriel," was all he could think of answering, "now, Muriel."

"Melly," she said, "you're all I have."

"Now, Muriel," he said, "you've got the boys."

The mention of the boys pulled everything together, and besides, Muriel was a service wife who knew a wife must not upset things when the Army was off to war.

"Forget what I said, will you, Melly," she told him. "Of course you're not glad you're going, except at the same time you can't help but be."

"Now, Muriel," he said, "now, Muriel."

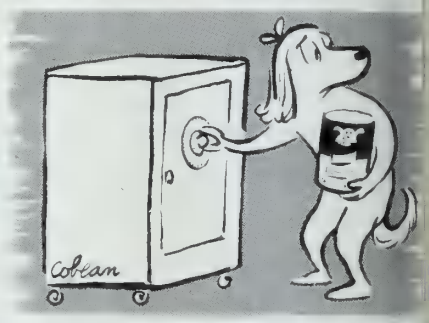
God had kept him safe so that he could hear the guns again, and now basically he had his chance to pay his debt to God and to his country. There was no wonder that he looked as though he were going to a party, as Muriel had said. He had been working for quite a while to get dressed up for that party. He was not a shavetail any longer. He had been to the War College with its extremely limited and selected enrollment of officers who were almost certain to become top brass. He had the equipment to make a stab at any job that was handed to him. There had been a lot of white-haired boys in tough competition at Paisley, and he had been able to keep his place.

What was more, he learned when he got to Africa that he was able to ignore all this accumulated knowledge when necessary. He meant that he was not weighed down by all this intellectual equipment like pedants or theorists who bored sensible people.

By the time North Africa was secure, even though he got a shell fragment in his shoulder before the show was over, he was pretty handy. Frequently you had to learn fast in North Africa if you wanted to be around next day to absorb more knowledge. Uncle Sam needed every horseshoe he had in his pockets for that operation, with the best units still green and none of them battle-wise. Sometimes he felt like old Rip van Winkle himself when he saw the self-propelled guns and the tanks and the jeeps and the trucks and the tactical air cover and compared them with the stuff around Château-Thierry in the other war. Nevertheless, the basic elements were all the same, and all the old logistics headaches.

After the landing he was up ahead on the way to Tunis with a tank unit known by the code words Force Goodwin. If they didn't reach Tunis before the Jerries, you could blame it on the mud and roads, because they certainly tried hard to make that play. He began to realize in a few days that you had to play every instrument in the band. When it came to a pinch, you had to be an artilleryman or an engineer or a tank specialist, and you never knew how things would be balanced or grouped from one day to the next.

North Africa, in spite of its Frenchified cities, looked like something in a Sunday-school picture book. He had read in ancient history that the country was semiarid, whereas, books to the contrary, it was always raining when you wanted air cover, and the gumbo on the roads was like glue, but somehow there was always good weather and good footing for the Jerries and the Italians. The Arabs fitted right into that mess. They could have the country any time as far as he was concerned, and anybody who wanted could have the Arabs. They were always around everywhere like flies.



Once when he was a whole lot farther away from everything than he should have been, trying to get a look himself at a German concentration, because nobody had sent any coherent word back, he and two lieutenants and a walkie-talkie boy were sud-

HELPFUL HINTS TO HOUSEHOLD DOGS

Mrs. Cocker S. Paniel writes:

"I BURY MY BONES,

— BUT TAKE NO CHANCES WITH

KEN-L-RATION!

Packed with Choice Cuts o

LEAN, RED MEAT

U. S. Gov't Inspected Horse Meat

INSPECTED AND CERTIFIED BY U. S. DEPT OF AGR AS A NORMAL MAINTENANCE DOG FOOD

Look for this Seal

Costs Far Less Than Butcher Mea

There's no question about which do food contains steaks, roasts, and chop of U.S. Government Inspected hors meat! It's Ken-L-Ration! Just open can . . . you'll SEE the chunks of lea red meat, and smell the appetizin aroma! And, since Ken-L-Ration cos less than butcher meat, it's the thrift way to keep your dog on the meat di he needs and craves.

Vitamins and Minerals, Too

Yes, Ken-L-Ration is packed with a known "dog-health" vitamins and mi erals needed to keep your dog in pea condition. Be good to your dog—g Ken-L-Ration at your favorite sto first chance you get.

Dogs Love It-Cats, Too!

KEN-L-RATION

pinned down by machine-gun fire. Just e was trying to figure out some way to ne solid terrain between his party and n and was hoping the Krauts weren't o open up with the mortars next, he ull at his leg. You might have thought someone in the group with a bright idea something, but instead of that it was those Arabs trying to sell him half-a- eggs. That was the way it always was rabs. They came right out of the ground airie dogs, and when they weren't sell- nething, they were stealing, but he did ean to deliver a travelogue. He never much of North Africa except for vari- ortions into which his nose had been d.

e wanted, he could give a good lecture Kasserine Pass, where we came so near ng pushed back on our behinds, but he was not talking before the War ge. His tanks and some other units that under his command took a whipping but they pulled out all right, and e he had a little to do with this. Any- some people still thought that he had. order to refresh his memory about n Africa, the General produced a packet tters which he had ten home, which el had brought from ington after hearing as to be interviewed. read excerpts from . Though the letters not shed much more on North Africa, they did help to d out the picture.

ar Muriel: Babe, who just dropped in to good-by, says he will give you this on his n to Washington, if he doesn't wet his feet. t ask Babe about his future plans because won't be bright, if you know what I mean. poor guy just hasn't got what it takes out and he's on his way out. Poor Babe. I am cing him, and naturally it hurts. Funny, it? Remember how you used to say you ed I got around the way Babe did? Well, don't need socks or anything. However, if can pick up a handful of new Westerns and dunits, give them to Bud to give to Jerry if still in there with the chief. Jerry can wan- them out here, but say to hold them with tty at Algiers. Maybe I'll get back to that m town someday and hang out in the ti—maybe. They have sawed-off beer bot- for glassware there, and wrapping paper napkins. Whoever said Africa was hot? It's nud. I'm even holed up in a mud hut with a wall around it. Goats jump over the wall get in the yard. We ate goat yesterday and ill stays with me. Just now I picked a piece im out of my back molar. Slim sends you his rds. He's a real comfort to me.

's cold as Greenland here, but last week it hot in certain sectors. Don't worry about and don't go around asking questions. I'm ng fine, and everything's beginning to get in groove. It's building up, and if they want to us down, they'd better do it quick. I have a ch they're going to make a try for it, but 't ask questions.

's nice to think of you in Washington. Give rlie my love and tell him we raised our lit- oy to be a soldier, and please tell Bob if he ts to try for the Pacific it won't hurt my ngs. It looks as though they need a little there.

here's something itching and I'd better read shirt a while. We're out of lice powder.

ove, and don't worry, MEL ear Muriel: Shorty, who is going over to e a little talk about certain things that have pened, says he will get this to you, but don't rying to get hold of him. He's got a lot on mind. Oh, yes, I'm in the base hospital with iece of hardware in my shoulder, but I'm king around already and playing gin rummy h the other hand, so don't worry. I was ky not to get my block blown off, and I ked out of it under my own steam, without ning to the nearest exit, and no one else did ner. They were a fine selfless bunch of kids. they need is a little straight talk and they'll anything.

f you read the papers maybe you'll know at all this is about. I'd like to read the com- nique myself. It will have to be a master- ce because we really got a bloody nose and right in the guts. The orders were to pull and it was pretty late to pull. I took over cover-up job, between you and me, without consulting Heinzy. It looked for a while like old Custer making a last stand with a lot of Sitting Bulls around us. In fact, I thought maybe I was going to be Custer, but they dug in when I got some heavy stuff around their right end. I mean they thought it was heavy, and we walked off. Slim got himself killed, you may have heard. There never was a finer kid. Please write Edwina that I'm writing personally. Who do you think I saw when I walked off? Old Folsom, my tac at the Point. Do you remember? The one who told us to stroll on Flirtation Walk. He was dead—air strafing—but I had time to gather up some of his letters and things personally. You see the hardware in the shoulder didn't slow me up, so don't worry and don't start pulling strings. I am not going Stateside because I shall be fit for duty in three weeks. I got the word this morning.

By the way, they came around this afternoon and pinned something on me and took some pictures. You can ask the chief about it if you want. He or Jerry ought to have the details by now. Now don't worry, I'm feeling fine. The word is the shoulder won't even be stiff. Give my love to Charlie and Robert.

With love, MEL

This letter was all he had ever set down regarding his part in the Kasserine Pass action, except for his report and recommendations, now somewhere on file in the Pentagon, and a report would have been too technical to have made much sense, and he was not giving any military lecture. The staff work was faulty, and a lot of people in back got the wind up. It was easy enough to give orders for a quick withdrawal, if you were sitting somewhere looking at maps—but this was off the record, and he was not going to expert anything that happened. The order to withdraw came through at three in the morning—when anyone physically in touch with anything could see that there would have to be some sort of holding action along the high ground on the front known as Area 20, which overlooked a track along which the enemy would obviously move part of his armor. It was an elementary problem of buying time. When Melville Goodwin received the order, his immediate superior, Arty Watson, who was commanding the area, saw as clearly as he did that a complete withdrawal would leave everything wide open. He had no criticism to make of Arty Watson, who immediately began sending back everything that was feasible, but half an hour later, mortar and 88 fire began dropping on them.

Mel Goodwin was still with his chief trying to straighten things out when one of those 88's landed under a weapons carrier, and a minute later he was chief. He sent back everything that wasn't needed, and by the time it was daylight he was alone with his combat team all dug in, plus three 155's and four tanks, one of them disabled. It was light enough by that time to secure some information. The Jerries were coming right down the track just where he expected them, tanks and trucks and everything, evidently thinking that it was clear ahead. Sometimes the Jerries weren't so bright as you thought they were going to be, considering their experience. It was something to remember, watching that long column snaking toward their position over that Godforsaken country with the sun just rising. The only problem was how to stop them for an appreciable period of time, and he waited until they were on the level ground in front before he let them have it with everything available. They were like sitting ducks, only there were just too many ducks. Nevertheless, they certainly acted surprised, and their whole column was in an unholy mess. He always believed that if there had been more fire power available they might have turned back permanently. As it was, they overestimated his force, and they were confused when he got his tanks firing into them well on the left. It took personal persuasion to keep everything cracking, but just the same, it was a good fight. He only wished he had more time to see it all instead of being so continually busy.

At any rate, by afternoon what was left of his group was still holding the high ground in Area 20. They had bought the time, and

The morning hour has gold in its mouth.
—PENNSYLVANIA GERMAN PROVERB.

Do your eyes need help?

ACCORDING to recent estimates, one out of every five children of school age has faulty vision. Among adults over 40, two out of every three have visual defects.

To help maintain good vision throughout life and protect general health, doctors recommend that everyone follow the safeguards below.

The child's eyes . . .

Faulty visual habits are often formed during childhood which may lead to defects in later years when correction may be more difficult.

A child's eyes should be examined at age three or four, again before entering school and after starting to read—even though no signs of eye trouble are evident.

There are many common diseases that affect the eyes of children. Most of them are mild—but some may be serious. Both may start in the same way—with redness, flow of tears, blinking, squinting, or scowling, accompanied by little or no pain. So, if these or other signs of eye trouble appear, it is wise to see a doctor.

Specialists caution against delay in the use of glasses if a child needs them. Glasses generally help the child to improve his vision, or overcome other eye defects—often within a relatively short time.

The adult's eyes . . .

After age 40, periodic examinations of the eyes are especially important. They provide a double safeguard. First, by discovering defects and diseases of the eye itself. Second, by helping to detect conditions such as high blood pressure, diabetes, and hardening of the arteries which often reveal themselves by changes in the eyes.

Fortunately, more can be done today than ever before to check or cure some of the more serious eye conditions—thanks to new drugs and improved surgical techniques.

Three common eye defects—nearsightedness, farsightedness, and astigmatism—can usually be corrected by properly fitted glasses. Only an eye specialist is qualified to prescribe glasses or other special eye treatments.

Under proper medical care, most of the threats to good vision can be corrected or cured so that the eyes may be used efficiently throughout life.

To help keep the eyes in good condition:

1. Read with a clear, good light falling from above and behind you.
2. Rest your eyes at frequent intervals when reading or doing close work.
3. Except for easily removable particles, trust only to expert help for removing a foreign body from the eye.
4. Be alert to the warnings of eye trouble—headaches, blurred vision, eye fatigue, inflammation of the eyes or lids, spots before the eyes and colored halos around lights.
5. Use eye safety devices exactly according to instructions.
6. Have your eyes examined regularly by an eye specialist.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

In a $30 antique glass or a dime store tumbler...

It's LIBBY'S MILLION-DOLLAR FLAVOR!

THE tumbler on the right costs just 5¢. The glass on the left, with its beautifully-cut overlay design in old milk glass, is a real collector's item. Both hold something rare and precious: Libby's special, summery-good richness! The "million-dollar Libby flavor" that sends more people to buy Libby's more often than any other brand of tomato juice!

Enjoy Libby's with everyday meals and for "company-best", too. One sip tells you why it's America's first choice in tomato juice.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

there was no use hanging around any longer. When the sun was setting, he sent back everything that could roll, and the rest of them began walking and they walked all night until they were picked up around daylight. He had brought off the wounded, but a lot of equipment and dead remained back in Area 20. He was not familiar with all the night's events. His shoulder had been bandaged and it had stopped bleeding, but the wound may have made him lightheaded. Nevertheless, he kept everything under control all the way personally, and he could still put one foot ahead of the other when he walked into "Bullpup" and made the report.

The story was that he saluted old Heinzy, which he probably did, since his right hand was all right, and then he said, "There's been a little trouble up in Area Twenty, sir, but we'd all like to start going back as soon as we've had some coffee."

That was what they said he said, and it made a good story, but he never could have said anything like that to a major general who knew the score. Nevertheless, he always did think that they should have moved forward instead of pulling back farther. There was one thing he did remember that pleased him. When he walked out of the headquarters, he heard an enlisted man say, "The God-damned fighting bastard."

That meant a lot to him, coming when it did, because his left shoulder was full of red-hot needles and his arm was numb. The man who had spoken was standing with three or four others beside a jeep, and Mel Goodwin walked up to him.

"Son," he said, "if I go first, I'd like to have you write those words on my tombstone."

This was true, whether or not it made a good story, and he did not care who knew it.

He was in the hospital when Task Force Headquarters was reorganized. In May he did desk work in Algiers because the medics were still checking on his shoulder. He got his star in June, but he did not see the Sicilian show or any fighting until he was on the beach at Salerno as an assistant division commander. He was a specialist in armor by then and he knew it. When he was yanked out and sent to England to take command of the Silver Leaf Armored and whip it into shape in preparation for the cross-channel invasion, he knew that he was equipped to take armor anywhere, any time and anyhow, and that was all there was to it. He wrote some of his thoughts in a letter to his wife in April, 1944:

Dear Muriel: I don't see what harm there is when you get this in asking the chief or Jerry or somebody to tell you confidentially if they can what they've pinned on me over here. I don't mean any more chest spinach either. I mean the job they handed to me. Old Skeet Shaw felt kind of upset when he got the word to turn it over to me, and I felt kind of mean about taking it from Skeet after he had shown me around, but you know Skeet, and he knows we have to take what's dished out to us on this picnic. They are nice kids, and they look about as much in the groove as they can be until they get their tryout.

By the way, Bugsy Waters and Long John Gooch are both here with me.

Do you remember when we bought Robert the electric train the Christmas we were stationed at Sykes? Do you remember how Bob looked, just as though the train and the tracks had dropped out of the sky? Well, that's how I feel about this thing. I feel just like a kid at Christmas and maybe sometimes I act that way. I keep wanting to go right over across the street and try it out on the other gang. Believe me, it's going to be good, and I think I'm going to know how to work it. Well, you go and ask the chief, and you might tell Bob and Charlie that they really handed the old man something. It won't hurt them to know that the old man has kind of made good on his own and that some people think well of him for all the scrabbling around he's done out here. I sort of wish you were here to see it.

Old Fritz is the number one in the parts, as maybe you can imagine if you've been talking to the chief. The other night he asked a couple of us to his little shack to dinner—it looked as though it belonged to a duke or something—to show us off to the Big Boy himself and some of the little big boys who were with him. I hadn't seen Big Boy since North Africa and he's grown some. Funny our paths never crossed, but you remember what Pershing said about him? He'd never known him either. Anyway, you'll be pleased to know he chewed the fat with me for several minutes and asked me to look him up if I was ever around the big city. I won't if I can help it. I'm an outdoor boy, and the high echelons always make me sweat, and when I sweat I stink. I can just hear you saying I always get coarse when I'm with troops. Everybody sends you their love, though, and lots of them remember old times.

I laughed to read about you and Enid and the picture puzzle. Life is quite a picture puzzle in itself, isn't it?—one you never finish because something's always jiggling the table. Just take it easy now. I'm doing fine. I'm glad Bob's moving out. I wish I might have seen him, but I'll hear from me I know he'll be good. How could he help it, considering who his mamma is? Give Charlie a slap in the pants and I'll him I'll write him tomorrow.

With love, MEL.

There were some other letters, too, but this one seemed pretty well to cover the situation. Anyone who had been in pre-invasion England could add in all the color himself. Old P. T. Barnum should have been alive to have seen it, because it really was the greatest show on earth. It was something to be a part of that show and to have been right in the first team with the Silver Leaf Armored and with the teammates. It was a page of history, and if he was just one of the punctuation marks, still he was on the page, and anyone could read it without his doing much further talking. However, in case anything more was needed, he did have the newspaper clipping which he could show for what it was worth. He never suspected at the time that the thing was going to be written since he was not one of those field runners who made the papers, and there were too many stars anyway on that all-star, all-American team. Yet maybe this was not accurate. The British were on the team too. At any rate, when a newspaper correspondent named Al Crouch came around, Mel Goodwin never thought seriously that this would mean any kind of feature article, and, after all, only appeared in the Sunday supplement of a newspaper in upstate New York.

Actually it made me a little homesick for the great days when I read it. Its journalistic language was characteristic of those days and I had participated in many similar efforts when I had been in Public Relations. I could remember no correspondent named Al Crouch, but then, accredited correspondents were as thick as flies before the invasion. The dispatch was simply dated "Somewhere in England, May 12, 1944" and it had appeared in print only after the invasion. The headline was "Al Crouch Looks Them Over.

Your correspondent took a busman's holiday today, spending his time visiting, instead of an

(Continued on Page 81)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Elegy for Donald McFarland

By Elizabeth McFarland

Forgetting you would be myself forgotten—
Lost in a wave-wash, in the seaweed passes,
Drifting through earth, an anchorage for grasses
With icicles the nails that bolt my tomb.

Forgetting you? Oh, when I have forgotten,
It's others' minds must worry to recall
My* leaves, my grass, my seaweed hair and all:
Death shall remember me when I forget you.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Sea Dream Salad

1 package Lime Jell-O
1¼ cups hot water
1 cup grated cucumber
1 tablespoon vinegar
¾ teaspoon grated onion
½ teaspoon salt
Dash of cayenne

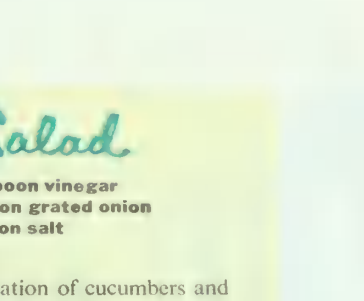
Just try it for sighs—this crisp and cool combination of cucumbers and Lime Jell-O! We think it's the brightest salad idea in years!

Served by itself it's a joy . . . but if you want to be really spiffy—go ahead! Top this glorious green goodness with flaked pink salmon . . . and you'll cause a sensation!

Dissolve Jell-O in hot water. Add remaining ingredients. Force through sieve. Turn into individual ring molds. Chill until firm. Unmold. Fill centers of molds with salmon salad, if desired. Garnish with mayonnaise and cucumber slices; sprinkle with paprika. Makes 4 servings.

Just look what you can make with JELL-O

Peach Perfection



2 packages Cherry Jell-O
2 cups hot water
2 cups cold water
½ teaspoon almond extract
1 cup sweetened sliced peaches
1 cup coarsely crushed macaroons

Honest-to-goodness, this Jell-O masterpiece is a cinch to make! It's just peaches, macaroons, and Cherry Jell-O—and it's wonderful!

Dissolve Cherry Jell-O in hot water. Add cold water and flavoring. Chill until slightly thickened. Set aside 1 cup mixture in small bowl. Fold peaches into remaining Jell-O. Turn into 1-quart ring mold. Chill until firm.

Place reserved bowl of Jell-O in another bowl of ice and water. Beat with rotary egg beater until fluffy and thick like whipped cream. Fold in crushed macaroons. Turn into 8 x 8 x 2-inch square pan. Chill until firm.

Unmold ring of Jell-O on serving platter. Cut whipped mixture into cubes and fill center of ring. Garnish with whipped cream. Serves 8.

Jell-O Candle Cuties

Wonderful for birthday parties—or just to make a youngster's supper happier, this Jell-O dessert. And, my, how young ones love the good fruit flavors of Jell-O!

Prepare 1 package Jell-O (any flavor) as directed, molding in tart pans or individual molds. Garnish with small candles placed in holders. Serve with custard sauce. Serves 4.

★ In a hurry? Try this new quick-setting method for making Jell-O: Dissolve 1 package Jell-O in 1 cup hot water. Then add 1 cup ice cubes or crushed ice, filling cup to the brim with water. Stir until ice melts completely, pour into molds, and place in refrigerator to chill firm—takes just about an hour!

JELL-O FOR Red Letter DESSERTS

JELL-O IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK OF GENERAL FOODS CORPORATION

The chicken that's taking the nation by storm !!!!!

SPECIALLY PLANNED FOR EATING . . . . THROUGH 10 YEARS POULTRY INDUSTRY RESEARCH . . . . SPECIALLY FED FOR FLAVOR AND QUALITY . . . . AS PLUMP IN 3 MONTHS AS ORDINARY CHICKEN IN 4 MONTHS . . . . SPECIALLY RAISED FROM MEAT-BEARING STRAINS . . . . SHIPPED IN ICE TO PRESERVE FRESHNESS . . . . DISPLAYED FRESH ON CHIPPED ICE OR UNDER REFRIGERATION . . . . AT BETTER DEALERS EVERYWHERE . . . . P.S. ALSO QUICK-FROZEN--CUT-UP, READY-TO-COOK . . . . LOOK FOR BLUE AND WHITE PICTURE PACKAGE.

tender-grown Swift's Premium

the dream chicken that came true!

(Continued from Page 78)

Air ce outfit, an American armored division on a nd-swept English moor. He had the good orta e on dropping into its headquarters, an uni ted guest, to run smack into its com- na ng officer, Major General Melville A. io win.

Sh e division!

Ig ou have been around for a while on this ttle island you get hep to an outfit that's ea and rarin' to go, and oh brother, this one wa ancin'. And when you've rattled around en n among the big brass hats, you get to cn when a man's a real guy.

Sh e guy! this cocky young fighting divi- io C.O., with his words that hit you like a ou l in the midriff and his infectious, boyish m

Sh e guy, this Mel Goodwin, right from the op his battle-buffeted helmet with the two ne tars riveted on it, down to the toes of is[shoes. No funny business; all fight and a a wide.

ybe you folks around Syracuse have never e of Mel. It's your loss if you haven't, but h Mel Goodwins that make this Army strut s uff aren't the kind you see at peacetime tea al es or handing out E Award pins. In case o aven't heard of Mel Goodwin, here's the i , as Colonel "Long John" Gooch, his chief f ff, handed it to me hot off the griddle.

elville A. Goodwin, born in the tiny town of owell, New Hampshire (Ever hear of it? I 't), where his father was for many years the druggist and where young Mel once d a few sodas himself (but maybe this t to be off the record). Young Mel got out 'est Point just in time to knock out two nan machine guns personally in World I, and win the DSC and Croix de Guerre palm. He may not mention it himself, but ot all these things again World War II and a lder wound for refusing e evacuated in a little up with some of Rom- s bad boys, and then a ole of swift one-twos at rno.

Hell," he says, with that e of his, "forget about ribbons, son. I think per- s they shower down a e easier when you get pushed up to the top he heap."

nyway, no GI in that armored outfit would ee with him. As Staff Sergeant Milton I. wker (Rochester, New York) put it when rought up the subject, "That guy doesn't k in mirrors. He doesn't have to use mir- s."

t any rate, I ran smack into "that guy" as I reached headquarters, and the word ou run into "that guy" everywhere. This di- on is definitely his baby, and every one of GI's is one of Mel Goodwin's kids. Don't ask how.

Well, son," he said to me, "tag along if you nt to look around."

We just hopped into a nearby jeep. The Gen- did the driving himself, a lot of it on two eels.

Funnily enough, everybody seemed glad to "that guy" whenever he stopped the jeep. just fitted in naturally with the GI's. For in- nce, there was Pfc. Martin J. Flynn, Albany, w York, taking a BAR to pieces.

Here, son," General Goodwin said, "let's if I can still do that."

little group gathered around him just like s watching teacher.

I haven't fussed around with one of those ngs since Africa," he said, tossing the BAR k to Pfc. Flynn (Albany, N. Y.). "It's nice now I can still do it. It may be useful to me ere we're going in case I see one lying und."

This one got a good laugh.

With all that automatic fire power, the neral pointed out to that serious-faced little up, all you had to do was to spray it out in nt of you and keep walking.

And I'll be walking with you," he said, henever we aren't riding. We'll just stop now then and stretch our legs this summer. mmer's a great season over in France—in e we should be going there."

This got another laugh. He could really le the boys.

Of course it might be that one or two of us y sprain an ankle," he said, "but there'll be ses to massage it and you can take it from a lot of very sharp-looking nurses are com- over."

nd so it went for three hours all up and down line. Hard-bitten, tanned, alert Mel Good- had the Old Army "pro" stamped over ry inch of him. In spite of that quiet kidding nner, he always had the authority. He had so much that he could handle it carelessly, just as I have seen an old barfly hold a glass. That was why he could rub shoulders with the toughest GI in the outfit, drop into a company mess hall as we did, scrounge a cup of hot Java and sit exchanging salty wisecracks with the mess "sarge" and the KP's.

As Corporal Wally Sterner (Bath, N. Y.) laughingly confided: "You kinda don't mind the fact he's got stars and all the chicken gut over his left pocket."

A private with a paintbrush was stenciling initials on the side of a truck—R.T.A.

"What's that?" I asked

Mel Goodwin regarded the truck quizzically.

"It's sort of alphabet soup," he quipped, "but it's the division motto—Right There Anyhow—R.T.A. Maybe it sounds simple to you, but combat is a pretty simple thing. In fact, you can sum it up in just one word."

"What word?" I inquired curiously.

His eyes looked cold and icy blue. Maybe his mind was moving across the Channel to the Great Adventure.

"Guts," he said, "four letters, son. Don't laugh at it."

I did not laugh at it because it sounded all right coming from Major General Mel Goodwin on that wind-swept British moor.

"American troops when handled by competent command are, in my opinion, the best soldiers in the world," he said. "I think I know how to lead troops, with God's help. Sometimes in battle you get pretty close to God. What was it the marine said? There ain't no atheists in foxholes. Yes, son, you wake up sometimes at night and think a lot of lonely thoughts when you wear stars and know you're in charge of all these men with no excuses and only yourself to blame. I hope I know my business, because I think I've got the best damned division in the world. I mean I know."

There is, perhaps, no safer test of a man's real character than that of his long continued friendship with good and able men.

—CHARLES DARWIN.

Then his mood changed. First he smiled and then he laughed and said:

"Hell, I wouldn't swap my job for Eisenhower's. You see, I like it here."

You had the feeling that everything in General Goodwin's division was squared away—oh, oh, I didn't mean to use Navy talk.

Well, anyway, come D-Day, H-Hour and M-Minute this scribe knows one rootin' tootin' shootin' outfit that's going to hit the beach, and one general who isn't going to do his fighting in any dugout. When I left them the sun was going down, the bugles were sounding retreat, and Mel Goodwin was saluting his flag. There was a lump in my throat when I drove away from there, but my chin was a little higher. I was a little prouder that I was an American and I was good and mad, too, mad at that Army doctor who found that I had a heart murmur and flat feet. You see, really and truly I wanted to go Right There Anyhow. I wanted to throw in with that swell bunch. I wanted to hit the beach with Goodwin.

It was hard to see why this cracker-barrel sage had not driven Mel Goodwin nuts in May, 1944. The General could not have been courting publicity. If he had, he would not have shot the works to an unsyndicated correspondent like Al Crouch. I could attribute part of his compliance to the respect and apprehension with which some high-ranking officers regarded the press, and also perhaps Mel Goodwin had been lonely out there on his moor—not that I believed it was a moor. He may have leaned on this Al Crouch as he had on me in Paris, desirous of talking to someone who was out of the chain of command, someone to whom he could explain some of the things that everyone around him took for granted.

In spite of his clichés and ephemeral journalese, Al Crouch did have perceptive sensitivity of a sort. Despite the lapse of time, Al Crouch could make you see something of what he saw. Those direct quotes of his, one of modern journalism's greatest banes, he had doubtless drawn from his memory, but they sounded so real that I could hear Mel Goodwin's voice. In the end you began to distrust your own sophistication. If I had been there with Al Crouch, I, too, would have wished that I could throw in with that swell bunch and hit the beach with Mel Goodwin, even though I would have been of no great help had I hit it.

When Myra Fineholt read that piece aloud, I had the feeling that she, too, wanted

Ballard Biscuits

Ready to eat in 9 minutes!

Out of the package ... into the oven

Onto the table—fast! But not for long. Melt-in-your-mouth Ballard Biscuits disappear in nothing flat!

Butter 'em, spread 'em with jelly . . . and sink your teeth into the lightest, tenderest, goldenest-perfect biscuits you ever tasted!

Everybody'll be reaching for more and more. So have a second batch baking while you eat the first . . . takes just 9 minutes! Better get two packages of Ballard OvenReady Biscuits! You'll love 'em!

Get 2 packages from your Grocer's REFRIGERATOR!

Distributed exclusively by Kraft

Greet "the gang" with this good-for-ém cheese food

IT'S DIGESTIBLE AS MILK ITSELF

You can be indulgent about between-meal snacks when you have Velveeta in the house. Because, like milk, this top-quality cheese food helps supply the children with important food values they need: milk protein, milk minerals, vitamins A and G. And delicious, golden Velveeta is as digestible as milk itself!

That's why wise mothers insist on Velveeta. In nutrition and in flavor it's the finest of pasteurized process cheese foods. Always keep Velveeta on hand to satisfy young appetites at any hour, or to use for meal-time sandwiches too.

For a backyard picnic: Velveeta-Stuffed "Franks"

Slice frankfurters lengthwise and spread generously with golden Velveeta—the quality cheese food that's rich in important food values from milk. Wrap a slice of bacon around each frankfurter and fasten with toothpicks. Place under low broiler heat until the Velveeta is melted and the bacon crisp. Serve on split, toasted frankfurter rolls.

in ½-lb., 1-lb. and 2-lb. sizes.

VELVEETA THE QUALITY CHEESE FOOD ... MADE BY KRAFT

to hit the beach, and so did Phil Bentley. Naturally, Phil concealed his emotions, and as he had a good ear for prose, the piece must have hurt him even more than it did me.

"Well," Phil Bentley said, "Mr. Crouch certainly gave you all he had."

Mel Goodwin looked at Phil Bentley self-consciously.

"Well, frankly," he said, "I know you can do better than that, Phil. That Crouch, now that I come to think of it, was a funny sort of Joe, but he liked the old Silver Leaf, and anybody who liked the Silver Leaf goes down all right with me. Maybe I'm a ham actor at heart. There's always that temptation in front of troops."

I could see Phil Bentley's face light up, and Myra was writing it down. It would make a good caption under one of the photographs—"A Ham Actor at Heart."

"Frankly," Mel Goodwin said, "I was surprised when I saw that clipping. He sent it to me and asked me for my photograph. I don't believe I said all those things, but just the same, it gives you a sort of working idea."

I saw Colonel Flax squirm uneasily.

"You're right," Phil Bentley said, "I'd have done it differently, but it does give you an idea."

"Well, there it is for what it's worth," Mel Goodwin said. "If he's shot the works, so have I. I've been shooting them all over the place for you, Phil, and you've got me pinned right down. I keep living things all over again."

Mel Goodwin paused, and we could see him thinking.

"You know," he said, "if I say so myself, I used to be a good pistol shot—not that I'm so bad right now. I used to have the sweetest forty-five. It fitted into my hand so that every line of my palm seemed to fill some part of the grip. I left it back in Washington when I went out on Torch, because I wanted Bob to have some personalized gift from me even though Bob isn't any better than an average shot. Well, Bob mislaid it somewhere around Leyte. That's all right, but I still get thinking about that gun. Sometimes I wonder where it is now—all rusted somewhere in the bush, I guess."

The General held his hand in front of him as though he were gripping the memory of it.

"Now that gun," he said, "is sort of like the old Silver Leaf. Of course nothing can be precise that's made up of a number of thousand human beings all suffering wear and tear, but by and large the Silver Leaf was an efficient unit according to any set of sta ards. At any rate, my greatest moments w with it. I guess I was made to head a divis like the Silver Leaf. Everybody's made something, and maybe the better you ge doing one thing, the less good you are coping with other things, maybe."

The General's face had a sad, half-em look. It was the first time I had ever s sadness in him; and the first time, also, t he seemed to be face to face with a situat that he could not quite estimate.

"Well," he said, "where's the old Sil Leaf now? It's all in pieces like one of th alarm clocks I used to disassemble whe was a kid. What's going to happen to pe like me? Sometimes I think of all the cas ties and dollars it cost to turn me into wh am. Maybe I was useful once, but what's point of it now, when I'm not really wan any more? Oh, yes, I'll get somethi Maybe I'll even be a permanent colo pushing or hauling on something. I maybe—I don't mean to bellyache—maybe I ought to be pushing daisies al the Rhine along with a lot of the old Sil Leaf crowd."

Melville Goodwin stopped. It seemed me that his voice had ended on a note of s prise when he reached that logical conclusi and the worst of it was I found myself thi ing that he might have been right. The po and the glory were gone, evaporated int thin haze of memory.

Colonel Flax looked uncomfortable. Fr the Public Relations angle, such a conclus gave a suspicion of emotional instability t was not for the good of the service.

"Now, General," he said, "you d mean that."

Then the General must have realized h self that it was not for the good of the serv

"I guess I didn't phrase my thought q correctly, Flax," he said. "The thought I trying to convey is, I can never feel sorry anyone who was killed clean in the lin duty, and that's how I should have put Frankly, I've never been greatly interest death, one way or another. Old whiskers w the hourglass is always hiding around s corner, isn't he?"

The General laughed, and looked relie now that matters were back on a firmer ba "Give me a cigarette, will you, Flax? L see," he said, "where was I?"

There was a curious pause. For a secon two no one seemed to remember where General had left off.

(Continued on Page 84)

"I don't think I get the proper respect around here!"

"You season French Dressing better than any gal I know!"

"Kraft does, you mean!"

"I JUST NEVER MAKE MY OWN ANY MORE, NOW THAT I'VE FOUND KRAFT'S FRENCH DRESSINGS. BOTH KINDS, KRAFT FRENCH AND MIRACLE FRENCH, ARE SEASONED PERFECTLY. AND THE SEASONING'S EXACTLY THE SAME EVERY TIME, WHICH IS SOMETHING I NEVER COULD MANAGE! THEY'RE WONDERFUL TIME-SAVERS, TOO!"

Oriental Salad Bowl

Bibb lettuce
French endive
Watercress
One tomato
Scored cucumber slices
Miracle or Kraft French Dressing

In a large round salad bowl arrange bibb lettuce, endive cut in pieces, and watercress radiating from a tomato, cut poinsettia style. Separate the greens with cucumber slices and scatter cucumber slices through the endive. Garnish the tomato with watercress, and serve the salad with Miracle or Kraft French Dressing. Miracle and Kraft French Dressing really are delightful. Actually, they're used by more people than all of those who make their own.

America's Favorites!

KRAFT
THE NAME THAT MEANS WONDERFUL SALADS

Deftly seasoned with onion and garlic

Miracle French has a "Parisian accent" that gourmets praise. If you like onion and garlic in French Dressing—a deft touch, just the right touch—you'll share the enthusiasm for Miracle French Dressing.

Creamy-thick, with a smooth yet zippy flavor

Kraft French is the most widely popular French Dressing ever offered for sale! A creamy-thick dressing that the whole family loves, famous Kraft French is mild enough for children, zippy enough to please grown-ups.

New "Shine meter" tests prove

BRILLO

gives

TWICE the SHINE in HALF the TIME!

Make stubborn pans gleam with a Brillo pad-with-soap. Fast! Easy!

Don't scrub and scrape!

Use a square, metal-fiber Brillo pad to whisk away gummy crust!

Brillo has jeweler's polish. Gives aluminums twice the shine in half the time as other cleansers tested. Wonderful for ovenware, too.

Brillo now lasts longer!

More Shines in Every Pad!

©

RED box—soap-filled pads
GREEN box—pads plus cake soap

(Continued from Page 82)

"I guess you were about ready to hit that beach in Normandy," Phil Bentley said.

"That's right," the General said, "it was Omaha."

We all waited for him to go on, but he did not continue.

"You know," he said, "I think you've got about all I have to give. Let's break it off at Omaha." He glanced at his watch and stood up. "What I want, Sid, is a bite of lunch, and then I'd better kiss the girls good-by. Get yourself braced for it, Myra."

Then he laughed. It was the first time he had called Miss Fineholt "Myra," and that concession was like the dropping of a curtain, and Phil Bentley must have known how things were. There must have always been a time in other interviews when it was useless to go further.

"All right, let's call it a day, sir," Phil Bentley said, but it was not quite a day.

Now that the show was over, we were reluctant to leave the show, and Melville Goodwin was like a gracious host.

"You get my point, don't you?" the General said. "There comes a time when you can't blow your own horn any more. The rest of it is what you might call straight military history, and Flax can give it to you if you want it, or you might get in touch with my old chief of staff, General Gooch."

"The Washington bureau's covered that already," Phil Bentley said.

The General laughed. "Well," he said, "let's hope I've lived right."

We all laughed, but the General was waiting expectantly as though something were missing, and I knew what it was. There had been no formal speech of acknowledgment, but just as I was about to make it, Phil Bentley did it instead.

"General," he said, "I want to thank you for everything. I must have done thirty or more of these interviews and some of them have been tough. Well, this one hasn't been tough at all."

"And Phil and I wonder if you'll sign us each a photograph," Myra Fineholt said.

It was exactly the right touch, the photograph, and as she pulled two out of her briefcase I could see that Mel Goodwin approved.

"Well," he said, "I didn't know this was coming. Flax, lend me your pen, will you?"

"To Myra," the General wrote on Miss Fineholt's photograph, "who took down all of Operation Windbag. With love, from Mel."

"To Phil, who made the old man stick his neck out," he wrote across Phil Bentley's picture, "and is too good a guy to chop it off. With admiration and affection, Mel."

I had traveled extensively before, during and after the war. Many of my trips were highly uncomfortable, combining physical fatigue, bad water, inadequate food and insects, but when such a trip was over, a mellow glow immediately began to dull its grimmer aspects. I would think of the sights I had seen, and the companions, whose eccentricities I had scarcely been able to tolerate, became warmly agreeable in retrospect. Small grudges and annoyances would be forgotten, and regrets would begin to arise that the party was breaking up, and everyone would exchange addresses and promise everyone else to get together sometime soon.

We had all followed Melville Goodwin through a strange country, and the experience had drawn us together, but I personally was experiencing the sort of museum fatigue that comes when you have seen and heard too much. Somehow I had not been the casual observer that I thought I would be, but it was almost over now.

They would all be gone directly after lunch—one more of those peculiar meals—and Goodwin, Fineholt, Flax and Bentley would be gone back to the orbits of their lives. The old rule was already working. It had been quite a trip with Mel Goodwin and we were a swell lot of people, and we must get together sometime soon. I even remember suggesting to Fineholt that we have lunch so that I could show her the studio, and Helen herself was sorry now that the end was near, because I heard her telling Mel Goodwin that nothing had been any trouble at all. He had not descended upon her. She had enjoyed every minute of it.

"I am just beginning to understand the Army," I heard her say, "and now you're going and I'll have to start understanding Sidney all over again."

"Say, Flax," the General said, "upstairs in my room there are two parcels on top of my luggage—something I've been saving for Sid and Helen. Would you mind asking Oscar to bring them down?"

Of course Colonel Flax did not mind.

"Just two little things I picked up after the surrender," he said. "They've been knocking around in my baggage. They don't amount to anything, but they do have an association value."

In spite of the casual way he put it, the trip had meant something to him also. When Oscar brought the two parcels tied up in brown paper, I could not help remembering the postwar days when everybody began pinning medals on everybody else. The parcel he gave to me contained one of those ugly Luger automatics that had passed almost as currency in the early occupation.

"I suppose you own one of these things already," he said, "but this is a special Luger. It turned up when they were searching Goering's baggage that time when they fed him chicken and green peas. It belonged to old Fatso personally, and here are the papers to prove it."

I held the thing as though it were a hot potato, and everybody laughed.

"Is it loaded?" I asked.

"That's funny," the General said. "I've had it all this time and I've never thought to look. Hand it over here, Sid."

It was impressive to watch him with the Luger. He handled it in an expert, half-contemptuous professional way, breal the magazine with a quick one-two

"It is loaded," he said. "I wonder w the matter with our boys. Here, Fl keep the ammunition. Maybe Mr might like it."

"She certainly would, sir," Colon said, "particularly if—er—Sidney wo me have a copy of those documents."

"Hand Helen her little bundle, wi Flax," the General said. "It's a sloppy age. I didn't tie it up myself."

His words gave me a fleeting mem young Mel Goodwin sealing packages father's drugstore.

"Why," Helen said, "what a love cloth."

"It was right on the table in the bun the room where Hitler shot himself General said, "but the stain on it's te here's the paper to prove it, signed Russian Intelligence. I got it at one of vodka parties when we were still totsy with the Russians."

"Oh," Helen said, "it's lovely." I nized the tone as one she employed whe I gave her something that she coul imagine how to use, but then the G didn't know.

"Just from me to you, dear," he said, Muriel particularly wanted you to hav

Then I wondered fleetingly what relic he might be saving for Dottie Pe was bound to be good, although I coul think of anything that might outrank F gun and Eva Braun's tea cloth. It wa direct measure of his gratitude, and I not help but be touched.

"Why, son," he said when we thanked him, "they aren't anything,

(Continued on Page 86)

Ask any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

THE number of times the toast falls butter side down increases in direct proportion to the value of the rug or the price of butter.

He was the kind of boy who always dropped his report card in the mud.

Before a daughter marries, she should have learned either at home or out in the business world how very helpless men really are.

The modern parent is advised to take a child on his knee and reason with him. This is good advice—provided the child is turned face down.

Fatherhood, as compared to motherhood, is a hundred-yard dash to a marathon finish—with no drain on endurance or strength!

Vacations that children grow pink in,
Mothers too frequently sink in!

The bride's problem: making the bud in budget blossom into the flower of security.

One of our youngest's thank-you notes was washed to the surface at house-cleaning time:

Dear Aunt Ruth: Whether you sent me pajamas or robe, I wear them both.

Thank you, C.

"Maybe I'm queer," said my neighbor, pinning a swath of cleaning cloths on the line, "but I like white woodwork because I can tell when it's dirty."

"We'll give him a good family name said a man to his wife. "Now there's Unc Leander, Uncle Caius, Uncle Asa, Unc Gideon, Uncle Luke"—and so the bab was named Bill.

Five-year-old: "I woke up early, mothe but I was so sleepy I stayed in bed gettin used to myself."

While the family was on vacation, on hostess was cordial to the point of suffoca tion. Finally the mother said icily, "Noth ing more, Mrs. Clark!" Since then, the chi dren are privileged to use "Nothing more Mrs. Clark" to ward off unwanted food.

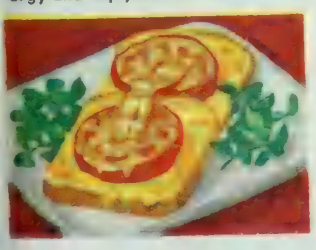
Nothing annoys the average parent s much as listening to another tell about hi children until there's no time left for him to talk about his.

A child's testimony is never quite reli able. To him, distance, weight, color ar always relative. Send him to the store fo butter, the distance is a mile—for candy it's a block.

The children in their family were as pro tected as fruit in gelatin.

Glorious middle age! Daughter: "Isn't it wonderful, mother, you've reached the time of your life when it's safe to ask direc tions from strange men."

Many a woman who wouldn't think of going through her husband's pockets has discovered that quite a lot of loose change falls out when she holds his trousers with the ankle ends up.



so many wonderful ways to enjoy enriched white

Bread

"your best buy in nourishment"

Bread can be served in so many appetizing ways... combining energy and enjoyment... at low cost.

RIGHT RECIPE

to wake up your appetite ... French Toast for breakfast de luxe... another tempting way to enjoy enriched white bread, fresh and fragrant, delicious and energizing. No other single food offers quite so much in nourishment... at so little cost.

★ ★ ★

In the baking of better bread, many leading bakers use dextrose food-energy sugar...which helps them to produce superior loaves of finer texture, golden-brown crust, finer flavor... at no extra cost.

"Keep the Energy of Sunshine in your diet" better breads are baked with

dextrose

(FOOD-ENERGY SUGAR)

Under the brand name of CERELOSE, dextrose sugar is produced by Corn Products Refining Company, originators of the processes by which this great sugar is derived from golden corn.

CORN PRODUCTS REFINING COMPANY

WITH BETTER RUBBERWARE

Super cushioned dish drainer for your glassware and china.
Raised edge drainboard mat prevents overflow and splashing.
Colors to brighten your kitchen. Resists scalding water, kitchen acids and greases. Dish washing ease that's the next best thing to an automatic dishwasher.
You'll like Prettyware's other products, too. Send for free booklet.

THOSE WHO COMPARE CHOOSE Pretty WARE

PRETTY PRODUCTS, INC., 1 RUBBERWARE PARK, COSHOCTON, OHIO

(Continued from Page 84)

wish they could be the Hesse jewels," and then he thought of Phil Bentley and Myra Fineholt. "I wish I weren't running clean out of souvenirs," he said. "Say, Flax, how about getting the powder taken out and then loosening up and handing Phil and Myra each one of Fatso's cartridges?"

It was the time for passing out the Legions of Merit.

"I'd love to have one for a lipstick holder," Myra said, "and Phil can use his for a key ring."

"It takes a woman to think up things," the General said. "Sister, you've got a lot of bright ideas."

WE were all a swell crowd, and the trip was almost over, and now the General was in a reminiscent mood. He was about to tell another one of his stories, and it was sad to think that it would be the last of them.

"I don't know why I should have thought of this," he was saying. "There was a young officer at Maule. That was right in the middle of the Bulge show, and everything was pretty scrambled up. Goochy, my chief of staff, sent him to report to me personally about some snarl up forward. I don't remember what, because it was all one big foul-up. He was just a kid, a nice first lieutenant, nice face, nice hands. He gave me his name and outfit, but I forgot his name because I was thinking of the tactical situation. He gave a good report, too, all the facts in order. Then I saw him swaying. I should have seen he was going out on his feet, just plain pooped, but I wasn't thinking about him until he fell down slam on the floor, out cold. Then I thought what a dead-game kid he was, and I wanted to make a note of his name personally so that I could pin something on him later. So I looked in the kid's pocket and pulled out a letter, and found myself reading it, forgetting I shouldn't. Well, do you know what the letter was? It was a 'Dear John' letter. The kid's wife was leaving him for a Navy flier in Jacksonville. He reminded me of Robert, stretched out there on the floor, except he didn't have my kid's physique. Well, anyway, I saw he got a bronze star out of it, even if he lost the gal. Maybe it helped a little, but it didn't fix anything permanently, because he was killed up on the Rhine. Well, I don't know how this crossed my mind."

I wished that Oscar would appear with the news that lunch was ready, because the shadow of the young lieutenant lingered in the room, an uninvited guest, the ghost of an unknown soldier who should have stayed in the ETO where he belonged. I wondered myself how he had escaped out of the tight compartment in which Mel Goodwin kept the memory pictures of other officers and men, to run erratically across the General's mind. There was more in his mind than one ever thought. There were the scars of old decisions and old regrets, for instance, and the weight of responsibilities that still rested on him, which he could not shift from himself to any subordinate or superior. Those were the things he had to keep all buttoned up and packed away and which he could never allow to move up front. There must have been a lot of things that he had felt obliged to forget as rapidly as possible.

Colonel Flax and I were standing a few steps away from the others. "I think this has all been good," the colonel said. "Don't you think the General handled himself all right?"

"I think Mel did a swell public-relations job," I told him.

The colonel lowered his voice discreetly. "Someday," he said, "you and I have got to get together and tell each other stories. I don't know why they're always dropping bricks. They want to be liked and the public is all set to like them and do a little hero-worship, and then they drop a brick. Take Patton."

"Well, he was the greatest figure in the war," I said.

"I didn't say he wasn't," Colonel Flax answered, "but, oh, brother," he cast a level appraising glance at General Goodwin, "he's got the Patton traits."

"Well," I said, "they've got to be the same piece of goods because they all have to

It's smart to buy ALVIN STERLING because it is styled to remain in fashion . . .

It is "solid" sterling silver through and through and constant use will only enhance its beauty.
Modestly priced for satisfaction and service, year after year, for a lifetime.

SEE IT . . BUY IT . . AT YOUR JEWELER'
Write us for free illustrated price folder of these and other ALVIN patterns.

THE ALVIN SILVERSMITH
Makers of Exclusive Silver Designs for over Sixty years
PROVIDENCE 7, RHODE ISLAND

*Trademarks

EARN THE MONEY YOU NEED
SELLING SUNSHINE CHRISTMAS CARDS

Friends and Neighbors buy on sight America's Lead Folder Ass't. with many DECORATIVE LINED E LOPES $1. NEW! DIFFERENT! 100% Profit. ELTY KROMEKOTES, NATURE PRINTS, CH MAS HOLLY, Religious, Gift Wraps, Stationery. Value Imprints 50 for $1.25. Big $1,000. Sales C Special Money-Making Plan for Clubs. SAMPLE APPROVAL.

SUNSHINE ART STUDIO
Dept. LE-9, 115 Fulton Street, New York 38,

"MEXENE GIVES SPAGHETTI WONDERFUL FLAVOR!"

Says Mrs. Joe B. Nelson of Alexandria, Va.

Thanks to Mexene, Mrs. Nelson is famous for her delicious spaghetti, for as thousands of other cooks, she has found Mexene All-Purpose Seasoning ideal for adding piquant goodness to America's favorite dish. An unusual blend of rare peppers and spices, Mexene is also chosen by good cooks everywhere to season meats, poultry, soups, and seafoods and to make home-made chili. A can or bottle costs less than 20¢

Photo posed by professional model

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Walker's AUSTEX Chili
AUSTIN, TEXAS
CHILI • TAMALES • BEEF STE
BRAISED BEEF HASH • SANDWICH SPRE
SPAGHETTI and MEAT BAL

ame thing. Maybe the public under-hem better than you think."
the left wing," Flax said.
rybody isn't left wing," I told him.
netimes it seems as though everybody
onel Flax said, and he sighed again.
body is always pulling the carpet out nder combat generals," and he again at Melville Goodwin. "They put over their personality for a lot of -year-old kids. They have to tell lves they're good about a hundred a day. They've got to hold that t or else they'll crack. Look at Goode looks pretty good, doesn't he?"
that he had mentioned it, I had never lel Goodwin looking better.
's got his mind on something else
Colonel Flax said. "Boy, I'm feeling
But Mel Goodwin was not tired.
:y, Sid," he called, "come over here.
een asking Helen the name of your
and she can't remember."
hat do you want a tailor for?" I asked.
at tweed jacket and slacks of yours," Goodwin said. "I need something to n Sunday. The war's over."
ondered whether it was a desire como all Army officers to get out of unior whether he was thinking of Dottie
. There was something preposterous in lea of Melville Goodwin dressed in a coat and slacks, minus stars and rib-with only perhaps a small single eled decoration in his buttonhole. I ered what Dottie Peale would say if aw him in gray slacks or a conservdouble-breasted suit. Half of him l be gone and he did now it.
t would give you schizenia," I said. "You've in uniform too long."
ne General put his arm nd my shoulders. "Sid ys comes up with some-good," he said. "May-Sid's got something.
ou people on the outside seem to have r notions about officers in civvies. Now et Sid here got out of his uniform as soon e had the chance. Didn't you, Sid?"
Yes, sir," I answered, "I certainly did."
You're right you did," Melville Goodwin
. "There's nothing more satisfying to an y man, after a hard day, than getting out niform into some everyday clothes. It's taking off your corset and scratching—se me, Helen, my dear."
e all laughed appreciatively and Melville dwin laughed.
Just walking down the street like a plain en, without having to take a salute, ns a lot. It's like getting out of school, do you know what Muriel told me as soon got off the plane?" He paused dramati-y, but none of us knew the answer. "She that Charlie—my kid Charlie—had n over all my civilian wardrobe—and it a pretty sharp one—and had worn it ed for the past two years. So here I am, out a fig leaf, except my uniform."

METHING in his voice showed it was no e for laughter, even when he mentioned a eaf.
But didn't you get some civilian suits le during the occupation, sir?" Colonel asked.
I did have a couple of suits made over e," the General said. "There was a tailor Wiesbaden—Bethge. Frankly, off the rd—mind you, off the record, Bentley—t bird would make you up a suit for two ons of cigarettes."
What?" Miss Fineholt said. "For only cartons of cigarettes?"
Melville Goodwin shook his finger at her.
f the record, Myra," he said. "Well, se suits are with my baggage in Frank-
. I was yanked over here pretty fast.
y may be following me, but they haven't here yet. Anyway, I think they may look tty Krauty over here. I've really got to some civvies."
le stopped, but his mind was already ving away from civilian clothes. They had inded him of something else.

"Say, Flax," he said, "don't forget those orchids for Mrs. Goodwin, will you?"

"No, sir," said Colonel Flax, and then the General laughed.

"Look at old Flax," he said. "I've run him ragged, haven't I? Don't worry; it's almost over, son."

Then I saw Oscar standing in the doorway, and Mel Goodwin saw him too.

"Come, dear," he said to Helen, "soup's on."

THE house was very quiet after they all had left, but Mel Goodwin's personality was still in the house. There were echoes of it everywhere, and everything was at loose ends.

"Sid," Helen said, "what do you think he's going to do?"

"You know what he's doing to do. He put on his 'A' uniform after lunch," I said.

"I don't mean that," Helen said. "What do you think he's going to do about everything?"

"I don't know," I said. "I don't care right now."

"Well, I care," Helen said. "I wish people wouldn't come here and throw their personalities around until I begin to worry about them."

"You shouldn't have done that about the orchids," I told her.

"I couldn't help it," she answered, and she laughed, and neither of us spoke for a while.

"I wonder why Gilbert Frary sent you so many orchids," I said.

"Maybe we'd better think about that, too," she answered, but the personality of Melville Goodwin was still with us.

Divine justice weighs the sins of the cold-blooded and the sins of the warm-hearted in different scales.
—DANTE.

Once when the dust of events had settled, Mel Goodwin told me quite a lot about that evening he spent with Dottie Peale.

Knowing them both, I was able to make for myself a fairly accurate reconstruction of their meeting in much the same way that an archaeologist can make a model of some vanished Grecian shrine. Mel Goodwin told me about it—six weeks later, in one of his embarrassingly confidential moods. Though much of his narrative made me acutely uncomfortable, I still think it fell into an artistic frame instead of being just another errant night away from the reservation.

There had been a traffic jam on the West Side Highway, so that Henry and the Cadillac had been unable to bring the General to the Park Avenue entrance of the Waldorf before half past five o'clock, and this cut his timetable short, as he had arranged to meet Dottie at about six. He had decided to stay at the Waldorf out of loyalty to the name, though it was not the old Waldorf, and he could have taken an Army discount at some other hotel. He had on his A uniform, and, frankly, he looked pretty sharp. Someone who must have been a manager shook hands with him and took him up to his room and was sorry it was not a better one. It looked too good as it was, considering his budget, but he could stay for only a night because he would certainly have to check in next day at Washington. When he had left his kit in his room, he went downstairs to the florist's shop with an idea of buying Dottie some of those yellow orchids, but he decided against this because it was too late to have the flowers delivered, and he did not want to walk up Park Avenue carrying them in a box. He had a fixed desire to walk up Park Avenue.

I had described Dottie's house to him vaguely, but he thought that I had been exaggerating until he saw it, and he found himself making a whole new evaluation of everything when he saw the suit of armor and asked the butler if Mrs. Peale was at home.

"Yes, General Goodwin," the man said, "Mrs. Peale is expecting you. May I take your hat, sir?"

"Thanks," he said, and he handed Dottie's butler his cap and gloves and followed him up that broad, noiseless staircase.

"General Goodwin, madam," the man said.

...of course, it's electric!

PARTY FOOD FOR 5 OR 50

is no trick at all with a Westinghouse

America's Leading Roaster

Bring on the gang . . . dish up the food! This roaster takes quantity cooking right in stride. Turns out taste-treat dishes for fifty as easily as a full course dinner for four. No wonder more than a million happy owners call it "2 sq. ft. of cooking magic".

It's portable and compact too . . . cooks everything, plugs in anywhere. Comes equipped with exclusive Look-In lid, handy Lift-Out rack, Time-Temp Shelf and complete set of glass ovenware dishes . . . all at no extra cost.

See this famous Westinghouse Roaster-Oven at your retailer's and get set for years of trouble-free, work-free, carefree cooking. Westinghouse Electric Corp., Electric Appliance Division, Mansfield, Ohio.

ROASTER-OVEN ONLY $39.95 Prices subject to change

Accessories: Broiler-Grid, $7.95; Cabinet, $18.95; Timer, $10.95 plus tax

Give Electric Housewares..First Choice for every Gift Occasion

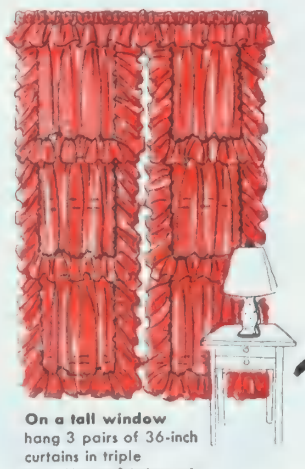
Cooks Complete Meal for eight or ten . . . all at one time.

Fries, Grills, Broils, Toasts, with convenient Broiler-Grid.

Convenient Cabinet, also Timer, Broiler-Grid . . . optional.

See TV's Top Dramatic Show . . . WESTINGHOUSE "STUDIO ONE". . . Every Week

YOU CAN BE SURE..IF IT'S Westinghouse



For a recessed window, use a double-width, 72-inch pair at center, half a single-width pair on each side. Under $7 the pair, single-width.

New ways with Combed Organdies

You can solve any window problem with Berkshire's versatile combed organdy curtains. Choose them in snowy white or any of eight luscious decorator colors especially selected by House & Garden to go with other home furnishings. You'll enjoy them season after season. Berkshire Curtains wash so easily and so beautifully in mild, lukewarm suds, you can freshen them safely and inexpensively over and over. A lasting finish keeps them crisp without starch.

Berkshire Curtains are the most beautiful organdies you can buy. They're extra-full and lavishly detailed with deep, picot-edged ruffles, high headings and ample rod slots. A complete window decoration for tall or short windows, wide or narrow.

See Berkshire Organdies in House & Garden colors and white at your favorite store or send the coupon below for information.

On a tall window hang 3 pairs of 36-inch curtains in triple tiers. Under $4 the pair.

Exclusively styled in white and 8 smart colors picked by House & Garden experts

Berkshire®

FINE CURTAINS

Producers of the finest combed fabrics for apparel and home furnishings.

NEW BOOKLET ONLY 10¢. Send for "New Ways With Windows," a fascinating new booklet showing 14 different window treatments. We will send you the name of nearest store selling Berkshire Curtains.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money if not as advertised therein

BERKSHIRE CURTAINS,
Box LJ-951, New York, N.Y.

I enclose 10¢. Please send me a copy of "New Ways With Windows" and name of nearest store selling Berkshire Curtains.

Name_____

Address_____

Dottie was waiting for him in that same monster salon with the travertine-marble fireplace and the Italian chairs and tapestries in which she had received me when I had returned from the Paris bureau, and I remembered what she had said to me while I was still looking around at the sights. "Very cinquecento, isn't it?" Dottie had said.

"Yes," I had answered, "unspoiled Borgia with patina."

Some months after the Armistice, Mel Goodwin had been to Italy on a two weeks' leave and so he was able to take it without gulping, he told me. She held out both her hands to him and turned her cheek for him to kiss it. In a way it was half formal and half informal. He did not know exactly what the technique should be, since that butler was still there.

"Oh, Mel," she said, "it's been ages. Albert, would you tell Bernard to bring around the car?"

"What's the car for?" Mel Goodwin asked.

"You don't mind if I show you off a little, do you, darling?" she said. "Only cocktails at Twenty-one and then a quick dinner at the Stork and then we'll come back home."

He was glad that he had thought to bring some cash with him.

"It sounds all right to me," he said.

She looked up at him. "I had completely forgotten you were so handsome," she said.

"Why didn't you answer any of my letters, Dot?" he asked.

"Because I never dreamed that anything could ever be the way it was," she said.

"Well, it is the way it was," he said.

"Darling," she said, "let's both be surprised for a minute, shall we?"

"All right," he said, "that isn't such a bad idea."

He had thought of her a great deal and there had been plenty of time for that sort of thinking, but he had forgotten what he called her resilience and her loveliness. Of course she was dressed for the occasion, but if she had been dressed in coveralls like an Army nurse they would have been becoming. Her gown was made of plum-colored taffeta that was tight on top with a long billowing skirt that rustled, every fold and flounce of which fell into formation. Everything about her was always a unit, even the diamond clip and bracelet. She always wore clothes the way a regular wore a uniform. You always thought of the man first if the whole uniform fitted properly, and that was the way he thought of Dottie.

"Do you like it?" she asked him.

"Like what?" he answered.

"Why, my Velentina frock," she said. "I like the noise it makes when it swishes."

"That's right," he said, "it sounds like a wave running up a beach."

He was thinking of a wave on the windward side of the island of Oahu, where the crowd used to go sometimes for swimming picnics.

"Darling," Dottie said, "I'd almost forgotten how nice it is to see a man again. I don't mean anyone in pants—I mean a man." She pointed to a record player that was finished like the Italian furniture. "Turn on that thing over there, will you? I was playing it this afternoon."

WHEN he pulled the switch down the music was that old waltz from The Chocolate Soldier.

"Aren't you going to give me some of this dance," she asked, "my hero?"

"Don't kid me, Dot," he said when he put his arm around her.

My Hero was still playing when Albert handed him his gloves and cap.

I had been exposed to a few of those evenings myself, and I particularly remembered one occasion on which Dottie had taken me out to see the town. It was during my brief vacation from the Paris bureau, and on a night when Henry Peale was suffering h head cold. I had never had the sort of to go to the places where Dottie war go that night, and I was lucky enough t a position to tell her so, so I had sug that we go somewhere in the Village.

"Now, Sid," she said, "of course I you can't afford it. Take this, and if v through it, I'll pass you some more the table." And she handed me a pac crisp new bills and told me to be sure t ten dollars to the captain, at which p told her that I was not a gigolo. "Now, she said, "I know how confusing this you because it was for me once. Stop silly and remember that some people with different-colored chips, and consid social experiment, darling."

I FINALLY let her give me the money t for the party on a social-experimental and because she was anxious to show m she was living. I had never been so awa fore of the uneven distribution of wealth I learned a lot from the experience. I could see with malicious pleasure wha environment did to me. "It will come the next time," she said. "Naturally it moralizing, but why shouldn't I deb you?"

That was exactly why there had been a next time. I could see the corrosiv fluence of playing with chips which not own, but then I had known Dotti so long that we were able to discuss the ject without the least embarrassment.

In many ways problem must been even more fusing for Mel G win, since rela ships are never pletely parallel. had never seen of New York high on an Army offi pay with a wife two kids who nee food and clothing had been to once on a big b out two days be he had sailed "Torch," but he had left the crowd be they reached the Stork. "21" was enlar now and there were all those iron jockey front of it that had once been hitching po He had never dreamed of going to the there with anyone like Dottie Peale anc had never dreamed that people would k who he was when she introduced him. So how Dottie made it all like something those movies you kept seeing at the offic clubs.

They had double Martinis—he rem bered that she always liked Martinis—a he looked around the room at the chec tablecloths and the hurrying waiters.

"Mel," Dottie said, "why didn't you co back sooner?"

"Well," he said, "there are still pieces an army over there, and I kept thinking Russkies might act up. I like it with an arm It's simpler."

"Do you think I'm complicated?" asked him.

"Yes," he answered, "but I don't mi some complications."

"What are you going to do now you back?" she asked him.

"Dot," he said, "I wish I knew. I do know what they can do with Joes like n now we're back."

"Oh, Mel," she said, "you don't sou happy."

Dottie was the only woman he had ev known who could be completely femini and still talk like a man. He seemed to ha known her always by the time they we half through dinner. She was interested everything he said—not that he could member clearly what they talked abo except that most of the conversation w about the relationship between men a women and what made such things happ

"You know," he remembered that s said, "every woman wants to make a m happy. That's all she ever wants."

WHEN IN ROME

The citizens of Rome fasted on Saturday, but the citizens of Milan feasted on Saturday. St. Augustine, who traveled widely, was puzzled and consulted St. Ambrose when he arrived at Milan. "That's simple," was the solution of St. Ambrose. "When I am here in Milan I don't fast on Saturday; but when I am in Rome, I do as the Romans do."

—DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.

SAVE UP TO 1/2
on Lovely New BROADLOOM
RUGS

Send us Your Old Rugs, Clothing

It's All So Easy! Write today for the big Free Olson Rug Catalog (28 model rooms in color) that tells how your materials are picked up at your door and shipped at our expense to the Olson Factory, where . . .

By the Scientific Olson Process we sterilize, shred, merge materials of all kinds — reclaim the valuable wools, etc., then bleach, picker, card, spin, redye and weave lovely, deep-textured, new, Two-Sided . . . .

OLSON RUGS

—in rug sizes for all needs up to 16 feet seamless, and any length, in:

Solid Colors	18th Century	Embossed
Two-tone	Early American	Effects
Tweed Blends	Oriental Designs	Ovals

FACTORY-TO-YOU!

We Guarantee to please, or pay for your material. Almost 3 million customers. We never employ Agents or sell thru stores.

Chicago New York San Francisco

Orders Completed in a Week

Mail Coupon or 1c Postcard for—

FREE CATALOG IN COLORS

OLSON RUG CO. R-38 CHICAGO 41, ILL.

Please mail big Olson Rug Catalog Free to—

Name_____

Address_____

Town_____ State_____

©ORC

Somehow she brought back to his mind all sorts of things he had forgotten, things about the Point and about when he was a kid, and then they began remembering things that had happened in Paris.

"It was all just something off the map, Dot," he said, "like the fourth dimension or the Einstein theory or something."

"Mel, dear," she said, "do you think we're off the map right now?"

"Yes," he said, "because it can't last, Dot."

"Why can't it?" she asked.

"Why, look at you," he said, "and look at me."

"It might," she said. "I'm looking."

When the waiter brought the check, he brought a pencil with him, and naturally he placed them before Mel Goodwin. What with champagne and the caviar and everything, it was lucky he had brought that loose cash.

"Hand it over and let me sign it. It's my party," Dottie said. "There used to be a song about it, didn't there?—'When the waiter came she simply signed her name; that's the kind of a baby for me.'"

The future must have hung in the balance, and the difference between Mel Goodwin and me was that he lived by regulation.

"Not my kind of baby, Dot," he said.

The strange part of it was that she seemed surprised, which rather offended him until suddenly she looked wistful.

"It's awfully nice to feel helpless again," Dottie said; and then one final thing that Melville Goodwin told me: "Why can't things be like this always?"

I HAD no way of knowing that Mel Goodwin's life and mine were each moving to an almost simultaneous crisis. When I thought of Mel Goodwin at all in the next few days, I simply thought of him as being in Washington caught up again in his own routine.

Actually, I had not been paying enough attention to my own affairs. As I told Helen, I had professional pride, such as it was. I had never expected to be a radio commentator, but now that I was one, I wanted to be a good one. I was tired of being only a front and a piece of property. I was delighted to have the assistance of an expert script writer like Art Hertz, but I was beginning to wish to have a final say myself on the writing. I had noticed that Art Hertz sometimes exhibited pain when I made suggestions or asked for a few minor changes.

I should have seen earlier that Art and everyone else on the program knew something that I did not. I should have gathered, I suppose, from Art's manner that I was not as essential to him as I had been, but at the time I was exhilarated with a sense that I was beginning to pull more of my own weight in the boat and that things in the studio were going pretty well. A good aspect of the situation was the fact that Gilbert Frary had left suddenly for the West Coast without asking me again to accompany him, and with Gilbert away, I was not quite the Charlie McCarthy I had been around the studio.

About the middle of October at four in the afternoon I was sitting in the elaborate office which the company had supplied for me, going over Art's revised notes, when the door from Miss Maynard's office opened suddenly and a tall, youngish man, whom I did not know, peered in. This would not have happened if Miss Maynard had been outside, but she had just brought me some Teletype copy.

"Oh," he said, and he had a fine sincere voice that reminded me of my own, "excuse me. I didn't know anyone was here," and then he was gone.

"Who was that?" I asked Miss Maynard, and I thought that Miss Maynard colored slightly.

"Why, don't you know him, Mr. Skelton?" Miss Maynard asked. "It's Mr. Alan Featherbee. He has the nine-o'clock-in-the-morning spot at Acme, the one that's called 'Alan Featherbee and the News.'"

I felt a twinge of unreasoning professional jealousy that is unavoidable in the show business, and then I suddenly remembered that in my latest conversation with Gilbert Frary

The LESTER GRAND PIANO is the Official Piano of the Philadelphia Orchestra

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

Best Buy of All

A piano is the finest investment you can make for family harmony and happiness. The genuine Betsy Ross Spinet is the finest buy you can make in a quality instrument renowned for beauty, performance and durability.

Built by the same family since 1888 . . . today's models are unsurpassed for tonal perfection . . . featuring Lester's new Amplified Tone that gives added richness, volume and resonance.

Dampp-Chaser equipped . . . only Lester offers this remarkable moisture control feature.

See the newest models now; your dealer will arrange terms.

Priced from $693.00; model pictured $873.00 f.o.b. Lester, Pa.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company Inc., builders of world famed Lester Grand Pianos.

ONE name quality price a beautiful piano with magnificent [illegible]

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

mail this coupon for illustrated booklet

LESTER PIANO MANUFACTURING CO., Inc., LESTER 13, PA.
Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____

Zone No _____ State_____ LHJ-6M

Foreign Representatives. H. A. ASTLETT CO., Broadway, New York 8, N Y

"Have you seen the waistline on the new fall dresses?

"They're like this . . .

"But don't worry. The new fall foundations are designed to give us the new, small waist . . .

"Just let's make sure the foundations we choose are comfortable as well as fashionable—and are knit or woven with

Lastex
Reg U S Pat Off

the miracle yarn that makes things fit

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
Rockefeller Center • New York

...e had mentioned that Featherbee was the one who spoke his own commercials.

"Well, what's he doing here?" I asked.

"I really don't know, Mr. Skelton," Miss Maynard said. "Mr. Featherbee has been around here a good deal during the last few days. Just visiting, I suppose."

"Oh," I said, "are they going to take him away from Acme?"

"I really wouldn't know, I'm sure, Mr. Skelton," Miss Maynard said.

I wanted to ask Miss Maynard some further questions, but I had learned with studio secretaries that there was seldom that loyalty from the bottom up, to which Mel Goodwin had so often alluded. At least I had the common sense then to suspect the possible shadow of a coming event.

Before Miss Maynard could reach her office the door was opened again by one of those nice boys in those military-academy uniforms with all the braid.

"Forgive me, Mr. Skelton," he said. "A gentleman at the floor reception desk would like to see you personally, and your secretary's telephone did not answer."

"All right," I said, "who is it?"

"Captain Robert Goodwin, sir," the page boy said.

"I can see him and find what he wants, Mr. Skelton," Miss Maynard said, "and I'll really see this doesn't happen again."

"Never mind," I told her. "Tell him to come in as long as he's here."

I was back again in the life and times of Melville A. Goodwin. I had never imagined that I might see his older son, nor could I understand why he wanted to call. When Miss Maynard showed him in and left us and closed the door, it occurred to me that I had never received any stranger in my new private office.

Robert Goodwin smiled, and it was the Melville Goodwin smile on a younger face. He said:

"I called up your home in Connecticut and was able to reach Mrs. Skelton. I hope you'll forgive the intrusion. I'm only in New York for a few hours."

He stood as if he were entering an office in the Pentagon. He was in a civilian suit that was too reddish brown and tweedy. No West Pointer had ever looked right to me in a business suit.

"Sit down," I said. "I thought you were a lieutenant. I didn't know you were a captain."

"It just came through the other day, sir," he answered. "This really is quite a place you have here."

"That's right," I said. "I wish your father could have seen it. It might have built me up with him."

WHEN he smiled, the corners of his eyes wrinkled exactly like Mel Goodwin's. He looked very much like Mel Goodwin except that he was taller. I could tell from previous experiences with other younger officers that he had been in action many times. Action always left an indefinable mark on any face. Lines were already apparent around the corners of his mouth, but they were not deep as yet. Some parts of him still looked as Mel Goodwin must have looked when he was fresh from the Point.

"It was nice seeing your father," I said. "We had quite a time up at my place with those magazine people."

"We're looking forward to seeing that piece about him," Robert Goodwin said. "Mother can hardly wait. We all hope the old man didn't put his foot in his mouth."

"Don't worry, he did fine," I told him. "I suppose he's right in the groove now and settling down in Washington."

Captain Goodwin looked straight at me, with the same cool, considering look his father could assume. "I wouldn't say the boss was quite settled down yet, sir," he said. "He's got some leave, and he and mother are still sort of camping out with some old friends in Alexandria, Colonel and Mrs. Joyce. My brother Charlie's up at the Point. I'm going to drop up there to take a look at him this evening. You see, I've just got orders to go to Benning—instructor in Recoilless Weapons." The ice was breaking slightly, and he looked more at ease. "We played with those things some in the Pacific," he went on, "but the word is they're better now, but I sort of wish I could stick around Washington. I'd sort of like to get to know the old man again. I haven't seen him for quite a while."

Obviously he was planning to talk about the old man, now that the ground was cleared.

"Maybe you've noticed, sir," he said, "or maybe it's only my own impression, that the old man is sort of restless."

"Everyone's restless sometimes," I told him.

"Yes, I know," he said.

He glanced at the electric clock on the office wall with its moving second hand, and I wondered whether it gave him the same inevitable sense of pressure that it had always given me. "Maybe I'd better lay it on the line, sir," he said. "The old man was saying the other night that you were the only noncombat civilian officer he knew who ever made full sense to him in a service way. Now if the old man said that about you, I guess that means you sort of like my old man. I've seen a lot of generals, sir, because I was Priestly's aide for a while on Saipan, and do you know when I looked my father over the other day in Washington, I was surprised? I may be prejudiced, but I think he's got what it takes, all the way around. I have a hunch he can handle anything right through a four-star job."

As I waited for him to go on, I found myself beginning to think that he possibly might be right. In the beginning I had discounted Melville Goodwin's capabilities, which were always getting lost behind his simplicities, but somehow Goodwin was always better than you thought he was going to be.

Robert Goodwin glanced at me, but I did not answer. "There's nothing in this world quite so naked as a general," he said. "He's up there where everybody can see him, including his private life, from every angle, and he must be right; he can't be wrong. Well, the old man's right up there just now, and I don't want to see him fall flat on his face."

The room, like all the studio offices, was carefully soundproofed, and the silence all around us was distinctly artificial.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

For Chris, Exploring

By Alma Roberts Giordan

You have learned to use a door, and that's a thing Sufficient to your day. How strange, how grand
To turn a knob and cut into a wall
That opens on the early-morning spring
Of your delight. Poised in its arch, you stand
An instant only, drinking in newness all
About you. Trembling and eager, you stride forth
On stocky legs to span this virgin world
Discovered by yourself.
Triumphantly
Your arms embrace the winds of south and north;
Your fingers reach for poppy flags
unfurled—
Chortling, you bring a handful back to me.
Opening and shutting, solemnly intent,
In a study of doors this day will be well spent.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

"What makes you think he's going to ... on his face?" I asked.

Robert Goodwin's face framed itself ... that mirthless service smile. "Listen," ... said, "what about this dame he keeps seeing in New York?"

"Keeps seeing?" I repeated.

"That's right, sir," Robert Goodwin ... "He's commuting up here all the time from Washington."

"How do you happen to know about th..." I asked him.

HIS lips wrinkled again in that mirthless service smile. "I wouldn't say the old man was exactly a subtle character, would you, sir? He's talked to me about the dame. He's one of those people who always have to talk to somebody. They've been seen around places. Everyone likes a good story when it's on a general, sir."

"Now, look," I said, and I sounded as cautious as a confidential family lawyer, "don't you think you're exaggerating?"

"Maybe," he answered, "but then, so is everybody else."

I wished he did not act as though I were irresponsible, but I could feel his cool accusing glance.

"Now look," I began, "these things happen sometimes."

"Yes, sir," he answered, "but they ought not to happen to the old man right now.

"Have you tried speaking to your father?" I asked.

"Yes, sir," he said, "I brought it up last night and it only made the old man mad. Have you ever tried to talk to him?"

"Yes," I said, "I've tried."

We sat in silence for a while.

"Well," Robert Goodwin said, "somebody's got to do something. What about Mrs. Peale?"

"Well," I answered, "what about her?"

He sat up straighter and gripped his knee with his heavy fingers. "Maybe she really likes the old man," he said. "Maybe she doesn't realize how this sort of thing might hurt him, from the service point of view. I mean. I think I ought to meet her and have a talk with her."

It was so exactly what someone of his age should have thought of, clear and logical and completely useless.

"Listen," I told him, "I don't think that things are ever helped by talking."

"Well," he said, "I don't see how sitting still will help either, sir. Would you consider going with me?"

"I think she'd like it better," I answered, "if you went alone."

"Would you mind telephoning her and tell her I'm coming over?" he said.

There were a number of things I might have said about Dottie Peale, but somehow they seemed to have all been spoken, wordlessly, already, and I asked Miss Maynard to get Mrs. Henry Peale for me at her private number. It was five o'clock, and she would probably be at home, and it turned out that she was.

"Why, Sid, darling," she said. "Where are you?"

"I'm at the office," I said.

"Well, it's a good place for you to be under the circumstances," she said.

"What circumstances?" I asked.

"Oh," she answered, "not over the telephone, darling, but there is something I'd like to tell you someday soon."

"Well," I said, "Robert Goodwin's here with me right now. You know, Melville Goodwin's son. He's here and he'd like to see you."

There was a pause, and I almost thought that she was going to ask me why.

"Why, I'd love it," she said. "Tell him to come right over if he'd like to—and Sid?"

"Yes?" I said.

"Does he look like Mel?"

"Yes," I said, "he looks a lot like Mel."

"Then tell him to hurry over," Dottie said.

"It's all cleared," I said to Robert Goodwin, "and you know if there's anything else I can do ——" But of course there was nothing that anyone could do.

(To be Continued)

...my Choice of a lifetime

... my very own Wallace Sterling Silver. You too, will select a Wallace pattern proudly—turn it slowly, to fully appreciate its sculptured "Third Dimension Beauty"... exquisite in front... in profile... in back. Yes, you'll choose Wallace with loving care and affection, for it is truly the silver of your dreams.

Famed designer, William S. Warren, created these exquisite Wallace patterns in "Third Dimension Beauty." He gave each design the full-formed quality of true sculpture. Each piece is lovely not only in front, but in profile and in back as well. Be sure to see these Wallace patterns—the only sterling silver designs with "Third Dimension Beauty." Six piece place settings from $32.50 to $43.50 including tax.

Please turn to page 216 to see other Wallace Sterling Silver patterns

LLACE SILVERSMITHS, WALLINGFORD, CONNECTICUT... Since 1835... WALLACE SILVERSMITHS, TORONTO, CANADA Copyright 1951

The right note for a September party — molded sea-food salad, hot baked zucchini, toast sticks.

STUART

Conversation piece

By RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

A DINNER menu built around one cold and one hot dish seems to me to strike exactly the right note for a September party, when the weather is usually warm but a promise of autumn is in the air. So here I go on an end-of-summer spree, hoping to convince you that my idea is sound.

We'll begin with hors d'oeuvres, and have enough variety so that they will constitute a first course. This, by the way, is a very good stunt. It makes the meal complete and eliminates the problem of a first course at the table. Tiny marinated beets, bologna wedges, composed of alternate layers of bologna and a cream-cheese mixture, and caviar-and-sour-cream canapés will make up our hors d'oeuvre tray. I used this combination (Continued on Page 94)

First-course hors d'oeuvres served in the living room, tea-wagon ea

Wouldn't you know?

What stopped you here? Was it the come-and-get-it texture of this tall, proud cake? Or was it a picture of the joy such a cake would bring to your family? Whatever it was, don't stop now. This cake can be yours without even drawing a deep breath. You just go around to your grocer's and get Pillsbury White Cake Mix in the tidy blue-and-white package. All you add is milk (and some grated chocolate). Now look at the picture once more. Wouldn't you know this cake was made from a Pillsbury Cake Mix? Wouldn't you?

Chocolate Chip Cake. Prepare white cake as directed on Pillsbury White Cake Mix package. Fold in ½ cup finely shaved semi-sweet chocolate before pouring into pans. Frost with chocolate frosting.

Just add milk—

These are complete mixes. Milk is all you add—no eggs, flavoring or ex[illegible]s of any kind required.

Pillsbury BEST Mixes

Remember—
You and Ann Pillsbury can make a great team

Pillsbury CAKE MIXES

WHITE AND CHOCOLATE FUDGE

★SUMMER SALAD SUPREME

Topped with mayonnaise, or glistening with French dressing, this salad of chilled tomato, cucumbers, and Dole Pineapple Chunks is an alluring creation. Those spoon-sized cuts of Hawaiian-grown pineapple—so tender and chunk-full of flavor—are a golden touch to any combination of salad-makings.

DOLE PINEAPPLE JUICE

DOLE hits—

★HAM LAYER LOAF

Something new with canned luncheon meat—and good! Cut the meat clear through in 6 slices. Then pour Dole Crushed Pineapple between the slices and around the meat. Sprinkle with brown sugar and bake 30 minutes at 350°. Dole Crushed has extra richness because it's crisp-cut to keep that real Hawaiian taste.

with a hint of Hawaii!

P. S. TRY DOLE FRUIT COCKTAIL

★REGAL RINGS

You "bake" these regal rings in your refrigerator. Quick and easy, too, for you put a chocolate cookie spread generously with whipped cream between slices of Dole Pineapple. Into the refrigerator for a few hours and presto! a party dessert. Dole does it like nothing else, of course—for it's Hawaii's own, Hawaiian-grown!

★ By Patricia Collier, DOLE HOME ECONOMIST

DOLE • 215 Market Street, San Francisco 6, California

Conversation piece

(Continued from Page 92)

last week for a fairly large buffet party and I assure you I had no complaints and practically nothing left on the trays—which is as desired.

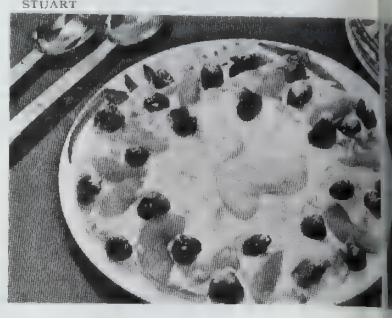
The cold dish will be molded sea-food salad, which looks almost too good to eat. It combines shrimp, avocado and cucumber and fillets of haddock, all done in layers—a production you'll be proud of, but you won't find it difficult to do. Besides its glamorous appearance and wonderful taste, it has the added advantage of being decidedly inexpensive for a sea-food salad.

Our hot dish will be a casserole of baked zucchini. Bacon and onions—quite a lot of both—are involved in this recipe, as easy to make as it is good to eat. The zucchini can be prepared for final baking the day before if that suits your schedule.

Deviled bread sticks will provide something out of the groove in the staff-of-life department, and are they good! They are made by coating the sticks of bread with a sharp-tasting butter sauce and then drying them in a slow oven until they are crisp.

Now dessert, and peaches Romanoff is the answer. The custard in which the fruit is tossed is the same as for strawberries Romanoff, and I hope you'll keep this recipe on file for the strawberry season. Whichever fruit you use, the result is sure to be a great success.

We'll plan for six people, but you can squeeze in an extra couple if you like. That old Indiana Ruth is never going to suggest having just barely enough food to go around. Buffet or at the table service—it makes no difference with this menu.



MARINATED BEETS

Get canned tiny whole beets. They aren't perfectly uniform in size, but very few of them are too big for a good healthy bite. The ones that are too big should be cut in half. If you can't get the tiny beets, cut large ones into bite-size cubes. Allow at least three or four for each person to be served. Put drained beets or cubes of beet in a quart jar and pour over them a mixture of ½ cup vinegar, ¼ cup salad oil, 1 teaspoon salt and 4 firmly packed tablespoons light brown sugar. Put lid on jar, shake well and store in refrigerator. This should be done at least two days in advance so that the sweet-sour taste of the dressing will penetrate the beets, and the shaking should be repeated frequently. To serve, drain beets and spear each with a colored toothpick.

BOLOGNA WEDGES

Get 8 slices large bologna cut a little less than ¼" thick. The large bologna usually measures about 5" in diameter. To ¾ pound cream cheese add 2 tablespoons cream, and work into a smooth paste. Add ⅔ cup finely chopped sweet pickles and ⅓ cup finely chopped carrots and mix thoroughly. Spread a slice of bologna with a thick coating of the cheese mixture and top with another slice. Repeat these layers twice more, finishing with a slice of bologna. This will mean 4 slices of bologna with 3 layers of the cheese. Press firmly together, wrap in wax paper and repeat the routine with the other 4 slices. If

STUART

Dessert is peaches Romanoff, but o if you want to make lifelong frien you prefer to have the wedges smaller, slices of bologna and 2 thick layers of c mixture. Store in coldest part of refriger but do not freeze. Before serving, cut slender pie-shape wedges. Use a very thin-bladed knife for the cutting and it off with a damp cloth after each

When you arrange your hors-d'oeuvre or trays, lay wedges on their sides. The be lapped over one another, but be sur layers show because they look so pretty

CAVIAR CANAPÉS

To make bite-size canapés, cut small ro of thinly sliced rye bread and spread softened butter or margarine. This pro them from becoming soggy from the cream. To 1 cup light sour cream add 1 spoon lemon or lime juice and 4 tablesp very finely chopped onion. Don't grat onion, because that will make the mix too wet. Top each round generously with sour cream and onion, and put a s quantity of caviar in the center of each

If you want larger canapés, get a lo party rye bread and slice it very thin. P rye is a long, quite slender loaf, and sin is available in the small town where I d shopping, I hope that means that it is g ally available. Make the same mixtur sour cream, onion and lemon or lime j and add caviar to taste. It won't look pr at this stage, but we'll fix that. After slices have been spread with butter or garine, cover them with the caviar mix and sprinkle all over with minced par

MOLDED SEA-FOOD SALAD

Get 2 pounds frozen raw shrimp, wash t oughly and plunge them into rapidly bo water to which 1 cup vinegar and 2 t spoons salt have been added. Cook over heat 10 minutes. Drain, cover with water, drain again and remove shells veins. Frozen cooked or canned shrimp be substituted for the raw. Get 1 po fresh or frozen fillets of haddock, put t in top of double boiler and cook over bo water until firm and white—about 45 utes. Flake the fish, discarding any bits, and add 1 tablespoon finely chop onion, 3 tablespoons chopped pimiento
1 tablespoon mono sodium glutamate.
1 large or 2 small avocados, dip at once vinegar diluted with water so that won't change color, and cut into quite s pieces. Chop ½ cucumber into small pi and add to avocado. Soften 4 envel unflavored gelatin in 1 cup cold water 5 minutes. Add 2¾ cups boiling water stir until gelatin is dissolved. Add 1 envel chicken-bouillon powder or 1 chicken-bo lon cube, ½ cup sugar, 2 teaspoons and 1¼ cups white vinegar. Cider vin can be used, but it gives the aspic an an color, which isn't quite so pretty for this

Marinated beets, bologna wedges, caviar-and-sour-cream canapés—and no complaints.

...we're all set except for the mold. I ...oblong glass baking dish that meas... ...long, 5" wide and 3½" deep and has ...ty of 7 cups. This is a standard size, ...ay have the same thing. In case your ... a little larger, I've allowed some ...spic which can be added to the final ... flaked fish. It is important to use a ...rent mold so that you can see what ...doing at each stage.

... aspic in mold to the depth of 1" and ... refrigerator. Set the rest of aspic in ...ter, but don't let it jell. When aspic ...l has thickened but is not set, put a ... row of evenly sized shrimp, curved ...down, in the bottom of mold. Put ... as close together as possible and press ...down firmly. When you are satisfied ...e rows look even, hold the mold up so ...ou can see the bottom. You may need ...ist positions a bit, and at this stage it ... done easily. Remember, this double ... shrimp will form the top of your salad ...ou want it to be as perfect as possible. ... in enough aspic barely to cover the ... and set mold ...igerator.

...v add 1¼ cups ...to avocado and ...ber and set it in ...ater to thicken. ...dd 1¼ cups as... flaked fish, but ...at stand at room ...erature. As soon ...ic on shrimp is ...add the avocado ...re, working it ...a smooth, even ... Again put mold ...efrigerator, and ...the avocado ...is firm make the ... layer of the ...d fish. Obviously ...is a day-before ...because the salad ... stand in the re...rator overnight ...become reliably

...o serve, unmold ... platter and gar... with the rest of ...shrimp, slices of ...l-cooked egg and ...uce cups filled ... finely chopped ...ry. Have a bowl ...ayonnaise beside ...salad.

...KED ZUCCHINI

...ct 2 pounds of as...der zucchini as ...r grocer or garden ... to offer. Wash but do not peel, and cut ... chunks or slices, depending on how large ...zucchini are.

...ut ⅓ pound sliced bacon into pieces ...ut 1½" square, and thinly slice 3 medi...large onions and separate into rings. Put ...n in skillet over medium heat, and when ...egins to sizzle add onions and cook 5 ...utes, stirring frequently.

...ut a layer of zucchini chunks in casserole, ...kle with salt, pepper and a little dried ...resh sweet basil and dot with catchup. ...er with a layer of onions and bacon and ...at layers until casserole is filled. Save a ... pieces of bacon and onion rings for top ... dot with catchup.

...bout 45 minutes before serving time, put ...erole, covered, in moderate—350° F.— ...and cook until zucchini is tender. When ...der, turn oven very low until you are ...y to serve.

DEVILED TOAST STICKS

...e bread 1" thick and cut slices into strips ...vide. Remove crusts.

...Melt ¼ pound butter or margarine in a ...et and add 1 small clove garlic, very ...y minced. Simmer a couple of minutes ... blend in 1 teaspoon herb mustard, ...ablespoon beefsteak sauce, 1 teaspoon ...rcestershire sauce and 1 tablespoon poppy ...ds. Dip bread sticks lightly into this mix... ture, place them on a heavy cooky sheet or griddle and bake in a very low oven until they are crisp. Make ahead of time and reheat before serving.

PEACHES ROMANOFF

Blend 2 tablespoons cornstarch with ½ cup orange juice and cook in top of double boiler over direct heat until thick and bubbling. Cool. Beat 6 egg yolks with rotary beater until lemon colored, add 1 cup sugar and beat some more. Stir in 1 cup orange juice—or, if you prefer, 1 cup sherry—and pour this mixture into cornstarch and orange juice in double boiler. Stir well and again beat with rotary beater until the thick cornstarch mixture is thoroughly blended with the liquids. Place over boiling water and cook, stirring constantly, until thick—about 8 minutes. Cool and store in refrigerator.

As near serving time as possible, peel 2½ pounds fresh peaches, preferably tart ones, and dip at once into a water-and-ascorbic-acid or water-and-lemon-juice solution to prevent discoloration. Cut into fairly thick slices. If available, have a pint of strawberries for a garnish, or substitute pitted bing cherries for strawberries. Beat ½ pint heavy cream until stiff and fold it into the custard. Reserve some extra-pretty slices for a garnish and add the rest of the peaches to the custard, tossing them well. Heap in center of a cold serving platter and garnish with peach slices and strawberries or cherries dipped in powdered sugar. Keep in refrigerator until ready to serve.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Rising Wind

By Hannah Kahn

We lie together silently and still
With fingers interlocked against the night;
There is no stir or movement to the flight
Our bodies take . . . no summit to the hill.
Tentatively I turn my head until
It rests upon your shoulder, for the light
That filters from the window is too bright,
And I must shield myself against my will.

This pattern long repeated by my hand,
My hand that knows each curve your body makes,
Is stamped indelibly upon my palm . . .
And neither you nor I can understand
The pulse by which the heart endures or breaks
Or why the rising wind is sudden calm.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Service. A lot more than once I've talked about the value of a tea wagon as an aid to the hostess with little or no help. Its uses are endless, and when it comes to serving a first course of hors d'oeuvres in the living room, a wagon is ideal.

No matter how co-operative guests may be, there is that inevitable inertia about getting up and crossing the room to help themselves from an hors-d'oeuvre tray. Also, such meanderings are disruptive to good conversation. So you find yourself or your husband or both of you making the eternal rounds with plates of whatnots and waiting while one person at a time helps himself.

With a tea wagon loaded with the various appetizers, napkins and a stack of small plates, you're all set. After the first round, during which two or three people can help themselves amply at one time, you need only change the position of the wagon occasionally to be sure that everyone is supplied with what he wants.

Probably you all know the old story about the hostess who was passing hors d'oeuvres and a guest said, "I really shouldn't—I've already had three!" and she replied, "No, you've had seven—but who's counting?" If you have a cart it discourages counting, both on your part and the guests'.

But whether or not you have a wagon, the small plates are a great boon in cutting down on the passing routine. Plates can be filled and the dipping sauce added—we don't have any on this menu, but it's often present. Then guests can relax and the first course really enjoyed. Any meal that begins this well has a better-than-fair chance of ending with complete satisfaction. THE END

A Thrifty Meat so Good to Eat!

Who gives a hoot for arithmetic, or even girls like Mary, when there's a big, hearty MOR sandwich to dream of! That's real food.

The whole family goes for Wilson's MOR. Sugar-cured, tender pork shoulder meat, seasoned the Wilson way, it's the meat for any time and many uses . . . in sandwiches, sliced cold, fried, roasted. Be thrifty. Buy Wilson's MOR at your favorite store.

Breakfast Ready?

And how . . . fried MOR and eggs. Or creamed MOR on toast. So good. When there's time—serve pan-fried MOR with your favorite pancakes or waffles and syrup. Yum-m-m . . . and another yum.

Sandwich Lunch

Here's a "natural" . . . open face MOR sandwich with French fries and cole slaw. Other sandwich hunches: Chopped MOR and bacon . . . or, MOR and cheese. Slip under broiler for a "burger."

Not fancy, but good!

Spread chili sauce and brown sugar on two cans MOR. Bake at 350° F. for 15 min. Serves six. It's MEAT and it's easy. Or cover with luscious baked beans or corn. Real eating.

The Wilson label protects your table

How to make heavenly Peach Salad

Drain a No. 2½ can of cling peach halves, reserving ½ cup of the juice. Cut all but 2 of the halves into small pieces; cut the 2 halves into thick slices. If you use fresh peaches, you will need about 4 medium size. Soften 1 envelope gelatin in 3 tbsps. cold water. Dissolve in hot peach juice. Cool.

Soften one 8-oz. pkg. Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese and gradually blend in 1½ tbsps. lemon juice and ½ cup of Kraft Mayonnaise. Add ½ tsp. salt. In dishes like this, the delicacy and richness of Kraft Kitchen-Fresh Mayonnaise are supremely important. You need true mayonnaise at its finest.

Whip ½ cup heavy cream. Add cut-up peaches to cream cheese-mayonnaise mixture. Blend in cooled gelatin mixture and fold in whipped cream. Pour into 4 individual molds and chill until firm. Unmold on crisp leaf lettuce on salad plates. Garnish with maraschino cherries and the peach slices.

True mayonnaise at its finest!

Made solely of choice salad oil and eggs, fragrant vinegar and seasonings, Kraft's is true mayonnaise at its finest . . . luxuriously rich, with a most delightful flavor. If you haven't tried Kraft Mayonnaise, you've a happy surprise ahead!

Don't miss TV's most famous dramatic show! KRAFT TV THEATRE—every Wednesday evening, NBC-TV.

Kraft KITCHEN FRESH Mayonnaise

CHILD-CARE CENTERS

(Continued from Page 25)

nursery schools. Even when the mother is fortunate enough to be able to leave her child at a public center, where standards are high and fees reasonable, she must turn over a portion of her weekly wages for this service. But she does not pay the total cost. In California, where the average annual cost for one nursery-school child is $734, the state bears about two thirds of the expense. In Detroit, where the Common Council appropriated $170,000 of city funds last year, the total weekly cost per nursery-school child is $20. Fees from parents range, depending on family income, from $5 to $15 per week.

In Britain, even during the darkest period of the war, women with young children were never subject to compulsory service. Part-time work, piecework at home, and shifts that minimized the danger to the home were offered such mothers. But when mothers voluntarily entered the factory, the British Departments of Health and Education sought as best they could to provide adequate child care. Elementary schools were kept open from early morning to late evening, and nationally supported child-care centers were established. But finding efficient people to staff the centers remained an unsolved problem to the end of the war.

Senator Margaret Chase Smith recently expressed her belief that there are today many piecework jobs in the business office and the factory which the housewife can do at home during leisure hours. "Women do not have to go into war plants in order to make the maximum utilization of th tential contribution to the defense o country," she says, and it "is not rig mothers to place their children in the strangers in order to take jobs."

MOTHERS NEEDED AT HO

A church spokesman at the recent House Conference on Children and refused to go along with the theory Federal funds are needed for child-car ters. "The whole social security syst based on the family's staying at home said. Dr. DeNorval Unthank, of Por Oregon, also raised the question as to wh the wartime practice of drawing yo mothers into industry should be follow the prolonged crisis the country now "Maybe we should make stronger eff he said, "to keep mothers in the home ing their babies and young children."

Educators and experts in child care that the dangers of separation from na home environment may have lasting e upon the development of the child und years of age. They agree, with Dean Mill C. McIntosh, of Barnard College, that time of national danger, women must d erything possible to maintain and streng their homes as a center of inspiratio self-sacrifice, of devotion to the which our country is preparing to defen Government, colleges, executives . . . sh do everything possible to keep mothe young children in their homes."

SAN DIEGO'S PROBLEM

(Continued from Page 25)

because production is still tooled for men. The noise is worse. And as new employees, the mothers are more apt to get the night shift. In March, the aircraft companies asked and received permission from the California State Employment Service to work certain skilled women ten hours a day and fifty hours a week, contrary to state law.

Mothers who wish to leave their children someplace and can get them in one of San Diego's 22 state-supported child-care centers are lucky. They can go to work knowing the children will be adequately fed and reasonably safe. These youngsters have just about everything a child could wish except a few more hours a day with their mothers.

Equipment is good in the nursery schools the California Department of Education took over when Federal support to free mothers for defense work was discontinued in 1946. The centers in housing projects, built especially for child care, are as well arranged and cheerful as such institutions can be. They are bright with paint and varnish and chintz curtains. There are doll corners and playhouses; jungle gyms and slides outside; finger painting and age-graded music and stories inside; bathroom training on child-sized plumbing; charts on which conscientious teachers note bowel movements and appetites; regular naptimes on miniature Army cots set two feet apart for privacy; and balanced breakfasts for children whose mothers must punch an early time clock.

The less one has to do, the less time one finds to do it in.
—LORD CHESTERFIELD.

A mother who works eight hours has to be away from home ten, and since not all work schedules are alike, most of the centers for preschool children have to stay open twelve hours a day and some of them are open on Saturday. School-age children get extended day care, which means a place to come before school opens, a supervised lunch, and after-school play. During school vacations, full-day programs are planned.

In San Diego, it cost about $662.03 for the year ending March 31, 1951, to take care of a nursery-school child and $379.52 for a school-age child, about a third of which was paid by the parents in fees set by family inc and number of family members. Since program had been extended from yea year as a welfare aid to mothers who ha work to support their children, eligib was limited to one-parent families wit comes of $225 a month or less, and two- ent homes with combined incomes of $27 less. Teachers, nurses and GI students exempt from the income limitation, and der the sliding-fee scale, a few of them paying the total cost of care for their dren. Most of the children came from ho broken in World War II. In fact, the l number of lone mothers in California s the war has been one of the principal a ments for the continuance and expansio the centers.

You have to dig beneath the surfac find out what dawn-to-dusk separation f mother does to the litt children. Most of them just eventually, the d care teachers say, but e child reacts differently the initial wrench of ing mother walk out door.

Three-year-old Janie took the tack of p sive non-co-operation. Sucking her thu she sat in a corner of the big, noisy nurs room the first morning and watched mother cry.

"Come on, dear," her mother coaxed tween tears. "Take off your coat and and play with the nice children. Mother to go to work now."

No reaction. Mother tugged at her co but Janie pulled away and faced the wall

"If you don't take off your coat and ha mother threatened, "I won't come back you."

That evening, Janie was still sitting in t same corner, hugging the coat and ha teacher had finally removed. The su didn't last, of course. Nowadays, Janie almost too well adjusted. She does anythi teacher asks and allows more aggressive ch dren to snatch her playthings.

Dr. J. Richmond Barbour, Director, E reau of Child Guidance for San Dieg schools, thinks that two- and three-year-

(Continued on Page 98)

DON'T you believe that sometimes the simple facts about a product are worth a whole vocabulary of "come-hither" words?

You could say DEL MONTE Early Garden Peas taste like spring, are as tender as the dew.

But when you consider that women, for years, have been buying more of them than any other brand of peas—when you think how many other DEL MONTE Foods you prefer yourself—could anything else tell their story so convincingly?

Why not serve them tomorrow in the handsome dish below?

Del Monte BRAND Early Garden TRADE MARK Peas

—the brand that puts flavor first

Just the tastiest, tenderest peas—selected only from the flavor-filled middle sizes.

BUFFET SALAD RING

- 4 cups DEL MONTE Tomato Juice
- 2 tbsps. unflavored gelatin
- 1 cup sliced celery
- ½ cup chopped onion
- 2 tsps. sugar
- Fragment of bayleaf
- 1 whole clove
- ½ tsp. salt
- 1½ tsps. dried sweet basil
- Dash of cayenne
- 1 tbsp. lemon juice
- 3 hardcooked eggs, stuffed
- 2 #303 cans DEL MONTE Brand Early Garden Peas

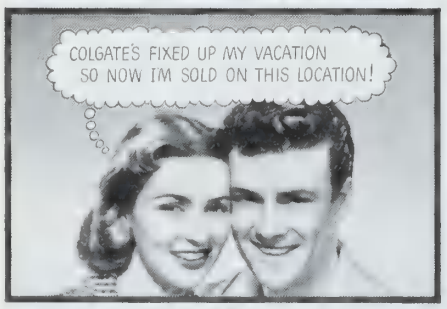
Soften gelatin in ½ cup of the tomato juice. Simmer remaining tomato juice with other ingredients except lemon juice, eggs and peas, for 15 minutes. Strain. Stir in lemon juice and softened gelatin. Set stuffed eggs, cut side down, in ½ cup of the aspic mixture in 5-cup ring mold. Chill. Add remaining aspic; chill till firm. Marinate DEL MONTE Early Garden Peas in French dressing. (And what peas for a salad! No immature, flavorless peas. No oversize, starchy ones. Just the tenderest, tastiest peas selected from all the flavor-filled middle sizes — and packed together for full natural flavor.) Turn out mold on plate, fill center with peas; garnish with salad greens. Serves 6 to 8.



READER'S DIGEST* Reported The Same Research Which Proves That Brushing Teeth Right After Eating with

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST

Reader's Digest recently reported the same research which proves the Colgate way of brushing teeth right after eating stops tooth decay best! The most thoroughly proved and accepted home method of oral hygiene known today!

Yes, and 2 years' research showed the Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever before reported in dentifrice history! No other dentifrice, ammoniated or not, offers such conclusive proof!

LATER—Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

Use Colgate Dental Cream
✓ To Clean Your Breath
✓ While You Clean Your Teeth—
✓ And Help Stop Tooth Decay!

*YOU SHOULD KNOW! While not mentioned by name, Colgate's was the only toothpaste used in the research on tooth decay recently reported in Reader's Digest.

(Continued from Page 96)

children should be with their mothers most of the time. "We won't know what the long nursery-school day does to the youngest children until they grow up and become parents themselves," he warns. But some San Diego children of eight and nine have been in the centers continuously since the age of two or three. It's possible to compare them with playmates who have had a more equal balance of home and school life.

Kindergarten teachers say that children who have been to nursery school are more advanced for their age and fit better into school routines than children who have been kept at home.

"They're more self-reliant," Mrs. Paula Hamm, vice-chairman of the state-wide parents' association, thinks. "But it's a regimented life for them," she adds. "My daughter got to know the schedule better than the teachers."

Most mothers are enthusiastic about the centers. A teacher whose four-year-old daughter attends nursery school wishes the day were a little shorter, but she thinks her child needs some group experience. "Even if I didn't have to work, I'd like to have her in nursery school from ten to four. Otherwise, she'd get too attached to me."

"We couldn't keep Tommy happy at home now that he's been in the center," another mother says. "He'd miss the finger painting and the other children. And I'd never stop to give him as good a lunch as he gets there."

Others feel that the separation has its good points. "I'm better friends with my daughter when I'm not with her all the time," one mother confesses.

"That's right," another mother agreed. "My children may miss me now, but they sure do appreciate me."

"I can't understand why my boy won't go to his grandmother's over Easter vacation," a third mother complained of her second-grade son. "He says he wants to stay with me."

Although their mothers don't realize it, obviously some of these children feel they've been abandoned. Almost every mother admits she's stumped when her child asks, "Mother, do you have to go to work again tomorrow?" Children are sent home immediately when they are sick. Occasionally a child will play sick to force his mother to stay home with him.

The teachers try to help children forced into group living at an all too tender age. They know better than to make a shy child take off his shoes in a room full of strangers at naptime. Sometimes they have to hold a child's hand to get him to go to sleep at all in the dormitory nap room.

Why are the mothers going back to work? One shrewd community leader thinks they are using defense work as an excuse to do what they've always wanted to do—get out of the housework and into something they consider more stimulating.

You find these cases in San Diego, as elsewhere. One mother of four, whose eleven-year-old son gets breakfast for the family after he's finished his paper route, says she's working on doctor's orders because it makes her "too nervous to stay home with the kids." A woman who looked forward to having a baby while doing her bit in defense industry during the war is astonished to discover that care of a small child bores her. She's glad to get back to an office.

But these are exceptions. Overwhelmingly the motive is purely and simply money—money to buy a higher standard of living for the children or maintain a standard threatened by the San Diego housing shortage and the high cost of living. San Diego is full of wives who saved enough while working during the war to meet the easy GI down payment on a house when their husbands came home. Now they need furniture. Wives of reservists must go to work or lose the family's equity. Wives of men in Korea are working to save enough to buy a house. Wives of men who were until recently unemployed feel both must make hay while jobs are available.

Recently, 250 child-care-center mothers told why they were working:

Husband's income insufficient	101
Supporting relatives	5
Buying furnishings	1
Buying home	10
Medical bills	25
Schooling—GI and other	41
Unspecified debts	16
Husband unemployed	5
Husband ill or invalid	16
Helping husband in business	8
Service husband's allotment too small	11
High rent on small income	6
Need large house for large family	5

Let's take the case of Mrs. Brown, an ex-Wave. Her husband is a chief petty officer in the Navy, making nearly $300 a month. In the East, the Navy assigned the Browns comfortable furnished quarters. Then came assignment to San Diego, where the Navy alone needs 40,000 housing units. The best Mrs. Brown could find was an unfurnished house for $75 a month. For the sake of their four-year-old son David they took it.

The loftiest endeavor toward common life is liberal democracy. It carries to the extreme the determination to have consideration for one's neighbor. Liberalism is that principle of political rights according to which the public authority, in spite of being all-powerful, limits itself and even attempts, at its own expense, to leave room in the state over which it rules for those to live who neither think nor feel as it does—that is, as do the stronger, the majority. Liberalism—it is well to recall this today—is the supreme form of generosity; it is the right which the majority concedes to the minorities, and hence it is the noblest cry that has ever resounded in this planet. It announces the determination to share existence with the enemy; more than that, with an enemy which is weak. It was incredible that the human species should have arrived at so noble an attitude, so paradoxical, so refined, so acrobatic, so antinatural. Hence it is not to be wondered at that this same humanity should soon appear anxious to get rid of it. It is a discipline too difficult and complex to take firm root on the earth. —ORTEGA Y GASSET: Mission of the University (Princeton University Press).

Rather than dissipate their savings, the Browns bought the most essential pieces of furniture on the installment plan, budgeting $90 for rent, telephone, gas, electricity and garbage disposal; $75 for food and milk; $61.44 for the car they had started buying in the East; and $65 for furniture and refrigerator payments. When Mr. Brown's father died, leaving them medical and funeral expenses, Mrs. Brown put David in a nursery center and took a job as a statistical typist.

The Browns have to get up at 6:30. With Navy precision, Mr. Brown makes the beds and dresses David while Mrs. Brown gets the breakfast and tries to clean up after it. Then he drives David to school and Mrs. Brown to her office. When he has shore duty, he can usually pick them up in the evening and help food-shop on the way home for dinner. All the housework has to be done evenings and week ends.

Mrs. Brown worries about the number of colds David has been having. For one thing, she loses pay when she has to stay home with him. Now that the Browns have two incomes, they are making too much money for David to stay in the center. Mrs. Brown plans to take a course at night so that David will qualify as the child of a GI student.

"Night school will be a hardship," she admits, "but I'd do anything to keep David in nursery school. Also, we feel this is an excellent opportunity for me to prepare myself for the future—the future being so uncertain these days."

So far, Mrs. Brown hasn't saved … money although she takes home $40 a … David's tuition and insurance will a… to $48.50 a month; her stenotype co… $22; lunches run to $20 a month; an… that the initial investment in clothes f… job is made, replacements and dry cle… will come to about $20 a month more.

Other San Diego budgets show tha… $80 and $90 a working mother clears… month usually goes for installment payr… on houses, cars, vacuum cleaners and … vision sets. One mother said she "ha… have" a television set to keep her s… home while she worked. Mothers of … than one child admit they aren't mak… thing, but many of them like the feeli… spendable cash in their own hands.

They're paying dearly in physical wea… tear for what they take home. Accor… to a recent survey of home activities … average child-care-center mother rises … tween 5:30 and 6 in the morning, make … beds, slicks up the house, packs lunches, … prepares breakfast with little or no help … her husband. She has to travel fiftee… thirty minutes, usually by family car … drop her child at school and get to work … self. After eight hours of work, she c… home to prepare dinner, wash dishes an… the family laundry.

Of 163 women, only 5 had hired hel… the home, 10 had relatives who helped, … 8 got an assist from their husbands. The … bands who were handy did just about ev… thing. They bathed and dressed child… cleaned house, hung up washing (ofte… the middle of the night) and in an aston… ing number of instances helped with … ironing. "They don't like to do it mu… one mother observed, "but you'll do a … thing for a while, at least, if you think … getting you somewhere."

Recreation is hard to fit in, although m… families try to arrange family outings … week ends. "We've had no company for … months," a working mother complains. "… evening in desperation we put Tommy … bed on a blanket in the back of the car … went to a drive-in movie."

"After dinner I'm tired enough to go … bed," a mother of three writes, "but I … ways have ironing, mending, cleaning, b… ing, a dozen-and-one things to do. I've b… trying to keep up the yard. I bought so… rug cleaner but haven't had time to use … The car ought to be washed. We have b… house-hunting so we can move, but we do … have time to find a house. I retire when … feel enough is done so that I can leave … rest of the work for tomorrow."

Are the mothers really needed? Aircr… people say yes. When Korea erupted, 1… per cent of San Diego's labor force of 169,7… were unemployed. By February, 1951, t… aircraft industries alone had hired 13,154 a… ditional hands and were hoping to find 40… more by May 15. In February, unemplo… ment in a labor force expanded to 187,4… stood at 3.7 per cent, the marginally efficie… bottom of the man-power barrel. The pla… makers would like to have men, but they s… they can't hold the men.

Skilled aircraft workers have flocked ba… to San Diego since Korea, but they qu… their jobs when they find they can't bri… their families. The population of San Die… County rose from 289,348 in 1940 to 415,87… in 1944, and surprised everybody by co… tinuing to climb after the war to a 1950 pea… of 535,967. World War II Federal-housi… projects are jam-packed. In spite of a buil… ing boom, there's literally no place to live i… San Diego. Aircraft executives say the hou… ing is occupied by people who can't be lure… away from profitable little businesses servin… the town's floating population of sailors.

"If we hire men we have to reach out … the community, and there aren't sufficien… rentals available," E. E. Binger, genera… manager of industrial relations at Solar Air… craft Company, recently told newspapermen… "Women workers afford San Diego aircraf… plants one method of beating the housin… shortage." Solar's public-relations depart… ment followed up with a picture story featur…

(Continued on Page 100)

Beef is Big Business!

you think of big business as whirling machinery,
ick buildings, steel tanks . . . you're wrong.
g business may be cotton growing in a field . . .
water rushing downstream through turbines . . .
cattle roaming the southwestern plains.
ef production is big business. The cattle business as always been big . . . but it is getting bigger.
was always risky, but—thanks to research— is getting much less risky.

ederle has introduced, during the past decade, any new products invaluable to the cattleman taking the risk out of ranching . . . including a specially ried and packed vaccine for Bang's disease; ULMET* Sulfamethazine, used for almost all the acterial diseases that affect cattle;
ombined blackleg hemorrhagic septicemia vaccine;
nd lastly the wonder drug, aureomycin. Similarly, Lederle as pioneered in providing weapons against infection
r livestock raisers of hogs, sheep and poultry.

ll this was made possible by painstaking research, acked by continuing large expenditures of time and money.
he system of free enterprise under which this ation has grown great has encouraged not only such ndustrial research, but also that competition hich eternally spurs forward each organization, and ach man and woman in it, to make better its best.
eg. U. S. Pat. Off.

esearch is the magic key that is unlocking bountiful future for all!

Lederle

(Pronounced Led'-er-lee)

A Division of American Cyanamid Company

Spun Nylon takes the shivers from your timbers

Munsingwear's warm, weightless,
scratchless, shrinkless
NYLON
UNDER SEPARATES

So light yet so warm . . . Munsingwear has a special way with panties and their companion pieces. Knits these under separates of featherweight spun NYLON. They'll never scratch . . . never shrink . . . wash and dry in a wink!

Vest or pantie as shown, white or tea rose, about $2.00 Also ribbed-cuff brief about $1.50; over-knee pant about $2.75

It's knit . . . it's nice . . . it's Munsingwear
at better stores everywhere

(Continued from Page 98)

ing the return to work of a photogenic mother of a four-year-old.

If they can't get the mothers, aircraft manufacturers say they'll have to use older and younger women and lower the stiff physical requirements which have kept absenteeism among women low. They'll have to use more handicapped people and enlarge current training programs. Mainly, however, they'll have to rearrange their production lines so that they can use more unskilled workers—and more women. During the war peak, when jobs were broken down into simple operations, the largest aircraft manufacturer in San Diego filled 42 per cent of its jobs with women. At the end of last year only from 25 to 27 per cent of all San Diego aircraft workers were women.

The day-care centers were unable to lure many housewives into the labor force for the very simple reason that most families with two breadwinners earned more than the $275-a-month ceiling. In one month last spring over half the mothers using child-care service were the sole support of their children. By July of this year, Walter Tatum, Director of San Diego's Child Care Services, had turned down three thousand applications on income alone. By July 2, however, Governor Earl Warren had signed into law a new child-care act liberalizing the means test. It raised the ceiling to $300 a month for working parents with one child, to $350 where there are two children, $400 if there are three. An additional $50 a month income is allowed the parents for each child in excess of three. Mr. Tatum may need two or three times as many centers as he now has, to accommodate the demand.

Unfortunately, alternative solutions for mothers who want to work are pathetically inadequate. There are about fifteen private nursery schools (licensed by the Welfare Department of the State of California) in the San Diego city limits and fifteen more just outside the city in San Diego County. Together they accommodate about 850 children. While many of the operators are licensed or certificated teachers, others do not approximate this standard. Not all of them provide care during the working mother's total hours away from home.

Most working mothers say they can't afford to send their children to private nursery schools. Yet the typical fee of from $10 to $12 a week is less than the cost of public day care when the state's contribution is added to what parents pay. It costs money to run a good nursery school. Unlike the centers, which use school buildings, private schools have to pay rent. They simply can't afford to pay their teachers as well as the public-school system does. Some of them are inevitably tempted to skimp on food or equipment.

FOSTER day care in private homes licensed by the state might be better for the children. Although it costs $1.50 to $2 a day, it's the traditional solution for the lone mother who must work or go on relief. Last spring, for the first time, more women with working husbands tried to put their children in foster homes than women who were the sole support of the family. San Diego's 140 homes licensed for 464 children can't take care of this new group. In some cases, the Department of Social Welfare has been able to persuade applicants to stay at home and earn money by caring for other applicants' children along with their own.

Of course, most working mothers aren't paying anything for child care. They're relying on grandmothers, sisters, cousins, aunts, neighbor women, high-school girls or anybody else who can be corralled into baby-sitting. California's population of elderly retired couples is being pressed into this service. But conflicts between the real and substitute mother are bitter in these tenuous and often transient arrangements. As one girl put it, "Your relatives are your friends until you ask them to take care of your dren."

Many couples have been working out problem by taking different shifts. mother who works on the swing shift out dinner before leaving for work at 4 Her husband gets back from the day shi time to relieve her, and he gets breakfast the children while she sleeps in the morn Yet even this topsy-turvy organizatio family life is better than the solution one craft spokesman suggested: "San Diego such a good climate you don't have to w about letting the kids play outdoors all San Diego is safer for children than N York."

There is always a well-known solution to every human problem—neat, plausible and wrong.

—HENRY LOUIS MENCKEN:
(Copyright: Alfred A. Knopf, Inc.).

NO one knows how many latchkey c dren are playing in San Diego's presuma safe and sunny streets. But community cial agencies do know that the tragic w time problems are coming back again: m teen-age pregnancies; more sleepy, bre fastless and belligerent school children; m complaints from neighbors about neglec children.

So far, prevention is no one's responsi ity. Social agencies claim they can't adv mothers to stay home. Navy Relief will l a service wife money to buy a kit of to but they don't feel authorized to do m than inquire what she plans to do with l children. Unless she herself asks for advi they can't interfere. Some time ago, a co mittee of social agencies wrangled all e ning trying to decide whether it was pro to ask the aircraft industries not to h women with children under six. Consens was that such a requ would deny a mothe right to work.

Meanwhile, social ag cies, employers, mothe all want the child-ca centers. The aircraft co panies would rather ha the state do the job a pick up the tab than co sider setting up nurse care themselves as Henry Kaiser did World War II.

The centers are better now than wh they were hastily improvised in World W II to accommodate the appetite of S Diego's industries for the mothers of sm children. Then there were over 50 cente some of them in church basements and co verted school buildings. Turnover amo teachers was high. For a time, there w even a program for infants.

Mr. Tatum thinks the centers would better if called upon to expand for anoth emergency, but he admits standards wou suffer. For one thing, only the best-designe centers are now being used. San Diego schools are so cramped that the child-ca program couldn't get back the makeshi school space it once had. The present eff cient teaching staff would have to be sprea thin among partly trained newcomers r cruited in San Diego's tight labor marke One nursery-school teacher has already ha to give up the work she loves to make mor money: a drugstore hired her for $60 a week

As long as the centers are adequatel staffed, the net gain in woman power is no striking. Eighty-eight teachers and thirty six housekeepers, cooks and administrators most of them skilled personnel themselves are required to care for about 935 children age two to sixteen, of an estimated 530 moth ers. In other words, it is taking one person t free less than five mothers for work outsid the home. Taking the children under si alone, the ratio is much higher. One staf person can care for about eleven children i the extended day-care program, but only five and a half children of nursery age.

San Diego social agencies are well aware that an emergency solution often becomes a community pattern. Nevin Wiley, of the San Diego Family Service Agency, spoke for most "Children need their mothers more than they need a television set. That's why I don't believe we should provide child-care centers for mothers who don't really have to work unless there is an all-out national emergency."

THE END

Very personally yours

Never a lull in your life, these days—when you've cast off "calendar" cares for the smiling comfort Kotex gives.
You've found this softness holds its shape;
doesn't fail, because the new Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it . . .

So why shouldn't you stay in the fun?
You're worry-free as never before, with those flat pressed ends to prevent revealing outlines. And the special safety center for your extra protection. In fact . . .

Free is the word that best describes your life with the new Kotex. Explains the perfect poise now so very personally yours.

Super Kotex in the Brown Box—extra absorbency for more-than-average needs.

Junior Kotex in the Green Box—for women who prefer a slightly narrower napkin.

Regular Kotex in the Blue Box—perfectly suited to the needs of most women.

New Kotex Sanitary Belt made with soft-stretch elastic—non-curling, non-twisting. Washable. Dries fast.

More women choose Kotex than all other sanitary napkins*

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

I'M A LUCKY GUY

(Continued from Page 45)

If it hadn't been for Sallye, I probably would have got my degree in engineering. It might be gathered from this that I was strongly attracted to Sallye, whereas nothing could be farther from the truth.

Sallye had the lower berth in the same section as my upper. She had already retired. Only her head, framed in the green curtains, was visible to me as I walked down the aisle sowing rice. Her mouth was open and tears of mirth were rolling down her plump cheeks. I thought she was the most extraordinary sight I had encountered in my lifetime.

I retreated to the men's room with Sallye's rumbling, loud and unfriendly laughter echoing behind me. An hour or so later, when I climbed into my berth, everyone apparently was asleep.

THE next morning I made the unnerving discovery that Sallye's destination coincided with mine. I had gone to the diner, and when I returned the berths were made up and she was sitting in our section. She had hung over the window a gold-and-blue Michigan pennant, which matched two pennant stickers on her pocketbook. She and I were the only young people in the car.

I thought for a moment I'd sit somewhere else, but I decided that would seem rude. I squeezed in beside her. Thin as I was, there was not too much room to spare.

She was a dark, strapping woman who clung partially to the flapper fashions that had gone out of style a few years before. Her black hair was shingled almost as short as a man's. Her dress was cut low at the neck, had a waist that sagged below her hips, and a skirt that ended an inch or two above her knees. She rolled her stockings, which had clocks in them, and wore tight, high-heeled pumps.

"Well, look who's here," she said. "It's Bunny Boy. U. of M.?" she asked, pointing to her pennant.

I smiled as distantly as I knew how, and nodded.

"Freshman, aren't you?"

I admitted it.

"Where's your pot, frosh?"

"My what?"

"Your pot; p-o-t, pot. Your pot is a cap that freshmen wear. You're supposed to have it with you all the time."

"Even before I matriculate?" I asked, anxious to avoid any trouble. "I don't believe I'm really a full-fledged freshman until I matriculate."

"You don't believe!" she neighed sarcastically. "For your own good, you'd better never let me catch you on the campus without a pot, understand?"

I said, "Yes, ma'am." I knew there were quite a few thousand students at the university, and I had no intention of letting her catch me on the campus or any other place, once I got off the train.

She asked where I was from, and I told her. She announced that she was from Jersey City, New Jersey, a community which, I gathered, practically went into mourning when she departed for points west. She said she was a senior at the "U. of M."

"You know what?" Sallye declared. "I think I'm going to like you."

"I'm sure," I lied, "the feeling will be mutual."

"Quite an entrance you made last night," she said with grudging envy. "I suppose you spent all summer planning how to be the center of attention."

"I suppose somebody did, at any rate," I conceded.

She asked where I was going to live at Ann Arbor, but didn't give me a chance to answer. "I know just the place for you," she said. "A rooming house on State Street. It's where a fellow of mine, my Big Moment, lived last year."

"Is he going to live there this year?" I asked, relieved that she had a Big Moment who was somebody else.

"No, he graduated."

As we talked, it developed that Sallye was a reporter for the Daily, and had been working on that newspaper for the last three years. She asked if I had any friends at the university, and for the first time that morning the uncomfortable feeling in the pit of my stomach came back. I let down my guard, because Sallye could be gentle when she wanted to, and told her I was already feeling homesick—not very homesick, but just kind of missing familiar faces—and that I didn't know anyone in Michigan.

"You may not believe this," she confided, "because now that I'm a senior I know practically everybody on the campus. But when I first came here I didn't know a soul either. And was I homesick!"

"You were?"

"But you're much better off than I was, because you know me. And I'm going to take you under my wing. After I get you settled and registered, you can come out for the Daily. And then we'll have to see about getting you into a frat."

Anne had warned me to steer clear of persons who used the abbreviation "frat." I began to regret having let down my guard, and thought that if I ever were to get clear of Sallye, I'd better start asserting my independence.

"I don't want to try out for the Daily," I said.

"Why, of course you do," she reasoned. "Everybody wants to go out for the Daily. Besides, you want to be a B.M.O.C., don't you—a Big Man on the Campus? To be one of those, you've got to go out for something."

"Well, I'll go out for something else then."

"Like what?" Sallye demanded sarcastically.

"Perhaps football," I said modestly.

"Football?" roared Sallye. "You play football at the U. of M.? What are you trying to do, make me laugh?"

I ASSURED her hastily that nothing was farther from my intention. "As for a fraternity," I managed with some dignity, "I think that's all taken care of."

"Sure," said Sallye, slapping a plump knee as she continued to guffaw. "All the best houses will have official rushing delegations down at the station to meet you."

"They might have," I nodded nonchalantly. "At least one of the best houses. My brother-in-law wrote the rushing chairman."

They didn't, though. When the train pulled into Ann Arbor, Sallye and I and a dozen or so people in other cars got off, and there was no one on the platform to meet any of us.

I waited for a few minutes. Sallye and the others had disappeared, and I wondered what to do about getting a bus or cab, and which direction the campus was. I wished I were someplace else. Then a cab drove up, and Sallye motioned to me from the back seat. I went to the door.

"Do you want me to show you where that rooming house is?" she asked. "There aren't any men's dormitories, you know."

I nodded and got in. I still wasn't going out for the Daily, though.

(Continued on Page 106)

Mirror magic

HERE is a simple way to create charm and interest in an ordinary room that needs a fashion touch. A dark foyer, a too-small dining room, an undistinguished living room, even a bedroom, comes to life with a mirrored wall. It is not necessary to cover the entire wall, but a big area to back your sofa or reflect the buffet is sufficiently dramatic.

60 mirror panels, 7″ x 10″, will cover a space 105″ long and 40″ high and cost $30.00 with adhesive, $14.00 without.

The Mirrors . . . . Buy the grade called "shock mirrors," which are really window glass silvered. Locally you can find them in dime stores or hardware stores at about 60 cents a square foot. Department stores and mail-order houses carry a better grade, slightly higher. Defects or faulty reflections do not matter.

Sizes . . . . 7″ x 10″ is a good stock size costing about 50 cents each; 4½″ squares are priced at 16 cents each and less. For big areas, there is an 18″ x 24″ size, and you may get the long narrow door panels 16″ x 48″ for special effects. It is better to survey the local situation before deciding on your size, as you might well find a bargain lot or seconds which would do nicely.

This space, 63″ long and 45″ high, uses 140 mirror squares, 4½″ x 4½″; costs $24.00 with adhesive backs, $15.00 plain.

Application . . . . If the mirrors are small, they may be stuck to the wall with a commercial mastic which you get at hardware stores. Dime stores carry mirrors with the mastic already on the back, at a somewhat higher price. The larger-size mirrors usually have holes drilled for screwing to the wall.

If you like, frame the outer edge of your big area of mirrors with a narrow stock molding bought at your lumber dealer's for a few cents a foot. Leave it blond or paint it to match your wall.

SEE WHITE SEWING MACHINES AT THESE FINE STORES

ALABAMA
Birmingham . . . Pizitz
Mobile . . . Hammel's
Montgomery . . . Montgomery Fair

ARIZONA
Phoenix . . . Korrick's

ARKANSAS
Little Rock . . . Gus Blass Co.

CALIFORNIA
Fresno . . . Gottschalk's
Los Angeles . . . The Broadway
May Co.
Oakland . . . Capwell's
Capwell Sullivan & Furth
Sacramento . . . Hale's
San Diego . . . Walker's
San Francisco . . . The Emporium
Macy's
San Jose . . . Hart's
Stockton . . . Dunlap's

COLORADO
Denver . . . The May Co.

CONNECTICUT
Bridgeport . . . D. M. Read Co.
Derby . . . Howard & Barber
Hartford . . . G. Fox & Co.
New Haven . . . Malley's
Norwich . . . Reid & Hughes
Waterbury . . . Howland-Hughes

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA
Washington . . . Lansburgh's

FLORIDA
Ft. Lauderdale . . . Burdine's
Jacksonville . . . Cohen Brothers
Miami . . . Burdine's
Orlando . . . Yowell-Drew-Ivey
St. Petersburg . . . Maas Brothers
Tampa . . . Maas Brothers
West Palm Beach . . . Burdine's

GEORGIA
Atlanta . . . Rich's
Columbus . . . Kirven's
Macon . . . Belk-Matthews Co.

ILLINOIS
Chicago . . . Carson Pirie Scott & Co.
Wieboldt's
Elgin . . . Joseph Spiess Company
Peoria . . . Block & Kuhl Company
Rockford . . . Hess Bros.

INDIANA
Anderson . . . Banner Store
Evansville . . . Schear's
Fort Wayne . . . Wolf & Dessauer
Indianapolis . . . L. S. Ayres & Co.

IOWA
Burlington Block & Kuhl Company
Cedar Rapids . . . Newman's Davenport
Petersen-Harned-Von Maur
Des Moines . . . Davidson's
Dubuque . . . Stampfer's
Sioux City . . . Martin's
Younker-Davidson Co.
Waterloo . . . Black's

KANSAS
Topeka . . . Crosby Bros.
Wichita . . . Hinkel's

KENTUCKY
Louisville . . . Kaufman-Straus Co.

LOUISIANA
Baton Rouge . . . Dalton's
New Orleans . . . Krauss Co.
Shreveport . . . Rubenstein's

MAINE
Lewiston . . . Peck's

MARYLAND
Baltimore . . . O'Neill's
The May Company

MASSACHUSETTS
Boston . . . R. H. White's
Brockton . . . Edgar's
Fall River . . . McWhirr's
Holyoke . . . McAuslan & Wakelin Co.
Lawrence . . . Sutherland's
Lowell . . . The Bon Marché
Lynn . . . Burrows & Sanborn
Malden . . . Joslin's
New Bedford . . . Star Store
North Adams . . . Boston Store
Pittsfield . . . England Brothers
Salem . . . Webber's
Springfield . . . Forbes & Wallace
Waltham . . . Grover Cronin
Worcester . . . MacInnes

MICHIGAN
Battle Creek . . . L. W. Robinson Co.
Detroit . . . Crowley's
Kern's
White Sewing Machine Co.
(1437 Farmer St.)
Flint . . . Smith-Bridgman's
Grand Rapids . . . Wurzburg's
Lansing . . . J. W. Knapp Company
Muskegon . . . Hardy-Herpolsheimer's
Pontiac . . . Waite's

MINNESOTA
Duluth . . . Freimuth's
Minneapolis . . . Donaldson's
St. Paul . . . Schuneman's

MISSOURI
Kansas City . . . Emery, Bird, Thayer
Peck's
Springfield . . . Heer's
St. Joseph . . . Townsend & Wall Co.
St. Louis . . . Famous-Ba

NEW HAMPSHIRE
Manchester . . . Le

NEW JERSEY
Elizabeth . . . Levy Bro
Newark . . . Hahne
Paterson . . . Quackenb
Trenton . . . Sv

NEW YORK
Albany . . . Whi
Binghamton . . . Fowler, Dick & W
Brooklyn . . . Abraham & S
Buffalo . . . J. N. Adam
Heng
Hempstead . . . Franklin Shops
Jamaica
Newburgh . . . Schoonn
New York (Manhattan) . . . H
McC
New York (Bronx) . . . H
Niagara Falls . . . J. N. Adam
Rochester . . . McCu
Sibley, Lindsay & Cur
Schenectady . . . Wall
Syracuse . . . Dey
Utica . . . J. B. Wells & So

NORTH CAROLINA
Asheville . . . I
Charlotte . . . B
Greensboro . . . Mey

OHIO
Akron . . . O'N
Canton . . . St
Cincinnati . . . Alms & Doep
Shill
Cleveland . . . The May Com
Wm. Taylor Son &
Columbus . . . Laz
Dayton . . . R
Toledo . . . LaSa
Warren . . . Strouss-Griswo
Youngstown . . . Strouss-Hirshbe

OKLAHOMA
Oklahoma City . . . John A. Brown
Tulsa . . . Brown-Dun

OREGON
Portland . . . Meier & Frank

PENNSYLVANIA
Allentown . . . Hess Broth
Altoona . . . Gab
Erie . . . Boston St
Harrisburg . . . Pomer
Johnstown . . . Penn Tra
Lancaster . . . Hag
Lebanon . . . The Bon T
New Castle . . . New Castle St
Philadelphia . . . Lit Broth
Snellenbu
Pittsburgh . . . Kaufman
Reading . . . Pomero
Scranton . . . Scranton Dry Goods
Sharon . . . The Sharon St
Wilkes-Barre . . . Pomero
Williamsport . . . L. L. Stearns & Sc
York . . . Wies

RHODE ISLAND
Pawtucket . . . Shartenber
Providence . . . The Outlet

SOUTH CAROLINA
Greenville . . . Belk-Simps

TENNESSEE
Chattanooga . . . Lovema
Knoxville . . . Georg
Memphis . . . Goldsmit
Nashville . . . Harve

TEXAS
Corpus Christi . . . Lichtenstei
Dallas . . . Titche-Goetting
Fort Worth . . . Striplin
Houston . . . Foley
San Antonio . . . Joske
Waco . . . Goldstein-Migel C

UTAH
Salt Lake City . . . Auerbach

VIRGINIA
Norfolk . . . Ames & Brownle
Richmond . . . Miller & Rhoa
Roanoke . . . Pugh

WASHINGTON
Seattle . . . Frederick & Nelso
Spokane . . . The Crescen
Tacoma . . . Rhode

WEST VIRGINIA
Charleston . . . Coyle & Richardso
Wheeling . . . Stone & Thoma

WISCONSIN
Milwaukee . . . Schuster

ONTARIO
Hamilton . . . The G. W. Robinso
Company Limite
London . . . Simpsons London Lt
Ottawa . . . Charles Ogilvy Limite
Toronto . . . The Robert Simpso
Company Limite
Windsor . . . C. H. Smit
Company Limite

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC
Montreal . . . The Robert Simpso
Montreal Limite
L. N. Messier Limité
Quebec City
La Compagnie Paquet Limitée

Also at leading independent stores

White SEWING MACHINES Since 1876 — for 75 years the achievement of sewing machines

it's so easy to sew on a White

Compare prices! Compare features of leading sewing machines!

Only White has all these sew-easy features—yet most models cost less!

Even beginners say the wonderful new White is sheer inspiration for sewing the fall fashions and home furnishings they need right now! And how much you save when you sew! Every feature of this famous quality machine has been designed to make your sewing easier. The White sews smoothly, evenly—because the White-invented full rotary action with round bobbin never reverses direction. Even the White portable is purposely sturdier—to guarantee a lifetime of sewing satisfaction! Service and all your sewing needs are only a phone call away wherever you live!

Make this Advance pattern No. 5907 in Juilliard corduroy for less than $15.

SEW EASY! Finger-Flip Reverse lets you sew backward, too. Finishes seam endings securely. No stopping—there's nothing to set.

SEW EASY—and so convenient! The popular portable is the same size and has all features of cabinet models. Smart luggage case included.

SO BEAUTIFUL! The Mid-Century desk in mahogany, walnut or blond finish. From the largest collection of cabinet styles made!

SEW EASY! Dial-A-Stitch to change from basting to extra-fine stitching! 11 different stitch lengths for forward and backward sewing!

SEW EASY! Ruffling, pleating, buttonholes done so quickly with White Magic Time-savers! See sample book at your store. Complete course of instructions with your new White.

COMPARE! Prices from $84.50

WHITE ROTARY MACHINES INCLUDE 14 Time-savers:

- HEMMERS
- TUCKING GUIDE
- RUFFLER
- BINDER
- CUTTING GAUGE
- QUILTING FOOT
- SHIRRING FOOT
- ZIPPER FOOT
- SEAM GUIDE

FREE HOME TRIAL! You compare! You decide. No obligation. Write or call your White sewing machine department in any of these fine stores.

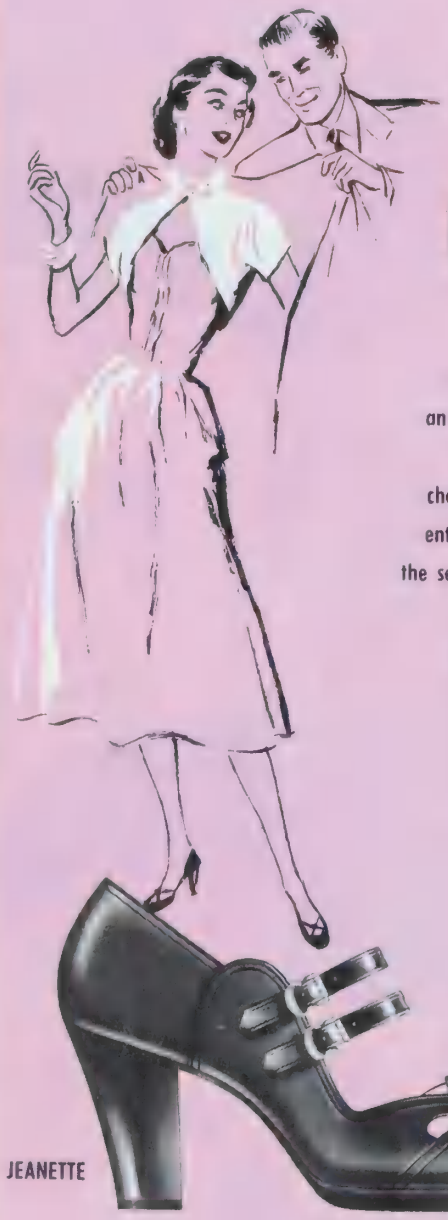
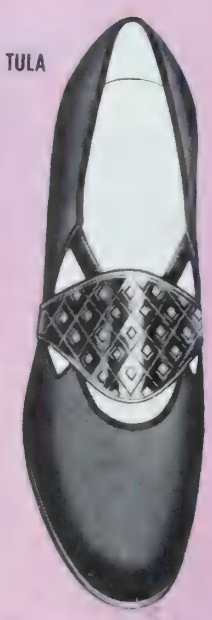
White SEWING MACHINES Since 1876 for 75 years the aristocrat of sewing machines



American Made

WHITE SEWING MACHINE CORPORATION, CLEVELAND 1, OHIO . . . IN CANADA: TORONTO 2B

Styled to be admired!



For the woman who dresses with an eye to good taste as well as chic, Tarsal-Treds are ever the correct choice. Here are four examples . . . entirely new, wholly feminine . . . in the season's smartest colors and trims. Quality leathers, of course, plus patented fitting features that let you walk in carefree comfort. All at a price that adds up to America's top shoe value!

$7.95 - $8.95

Tarsal-Treds

Write for name of nearest dealer

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY ★ Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

The H. C. Godman Company, Columbus, Ohio

Also makers of Tarsal-Travelers growing girls' shoes and Air-O-Magic men's shoes

(Continued from Page 104)

After getting settled in the rooming house, I bought a pot, paid my tuition, and registered in the engineering college. My schedule was so full that I could forget, without qualms of conscience, the thought of going out for any campus activity.

Sallye left me alone, except for daily telephone messages for me to call her, which I knew better than to acknowledge. I saw her by-line fairly often in the Daily.

It turned out that Anne, as she had predicted, still was remembered on the campus, and a good many fraternities started rushing me as soon as they found out where I was staying. When I explained that I thought a fraternity might interfere with my studies, the rushing was redoubled. Fraternities, as I found out later, were required to maintain a certain scholastic level. Anyone who put studies above social activities might be counted upon to offset the grades of those brothers who didn't.

But when The Fraternity finally extended me a bid, I accepted readily enough. I didn't mention Sallye to any of the brothers, but I found out that they saw eye to eye with her on one point—that freshmen had to go out for something. They told me that unless a fraternity had its share of captains, editors, managers and head cheerleaders, its standing on the campus was apt to deteriorate. Like Sallye, the brothers decided I was Daily material.

The Daily was independent of the university's School of Journalism and theoretically independent of the dean's office. The dean, however, exerted an indirect control. Although he had no jurisdiction over the newspaper's editorial policy, he had a very direct jurisdiction—including the power to expel—over all students.

The dean also wielded influence over the newspaper in another and more subtle manner. He was a member of a student-faculty board which selected the managing editor each year from the senior members of the Daily staff. The managing editor's job was much sought after, because he ran the paper, received a substantial salary, and was admitted ex officio into the ranks of the B.M.O.C.

In order to land the job, a candidate had to work hard for three years, write a minimum of unfortunate stories, and still manage to stay on the good side of the students by asserting occasionally that the dean was altogether too bossy. It was thin ice.

Most of this background I obtained subsequently from Sallye. I knew nothing about it the day I reported and was referred to a junior editor who was in charge of assigning freshmen to beats. He asked me whether I'd ever had any experience on a newspaper. I told him I hadn't. He didn't seem very impressed. I gathered that what he really was looking for were freshmen who had worked four or five years on the rim of The New York Times' copy desk, and I wondered how many of those enrolled at Michigan each year.

"We assign every freshman to a veteran reporter who helps break him in," the junior editor informed me. "Assistants have been assigned to all of them, but if you'll give me your name ——"

I gave it to him, and he looked at me over the top of his glasses.

"Why didn't you say so?" he asked. "I've been wondering when you'd show up. You've already been assigned. Your reporter-adviser is ——"

"Never mind," I interrupted. "I already know. Where's her desk?"

Sallye's desk was in the city room, and she was working on a story. I walked up just as she wrote "thirty" at the end of her article. She yanked it out of the typewriter, and hollered, "Copy!" If she had been a man, I'm sure she would have been wearing a hat on the back of her head, with a press card jutting out of the band.

"What's the matter with you, copy boy?" she asked me, giving no other sign of greeting. "Didn't you hear me calling 'Copy'? I'll swear, you copy boys get lazier every day."

"Hello, Sallye," I said.

You sleep, too,

when he goes Pullma

You know he's as safe in a Pullman as you are at home.

Ask him to Go Pullman

COMFORTABLE, DEPENDABLE, AND—ABOVE ALL—SAFE!

COPYRIGHT 1951, THE PULLMAN COMPANY

"I ppose next thing you boys will ex- to carry my own copy over to the s," she complained. "Here, take this that desk and put it on the hook— he spindle. Then come back here, I want to talk to you."

city desk which she had designated hin arm's reach of her own, and she ave put the copy on the spindle with- ting out of her chair, but I did as I d.

"You decided to come to work," Sallye greeted me when I stood again in her desk. "You don't deserve it, but en saving the dean's office for you. en going there myself to cover for that the chief wouldn't notice you been around."

Sallye's attitude toward me changed as we were with other people. She said was her new assistant, and slipped n possessively around my waist as if cate that I was something more than o. She pointed out that we were both New Jersey and thus presumably old , and that while I might look inex- ced and scrawny, I possessed certain talents.

the way to the dean's office, Sallye ned to me that I was to be absolutely e that every story he gave me was n accurately, and if I were in doubt any of my facts I was to telephone and he entire story to him.

the same time, I was to create the im- on around the Daily office that the never gave me any news at all. I should it appear that what stories I got from fice were obtained either by wringing out of him, or by going through his when his back was d. Also, I should never in a story to the editors without re- ing to them that I ed the dean, the oat, would be sore as d when he picked up aper in the morning and saw that in print.

he dean turned out to be a likable, ly man. He had a typewritten state- t prepared for me, saying that enroll- that year had set a new record. He also me stories about two changes in the lty.

"As long as you're accurate," he smiled, and I will get along first rate. But each I tell the reporter who covers my office I hold him personally responsible for the stories come out in the paper."

llye helped me write the first day's y. We didn't mention that the enroll- t statement had been handed to us. In , from the way Sallye had me word the cle, a reader might have gathered that I ducted a personal census of each of the sands of students. The story appeared Page 1. It wasn't by-lined, but after that vered the dean's office by myself, al- ugh Sallye still helped me write the ies. The dean and I got along well.

there was smooth sailing for the first nth. Then one afternoon I dropped into dean's office and found him sitting stiff l irritable at his desk.

"I don't have any news today," he said ffly.

"Did I get something wrong, sir?" I ed.

"No, it's my own fault. Excuse me if I'm rupt." He pointed to a window by his sk. "I strained my back this morning. at window's been stuck ever since last ring. I tried to force it."

"That's too bad," I said. "I hope it's thing serious."

"Thanks. I'm sure it isn't."

"Mind if I use a little something about it the paper?"

"I don't see how there's any news in at," he said, irritable again.

Sallye had instructed me how to cope with ecisely such a situation. "Sir," I argued, hen you want financial advice, you con- lt a banker. When you want legal advice, u consult a lawyer. Now if you want pub- -relations advice, who would you consult? Who but the reporter from the Daily who covers your own office?"

"Well, you have been accurate," the dean weakened, "although your knowledge of the use of 'who' and 'whom' leaves something to be desired."

"And my advice is to let me print, every now and then, stories sort of humanizing the dean's office."

"I don't recall that I asked for your advice," the dean smiled wryly. "But I'm in favor of anything that creates the impression among students that the dean resembles a biped. So I'll try you out as my public-relations adviser. Go ahead and print it."

BACK at the Daily office, I wrote the story. I honestly did feel that it would be to the dean's advantage to be portrayed now and then as a real human being, subject to all the aches, emotions and frailties of the rest of us. After clearing the article with Sallye, who was pleased with it, I called the dean and read it to him. It went like this:

> The dean was recuperating last night from a strained back suffered when he attempted to force a window in his office. The injury, while painful, was not serious and he was able to go about the regular performance of his duties.

"Is that all right, sir?" I asked.

"It's fine," he replied enthusiastically, and he sounded considerably improved. "I've been thinking over that humanizing angle you spoke of. If you want to," he chuckled, "you can add that my good wife says a man my age should have better sense than to wrestle with a window."

I was delighted to add it. The city editor read it, and marked it for the front page.

I had counted on the story's causing a little comment, but I wasn't prepared for the scene which I encountered the next morning on arriving at The Fraternity for breakfast. The brothers were gathered around a copy of the Daily.

"Did you write it?" one of them asked me, pointing solemnly to the article.

"You mean the one about the dean's back?" I asked importantly. "Yeah, that's one of mine."

"How did you ever find out about it?"

"Oh, I get around," I told them carelessly. "I heard about it, and I just asked him about it, that's all."

"And he let you print it?"

"Let me? There's such a thing as freedom of the press, you know."

There was no doubt about it. The brothers were impressed. One of them said he was going to clip the article and send it to his father, who knew the dean and would get a kick out of it. He slapped me on the back. "Boy, you're all right. What a guy! He writes about the dean trying to force a widow in his own office, and he talks about ——"

"A widow!" I shuddered. "Did you say 'widow'? Let me see that paper."

I dived for it. It was on the front page, all right, and that's what it said.

"It was a window," I groaned weakly. "Just a window, that's all it was."

It was a typographical error, of course. But the dean had made it repeatedly clear to me that I was responsible not only for what I wrote, but how it came out in the paper.

I couldn't eat much breakfast. I had the telephone duty in the house until classes started that morning, and the first call was for me. It was the dean's secretary.

"Is this," she asked, "the public-relations adviser to the dean? He said for me to tell you he wants to see you at nine o'clock tomorrow morning."

The dean didn't expel me, or even demand that someone else from the Daily cover his office. I made it a practice, after that, not only to read my stories to him but to drop by the newspaper office at midnight, when the paper went to press, to check my articles for typographical errors.

This practice paid dividends a few months later, when a wealthy member of the university's Board of Regents was a guest of the

(Continued on Page 109)

No man flatters the woman he truly loves. —TUCKERMAN.

Simply Stunning!...and you can make it yourself with

"BOTANY" BRAND

Certified† Fabrics for Home Sewing

This designer's masterpiece is breathtaking to look at—simple to make—and gentle on your purse. Delightfully seasonable colors are yours in "Botany" Brand 100% virgin wool Certified Fabrics. Look for the name "Botany" Brand on the selvage.

SKYLINE COLORS
Lovely, high-fashion shades for Fall...Tower ...Crest...Presidio... Mesa...all at your favorite piece goods counter.

THIS CHARMING SUIT
is made of "Botany" Brand Marchan Gabardine. McCall Pattern #8616.

Ask for this label to sew in your Botany Garment.

LOOK FOR THE "BOTANY" BRAND LABEL ON PRODUCTS FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

*"BOTANY" IS A TRADEMARK OF BOTANY MILLS, INC., PASSAIC, N. J. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. COPYRIGHT 1951 BOTANY MILLS INC. PASSAIC, NEW JERSEY. †CERTIFIED BY BOTANY LABORATORIES. SALES OFFICES 16 WEST 46TH STREET, NEW YORK 19, NEW YORK

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE BRECK SHAMPOOS
FOR THREE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDITIONS

Each one of the three Breck Shampoos is made for a different hair condition. One Breck Shampoo is for dry hair. Another Breck Shampoo is for oily hair. A third Breck Shampoo is for more normal hair. A Breck Shampoo is gentle and thorough in its action. It leaves your hair clean, fragrant and lustrous.

Breck Hairdress is a preparation which helps keep your hair in place. It adds lustre without an oily appearance. Breck Hairdress may be used daily for the care of the hair.

The Three Breck Shampoos and Breck Hairdress are available at Beauty Shops and wherever cosmetics are sold.

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

"...think that would be real nice," she ...d. "And you'll make it clear why she ...won't you? Because I think that if ...know the real reason they'll under...er a little better, don't you?"

I ...romised to make it clear. I also in...her that the coroner probably would ...his report within a few minutes, and ...good many reporters and photogra...rom other papers would then descend ...n.

"...on't think I'd like any pictures," she ...rowning a little. "And the reporters ...t all their facts out of the Herald Trib...morrow, can't they?"

"...ey certainly can," I agreed heartily.

"...en I don't believe I'd better answer ...or. It's past my bedtime anyway, and ...ctor has given me a pill I can take to ...e sleep."

...said good night, and I ran to the sub...ation. I telephoned the coroner's office ...a pay booth, and he was just finishing ...port. It had happened just as the sister ...aid, he told me. Then I called the city ...and got the assistant.

"...his is Gilbreth," I said.

"...h." There was a pause. "Where are ...'

"...n Queens. I've got a story that you ...want over the phone for the first edi...'

"...What's it about?"

"...ou know that woman who died over ...that you sent me to see about? She was ...and ——"

"...or goodness, gracious sake," he yelled, ...that wasn't exactly the expletive he em...ed. "Do you think I can spare a rewrite ...and a telephone for ...blind woman who ...n Queens?"

"...But this one," I yelled ..., "committed sui...'

"...Oh." He mulled that ... for a while. "We can ...a few paragraphs on ...en. But it's not worth tying up a re...le man. Come on in and write it." He ...up.

I still thought it ought to get in the first ...ion. I pushed through a turnstile and ...a subway train, and I wrote the article ...onghand on the way to the office. I told ...ut the circumstances leading to the sui..., starting as the older sister had done ...k in the days when they were little girls. I ...cribed the furnishings in the house, and ... face of the older sister as she had re...nted the details. I told about the scrap...k, too, and how the article would be ...ted in it.

When the train arrived at Times Square I ...rried to the office and my desk, and there ...e still fifteen minutes before the first-e...tion deadline.

WITH the longhand story spread out before ..., I copied two paragraphs on the type...ter, as quickly as I could. Then, for the ...t time since I had been on the paper, I ...lered "Copy!" just like a veteran, and ...ved what I had typed at a boy.

I fed another book of copy paper, carbons ...d flimsies into my machine and continued ...type. But I glanced occasionally toward ...e city desk.

When the book with the first two para...aphs arrived on the assistant's desk he ...d it and started coming to life. The city ...itor walked to the assistant's desk, looked ...er his shoulder, and then walked to my ...sk and looked over mine. Since I had al...ady written it in longhand, I could type it ...st and it didn't matter if his breathing ...wn my neck disrupted my train of thought.

"Keep it coming," he said. "Anybody else ...t it?"

I told him it was exclusive.

"We'll get what you can give us in the first ...dition," he said. "Just keep it coming. It ...eads fine."

He went back to his desk. The assistant, ...ho had sent the first sheet to get a headline, ...ame over to see how I was doing. I was run...ing the typewriter about as fast as it would ...ove. I finished the second page, hollered "Copy!" and had the satisfaction of seeing the assistant himself pick up the book and hotfoot it to the city desk.

It wasn't by any means a big story, and I don't mean to imply that my handling of it was more than adequate. But it was a big story for me. It was about a column long, and it started on the front page under a two-column head. When I had typed a professional "30" at the bottom of the last book, I went over toward the city desk to garner what I felt certain would be my richly deserved laurels.

"Everything okay?" I asked the assistant.

"How about the pallbearers?" he grunted.

"I've got them if you want them."

"How about," he said, searching for any port in a storm, "honorary pallbearers?"

"They're not going to have any. Do you want a list of the regular pallbearers? I thought the story was getting too long."

"I guess not," he admitted grudgingly. "You can call it a night if you want to."

THE city editor looked up. "That was a good piece," he told me. "How did you happen to bump into it?"

"I went over to get an obituary," I explained, "and it was right there. The coroner hadn't made his report, so no one else knew it was suicide."

"Funny thing," the assistant put in, with a self-satisfied smirk. "A one-sentence piece about her death moved on City News. I don't know why—just a hunch, I guess—but I smelled a story. Red wasn't doing anything so I sent him over there for a look-see."

I was glad it was going to be "Red" now, instead of Ginbreath and, sometimes, Goldcloth. But if the assistant really had been playing a hunch and smelling a story every time he sent me on a wild-goose chase, his average at the moment was precisely one goose in approximately 2000 chases.

"It was a good hunch," the city editor nodded. "And, Gilbreth, your story shows you had your eyes open. But the next time when you're over in Queens, and you have a good story, and it's almost edition time, telephone it in so we won't have a last-minute rush."

I waited for the assistant to explain that I had telephoned and that he had turned down the story. But he had become suddenly occupied practicing the kind of spirals that you have to make when you're learning Palmer Method Penmanship.

I knew that if I should say I had telephoned, the assistant would see that I became practically a commuter to Staten Island, Secaucus, Hoboken and other unlikely places. I had about decided that, commuter or not, it would be worth it, when the assistant himself solved my dilemma.

"My fault," he said. "He did telephone. It didn't sound so good on the phone."

"Oh. Well, that's all right then," the city editor told me. "You handled it fine."

Sometimes I think the assistant was part mind reader. For instance, he hadn't taken the blame until a second before I had almost decided to pin it on him. And when I turned to go home he called after me, not ill-naturedly, "Good night, Flash."

"Good night, Mr. Pulitzer, sir," I replied gravely.

We got along better after that. The Herald Tribune always had had a man regularly assigned to Staten Island. From then on, he had the bailiwick all to himself.

I liked the Herald Tribune, but I didn't like working in New York. The crowding and competition made me jumpy. It seemed to me that everyone was trying too hard to get the things that come naturally in a smaller city—personal recognition, for instance, and a house with some grass around it.

But the biggest trouble with New York is so obvious that there should be no need to state it. There are too many people there.

Having reached that conclusion, I thought that only one course of action was open to a man with the courage of his convictions. I

(Continued on Page 115)

We cannot always oblige, but we can always speak obligingly. —VOLTAIRE.

A woman's most attractive after 30!

If you don't believe it, look at our leading ladies in the theatre, the movies, the society pages. Almost every one cheerfully admits to being over thirty . . . even over forty! Yet they go right on looking lovely . . . being loved. The secret? A serene refusal to be frightened by middle age. Plus the sensible habit of using that famous estrogenic hormone cream women have learned to trust.

Get the youthful habit of Cellogen Hormone Cream

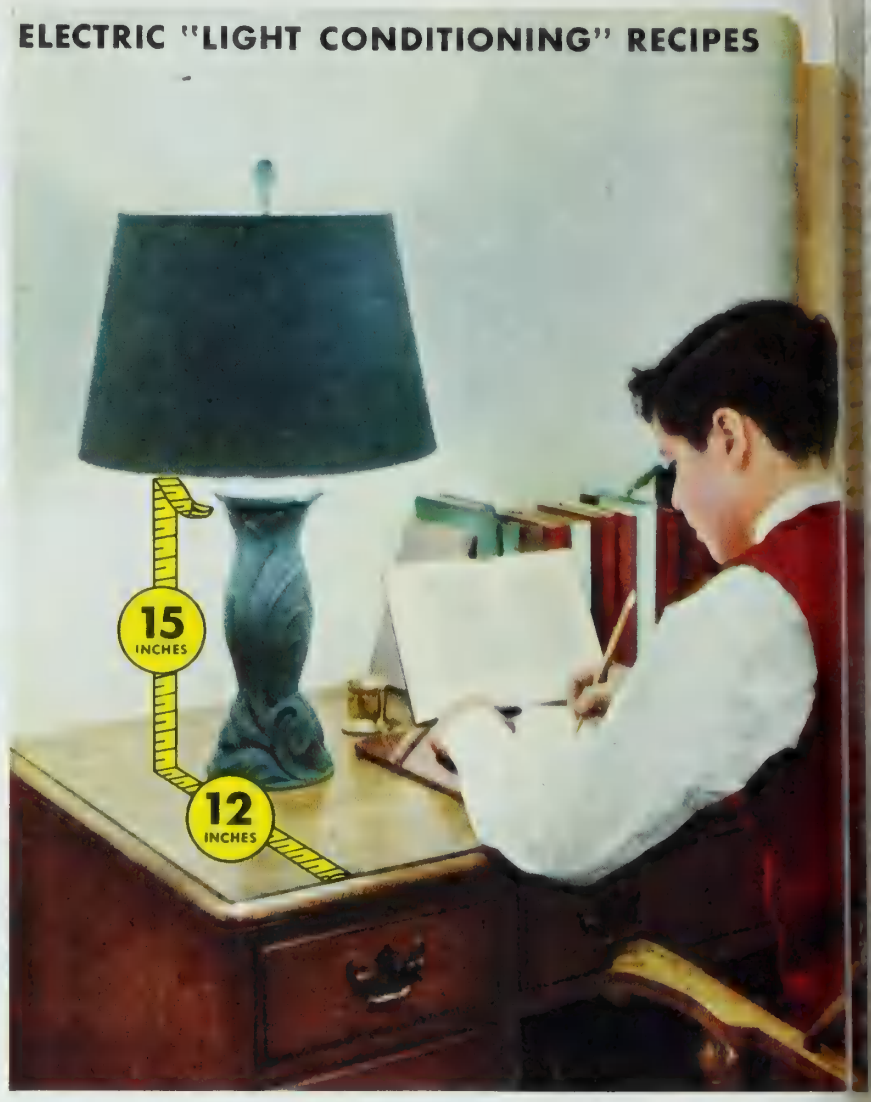
by Dorothy Gray

Outwits nature by effectively counteracting the gradual loss of your skin's beautifying hormones. The natural estrogenic hormones in Cellogen Hormone Cream (10,000 I.U. per ounce) literally work from beneath to "plump up" dismaying lines and wrinkles . . . give skin a softer, fresher,



$3.50 and $5.00 plus tax

truly younger look. Regular use of this noted cream can help you stay attractive at any age!

If your birthdays are showing... trust Dorothy Gray

Two ways to brighten a book . . . and a boy!

"The way to improve Jimmy's marks, we'd always figured, was just to keep his nose to the grindstone. And try not to grumble when we had to place ours there, too—to help him find a state capital that kept getting lost or check a column of figures that wouldn't add.

"But then we made a great discovery: a boy doesn't study with his nose—he uses his eyes!

"When we discovered Light Conditioning we found we could not only brighten Jimmy's books, but Jimmy, too—by reducing eyestrain, fatigue and distraction."

Light Conditioning tells you exactly what size and type of bulbs to use in your lamps and fixtures, and how to locate them to get the right light for every seeing task.

It does it all in 22 easy-to-follow recipes in a new General Electric booklet, "See Your Home in a New Light."

The recipe at left above, for example, calls for two pin-up lamps placed as shown by tape measures, each with a G-E 100-watt White "Q-coat" bulb. Recipe at right above recommends 50-100-150 watt 3-lite bulb (or, for some table lamps, 150 watt bulb or 150 watt White Indirect-lite bulb).

FREE! NEW "LIGHT-CONDITIONING" RECIPE BOOKLET Shows 22 "Light-Conditioning" recipes. Covers every room. Specifies bulb sizes, fixtures, measurements. Write Lamp Division, General Electric, Department 166-LHJ9, Nela Park, Cleveland 12, Ohio.

NEW WHITE BULB (shown at right above beside standard bulb and used in pin-up lamp recipe) has new inside "Q" coating that gives near-perfect diffusion. Shadows are softer, glare reduced. 100-watt . . . . . 21c plus tax

GET LIGHT at low cost with General Electric 150-watt lamp bulbs in table lamps. Use with diffusing bowl. Also for use in kitchen ceiling fixtures to give you lots of light. 150-watt . . . . . 20c plus tax RECENT IMPROVEMENTS in G-E fluorescent lamps make them a bigger value than ever. More efficient, longer lasting, with better color and uniformity, less end-blackening.

STOP BULBSNATCHING—Don't rob one socket to light another. G-E 4-lamp package makes it easy to keep spare bulbs on hand. Four 60-watt lamps (halls, closets) 56c. Four 100-watt (reading, general lighting) 64c plus tax

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

(Continued from Page 113)

lo my part, however infinitesimal, to e the trouble. In short, I would get jobs still were scarce in 1934. The lity is that I would have stayed on er as long as they would have let me, n't met a girl on a scavenger hunt.

hunt was a charity affair, given at ldorf. I was among three reporters er from the paper to cover the party.
people in charge of the hunt gave each pating couple an identical list of ob-nimate and inanimate, which were to duced by the deadline of midnight.
uple which came closest to completing would win first prize.
if the stores and pet shops had been which they weren't, the list would have difficult enough to complete. The d objects included a rattail, she goat, bird, yellow pincushion, sparrow's oliceman's billy, hair from the tail of a horse, and an "autographed intimate t from the most beautiful girl in New
'

hree of us decided that the best way er it would be for two men to stay in tel, and for the third to attach himself ouple that was looking for the objects.
was a cold, wet night, and none of us ager for the outside assignment. But saw this girl come in, and I quickly teered to be the one attached to a cou-d an opportunity to observe her closely she and her escort walked up to get copy of the list. This thorough but sur-ious scrutiny convinced me that no n his right mind would ever let her out sight.

m not going to describe her, except to hat she was the opposite to Sallye in displacement and deportment. I was ially gratified to note that she didn't rings on her left hand.
approached her escort and made my st pitch. He was curly-haired and y, but a little too plump for his dress ers, which fitted his thighs like sausage
. The escort didn't look too bright to and I thought at first that perhaps I l lose him. But he made it plain that he 't think much of the idea of having a party along on his date.
old him that, of course, if he didn't want o-operate with the press or to get his e in the society section, that would be all with me. I added that it seemed to me sporting and gentlemanly thing to do d be to ask his lady friend what her es were in the matter.
nce his lady friend was standing right
, there wasn't much he could do but ask
She agreed, although insincerely, I ght, that the ideal number of people to have on a date was two. However, she added that it would be fun to show the people back home that she had been written up in the society section, and also to observe a New York reporter in action.

Fatty stuck out his lower lip and pouted about it, but I left the hotel with them and we got into a cab. He had her sit on one side and me on the other, and squeezed himself into the middle. I had to talk across him as we cruised around looking for a policeman who would sell his club. But I found out that her name was Liz, that she was from Charleston, and was visiting an aunt in the city.

I talked to him some, too, trying to win his confidence and butter him up. He was formerly from Charleston, and had been living in New York for five or six years. He didn't go into detail about what kind of job he had, but I gathered that he wasn't selling apples on street corners because he finally bought a policeman's billy for ten dollars. Also, he seemed to know a good many girls who lived on Park Avenue, one of whom turned out to own a yellow pincushion and another a stuffed bird. When he stopped off at these apartments to see what he could find, he insisted on Liz's going with him and my staying out in the cab.

Time was running out. We still hadn't made a dent in any of the difficult items on the list, and I hadn't had an opportunity to find out when I could see Liz again.

"Tell you what," I suggested. "We'd make much better headway on the list if we divided it and split up. Each of you take half, and get separate cabs."

He wasn't a very quick boy, but he was smart enough to chew something over before he swallowed it. "And who," he asked suspiciously, "will you go with?"

"Makes no difference," I shrugged. "It's just a job to me. All I'm interested in is getting some color for my story, and I don't seem to be accomplishing much when you go looking for things and leave me in the cab."

"That's right," Liz agreed. "You've got a point there."

"Of course," I continued, "being a reporter, I know the city like the palm of my hand. If I could be any help to someone who doesn't know the way around very well——"

It didn't fool anybody. Liz tittered, and he put out his lower lip again and shook his head.

"No, sir," he said. "It's bad enough having you along with me on my date. I guarantee I'm not going to have you along without me."

"If you don't care about winning the prize, it's all right with me." I assured him. "But it seems to me the least you could do is ask Liz about it. Maybe she cares something about winning the prize."

Liz said that, as a matter of fact, she would like very much to win the prize, and that she thought we'd do better by splitting up. She added, though, that like the lady in the song, she believed in dancing with the guy that brung her.

So we split up, but it wasn't the way I had planned.

He gave me half of the list, and when I explained that I didn't have expense money to waste on cab fare or bribing policemen, he pushed a wad of bills in my hand and pushed me into another taxi.

We agreed to meet outside the Waldorf a few minutes before midnight. As my cab drove off, I wondered how a not very bright-looking individual had managed to maneuver me into a spot where I was obligated to comb the city for him, searching for a white horsehair, a rattail and an intimate garment autographed by the best-looking girl in New York. It did not escape my notice, either, that he had reserved the sparrow's nest for himself.

Fortunately, I didn't have any trouble with the rattail or horsehair. I found them both in a stable on the West Side. The man on duty, after being shown a dollar bill, set a rattrap in a dark corner and led me into the stall of a white horse. By the time we had pulled out a hair, there was a rat in the trap. The stableman took out a rusty pocketknife and got me the tail.

My cab driver, who may have thought I had run out on him, came into the stable just as the amputation was being performed. He watched noncommittally as I wrapped the tail carefully in a newspaper and put it in my pocket.

"Where to now, friend?" he said, still without expression. "Don't you need a goat's hoof or something to go with that rattail?"

"We've got to have the whole goat," I told him. "But somebody else is taking care of that. Just ride over toward the Waldorf. Take it easy, because I've got to do some thinking."

He drove in moody silence, and I didn't come up with any intelligent ideas. Finally I decided to ask his advice.

"Say, buddy," I said, "this might sound like a funny question. But where would you go if you wanted to get an intimate garment from the best-looking girl in New York?"

"Intimate garment? You mean like a brassear or a nightgown or something?"

"That's it," I agreed. "Something like that."

"You don't want the girl—all you want is her brassear or nightgown. Is that what you mean?"

"That's it," I repeated.

"That's what I thought you meant," he said, shaking his head. "I swear, we get all kinds of people in this business."

"It's not what you think," I protested, "and I haven't got much time. Who's the best-looking girl in New York?"

We were going along Forty-fifth Street, and were held up by a crowd emerging from the Music Box.

"For my dough," the driver said, "the best-looking girl in New York is in there." He pointed with his head at the Music Box.

Marilyn Miller was playing there in As Thousands Cheer. She was all right for my dough too.

I told him to wait, and jumped out of the cab. My press card got me in the stage door, and I told Gramps or Pop or whatever they called him that I had to see Miss Miller in a hurry, on a matter of utmost business.

He wouldn't let me go to her dressing room, but he sent a message and in a minute or two Miss Miller came down. She was all right for anybody's dough.

"You're the reporter who wants to see me?" she asked.

"I've got a rather unconventional request," I nodded. "If it's not too much trouble, Miss Miller, I'd like you to autograph an intimate garment for me."

I must have said it a good deal louder than necessary. In any event, some of the chorus girls and actors who were leaving the theater stopped to see what was going on.

"It is a rather unusual request," Miss Miller hedged.

"It's for a scavenger hunt they're having at the Waldorf," I explained.

"I'm pretty sure I can get dad's car tonight. Hold on while I ask mother."

CLOROX does MORE than give you extra-gentle bleaching!

It's a 4 in 1 product!

1 AN extra-gentle BLEACH

From coast to coast, Clorox is first with America's housewives. It is extra gentle; conserves costly linens. Here's the scientific reason: Clorox is free from caustic and other harsh substances . . . made by a patented formula exclusive with Clorox!

2 A dependable STAIN REMOVER

Another valuable benefit you get from Clorox is its stain removing action. Clorox removes numerous stains from white and color-fast cottons and linens, from kitchen and bathroom surfaces!

3 AN effective DEODORIZER

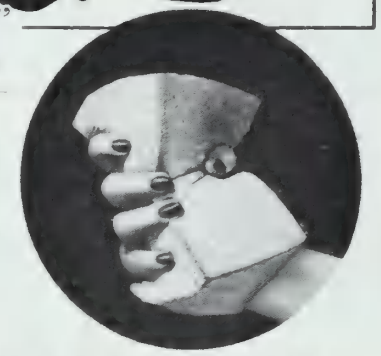
You say good-bye to musty linens when you launder with Clorox, for Clorox deodorizes ...leaves linens fresh-smelling. Clorox deodorizes in kitchen and bathroom cleaning, too!

4 In addition CLOROX is one of the world's great DISINFECTANTS

There's added health protection for your family in every bottle of Clorox you buy. For Clorox is the most efficient germ-killer of its kind . . . whether used in laundering or in routine cleaning. And Clorox costs so little . . . protects so much. See directions on the label.

You get all 4 in 1 with CLOROX America's Favorite



CLOROX-CLEAN means ADDED HEALTH PROTECTION!

"Well...it's almost like Koylon!"

Super-whipped Koylon foam makes the world's most luxurious cushioning: it's economical too—wears for years. Always smooth, needs no fluffing. Ask about new furniture with Koylon.

U.S. Koylon® FOAM Cushioning

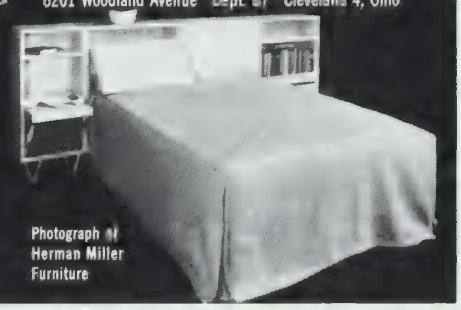
UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY

Rockefeller Center, New York

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Planning a Hollywood Bedroom?

Get all the facts in "DECORATING MAGIC". A 20-page illustrated booklet—a guide to modern bedroom design. Contains scores of ideas.



SEND 10¢ IN COIN FOR YOUR COPY

HARVARD OF CLEVELAND

6201 Woodland Avenue Dept. 87 Cleveland 4, Ohio

Plan on a Harvard Bed Frame!

The versatile, adjustable Harvard Frame is the key to your new decorating scheme. Choose the type that best suits your particular need. There are styles for use with or without headboards. There is the popular swing frame. And illustrated is the headboard-shelf combination with a specially designed Harvard unit. In any bedroom setting, the Harvard Frame is the perfect foundation.

Photograph of Herman Miller Furniture famous EATON'S HIGHLAND LINEN

Fashion-right...Gift Perfect

Sized to your varied needs, styled to your heart's delight, packaged with typical Eaton grace. White, and a garden of color — pink, blue, green, grey — fabricked as to surface and smooth as a petal under the pen. Yours for a song, this altogether perfect writing paper for keeping or giving. 69c for most sizes. In stationery departments, everywhere.

Eaton's fine Letter Papers

PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

Perhaps she thought I had used my press card under false pretenses, but she said she'd do it. "Have you got a pen?" she asked.

I gave her one. The crowd was growing. I recognized Clifton Webb and Ethel Waters, who were in the show too. Miss Miller held the pen impatiently.

"The—er—intimate garment," she said. "Where is it?"

"I don't have one," I explained. "At least not one that will do. It's got to be one of yours—that's the whole point."

She handed back my pen. "Sorry," she said. "I've given away a lot of things to souvenir hunters. But I'm not going to start giving away my underwear."

She turned to go back to her dressing room and some of the chorus girls started giggling. I started to follow her, not to ask her to change her mind but because I thought I owed her an apology.

"I didn't mean to trouble you, Miss Miller," I mumbled sheepishly over her shoulder. "It's just that they sent me out to find the best-looking girl in New York and so naturally ——"

She stopped and turned around. "Suppose you tell me, right from the beginning, what it's all about," she said, and she was smiling now.

I told her about the three of us from the paper covering the scavenger hunt, and how I had gone out with another couple and we had split up. I also explained, this time in detail, about how the cabdriver and I both had decided who the best-looking girl was.

"I think you're a darling boy," she beamed. "Have you still got that pen?"

I handed it to her. As she took it, I noticed my cabdriver edging through the door. He stood on the outer rim of the actors and actresses around Miss Miller and me.

"All gentlemen," said Miss Miller, "will please close their eyes tight."

I considered myself in that category, and closed mine. But I must have opened them before I was supposed to, because she was still wiggling like a snake. Then something dropped at her feet, and she leaned over and picked up a pair of step-ins. They were a sort of beige with accordion pleats and black lace.

"You can open your eyes now," she said. "What did you say your name is?"

I spelled it for her and she autographed them to me, with "best regards."

"How's that?" she asked, handing me them and the pen.

"Miss Miller, I want you to know I appreciate it," I stammered. "I mean, it's not every girl who would take off ——"

"It certainly isn't," she tittered. "But I know what you mean, and you're welcome."

THE driver and I walked back together to his cab. He seemed to have a new respect for me. "I got to hand it to you, friend," he said as we climbed in. "I don't know what you're going to do with them, but you got them fair and square. Where to now?"

"Now," I sighed happily, "I can go back to the Waldorf."

"It ain't none of my business, but what are you going to do there? Pick up the goat?"

"I hope so. And a stuffed bird and some other things."

I had to wait outside the hotel for a couple of minutes before Liz and her escort drove up. During that interval, I tried to concoct a workable plan to get rid of him long enough to find out her aunt's address. I didn't come up with anything constructive.

They had a she-goat with them in their cab, but no sparrow's nest. And I didn't need a plan, because Liz asked me if I'd take her home. It seems that after they had picked up the goat they had gone to Central Park to look for the nest. I gathered that her escort had not behaved in the manner that one might expect of a former Charleston man. Anyway, they weren't speaking.

I gave him the horsehair and the rattail, since I had bought them with his money. I also showed him what Miss Miller had given me, but I decided to keep them as a mem to of the occasion.

Fatty was pouting as never before. ut Miss Miller's step-ins impressed him. " ow in the world did you get those?" he as d. "Did you just go over to the theater d request them?"

"No," I said, mostly for Liz's ben t. "The time was getting late, so I phoned er and asked her to bring them over here.

We left him then and started for the o- way. Liz's aunt lived uptown, and we there in a few minutes. They were wai g up for her, and she asked me to come in, t I had to get back to the hotel and then g o the office to write my part of the story.

I wanted to know when I could see iz again, but she was leaving for Charlesto n the morning. I told her, then, that I'd c e to Charleston, too, and get a job. I d t know whether she took me seriously or but she said she wished I would. She g e me her street address, so that I could d her when I got there.

WE shook hands, and I was at the bot m of the steps when it occurred to me th I needed a little bit more information.

"Hey, Liz," I called. "Which Charlesto "

"The Charleston," she said.

"West Virginia?"

"South Carolina!" she corrected me.

"I've always wanted to go there," I t her.

The door closed, and I walked on air to subway station.

When I asked the city editor whether knew any newspapermen in South Caroli he informed me that one of his former porters was the city itor of the News and Co ier, in Charleston. Herald Tribune's city e tor agreed to write News and Courier's c editor in my behalf. W not particularly sup stitious, I was convinc by then about the chain of circumstanc So I was immensely pleased, but not s prised, to receive a letter from the Charlest paper saying that a reporter had resign the week before, and that there was a j for me if I wanted it.

There is no defense against superiority except to love it.
—GOETHE.

I arrived in Charleston on a blue spri day. The azaleas and wistaria were in bloo and the palmetto trees nodded civilly to stranger who passed them on the street. thought Charleston was the most beauti city I had ever seen.

The News and Courier is the oldest da newspaper in the South, and has behind it century and a half of tradition in which has never failed to speak its mind. The a and tradition of the newspaper were broug home to me when I entered the city roo The desks were ancient. Large, woode bladed fans hung from the ceiling, and t atmosphere was musty.

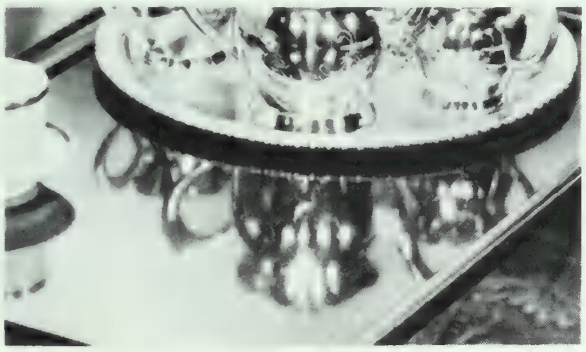
Someone showed me where I was to s and I looked around for the quill pen I su posed I would be expected to use to write m "leaders." They did have typewriters, aft all, but a wire basket attached to a rope w used to send copy upstairs to the composin room.

The musty atmosphere was deceiving, b cause the paper itself was wide awake. Th city editor was young and held steadfastl to the opinion that work never hurt anyon He liked to have words spelled just righ and he thought it was a good idea for r porters who had written ten or twelve new stories to bat out a Sunday feature or tw before they went home.

But he was easygoing in a way too. Late I found the companionship in the news roo such that I was often glad the city editor ap parently hadn't heard of the forty-hour week

I got a small apartment on the groun floor of one of the old mansions, about thre blocks from the paper. I could sleep unt noon, wander over to the paper to get m mail, eat a leisurely breakfast with some o the other reporters, drop back to the offic to get my assignments, and then go out o

(Continued on Page 118)



Now... a few easy wipes make furniture shine like a mirror!

This un-retouched photo shows how O-Cedar Dri-Glo—the new, non-oily silicone polish—makes furniture shine like a mirror. Just smooth on Dri-Glo and let it dry. Then, with a few easy wipes, you give your furniture a lovely luster that lasts for months. And that's not all . . .

Hot coffee won't mar Dri-Glo's protective, long-lasting silicone shine.

Dust can't cling. Dri-Glo's smooth surface is easy to dust as a glass-topped table.

Sticky finger prints wipe off easily with a damp cloth—the luster is bright as before.

Dri-Glo removes most surface dirt.

98c bottle of Dri-Glo shines all furniture in an average 6-room home.

O·Cedar dri·glo 98¢

Big 6-Room Size

A NON-OILY SILICONE POLISH
by the makers of the famous O-Cedar Sponge Mop

O-Cedar Corp'n
Chicago, Illinois

O-Cedar of Canada, Ltd.
Toronto, Canada

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

GUARANTEE! Your money back if you aren't completely satisfied Dri-Glo lives up to every claim made for it here.

For laundry wear and ironing heat— The strongest is a Pequot Sheet

PEQUOT
PLUS-SERVICE
SHEETS
PILLOW CASES

More than 144 threads to the inch for strength and stamina — finest cotton for softness and comfort — no wonder these famous sheets and pillowcases have earned the name "Plus-Service"!

When sheer luxury is your first consideration it's Pequot "Fine Combed Percales" — more than 200 combed threads to the inch—the smoothest feeling, best looking sheets you can buy!

To help you select the right sheets, send for our booklet "Do's and Don'ts"—it's FREE!

PEQUOT MILLS
Dept. L-6, Salem, Massachusetts

PEQUOT
Fine Combed
PERCALE
SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES
OVER 200 COMBED THREADS PER INCH

More than 40 million PEQUOT SHEETS are continuously in use

"The Nation Sleeps on PEQUOT SHEETS"

ON WITH THE NEW... each season!

...SHADES by Verplex

Your lamps reborn as Autumn comes. Myriads of modern, traditional or novelty shades befitting your seasonal decor . . . or mood. Gay replacements for refreshed interiors . . . necessities, of course, year in, year out.

This tag will guide you to all Verplex lamps and shades . . . temptingly priced at leading stores everywhere.

LAMPS and SHADES by Verplex

THE Verplex COMPANY at Essex Connecticut

(Continued from Page 116)

my beat. I worked six days a week and often until past midnight, but there was never any pressure, and after New York it was marvelous.

Liz didn't know I was in town. The impulse to call her immediately was strong, but I was beginning to feel a little silly about having followed her to Charleston. I let a week go by, and the morning I finally telephoned she wasn't home. Her mother said she had a civil-service job at the NRA, and wouldn't be home until supper.

I went by the paper and got the NRA added to my beat. Then I walked over to the building where the office was situated. On the way, I had a frightening suspicion that I might not be able to recognize her. I tried to visualize what she had looked like when we had said good-by on her aunt's front steps.

Liz wasn't in the row of secretaries in the outer office. The doors to the various private offices were open, and I looked in them one at a time. I needn't have worried about whether I'd know her when I saw her. She was in the state director's office, taking dictation, and she looked better than ever. I walked in there, and she dropped her shorthand pad.

I said good morning to the director. Liz leaned over to retrieve her pad, and when she was hidden by the desk from her boss she motioned frantically for me to get out.

"Something I can do for you, sir?" he asked me.

"I think so, sir." I had already learned that if a male was more than twelve years old and you didn't know him very well, you always "sirred" him in Charleston. "At least I hope so, sir."

"I'm pretty busy right now, sir," he said. "This little lady and I"—he motioned toward Liz's chair—"have some important business to attend to."

"You took the words right out of my mouth, sir," I said. "I mean, sir, that you and I will have some important business to attend to. I just want to introduce myself, because I'll be coming by here every day. I'm on the News and Courier, and I've been assigned to cover your office."

The state director said he'd been trying for a long time to have the newspaper assign a man regularly to NRA, and then turned to introduce me to Liz.

"Say, haven't I seen you someplace before?" I asked her. "The girl I'm thinking of collected goats and stuffed birds."

"It must have been somebody else. I go in strictly for sparrows' nests."

THE state director laughed, and told me to have a seat. He said that all reporters were sure-enough characters, weren't they, but the little lady could dish it back just as fast as I could dish it out, couldn't she?

Liz and her mother, who was the widow of a Methodist minister, lived in a small apartment about a block from mine. Neither of them was a native Charlestonian, although both were born in South Carolina. Since Methodist ministers ordinarily were transferred to another church every four years, they had lived in almost every town in the lower half of the state.

Her mother and I got along well, although it wasn't long before I could recite all the arguments ever devised about why young people should go to church regularly and should steer as clear of alcohol as the devil does of holy water.

I had little except persistence to recommend me as a suitor. I had put on a little weight, but now that hair goo and brilliantine were out of fashion my red hair had a tendency to stand up straight. My salary was less than Liz's. I didn't have a bank account. I had to work six nights a week. I didn't have a Southern ancestor to my name.

But I monopolized more and more of Liz's time, and within two months we were planning what kind of maple furniture we were going to have in our living room.

Meanwhile, I learned a great deal Liz's history and the hazards of grow in a minister's family. My fundar fault appeared to be something that too late for me to correct. Instead of b Southern Methodist minister, I was a ern Congregationalist newspaperman being confronted by something that never be totally remedied even b changing my residence and church tion, both Liz's mother and I decid make the best of it. After that I becan mensely fond of her, and I think sh of me.

LIZ and I decided to be married i parsonage of the church over whic father had presided in Charleston. It quiet little wedding that went off b fully, I am told. Two of the men on the and Courier, who happened to hav day off, came by my apartment a cou hours before the ceremony and conv me that I was pale and nervous. The they had just the medicine to fix me since I insisted that a man ought to be pletely sober at his own wedding—espe if he were marrying a minister's daugh they took the medicine for me.

The closer they got to the bottom bottle, the more concerned they be about my welfare. Finally they de that, if I wouldn't take a drink, the least I should do was to take a bromid less I wanted to risk the indignity of fai

Although I had never had a bromi fore, I agreed at last that I probably n one. I didn't find out until later that t called bromide actually was soda wa which four sleeping had been dissolved. looking back at that rence through the glow of retrospect, see no trace of humor

The highest interest we pay is for borrowed trouble.
—JOSH BILLINGS.

I yawned pol through the cere I had to be remind kiss the bride. Liz's mother came up an good-by, and I think she leaned forwa smell my breath. Anyway, she patte on the arm, and said, "It must be s thing else. I knew you wouldn't do th us."

Then I stumbled to our recently ac secondhand Ford roadster. I didn't fee driving, so I asked Liz if she'd mind t the wheel for a while, and we started o Washington with me slumped over i right-hand seat.

"Do you feel sick?" Liz asked anxi

"I feel fine. Just sleepy, that's all."

As we rode on, I heard Liz speaking, knew I hadn't been listening. Somethin said seemed to require an answer. Wh asked her to repeat it, she stamped do the accelerator and hollered, "I asked three times whether you thought I look right at the wedding."

"I guess so," I replied vacantly. " not?"

Liz lapsed into a moody silence, a dozed off for a few minutes. I slept al way to Washington—with my mouth Liz alleges.

I was still yawning when I registered Washington hotel. But after a sound, hour sleep that night, I woke up feeling

Liz was inclined to be irked. I rememb some of the questions she had asked m day before, and my stupid answers. I st telling her what a pretty bride she had and all that sort of thing. Then I expla about the bromide, and both of us a that the men from the paper must hav something in it.

We lived for a few years in Charlesto then moved to Raleigh, North Car where I worked for the Associated P Those were lighthearted, happy days Liz and me. We kept a sloppy but reason sanitary house, stayed up late at night, late in the morning, and ate when we like it.

Our daughter Betsy, who was bor Raleigh, adjusted herself easily to my n time working hours. Liz took her up at

(Continued on Page 120)

Never before... such beauty ... such duty!

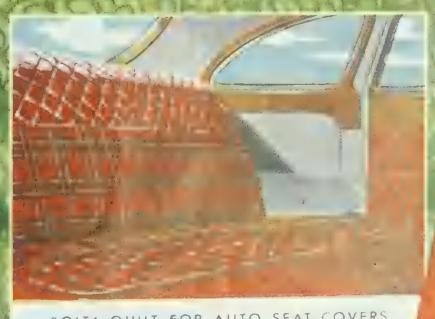
If you've a brood whose mood is lively, if your furniture must be beautiful for you yet practical enough to please the man of the house, and at prices that won't scuttle the family budget — lady, you must be looking for furniture covered with Boltaflex!

For all of its exquisite luxury-fabric beauty, Boltaflex has a wear story, a care story to cheer the heart of any gal who does her own housework. It won't chip, won't peel . . . resists scuffing, staining and fading . . . cleans with ease and a little soap and a damp cloth. It's yours for a more beautiful home in a glorious range of colors and patterns.

The finest stores everywhere have Boltaflex-covered furniture, so look for the Boltaflex tag — it tells the best from the rest! Want to know more? Write to Dept. L-9, Bolta Products Sales, Inc., Lawrence, Massachusetts.

It's new! It's beautiful! It's Swirl — one of Bolta's magnificent Textelle patterns that captures precious-fabric beauty in pure plastic Boltaflex. And what's a muddy shoe smudge in the young, hardy life of easy-to-clean, wears-like-a-dream Boltaflex!

Boltaflex* means Covered with lasting Beauty



*THE FINEST ALL-PLASTIC COVERING MATERIAL

HOME DECORATION

INFLATABLES

BOLTA-QUILT FOR AUTO SEAT COVERS

Hand-Crafted Heritage

When balmy breezes turn a wee bit cool and catch up the spicy scent of burning leaves mingled with that of savory foods . . . a zest for festive dining stirs the appetite! Set the scene with your Cape Cod crystal, the perfect fulfillment of American hand-crafted creativeness. Open stock.

THE IMPERIAL GLASS CORPORATION, BELLAIRE, OHIO.

(Continued from Page 118)

night, so that I could see her for a few hours when I got home, and Betsy usually slept until noon the next day. Whether or not burning the midnight oil is good for a child, Betsy seemed to thrive on it.

Betsy was four years old when the Japanese attacked at Pearl Harbor. I told Liz I was eager to get into the thick of things, and she didn't object when I sent out feelers to both the Army and the Navy.

The Army told me it needed privates for the infantry, but I wasn't sure that I was quite that eager or wanted to get in quite that thick. The Navy said it needed officers in Public Relations.

I informed Liz that it was a hard choice to make. I explained that not everybody was trained for Public Relations work, as I was, and that while it didn't sound very exciting it was the sort of unpopular duty that someone had to be patriotic enough to volunteer for.

Liz said she supposed it was entirely beside the point, but that what she liked about Public Relations was that it would be safer and more comfortable for me than an infantryman's foxhole.

I agreed that was entirely beside the point, but I joined the Navy, and I was ordered to report back to Charleston, for duty in the Sixth Naval District headquarters.

As Liz had suspected, the Public Relations office turned out to be considerably less hazardous and more commodious than a foxhole. In fact, it was situated in a plush suite of the city's most fashionable hostelry, the Fort Sumter Hotel, which the Navy had taken over.

Almost all new Naval Reserve officers were sent to some sort of indoctrination school to learn the difference between port and starboard, ships and boats, and admirals and hotel doormen. For reasons best known to somebody in Washington—perhaps because I had listed in my application the fact that I owned a fifteen-foot sailboat at Nantucket—it was decided to waive indoctrination in my case. I got a short haircut and bought my uniforms from a tailor in Charleston. While he was sewing on the stripe and a half of gold braid that indicated my rank of lieutenant, junior grade, he showed me the insignia of other ranks so I'd know whom to salute.

FORTUNATELY for me, almost everyone in the Sixth Naval District was a reserve, too, and while I may have been the only one who had had to rely on a tailor for indoctrination, they didn't know very much more than I did. As long as I remembered to salute and say "sir" to those who outranked me, I found I could keep out of trouble in Charleston.

Most of the higher-ranking reserves in the Sixth Naval District headquarters were legal, recreational, intelligence, athletic, public-relations, transportation or personnel officers. Few of them had even been on a ship, and almost all of them had been civilians up until a few months before.

But to hear them talk, you would have thought they had been with Dewey at Manila Bay. I doubt if there was any group of officers in the Navy who could give terser commands to subordinates or who could rely so heavily on Naval terminology and slang.

The Fort Sumter Hotel was the sl... heavily carpeted floors were decks, its m... walls were bulkheads, and its ornate co... were passageways. To call them an... else was to prove that you were a landl...

The Public Relations office was perh... salty as any in the good ship Fort S... Hotel. The head man of the office, wh... urally was the skipper, was a lieutenan... mander. We had enough lieutenant... lesser ranks to run a destroyer, provide... of us knew how to run a destroyer, o... knew what a destroyer looked like.

WE ran a mighty taut ship in Public ... tions. We stood watches over all our ... stuff, which consisted almost entirely ... leases to be given the newspapers. We ... both a rough log and a smooth log. W... time by bells. And we learned to bark o... ders with authority.

We also were expected to employ wh... were informed was the Navy technic... answering telephones. You grasped t... strument firmly and bayed into it, ide... ing your office, ... rank and you... immediately ... without nonsens... fore the person ... other end h... chance to put a ... in edgewise. Fo... stance, the way ... supposed to a... the phone was, "... Naval District P... Relations office, ... tenant, Junior G... Gilbreth."

I picked up ... proper telep... technique with... week or so, bu... proved to be the ... doing of an E... Wing, who other... was a good of... Wing had been a ... announcer in civ... life, and had tro... remembering ... wasn't supposed ... put every bit of ... sonality he had ... each greeting. ... telephone would ... and without thin... he'd scoop it up ... say "Hello-ho," ... cheerful, eager v... which spanned ... octaves and soun... as if he were getting ready to ask all the ... and girls listening in whether they had ... membered to mail their box tops so ... they could get their Dick Tracy badges.

There was bad blood between Wing ... the lieutenant who was head of his dep... ment, because of an incident involving on... our station wagons. The incident occur... when the lieutenant, who was flying back ... Charleston after being home on leave, wi... Wing to have an "ambulance" meet him ... the airport. We weren't supposed to use ... station wagons for private business, ... "ambulance" was a code name devised ... the lieutenant before he went on leave.

The wire came through on a Sund... morning. Wing hadn't expected it so so... and had gone to the beach.

The telegraph company, which knew ... emergency message when it saw one, search... frantically for the ensign. Finally, since ... couldn't be located, the wire was turned o... to the Naval Hospital.

When the plane bearing the lieuten... landed at the Charleston airport, a doc... with the rank of commander and two cor... men carrying a stretcher climbed eage... aboard. The lieutenant happened to be ... only Navy passenger, so it was impossible ... him to deny his identity. They insisted ... carrying him off in the stretcher. It was ... until they were loading him into the a... bulance, and threatening to give him an ... jection if he didn't lie still, that he fina...

(Continued on Page 122)

For an Anniversary

By Dan G. Hoffman

His mind projects old images
On an inward screen.
Reeled remembrances unwind
A montage scene:
Now laughter falls like rain upon
A familiar place;
A young man stands there, stricken by
His belovèd's face.
A casual greeting, and she passes;
He feels the bitter tooth
Of loneliness, and turns with all
The impetuousness of youth
To follow where her beauty leads,
To overtake her,
To offer her proud heart delight,
His own to make her . . .

Morning flashes on the screen,
With dreamlight blending.
She stirs within her dream of love—
His dream's bright ending!

Towle Sterling provides a beautiful setting... For You

YOU, the hostess, are the focal point of your home. Your graciousness is a quality that springs from poise, from the security of being correct.

The presence of TOWLE Sterling has been a subtle compliment to hostesses of many generations. All TOWLE Sterling is solid silver, fashioned by a rare tool — inherited skill. Its quiet elegance on your table says wordlessly: here is a person of taste.

This loveliness costs so little: teaspoons from $3.35, six-piece place settings from $27.50, serving pieces from $3.75.

For easy ways to own your TOWLE Sterling, send 10c in coin to Dept. L-9, Towle Silversmiths, Newburyport, Massachusetts, and ask for How to Build Your Own Collection of Towle Sterling.

TOWLE
STERLING

There's a Towle pattern that's perfect for you

HERE'S ALL YOU NEED—TO OWN

A GENUINE HITCHCOCK SETTLER

WITH Lady Handicraft

Madeira Needlepoint by Lees

Authentic as a Connecticut Yankee! This genuine Hitchcock Settler gives smart accent to any decor! Perfect for TV or fireside guests. The needlepoint seat is available in three authentic grospoint or petitpoint Hitchcock designs. All you do is fill in the background with Lees Lady Handicraft Matched Dye Tapestry Yarn.

The Hitchcock Settler is available in ebony black, mahogany or maple finish, and has a sponge rubber cushioned seat. Ask about the Settler and other Lady Handicraft Needlepoint Patterns at your favorite Art Needlework Department or write James Lees and Sons Company, Bridgeport, Pa.

Complete instructions on this Lees Label attached to every canvas.

FAMOUS PRODUCTS—LEES CARPETS AND RUGS, COLUMBIA AND MINERVA HAND KNITTING YARNS

(Continued from Page 120)

convinced them they were making a horrible mistake.

The lieutenant was furious at Wing, but he couldn't do anything officially without letting it be known that he had planned to use the station wagon. He could, and did, however, start berating Wing for his telephone habits.

Wing did his best to remember the Navy way to answer the phone. His best wasn't good enough. It got to the point where the lieutenant would hide behind a newspaper at his desk and dial Wing's extension to test him. If the lieutenant got a "hello-ho," he'd emerge triumphant but apoplectic from the newspaper, leap over to Wing, and threaten to have him court-martialed or, worse still, sent back for another semester at indoctrination school.

Both the lieutenant and Wing really were pretty nice fellows, and probably would have got along fine together as civilians. But the telephone routine began to take up most of their time, and the bad feeling between them affected everyone's work.

The lieutenant's threats became increasingly immoderate. Wing knew better than to retaliate directly, but it was not long until he had had enough.

Every time the lieutenant would look his way or pass his desk, the ensign would stop whatever he was doing, sit up ramrod straight, click his heels under his chair, grab his telephone, and bellow, "Sixth Naval District Public Relations office, Ensign Wing, just practicing, just practicing, just practicing." Then he'd hang up the phone and look around the room as if he were anxious to have the verdict of the assembled officers, enlisted men and stenographers.

"How was that, eh?" he'd ask. "Did I sound good? Did I sound like a lieutenant? Do you think I could be a lieutenant someday and ride in station wagons?"

It wasn't long until Wing was transferred to a mine sweeper where, it was generally understood, they knew how to handle wise guys.

I was assigned to an aviation utility squadron and sent with it to the New Hebrides. Aside from missing Liz and Betsy, it was the best duty I had in the Navy.

Since we were on a stand-by, training basis, and since there weren't any Japanese within 800 miles of the New Hebrides, we didn't have much unpleasant work to do. Our only casualties while I was with the outfit were two pilots who were struck by falling coconuts and a mechanic who was bitten by a wild pig.

Everybody had prickly heat—including the flight surgeon, who had a worse case than anyone but optimistically kept prescribing new powders and lotions that he guaranteed would cure us—and everybody was homesick. Those are occupational diseases of the tropics, and while you can never throw them off you learn to get used to them.

I WAS administrative and photographic officer. But Naval Aviation outfits are informal and paper work is kept to a minimum, so the fact that I didn't know anything about airplanes, administration or photography wasn't held against me. I found various jobs to do, gradually became reasonably proficient at my duties, learned a good bit about aerial mapping and explored the islands. I also was promoted to the rank of full lieutenant.

Five pilots and I—all lieutenants and lieutenants, junior grade—lived in something that was half tent and half house, in a row of similar structures at our camp. We got along exceptionally well, and spent most of our free time together.

All of us resented it when a new pilot, a Lieutenant Commander Apple, was assigned to the squadron and decided to move in with us. In order to make room for him, someone had to get out. We cut cards for it, and one of the young pilots lost, but even those who remained bore Apple a grudge for [illegible] broken up our group.

After he had moved in, the lieutenant commander proceeded to appropriate the best bed, the coolest location and the best locker. There wasn't anything we could do about it, because he had the rank. But ordinarily, when a new officer joins a squadron he takes what's vacant until something better turns up, and doesn't push anyone out of his home and bed.

The lieutenant commander was fresh from the United States, whereas the five of us remaining in our tent house considered ourselves to be overseas veterans. We proceeded to make his life as miserable as possible.

The master plan which we ultimately devised to torture him was a success principally because of the fact that we devoted several hours a day to it. A contributory element was the fact that Apple was probably the most gullible lieutenant commander in the Navy.

THE plan involved a mimeographed daily bulletin, which was distributed at breakfast every morning to all our personnel. The bulletin was issued by an Army base near our camp, and was about a page and a half long. It contained news items picked up on the American radio stations, plus items of special New Hebrides interest—about touring USO shows, the movie schedules of various camps and changes in off-limits orders. The bottom half of the second sheet of the bulletin was blank, and we started adding faked camp items to the copy which was given Apple.

The weaker sex is the stronger sex because of the weakness of the stronger sex for the weaker sex.

—ANNA FAYE.

We'd write out these bogus news items in long hand the night before. Then one of us would get up early, go to the squadron's administration hut, and copy the items with a typewriter onto a mimeograph stencil. The items then were mimeographed on the blank portion of the bulletin which Apple was to receive. Our items looked just as if they had been put there by the Army.

We took a mess steward into our confidence, and he saw to it that the lieutenant commander received each morning the bulletin we had prepared especially for him.

At the start we were extremely cautious until we could determine how much Apple would swallow. He swallowed it all. We announced, in his bulletin, that Bob Hope was going to arrive in a week for a USO show to be held at an airfield two miles from camp. Apple read that and was extremely pleased.

We built the show up a little more each day, until Apple could scarcely wait for it. Betty Grable had joined the Hope show.

"Wow," said Apple.

So had Rita Hayworth. Also Lana Turner. Also twenty-five teen-aged starlets from Hollywood. Gypsy Rose Lee would be an added attraction.

If such an event really had been scheduled all of us, of course, would have been there. But when Apple told us to come on and get ready, if we didn't want to be late, we replied that we wouldn't walk across the street to see a USO show.

"Not even to see those teen-aged starlets?" said Apple, shaking his head. "I believe you guys have been out here too long."

It rained every night at that time of year. You got accustomed to it, and didn't mind sitting in it during a movie or show. But one night we got a lot of satisfaction when the rain began about ten minutes after Apple had left for the nearby airfield.

The lieutenant commander was confused and furious, but still unsuspicious, when he returned dripping wet an hour later.

"Those jackasses over there didn't know a thing about it," he stormed. "They said they hadn't even heard of any USO show."

We told him he must have gone to the wrong airfield. He still was puzzled, but he agreed that must have been it.

"You would have thought at least they would have read about it, though," Apple said doubtfully. "It's been in the bulletin every day for the last week."

esson
rom daughter

S learned it at school. Sani-Flush is he modern way to keep toilet b ls sparkling clean without work.
C ck, easy, sanitary. Sani-Flush a s chemically—no messy scrub-b g. Disinfects too—just follow
d ections on the yellow can.
Be sure to get Sani-Flush at your g cer's. No other will do. The J gienic Products Co., (nton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

E UMED with a fresh, mild fragrance

A E QUICK EASY CASH
S LL CHRISTMAS CARDS
50 imprinted $1.25. FREE SAMPLES. Christmas Assortments 21 $ ar 1. Personalized stationery, napkins, matches. Complete $ ch mas & Everyday Lines. 100%. Profit. Cost nothing to try. $ Fu raising plan. Write for Samples. $
R USE CARD CO., Dept. 51 L, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

lore people prefer...

Eastern

PRE-FAB* VENETIAN BLINDS
Custom-made for you!

Only PRE-FAB can give you all the wonderful features that add new beauty to your windows. All-metal enclosed head, self-adjusting tilter, finger-touch action and Rolla-Head one-piece metal bottom rail makes cleaning easy.

Now . . . Eastern's improved all-metal slat material makes your venetians lighter, brighter, more beautiful. DuPont Plastic finish colors.

sist on PRE-FAB! There a custom manufacrer within reach of your lephone. *PRE-FAB blinds re custom-made with the equip-ent and products made by
ASTERN MACHINE PRODUCTS CO.
Baltimore 30, Md.

The last hoax that I participated in had to do with an imaginary arsonist. Starting again in a small way, we reported for several days in his bulletin that minor fires of undetermined origin were breaking out at an Army camp on the other side of the island, and that authorities were investigating. Then we wrote that the Army's administration building had burned down, and that a firebug was suspected as being responsible. Finally we wrote that a second lieutenant, who apparently had gone stir-crazy from being on the island too long, had been arrested for starting the fires.

"We ought to stand a watch," Apple informed us after reading of this latest development. "Suppose someone in our squadron should get off the beam like that."

We let matters rock along for a few days, and then inserted a graphic if improbable account about how the lieutenant, endowed now with maniacal strength, had escaped from the guardhouse by bending apart the bars. The account ended with a warning for all military personnel to be on the lookout for the officer, who was criminally insane, desperate and believed to be armed.

Apple renewed his pleas for us to establish a voluntary watch at our tent, and when we refused he started taking two automatic pistols to bed with him. He also obtained a fire extinguisher and a bucket of sand, which he placed under his bed.

Probably we should have let well enough alone, but by now the misleading of Mr. Apple had become our principal diversion. We waited until he was asleep one night, unloaded his pistols, attached rolls of film to the low-hanging branches of trees that almost touched our quarters on three sides, and lighted the film. Then we got back into our beds.

The film, used in aerial cameras, won't burst into flame, but puts out a choking, yellow smoke. We waited until the tent was full of it, and all hollered "Fire!" simultaneously and as loud as we could. Then we made believe we were asleep.

Apple's bare feet hit the floor, and at the same time you could hear him scratching for his pistols. Apparently he located them, because he gave a piercing banzai shriek, and pounded out of the tent to do battle with the arsonist.

"I see you, lieutenant," he shouted. "Halt or I'll fire."

We heard his pistols click half a dozen times. He cursed and came running back into the tent again.

"Who's got a loaded pistol?" he roared, running around the room and shaking each of us. "I saw him. I'm almost sure I had a bead on him."

"Well, why didn't you shoot him, instead of waking us up?" one of the pilots complained.

"Get up and help me fight the fire," Apple demanded.

We told him that it wasn't our fire, and that if he wanted to fight it to go do it by himself, and please to be as quiet about it as possible, because we were going back to sleep.

"I don't like to pull rank in my own tent," said the lieutenant commander, "but I order you to turn to and fight the fire. On the double, and that's an order too."

There wasn't anything we could do but obey him, and obey him quickly. I took the sand, somebody else took the fire extinguisher, and Apple took a flashlight. We went outside, and Apple discovered the smoldering film.

"Very funny," he remarked. "Very, very funny."

He jerked down the rolls of film one at a time, and I covered them with sand.

"You guys," said the lieutenant commander, when we were back in the tent, "think you're comedians, don't you?"

We told him we didn't know what he was talking about. It looked to us, we said, as if somebody in one of the other tents had tried to pull a joke on our tent.

Apple was gullible, all right, but not that gullible. He remembered about his pistols' being unloaded, and he figured that no one

Pennsylvania water bench
—so versatile!
$66.00

Spool bed, twin or double size.
$99.50

Nightfall in Lancaster County

WILLETT SOLID Lancaster County MAPLE

...MELLOWED BY THE SOFT GLOW OF SOLID MAPLE FURNITURE

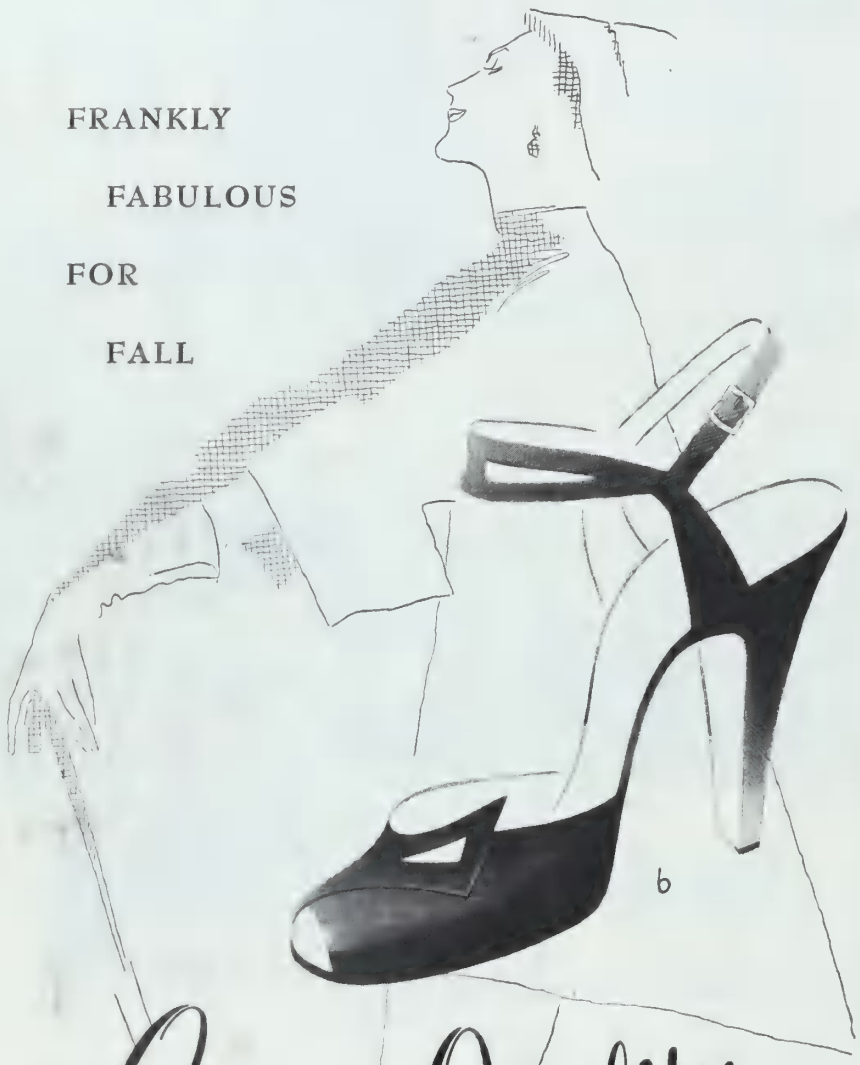
It started 150 years ago. But it will live for the centuries to come.

This is Willett furniture based on the simple lines of the old Pennsylvania Dutch pieces of Lancaster County. Born into it is the charm of the years, the longevity of solid construction, the mellowness that only hand rubbing on good wood can bring. Truly collectors' pieces that pay you back for your own thoughtfulness in choosing them. Budget priced. All the furniture pieces in the photograph (including a beautifully upholstered chair) can be yours for approximately $562*. Also available in OPEN STOCK.

* Prices F. O. B. Louisville

Chest on chest.
$167.50

Wagon seat coffee table.
$73.00



America's largest maker of solid maple and cherry furniture for living room, dining room and bedroom.

CONSIDER H. WILLETT, INC., LOUISVILLE 11, KENTUCKY

a

FRANKLY FABULOUS
FOR FALL

b

Queen Quality

c

Wear them with an air of assured elegance. To ultra-smart fashion we add ever-perfect fit, on heels high or smartly lowered.

a. Luxury b. Ladue c. Laura

ENDEARING STYLE • ENDURING BEAUTY

Write Dept. "H" for free style booklet

QUEEN QUALITY SHOE COMPANY • DIV. INTERNATIONAL SHOE COMPANY, ST. LOUIS

except us knew that he took them to bed with him.

"You'll find you've got to get up pretty early in the morning to pull the wool over my eyes," he said shrewdly.

Since we had been doing just that, we didn't question the veracity of his statement.

"The skipper won't increase the security watch," he added, "and that's his responsibility. But I'm the senior officer in this tent, and from now on we're going to have an all-night watch here."

The only way we could have had the order canceled was to go to the captain, and we agreed we'd better not do that. So we stood watches while Apple slept.

But the lieutenant commander himself rescinded the order a few days later, after we inserted in his bulletin a brief item saying that the arsonist had been captured, had been clapped into double irons aboard a ship, and was en route to the United States.

Although Apple's faith in us was shaken, his faith in his bulletin was steadfast. I was transferred about that time, and when I left, my tentmates were plotting some sort of imaginary invasion of the New Hebrides. They still hadn't made up their minds whether to have the invaders come from Japan, Germany or Mars.

Rear Admiral James T. Burkbridge was tall, white-haired and wiry, with a rather thin mouth, long neck and ice-blue eyes. He had the reputation of getting things done. The opinion of his junior officers seemed to be divided as to whether he was a peppery old salt or a salty old pepper. But opinion was unanimous that he was able, and that junior officers who didn't know their business had better stay as far away from him as possible. The recommended minimum distance was 3000 miles.

Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith.

—PROVERBS 15:17.

I stood at attention, or tried to, in the stateroom of his flagship. The ship was rocking at anchor off the New Guinea coast, and I didn't have my sea legs.

"Lieutenant Gilbreth reporting for duty, sir," I barked out.

The admiral was sitting in a swivel chair at his desk. He swung around to face me, and looked me over. "Welcome aboard, Gilbreth," Admiral Burkbridge said. "You're my public-relations officer, aren't you?"

"Yes, sir," I nodded. "And that's what I want to talk with you about, sir."

"Well, have a chair," he told me, smiling cordially. "They said I'd have to get a public-relations officer, because we may have reporters aboard when we go into the Philippines."

I WENT to get a chair, but the ship tipped and I fell toward him. If he hadn't held me off, I might have landed in his lap.

"Not this chair, Gilbreth," he said patiently. "I meant for you to get another chair."

"Right, sir." I walked crabwise to a chair, grabbed it, and cautiously sat down.

"Now what's on your mind?" Admiral Burkbridge smiled again, and looked apologetically at his watch. "I'm afraid I can't give you more than five minutes. Will that be enough?"

I said that would be plenty. He seemed like a good Joe to me, and I supposed all that talk I had heard about admirals' being hard to get along with was just so much scuttlebutt.

"Admiral, may I speak frankly?" I asked.

"By all means. Care for a cigarette?"

I took one. "Sir, I don't know a thing about admirals—you're the first one I ever spoke to—or a thing about ships, outside of catboats, and very little about the Navy. But I was with an aviation squadron, where I seemed to fit in well. I learned to be an administrative officer and an aerial photographer, and I liked the duty."

"Squadron duty is good duty," he agreed.

"Well, we had been training for quite a few months, and it won't be long before they're moved up forward. But what happens to me?"

"I can answer that," the admiral s ed. "I found out that you had public-rel on training. And I needed a public-rel officer."

"I'd prefer to stay with the squadr if it's at all possible, sir. I have a letter fro he captain of the squadron saying he'd l to have me back, if you'll let me go." I st ed to hand the letter to the admiral, b he wouldn't take it. Instead, he blinked hi as if he couldn't believe them.

"Where did you go to indoctrin on school?" he asked.

"I never went, sir. I was a civilian on a and an officer the next. And now," I a d making a joke of it, "I'm on a flagship i he middle of the Pacific, and durned if I k the bow from the stern."

"You will, though," said Admiral B k-bridge still mildly. "What were you bef ?"

"Newspaperman, sir."

"Good. Now are you all through? Bec se the five minutes is nearly up."

"Yes, sir."

ADMIRAL BURKBRIDGE put his head for rd on his long neck, and his forehead grew d. "Now you listen to me." He didn't rais is voice, but he seemed to be shouting. "Y ur personal wishes about what sort of duty ou prefer may be of interest to someone, at they are of no interest to me. There is a ar going on, do you understand?"

"Aye-aye, sir," I stuttered, and he le d over and punched his desk.

"Not 'Aye-aye, sir,'" he said, and no e was shouting. "'Aye-aye, sir' means yo e going to carry out an order. Every appren e seaman knows that. You mean, 'Yes, si '"

"Yes, sir."

"From now on yo e my public-relations offi . I've never had one bef . And do you know w t you're supposed to ? You're supposed to k p my name out of the ne papers. Those are your ders. Carry them out.'"

"Yes, sir," I said.

He punched the desk again. "Not ' sir.' 'Aye-aye, sir.' I just finished tel you!"

"Aye-aye, sir." I was surprised to find th I was standing stiffly at attention, instea f sitting in the chair. I didn't remember gett up. "Will that be all, sir?"

"That's all," he growled, turning back his desk.

I started to march out, and I was surpri d to find that I had my sea legs. I had b scared of the admiral when he started holler at me, and I was still scared of h But now I was angry, too, and I told my I'd like to turn around and wring his l neck.

"Gilbreth!" he roared, just as I was ab to step into the passageway.

I clicked my heels, did an about-face, a figured that if he was a mind reader I going to spend the rest of the war pushin lawn mower at the Naval Prison in Por mouth.

"Yes, sir," I snapped.

"We'll get along all right," he grinned me. "It's just that somebody's got to doctrinate you, right? And I need a publ relations officer worse than the squadr needs an administrative officer, right? N you go and see if you can learn the b from the stern."

"Right, sir," I said, feeling much bet about serving under him.

"No." He shook his head, but he was s grinning. "That answer is satisfactory, b I'm not going to let you get away with it. it 'Yes, sir' or 'Aye-aye, sir'?"

"It's 'Aye-aye, sir,'" I said, guessing.

"Good. That's all."

I saw the admiral almost every day aft that, but I made sure he didn't see me. stayed completely off the deck where h stateroom was, and when I spotted him co ing along the passageways of other decks ducked out of the way. After three weeks this, I felt pretty sure he had forgotten about me.

(Continued on Page 126)

The College Special

B MILLER looked down the crowded station platform and smiled. He smiled because so ma y other people were smiling, and because happ ss is a contagious thing.

They were mostly boys and girls—happy, care- re and obviously on their way back to college. Bo noticed the State University stickers on their ug age as they boarded the train, and noticed the pr d mothers and fathers waving their goodbyes as e train pulled out of the station.

Bob looked at his watch and saw that it would be nother ten minutes or so until his wife's train ar ved. He started walking toward the end of the pl form. A boy in denim coveralls was busy loadn crates and boxes on a baggage truck, and Bob wa ched him idly for a moment—until he realized h boy was Henry Wilson.

A cloud passed across Bob Miller's face. Why ha n't young Wilson been on the train with the ot rs? He remembered clearly how he and the bo 's father had worked out a New York Life n rance program many years before that would su re the money for his education. And certainly Sa ah Wilson had been left well provided for, too...

He walked over and waited until the boy had t ped to rest for a moment and then said, "Hello, H ry! Keeping you busy?" The young man turned a nd. "Oh, hello there, Mr. Miller. I hadn't n iced you! Going some place?"

"No—just waiting for my wife." The older m n nodded toward the half-filled truck and said, "Working here steady, Henry?" He concentrated o one of the crates, and held his breath—half a aid of what the answer might be.

The boy grinned and shook his head. "Only d ing the back-to-school rush, Mr. Miller. I'm le ving for State myself on Monday." He gestured ward the baggage office. "I figured this would l a good vacation job to have because I'd at least k ow where my luggage was!"

Bob Miller's sigh of relief was lost in the noise the incoming train. He looked at his watch again d smiled. "Well, Henry," he said, "I'm sure glad see that everything is running to schedule . . ."

EW YORK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
51 Madison Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Naturally, names used in this story are fictitious.

Let Your Beauty be Seen..

Palmolive Brings Out Beauty

WHILE IT CLEANS YOUR SKIN!

SO MILD... SO PURE!

For Tub or Shower
Get Big Bath Size Palmolive!

36 Leading Skin Specialists in 1285 Scientific Tests Proved That Palmolive's Beauty Plan Brings Most Women Lovelier Complexions in 14 Days

Start Palmolive's Beauty Plan today! Discover for yourself—as women everywhere have discovered—that Palmolive's Beauty Plan brings exciting new complexion loveliness.

Here's all you do: Gently massage Palmolive's extra-mild, pure lather onto your skin for just a minute, three times a day. Then rinse and pat dry. You'll see Palmolive bring out your beauty while it cleans your skin.

Doctors Prove Palmolive's Beauty Results!

(Continued from Page 124)

We had moved north to support the landings at Morotai, in the Netherlands East Indies. I was standing up in the bow, with some other lieutenants, after lunch one afternoon when the admiral came strolling by on an unofficial inspection. It was too late for me to hide under a life raft or anything, so I joined the other officers in snapping to attention and saluting.

Admiral Burkbridge returned the salute, smiled, and walked up to me. "Good afternoon, Gilbreth," he said.

"Good afternoon, admiral."

"I hope you're feeling well, Gilbreth."

"Fine, sir, and I hope you are."

"I'm feeling fine, too, only you should have asked me first."

"Aye-aye—I mean, yes, sir," I said.

I glanced around to see if the other lieutenants would help out some in the conversation, but they had all wisely disappeared.

"Gilbreth," he told me, "you know every admiral is supposed to have an aide and flag lieutenant who makes sure that everything goes smoothly for the admiral."

"Yes, sir."

"My aide and flag lieutenant was transferred last week. I've sent dispatch orders designating a new one." He smiled benevolently.

"We'll all be happy to welcome the lucky dog aboard, sir," I said, saluting two or three times and backing away from him. "It was mighty good to see you again, sir."

"Come back here," the admiral ordered. "When a superior officer is talking to you, Gilbreth, you don't walk away from him."

"Oh, no, sir. I thought perhaps I was taking up too much of your time."

"Did you think I came up here just to pass the time of day with you? What I'm trying to tell you is that you're my new aide and flag lieutenant."

I hoped he was joking. I knew a little about what an aide had to do. He had to live in a room practically next to the admiral's, and follow the admiral wherever he went. He had to run the signal bridge, and I didn't know any signals, any codes, any maneuvers, or any flag except the American one. He was in charge of all the small boats, including the admiral's barge and the captain's gig.

I thought that no lieutenant in his right mind would dream of asking for such a job. And the idea of giving it to a lieutenant who didn't even know how to get up to the signal bridge, let alone know what he was supposed to do after he got there, seemed ridiculous and possibly treasonous. There was no doubt, at any rate, that it was playing right into the hands of the enemy.

The more I thought of it, the more convinced I became that Admiral Burkbridge was pulling my leg. But I looked at him and decided immediately that he wasn't the type.

"That's fine, sir," I gulped.

"You look pale. You're not seasick, are you?"

"I hope not, sir."

"Well, then, start aiding."

"Aye-aye, sir," I said hopelessly. I clicked my heels and sucked in my stomach.

THE admiral continued his inspection, and I walked along with him—about half a pace behind and to the left, as I had seen his former aide do. We passed the lieutenants whom I had been with a few minutes before, and they looked at me as if I were crazy. No one stayed that close to an admiral unless he had to, and they still didn't know about my new capacity.

"See that gets fixed," said the admiral, pointing to something that was circular, painted black and fastened to the deck.

I didn't know what it was, and I certainly didn't know what was the matter with it, but I decided to bluff it out. "Aye-aye, sir."

We walked along, and I started to worry about the thing he had pointed to. Suppose it controlled the pumps, or the guns, or our radar, or something. Suppose that, because I hadn't had it fixed, the ship should sink. I weighed the lives and the equipment a in the admiral's almost certain wrath. Th seemed to balance pretty evenly, finally indicated that I had better ri wrath.

"Sir," I mumbled, tugging at his "what's the matter with it?"

"With what?"

"With that round thing back there

"Holy Moses." He turned around a his face into mine. "What round thin

"The one I'm supposed to get fixed.

"Don't you even know what it is?"

"No, sir."

"Well, go find out. And come back when you're through."

I hunted up an enlisted man, who to what it was, and I hunted up the ship lieutenant, who saw at a glance wha wrong with it. It was only a ventilator needed a little dusting.

THEN I rejoined the admiral on his in inspection. Every so often he'd poi something else, and tell me to get it fixe I had learned my lesson. I'd drop back paces and beckon anyone who was in si officer or enlisted man—and tell him th admiral wanted it fixed.

One lieutenant, who apparently know much more about ships than I scratched his head after I had beckoned and asked me what was wrong with the I had pointed to.

"Don't you see what's wrong with it asked.

"Shucks, I'm a communications off he said. "I don't even know what it is "Well, go find ou told him, hastenin catch up with the ad

ABSURDITY, n. A statement or belief manifestly inconsistent with one's own opinion. —AMBROSE BIERCE: The Devil's Dictionary (Albert & Charles Boni, Inc.).

A few Japanese p usually attacked at We'd sound general ters—a deafening, frig gong summoning ever to his battle statio soon as the attac planes were picked up on our radar sc

The admiral, his chief of staff and other high-ranking officers usually were ing supper in the admiral's quarters whe enemy planes came over. Although H bridge kept very much in touch with ev thing that was going on, he liked to giv impression that he had complete confid in his subordinates and that a little thing an air attack couldn't disturb his meal while the gong clanged and the ship thro with the sound of men running to their b stations, the officers at the admiral's would continue eating and discussing w ever they had been talking about.

The ship, of course, was under the c mand of her own captain, who would b the bridge directing the fighting. Alth the ship's captain was himself under th miral's command, he wasn't on the admi staff and thus didn't eat in the admiral's

I knew that my battle station was a admiral's side. I also knew that all off and men were required to have on hel and life jackets during general quarte donned mine, the first time the gong sou after I had been made aide, and raced the admiral's quarters.

I went to the admiral's side, and stoo attention. In the Navy you're suppose "uncover"—which means take off hat—when you go into the room of an who outranks you. I didn't know whethe not the rule applied to helmets when the was being bombed, but I took a chance left on mine. Since nobody told me to ta off, I knew I had guessed right.

"What is it, Gilbreth?" the admiral as "General quarters, sir," I said stiffly.

His chief of staff and the others choked hid their faces behind their napkins. But admiral was not amused.

"Not being totally deaf," he said con sationally, "we suspected that much. Bu are rather curious to know precisely why general quarters."

I agreed that their curiosity was un standable, and speculated that some J nese planes might be in the vicinity.

Dress by Young Viewpoint

You can have a better figure no matter what you weigh!

Mail coupon now for a free Spirella figure analysis in the privacy of your own home. See how your Spirella . . . is light and flexible . . . gently reinforces stretched muscles, gives you the comfortable support you need. Individually made from careful measurements. This service . . . in girdles, bandeaux, brassieres, corsets, and one-piece garments...is available only through competent local Spirella corsetieres.

Get a natural lift with

Spirella

The exclusive Spirella stay moves with your body, assures comfort in any position.

FREE FIGURE ANALYSIS

The Spirella Co., Inc., Dept. L-91,
Niagara Falls, New York.
(In Canada, The Spirella Company of Canada, Ltd., Niagara Falls, Ont.)

Yes, I would like a FREE figure analysis. Please have a Spirella corsetiere get in touch with me.

Name .....

Address ..... Phone .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Ready, profitable careers in your own neighborhood . . . dignified and professional . . . for responsible women under 50. We train. For full facts . . . check ☐ "Your theory is interesting and probably correct," Admiral Burkbridge said. "But do you know why we are at general quarters?"

"No, sir," I confessed.

"Then I suggest that since you don't know, you say you don't know."

"I don't know, sir."

He dropped his napkin, stood up slowly, and pushed his face in mine. I was getting to know his face better and better, and I supposed he'd never forget mine either.

"Well, go find out," he shouted. "On the double."

I left on the double. I knocked off my helmet as I ducked through the door, and had to come back to get it. The ship tipped and my helmet rolled, but fortunately I got it before it skidded under the table.

"Gilbreth," said the admiral, as I came up with the helmet, "you do know where to go to find out, don't you?"

"No, sir, but I'll find out where to find out, sir."

"That's the boy," he smiled. "But this time we need the information quickly, so I'll tell you. You go topside and—you know what topside is, don't you?"

"Yes, sir. Topside is upstairs."

The admiral winced, but he agreed that was precisely where it was. "You go topside, and ask for Air Plot. They'll tell you in there."

I went up to Air Plot, and found that one Japanese plane was overhead, at about 5000 feet, and that three others were approaching from 103 degrees and were about 20 miles away. I returned and reported this information to the admiral.

"What's the altitude of the planes at a hundred and three degrees?" he asked.

I knew the answer to that one. "I don't know, sir, but I'll go find out. On the double."

"Now you're talking. But go up to the bridge, first, and tell the captain to stop making smoke."

I SAID, "Aye-aye, sir," and remembered to duck as I went through the door. I found someone who knew the way to the bridge, and the captain of the ship was there with a good many of his senior officers. He looked almost as forbidding as the admiral, and he was busy giving orders, but I knew I had to interrupt him.

"Pardon me, sir," I said, "but ——"

He pushed me aside, and went on giving orders.

"It's urgent, sir," I persisted. "The admiral ——"

"Get out of here," he shouted. "Can't you see . . . what about the admiral?"

Everybody stopped talking and looked at me.

"I'm the admiral's aide, sir," I said. Then I added accusingly, "You're making smoke, aren't you, sir?"

"Oh," muttered the captain, "I forgot about that. I guess I am."

"Well, stop making smoke," I demanded in my most authoritative, Fort Sumter Hotel voice. Then, after a pause, I added, "The admiral says, sir."

The captain glared at me as if he were going to have me flogged, and I wondered if the admiral would intercede in my behalf. Probably not, I decided. But the captain finally turned and, as if he had just thought up the order himself, told one of his subordinate officers to stop making smoke—on the double.

I found out then about the altitude of the oncoming planes, which by now were overhead, and relayed the information to the admiral. But he still wasn't satisfied, and I had to go topside again to get data on their approximate speed.

Although I was Admiral Burkbridge's aide for almost a year, there never was a single time when I had all the information he wanted about attacking planes. He could always think up something to send me back for. I don't believe he would have been completely satisfied even if I could have told him the name, rank and age of the attacking pilots. He'd have probably told me to go find out how they parted their hair, and what their home towns were. On the double.

We never underestimate the power of a woman to judge good style and good value . . . You find it always in Lassie Jr. coats like this beautiful 100% virgin wool Saxony Tweed, in all new Fall shades.

Sizes 7 to 15, Style No. 2911 . . . $49.95.

This "Barky" pin is yours by sending only 25c in coin to cover postage and handling. Please PRINT your name and address.

Write today for our fall fashion folder.

For fashion folder and name of store in your city write
Lassie Jr., Dept. LHJ, 512 Seventh Ave., N.Y. 18

AND REMEMBER...THE LINING OF EVERY LASSIE IS GUARANTEED FOR THE LIFE OF THE COAT

Look Lovelier in 10 Days with Doctor's Home Facial ...or your money back!

New Beauty Routine Quickly Helps Skin Look Softer, Smoother, Lovelier!

No need for a lot of elaborate preparations . . . no complicated rituals! With just one dainty, snow-white cream—greaseless, medicated Noxzema—you can help your problem skin look lovelier!

The way to use it is as easy as washing your face. It's the Noxzema Home Facial, described at the right. Developed by a doctor, in clinical tests it helped 4 out of 5 women with problem skin look lovelier!

See how it can help you!

With this Home Facial, you "creamwash" to glowing cleanliness—without any dry, drawn feeling. You give skin the all-day protection of a greaseless powder base . . . the all-night aid of a medicated cream that helps heal,* soften, smooth.

Money-Back Offer! Get Noxzema today at any drug or cosmetic counter—40¢, 60¢, $1.00, plus tax. If this Facial doesn't help skin in 10 days, return jar to Noxzema, Baltimore, Md.—money back.

externally-caused blemishes*

Save this! Follow Noxzema's Home Facial as an aid to a lovelier-looking complexion!

Morning—Apply Noxzema over face and neck. Using a damp cloth, "creamwash" with Noxzema just as you would if you were using soap and water. When you "creamwash" your skin clean, there's no dry, drawn feeling afterwards!

Now, smooth on a light film of Noxzema for your powder base. This greaseless, invisible film of Noxzema not only holds make-up beautifully, but it also helps protect your skin all day!

Evening—At bedtime, "creamwash" again. How clean your skin looks! How fresh it feels! See how you've washed away make-up, the day's dirt—without harsh rubbing!

Now, lightly massage your skin with Noxzema to help soften and smooth. Pat a little extra over any blemishes* to help heal them. Medicated Noxzema is a greaseless overnight cream. No "smeary" face or messy pillow, when you use dainty, snow-white Noxzema!

NOXZEMA SKIN CREAM

Like an Angel of Mercy to your skin

War or no war, the Navy likes to give admirals all the honors due their rank. My biggest job, when we weren't at general quarters, was to see that visiting admirals were welcomed aboard our ship with pomp and circumstance.

Side boys and boatswains' pipes, which in peacetime are the backbone of the welcoming ceremony, were dispensed with during the war, except on special occasions. Even so, my admiral, the chief of staff, the captain of the ship, the flag secretary, the officer of the deck, and I—all dressed immaculately, standing in line, and smiling a toothy welcome—were supposed to be on the quarterdeck whenever a visiting admiral stepped aboard.

It made no difference whether all of us had been up all night, or whether some of us were in the shower when the visitor hove unexpectedly into sight, or whether we hadn't had our shoes off for three days. When the visitor arrived we had to be standing at the top of the gangway, we had to be clean, and we had to act happy about it.

The signal bridge was ordered to keep a twenty-four-hour watch for enemy planes and visiting admirals, and one was considered just about as important as the other. Sometimes, when conditions were ideal, the visitor would arrive as he was supposed to—in an admiral's barge, with his personal flag flying from her bow—and the signal bridge would spot him in time for me to make the preparations.

But conditions were seldom ideal. Admirals were forever popping in by plane from London, Washington, San Diego, Pearl Harbor and points west. Since they couldn't very well bring their barges with them, they'd hitch a ride out to our ship on whatever small craft happened to be handy. So there'd be no admiral's flag flying, and no advance warning.

Also, our signal bridge was composed largely of reserves like myself, and couldn't be made to understand that visiting admirals ranked with enemy planes. Consequently, the bridge wasn't so alert about spotting approaching admirals as it should have been.

Each time, after such a visitor had departed, Admiral Burkbridge would have me on the carpet, and each dressing down was more severe than the one preceding it. There is a limit, of course, to how severe a dressing down can be, and I thought the admiral had just about reached the limit.

We sailed to Leyte, on the invasion of the Philippines, and a few months later to Lingayen Gulf, in the Northern Philippines. We dropped anchor there, and the men on the signal bridge seemed to be becoming more and more alert. They spotted kamikazes almost as soon as the planes were picked up on radar. More important, om my standpoint, they hadn't missed in m- ing me about a visiting admiral for w ks.

It really wasn't my fault or the fa of the signal bridge that Admiral Sir ce Fraser, commander in chief of the B ish Pacific Fleet and the highest-ranking v tor we had ever had, wasn't met and ext ded the proper courtesies when he came a rd our ship in Lingayen Gulf. The faul wa principally with the junior officer of the ck a reserve ensign who got panicky and f got whatever he had learned in indoctrin ion school.

Sir bruce had been in the area and ad decided to come aboard our ship t ask whether one of our seaplanes would fly im back to his command in Australia. Not av- ing a barge, he hitchhiked a ride out t our anchorage in a disreputable-looking my tug, which hadn't been painted in years was rusty and dented, and was manne by bearded and half-naked GI's.

As the tug steamed up to us, our sig nal bridge looked her over with distaste. H ing decided that no naval admiral, or en tec man either, would think of going aboar the tug even if he were drowning, the sig nal bridge dismissed her from mind.

When the tug got within hailing dist ce, one of her men got a megaphone and sh ted to the ensign who was manning our qu er- deck, "We have a VIP for you."

The ensign thought back to his da at indoctrination school. He recalled that ne had learned there what a VIP was, b he couldn't make up his mind whether it is a very important person or a very impo an package. He focused his binoculars o the tug and, like the signal bridge, decided hat it couldn't be a person.

"Come alongside and deliver it,' our ensign ordered through one of our m o- phones. "And, you wrap-leggings, min you don't poke a hole in us, or we'll open fi e."

The tug came alongside, and Sir Bruce and his aide leaped out. It was only hen that one of the men on the signal bridg saw the gold braid and telephoned my ate- room.

"Admiral coming aboard, sir," h re- ported.

"Good. Fine. How many yards aw is he?"

"Zero yards, sir. He's on the qu er- deck."

I had a sinking feeling in my stomach The only hope I had left was that the visito was a rear admiral and also junior to Burkb ge.

"How many stars is he wearing managed.

"Four, sir."

"A full admiral," I yelled. "Why didn't you say so?"

(Continued on Page 130)

"Imagine frying bacon in that!"

Eye Task . . . C

Television is our grea
. . . and still another sustaine eyes, healthy, rested eyes, can e can be a terrible taskmaster to faulty ey that tire and water, fog, and fumble
From childhood on, eyes change, weaken . . complex "age of vision." Sooner or later precision-made glasses. Eighty-one mil comfortable, efficient seeing. Yes, as eye ta years of learning, when seeing habits are fo adulthood . . . eyes and vision must be happiness, and achievement. That is why ophthalmologists, optometrists, and ophthalmic men of vision can make television welcome an eye task. BETTER VISION INSTITUTE,

Science says, millions of different eyeglass-lens corrections are possible. Actually, many thousands are made, using over one

Stopette Protection is Positive Protection

You can be sure of Stopette. Each mist-fine spray envelops the entire underarm... destroys odor-producing bacteria, checks excess perspiration instantly. Does both with the gentleness of a fine, fine cosmetic. You never touch Stopette, hardly know it touches you. Harmless to clothes. And the squeezable Stopette bottle is unbreakable... can't leak or spill. It's time you joined the millions of Stopette users. Buy it for the whole family—your man wants it, too! At all drug and cosmetic counters.

Family size: $1.25 plus tax
Travel size: .60 plus tax

Jules Montenier, Inc., Chicago

Poof! there goes perspiration

Stopette
SPRAY DEODORANT

Stopette
THE ORIGINAL
SPRAY DEODORANT

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Look Lovelier in 10 Days with Doctor's Home Facial ...or your money back!

New Beauty Routine Quickly Helps Skin Look Softer, Smoother, Lovelier!

No need for a lot of elaborate preparations . . . no complicated rituals! With just one dainty, snow-white cream—greaseless, medicated Noxzema—you can help your problem skin look lovelier!

The way to use it is as easy as washing your face. It's the Noxzema Home Facial, described at the right. Developed by a doctor, in clinical tests it helped 4 out of 5 women with problem skin look lovelier!

See how it can help you!

With this Home Facial, you "creamwash" to glowing cleanliness—without any dry, drawn feeling. You give skin the all-day protection of a greaseless powder base . . . the all-night aid of a medicated cream that helps heal,* soften, smooth.

Money-Back Offer! Get Noxzema today at any drug or cosmetic counter—40¢, 60¢, $1.00, plus tax. If this Facial doesn't help skin in 10 days, return jar to Noxzema, Baltimore, Md.—money back.

externally-caused blemishes*

Save this! Follow Noxzema's Home Facial as an aid to a lovelier-looking complexion!

Morning—Apply Noxzema over face and neck. Using a damp cloth, "creamwash" with Noxzema just as you would if you were using soap and water. When you "creamwash" your skin clean, there's no dry, drawn feeling afterwards!

Now, smooth on a light film of Noxzema for your powder base. This greaseless, invisible film of Noxzema not only holds make-up beautifully, but it also helps protect your skin all day!

Evening—At bedtime, "creamwash" again. How clean your skin looks! How fresh it feels! See how you've washed away make-up, the day's dirt—without harsh rubbing!

Now, lightly massage your skin with Noxzema to help soften and smooth. Pat a little extra over any blemishes* to help heal them. Medicated Noxzema is a greaseless overnight cream. No "smeary" face or messy pillow, when you use dainty, snow-white Noxzema!

NOXZEMA SKIN CREAM

Like an Angel of Mercy to your skin

(Continued from Page 128)

War admiral grabbed my cap, and ran to Burkbridge's biggest arters. He had just had a shower and was quarte his underwear, lacing up his shoes. I were w dn't bothered to knock.

and cir "A full admiral," I said. "He's already Side ard. He's on the way up here."

peaceti Burkbridge didn't even take time to give ing ce a dirty look. He put on his cap over his the wa combed hair, he jumped into his shirt so, my trousers quicker than I had ever been of the le to get into mine, and he headed for the the de or, buttoning as he went.

standi A green curtain separated his quarters come- m the passageway, and as Burkbridge deck ved through it, Sir Bruce and his aide, aboar orted by the thoroughly frightened en-

It gn, approached from the other side. Sir had b uce, although not having the appearance were an agile man, managed to jump backward unexp d avoid the collision.

hadn "Welcome aboard, sir," said my admiral, the v miling as if it were a genuine pleasure. the t Come right in and have a seat, sir."

and Sir Bruce said it was indeed a pleasure

To. I noticed with admiration and a twinge twen f envy that my admiral seemed completely and t ease, and that somehow, in the fifteen just teps he had taken to get to the curtain, he time ad managed to finish all his buttoning.

woul Admiral Burkbridge suggested coffee, and adm oked his head out a door to summon one of from is messboys. When he pulled his head back spot again, his hair was neatly combed. It was tion lear to me that, no matter how I tried, I ever could hope to compete in the Navy

Bu with men who had had Annapolis training. mir The ensign retreated quickly, and I would fron ave followed except that I knew that I Har ad to stay with the adver niral and entertain Sir the Bruce's aide. The four of eve is sat down for coffee, then nd although I knew adv ny admiral was ready Ao scalp me, you never larg ould have told it from be n he cordial way he passed ranl he cream and sugar.

the "Good trim ship," the commander of the app British Pacific Fleet observed. "Fine-looking Efficers and men."

part "Thank you, sir," said my admiral.

on t "Friendly chap at the quarter-deck," Sir mor ruce continued, chuckling. "Got a little is a ixed up and thought I was a package." dow I spilled my coffee.

just "Thought you were a package?" asked y admiral, trying to chuckle too. "That's We for the books." He looked at me for just Phil split second and I knew he was about as Ling used as if he had seen a torpedo heading We r us on a collision course.

the "The ensign sent four husky seamen down more gangway to get the package," Sir Bruce kaze called, rocking with laughter now. "One them said, 'You dogfaces toss it here and 'll try to catch it.'"

"And another hollered, 'Anything that mes off that scow is going to have to be loused,'" Sir Bruce's aide took up the ory, also rocking with laughter.

"Holy Moses," said Admiral Burkbridge.

seemed that the four seamen had become tled when they saw Sir Bruce, and had d. The ensign started to flee, too, but ought better of it and returned bravely to post. The British admiral had saluted, d announced that he was Bruce Fraser. e ensign forgot to salute, but he grabbed Bruce's hand and shook it warmly.

"Glad to make your acquaintance, Mr. aser," the ensign had said. "I'm Fred ckson from San Antonio. You and your nd come on in and make yourselves to me."

'Quite the nicest and most friendly way e ever been welcomed aboard," Sir Bruce ded, and he sounded as if he meant it. t both he and his aide were laughing now that they could hardly speak, and tears d come to their eyes. My admiral and I re laughing too. But if there were tears in eyes, they weren't from laughing.

We had received word that Fleet Admiral nitz was coming through on an inspection trip. Admiral Nimitz would arrive b plane, and Burkbridge and I were su to meet him in Burkbridge's barge.

To be certain that nothing wou wrong, I drilled the barge's crew for d how to come up to the side of a sea and how to take down one flag and another.

There was one big hurdle. The ra fleet admiral had been created only a or so before, and we had no five-star Every large Navy ship has the equi to make flags, but nobody aboard kne the five stars should be arranged. blinker messages to aides of other ad in the vicinity, and none of them knew When I asked my admiral about it, h gested that I go find out.

I CONSIDERED asking the advice of the Department in Washington, but we h structions not to send dispatches that have a direct bearing on the war effo sides, a chief petty officer on the signal told me there was only one logical pla the fifth star, and that was in the cen the flag. So that's where we put it. W a four-star flag, which looks like the spot on dice, and added the fifth s make it look like a five-spot.

My admiral and I were waiting barge, flying a two-star flag, as the se landed. The coxswain of the barge perfect job of going alongside the plan Fleet Admiral Nimitz jumped in. We sa showed our teeth, shook hands, and p the barge away from the plane.

It's automatic with admirals to something like the changing of flags, how well trained you is. The barge crew performed better. came two-stars, in on tion. Up went five-st another motion. breeze caught five opened it up, and m snap.

"Great Scott," Fleet Admiral Nimitz, "what's that?

"What's what, sir?" asked my ad "That flag."

I don't know whether or not my a knew what was wrong with the flag. P he did.

"Gilbreth," he said, "Admiral N is speaking to you."

"Sir?" I asked Admiral Nimitz.

"What kind of flag is that?" aske fleet admiral.

"That's a fleet admiral's flag, sir," formed him. "Five stars."

"No, it isn't," said Admiral Nimi ought to know what a fleet admiral looks like, shouldn't I?"

"You sure should, sir," I agreed.

"Gilbreth!" said my admiral.

"Sir?"

"Where," asked my admiral slowly you get that flag?"

"I made it, sir."

"Holy Moses," whispered Admiral bridge. "Gilbreth, be good enough one of the men to take down that t whatever it is."

"On the double, sir," I told him, re the order, and hoping that I hadn' manently damaged his career.

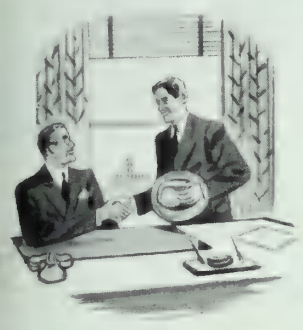
But Admiral Nimitz didn't seem th bit angry. In fact, it had been my e ence—and I consider myself to be one foremost authorities on the subject admirals enjoy mix-ups in protocol vided the mix-ups are caused by the some other admiral, and not by thei aides. Admiral Nimitz seemed to be in good humor for the remainder of th

"The same thing happened when I l at Guam," he cackled. "They had a fl like yours, lieutenant."

"How should the five stars be arr sir?" I asked Admiral Burkbridge, th I might as well put him on the spot t

"In a circle," he replied almost fully. "I certainly thought you knew

"Like this," nodded Admiral N pointing to the collar of his khaki where he wore the new five-star insig



It is strange that men will talk of miracles, revelations, inspiration, and the like, as things past, while love remains. —THOREAU.

LAVORIS

Always

for Good Mouthcare!

Before business or social engagements

Our large bottle holds 20 oz's!

LAVORIS
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
MOUTHWASH AND GARGLE

For a Clean Mouth and a Fresh Pleasant Breath

Tangy Cinnamon-clove Flavor

DETACHES, REMOVES GERM-HARBORING FILM

"I see, sir," I said. I still wondered whether my admiral had known it all the time, or whether he had noticed the collar insigne just before Admiral Nimitz pointed to it.

About two weeks later an admiral whose name meant nothing to me signaled our ship by blinker at four o'clock in the morning that he would like to borrow Burkbridge's barge right away, if convenient. He added that he wanted the barge to take him to a nearby island, where a number of our seaplane squadrons were based, so that he could get a plane to fly him up north of Manila.

I waked the barge crew, and sent the boat to him immediately.

I didn't get to see Admiral Burkbridge until about ten o'clock that morning, and in the course of our conversation I mentioned casually what I had done.

"I knew you'd want him taken care of," I added, "so I called the barge crew on the double."

"Fine, Gilbreth. And of course you went with him to see that he got one of our planes."

"No, sir," I said. "All he asked for was to borrow the barge, and I loaned it to him."

The admiral had his hat on. "Get the barge alongside. And get it quick."

I summoned the barge, and the admiral and I got in. He seemed more disappointed in me than angry.

"Frank, do you know what job that admiral has?" he asked. It was the first time he had called me by my first name, and I guessed he had given up trying to indoctrinate me and that I wouldn't be his aide much longer.

"No, sir."

"He's stationed in Washington, and he's assistant to the Vice-Chief of Naval Operations."

"Oh, sir?"

"Do you know what squadron was going to fly him up there?"

"No, sir."

"We'll have to try them all, I guess."

We went to the dock where the barge crew said they had landed him, but nobody there had seen him. We tried the squadrons one by one, but we couldn't find any trace of the Washington admiral.

"I guess you know what you've done, Frank," Admiral Burkbridge told me. "You've lost the personal representative of the Chief of Naval Operations."

"I'm sorry, sir."

We were back in the barge again, heading for a squadron on the other side of the island. We pulled into the island and the Washington admiral was there, sitting on a lump of coral and waiting for a plane to be gassed.

Burkbridge took over and quickly got everything organized. But it was going to take at least another hour before the plane was ready to go, and he insisted that the Washington admiral come out to our ship for lunch.

Since Burkbridge had company, I ate in the mess of the ship's officers. He sent for me just as I was finishing.

"You've got ten minutes to pack a bag," he said. "I'm sending you away with the admiral."

"Yes, sir."

"Have you eaten?"

"I've just had chow, sir."

The admiral put his face into mine, and this time I was glad to see it. "Gilbreth," he hollered, "chow is for enlisted men. Officers eat lunch. Do you understand?"

"Yes, sir," I grinned.

The admiral grinned too. "I'm sending you along to act as his aide as long as he's in the Philippines. Take good care of him. He'll be going home in three or four days. When he leaves, you come back here, because I'm going to finish indoctrinating you if it kills me."

The best news of the war for me wasn't the Japanese surrender. It was my orders to come home, which were issued a couple of months before the surrender. I was naturally eager to see Liz and Betsy again—I had been looking forward to that ever since the

Stopette Protection is Positive Protection

You can be sure of Stopette. Each mist-fine spray envelops the entire underarm...destroys odor-producing bacteria, checks excess perspiration instantly. Does both with the gentleness of a fine, fine cosmetic. You never touch Stopette, hardly know it touches you. Harmless to clothes. And the squeezable Stopette bottle is unbreakable... can't leak or spill. It's time you joined the millions of Stopette users. Buy it for the whole family—your man wants it, too! At all drug and cosmetic counters.

Family size: $1.25 plus tax
Travel size: .60 plus tax

Jules Montenier, Inc., Chicago

Stopette
THE ORIGINAL
SPRAY DEODORANT

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

It's the one quick cleanser that

NEVER NEVER SCRATCHES

It's true . . . Bon Ami Cleanser gets the dirt, cuts grease fast, but never dulls the surface! Makes sinks, bathtubs, pots and pans shine like new. No wonder millions of women won't use any other cleanser. But see for yourself. Try Bon Ami Cleanser today!

TWO HANDY FORMS POWDER AND CAKE USE THEM BOTH

The safe, speedy cleanser

BON AMI "hasn't scratched yet!"

day I left them. Also, I had picked up some sort of tropical dysentery that I hadn't been able to throw off.

My orders directed me to proceed to the United States, where I could take thirty days' leave before reporting to Norfolk, Virginia, to relieve a Lieut. Walker B. Smilty.

Admiral Burkbridge could have set my orders aside, since I was his aide, but he didn't. Perhaps he figured he had finished indoctrinating me, or perhaps he knew how badly I wanted to get home. Counting the months I had spent in the New Hebrides, I had been overseas as long as if not longer than anyone else on the ship, which was why my orders had come through.

I took a slow ship home, and the dysentery was gone by the time I reached San Francisco. I met Liz and Betsy in Nantucket, where we spent my leave. It was a wonderful thirty days, that passed too quickly.

Liz and Betsy remained at Nantucket, while I flew down to Norfolk to find out where I'd be stationed. I didn't know what kind of job Lieutenant Smilty had, and I didn't care particularly, since it was in the United States.

Nobody at Norfolk had ever heard of Smilty, and I had to move into Bachelor Officers' Quarters there while a search was made for him. I reported every day to the Personnel Office and was told every day that they were still looking and that I shouldn't get impatient.

The man I had to deal with in Personnel was an elderly and plump-cheeked lieutenant commander, who had been graduated from the Naval Academy, been retired from the service, and then been called back to active duty again during the war. He seemed to take the position that whatever changes had occurred in the Navy during his retirement were unwise, probably illegal, and certainly nothing that he intended to pay the slightest attention to. He brushed aside my arguments that, since the war was over and since I had enough discharge points to be mustered out of the service, it was no longer vital to locate Lieutenant Smilty. Dogmatically, and with what I am sure he thought was more patience than I deserved, he explained that my orders said I was to relieve Lieutenant Smilty, and that he intended to see to it that I carried out my orders.

"But my orders were written two months ago, and since then the war has ended," I kept repeating.

"And have your orders been countermanded by Washington?" he asked.

"No, sir."

"Exactly," he said. "And what do your orders say?"

"We both know what they say, sir. We've been over that fifty times."

"Lieutenant! I asked you what your orders said."

"They say for me to relieve Lieutenant Smilty," I admitted.

"Precisely." He nodded emphatically, as if he had at last managed to prove an all too obvious point to an exceptionally dull-witted malcontent.

So while other officers began to return to civilian life, I remained at Norfolk. I had only one duty—to go by the Personnel Office every morning and ask the lieutenant commander whether anyone had found Smilty.

But finally the waiting period ended. I found the lieutenant commander beaming good humor and victory, when I checked by to see him one morning.

"I have good news for you, Gilbreth," he announced. "We've located Smilty."

"What office is he in, sir?" I asked eagerly. "I'll run right over and relieve him, and then come back for my discharge."

"It's not quite that simple. He left here eight months ago, and that's why we had such a time tracing him. His orders were for Guam."

A dining-room table, with children's eager, hungry faces around it, ceases to be a mere dining-room table and becomes an altar. —STRUNSKY.

"Commander," I shouted, "don't tell you're thinking about sending me to Gua

"I haven't made up my mind yet what to do with you, Gilbreth. You'r difficult case. I'll let you know tomorro

I wasn't sure whether he really mean send me to Guam or not, but I was afrai take a chance on it. I went back to quarters and put in a telephone call to Bureau of Naval Personnel in Washing

The Wave who answered the phone in bureau was sympathetic. She agreed t the whole business was ridiculous. Altho she said she didn't believe for a minute t the lieutenant commander was seriously sidering sending me to Guam, she promi to get off dispatch orders within an h countermanding my Smilty orders and recting that I be discharged.

She kept her word, because the lieuten commander summoned me back to his of that same afternoon.

"I wish those young sprouts in Washi ton would make up their minds," he c plained. "I just got a wire saying you w have to relieve Smilty after all—that can be discharged."

"Fine, sir," I said.

"All this red tape gets me down," he c fided. "Honestly, Gilbreth, I sometim wonder how we managed to win the w

"So do I, sir," I agreed with all my he

But I thought I knew, really, how we won. We had won because we had the b equipment in the world; and because a million civilians had done the best t could, after they were taken into the arm forces; and because of men like Adm Burkbridge and a lot others, who cut the tape and got things d and yet never forgot traditions they had b taught to believe in.

I went over to sick and got my final phys examination, which required for my discha Then I packed my bags, and checked of headquarters. They had two decorati for me there, that had just arrived f Admiral Burkbridge. They were for "mer rious service"—not heroism; if they had b for heroism, I would have known th had been some mistake. Even so, I pleased and proud to have them.

I never got to wear the ribbons, thou because I was checking out in civilian clot and I had purposely left my uniforms hang in a closet at Bachelor Officers' Quart

The man who had been city editor of News and Courier when I was there now managing editor, and I put in a call him at the office. He came to the phon asked him how things were down there.

"Fine. Everything's about the same. culation's up, and we're planning a building."

"Have you still got the same old rope basket to carry copy up to the compos room?" I asked.

"Same basket," he chuckled. "New r You didn't call me to find out about t did you?"

"Not exactly," I told him. "Say, don't happen to have an opening fo reporter, do you?"

"No, not right now. As a matter of f I am looking for an editorial writer, thou I rather had you in mind."

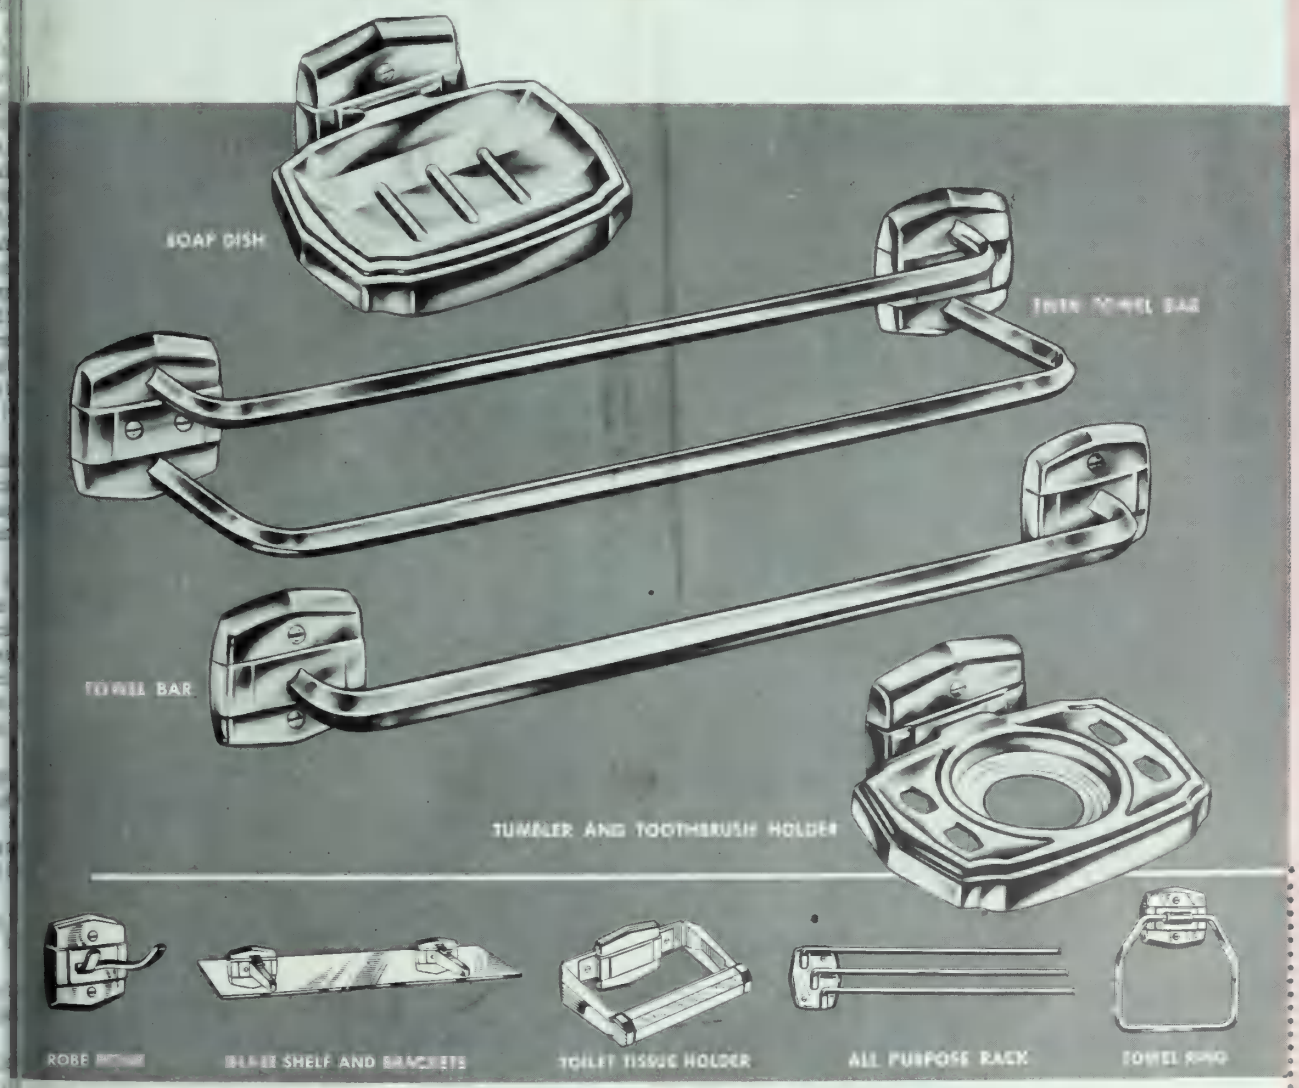
"I accept the position," I holler "Would two weeks from Monday be soon for me to report?"

"That would be fine, but don't you w to know about salary and hours?"

"Mere details," I assured him. "I'll you two weeks from Monday. Thanks having had me in mind."

When I was through, I looked to see Liz had taken it.

"Right out of a clear sky," I gloated, offered me a job writing editorials. Th what I've always wanted to do."



It had been a long time since I had s Liz so happy. It had been a long time si I realized how lucky I was. THE E

IT COSTS SO LITTLE TO Give your Bathroom a Brand New Look!

Brighten up that tired-looking bathroom with sparkling Autoyre Fairfield accessories! Add new beauty and convenience to kitchen and closets, too! These famous fixtures are so efficient – so good-looking – you'll want a complete matched assortment. And why not? – You can get as many as six different Fairfield accessories for less than $10! To be sure of lasting, easy-to-clean finish – top quality through and through – more than your money's worth, ask for AUTOYRE (auto-wire) FAIRFIELD by name!

fixtures carry the Autoyre guarantee department stores, ardware stores,

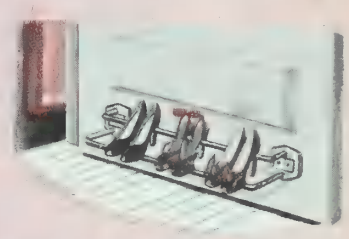
and 10¢ stores.

AUTOYRE Fairfield

MATCHLESS VALUES IN MATCHED ACCESSORIES



THE AUTOYRE COMPANY · OAKVILLE, CONNECTICUT

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

use Fairfield fixtures 77 WAYS all around the house

There's always a towel right where you want it, when you tuck them in a Fairfield Towel Ring near sink, cookstove, and working counter . . . in laundry room . . . home bar . . . as well as in bathroom, nursery and powder room, of course.

This Twin Towel Bar is a natural for attractive towel arrangements. And obviously it makes a compact drying rack. But you might not think of it as a shoe rack. Works like a charm!

Something for the men! Husbands say the Autoyre Fairfield All-purpose Rack makes the most practical tie rack in the world. No gadgets or gimmicks – easy selection – no snagging!

And there are dozens more spots where an Autoyre Fairfield accessory can help lighten your housework . . . brighten your home . . .

THE AUTOYRE COMPANY
Dept. LJ9, Oakville, Connecticut

I'd like to know all the handy ways that these versatile Autoyre Fairfield accessories can serve me. Please send me my copy of your new 24-page illustrated booklet, "77 Ways to Make Small Space Useful and Attractive."

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

this space reserved

for any other towel you own

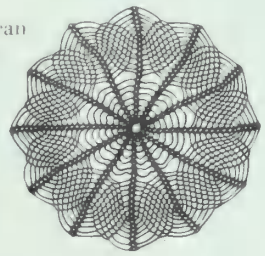
Look at any towel beside magnificent new Wamsutta towels and see the difference for yourself

Compare them depth for depth...thickness for thickness...underweave for underweave...color for color... price for price...and you'll never be in doubt again about what towel you want to own. Like fabulous Supercale* sheets, these beautiful Wamsutta towels are triumphs of weaving that stand all, all alone.

W A M S U T T A

WAMSUTTA Towels

Smart Keynote colors: Burgundy, Yellow, Light Blue, Gray, Aqua, Pink, Hunter Green, Spring Green. (Also in purest White). All available in complete ensembles. Bath towel $2.29. Hand towels, large bath towels, finger tip towels, wash



For your prettiest luncheon set, edge fine organdy with a border of narcissus stars. Use pastel colors for a gala set. Directions for all designs shown can be ordered from the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Phila. 5, Pa. Send 25c for pattern No. 2579. Use coupon on Page 26.

Prize Crochet

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK
Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

Using these two basic motifs, you can make all the crochet pieces shown.

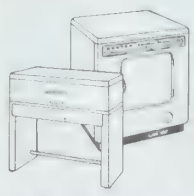
The party buffet cloth repeats the field and border of the prize design, changing only the proportions. Very fine thread was used for all crochet.

Luncheon mats of any size are made by circling one spider-web motif with one or more rows of the narcissus stars.

HAROLD FOWLER

This national first-prize-winning tablecloth was the inspiration for all the crochet shown above.

"...23-24, Look Mom, I saw it Double-Tumble!"



The Horton "500" Automatic

YES, IT'S HORTON'S EXCLUSIVE DOUBLE-TUMBLE ACTION THAT GETS CLOTHES CLEANER

It gently whirls clothes one way 24 times, then reverses 24 times. All you do is lift the top, put in up to ten pounds of clothes and turn the dial. This selective dial lets you add clothes whenever you wish, and it's so safe—it automatically stops when you open the top! And . . . Horton's automatic double-tumble action leaves clothes tangle free.

Horton ironers and dryers are wonderful, too. Your Horton dealer will be happy to demonstrate.

HORTON

Washers • Dryers • Ironers

HORTON MANUFACTURING COMPANY ■ FT. WAYNE, INDIANA

Since 1871

THE RIVER GARDEN OF PURE REPOSE

(Continued from Page 39)

In the waiting room below Wilfreda found a tall, grave-faced man in Chinese army uniform. He spoke in formal, meticulous English.

"You are here with Miss Breasted, they tell me. My name is Wang Wei-Chou. I am a colonel in the Medical Corps of the Chinese army. Years ago, in the north, I was Miss Breasted's student. I knew her as Teacher Jane."

"I am Wilfreda Grayson, of the Anglican Mission. I am sorry, Miss Breasted is too ill to see her friends."

Wang Wei-Chou smiled. "You are besieged with us, I am sure."

The door opened and another figure joined them. It was the hospital superintendent, a bustling little figure in a white coat, whose voice sounded kindly, tired and hurried.

"Well, well, Wilson Wang! High time you came back to Huai Yuen." He shook hands as he went on talking. "I see you know Miss Grayson. Taking care of one of our refugees, Miss Jane Breasted. You wanted to see me about her?"

The formality of Colonel Wang's manner was in contrast to the bustle of the other. "I have a request to make of Miss Breasted, with your permission, Doctor Hartshorn. I know how crowded a hospital in West China must be in wartime. I have come to make sure she is moved to better quarters."

"Better quarters, eh?" said Doctor Hartshorn. "We're full up—except for the bugs. There seems always to be room for more of them. What have you in mind?"

"There is a garden not too far away from here which belongs to my family. For two years now it has been empty except for an old scholar who was my childhood tutor and who has come as a refugee to live there. And, of course, there are the servants. But there is plenty of room. May I beg you to say to my old teacher that I hope she will make the place her home indefinitely, while I am absent with the army?"

"Couldn't be better," said Doctor Hartshorn. "Now, that's settled."

Wang Wei-Chou took a step toward Wilfreda. "I should like to have arrangements made in the garden before we move Teacher Jane. Could you go out with me tomorrow at ten?"

Doctor Hartshorn answered for her. "Of course she can. I'll have someone else on duty with Miss Breasted while she's gone."

The Chinese bowed to Wilfreda, shook hands with the superintendent and was gone.

Wilfreda turned to Doctor Hartshorn. "Are you sure Miss Breasted will agree?"

"Doctor's orders," was the brisk reply. "In this case, two doctors. That's a fine boy. Old Szechwan gentry—no better stock in the world. Studied in Peking, and Europe; went to Nanking later, where he got to know your patient. When the war came, he joined up. Not many of his sort did."

WILFREDA found herself talked down the corridor and out the door into the entrance court, with no pause for remarks from her. She passed on through the tall hospital gates to the post office, where she mailed her letter. She hurried back. In the little second-floor room, she found the patient stirring.

"Pain, dear one?"

"Oh, no." The voice came faintly. "But Brother Ass is full of nerves tonight. He twitches and turns, and has no sense at all. St. Francis was right to call his body 'Brother Ass.' A body is a ridiculous creature." The words were spoken lightly but with physical effort.

"Can I do anything for Brother Ass?"

"Distract his mind," said Jane. "Although of late he hasn't had any. He hasn't even allowed me to read my letters. Could you get them out for me, Freda?"

"Where are they?"

"In the straw basket hanging on the w I use that for my letter file because o rats. They run all over the place, you kn

Wilfreda took the basket from its pe picked up a stiff square envelope. "Th from Major Robert Trent, U. S. A. Air F in Chungking."

AN uneasy movement on the plank ind indicated that Brother Ass was clai attention. Wilfreda opened the envelope read aloud:

"Dear Jane Breasted: My mother w Friend, and a distant connection of you I could claim to call you cousin, alth you've never seen me, nor, I suppose, h much about me. I have just reached Ch king and enclose some homeside messa have brought for you.

"I have a great desire to hear from I am new in China, and much bewildere my surroundings. If you will undertak help me to an understanding of all strangeness I shall be most grateful. A will answer any questions you care to as about myself. "Sincerely you

"ROBERT TR

"P. S. I have discovered that Daisy child, a young subordinate of mine, k you in North China."

"He appeals to a poor source of info tion," commented Jane, and she brough the words draggingly.

Freda laid down th ter and decided to d discussion of the w of Colonel Wang unti next morning.

"I think that's eno isn't it?" she sugge gently.

"I can't seem to attention," was the w answer.

Wilfreda put the l back in the basket, and when she had se Jane for the night, stretched out in the d sleeping bag on her own cot. In spit fatigue she was up every two hours for routine of nursing care, and was aware the night passed in dry wakefulness twitching distress for her patient. It see an extraordinary piece of good fortune a change in arrangements could be ma that is, if Colonel Wang's garden prove be a place where one could manage nursing.

A slight touch of friendly malice and amusement towards those we love keeps our affections for them, I find, from becoming flat.

—LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH: Unforgotten Years (Little, Brown & Company and Atlantic Monthly Press).

Promptly to his hour Wang Wei-Chou sented himself at the gate of the hos with two rickshas and Wilfreda was not of his arrival. He asked at once whether had spoken to Jane about the move t garden.

"I told her this morning. The tears ro her eyes, and she did not speak imm ately. When she could, she whispe 'Please thank him.' A little later she p me by the sleeve, and said, 'Do you t we can go soon?'"

"It shall be as soon as possible. Pleas in the ricksha."

The little vehicle was a startling cont to the Huai Yuen examples of the same veyances. Its black lacquer body was sp less, as were its brass fittings and lamps. rug, folded over the seat, was of fine qua and immaculate. The puller was dresse whole clean clothing. He took up the sh when she was in her seat, and trotted a with her. Her companion followed i broken-down contraption which he had h at the gates.

They went through rough streets betw low, dilapidated buildings, standing on edges of rubble where bombs had fa They passed through a breach in the anc wall, made to give the city crowds a ch to get out when the Japanese planes c over.

(Continued on Page 139)

FELSO

WASHES EVERYTHING BETTER!

...and so Gentle on hands!

FOR BETTER WASHINGS, USE THE BETTER PRODUCT FELSO

There's only one "proof of the pudding" when you buy washing products. That's to try them . . . at home . . . with your own wash. Compare . . . feel your FELSO-clean clothes.

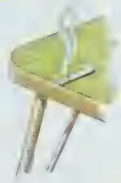
Try FELSO. You'll see that gentle just-right suds give you the freshest, most fragrant, sweetest-smelling wash. Did you ever see whiter sheets and shirts . . . brighter, more colorful prints? Did you ever feel softer, fluffier laundry . . . or any so easy to iron? And how soft and smooth your hands are after you use FELSO.

Smart Dinettes That Can Take a Beating

It's Daystrom's Exciting Coloramic*

TRADE MARK

–it's DAYSTROM furniture!



Now—durable steel fits into your smartest dining spots, in Daystrom's new beautiful Coloramic Dinette Sets. Here you get the warm tone of wood, the strength of tough but light steel, and surfaces that resist scuffs and spills . . . all at a price as low as kitchen chrome! Look at Daystrom Coloramic at your furniture store. Decorators are using these glamorous sets in dining nooks, or indoor terraces, or in dining-living rooms!

*TRADE MARK

Daystrom Sets start as low as $84.95 at leading furniture and department stores.

Coloramic plastic in smart, muted Bronze or Sand, sheathes the steel legs. Resists marring and chipping. Tables and chairs may be purchased in sets or separately.

The Daystromite Wonder Top resists burning cigarettes, hot dishes, cocktails, scars and dents. Wipes clean with damp cloth. Choice of chartreuse, green, limed oak, grey or yellow.

Washable chairs are upholstered in smart plastic, textured like fabric, yet easy to wipe clean. Choice of plain, or Nomad pattern, or Gold-Brush Plaid—in chartreuse, wine, cocoa, red, yellow or green.

Brighten your dining and lighten your work with a Daystrom Chrome Dinette Set. Both the four foot table and extension leaf have the Daystromite Wonder Top that resists heat, scars, and stains. Washable plastic upholstery comes in three patterns, in gay matching or contrasting colors. Priced by the set or piece.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money if Not as Advertised Therein

AWARDED THE FASHION ACADEMY GOLD MEDAL IN 1950 AND 1951

Daystrom Furniture—Division of Daystrom, Inc.
Factories at Olean, N. Y. • Friendship, N. Y. • Fullerton, California

(Continued from Page 136)

resently the crowds and the smells were gone. She found herself in a countryside of fields, bordered by streams of gray-green water. Here and there she saw temples and walled compounds, but the fields made a misty plain to a dim horizon which veiled the foothills of the Snow Mountains to the west; and it was to the foothills, she found, that they were bound.

The runner paced fleetly along down the wide dusty road which stood high above the surrounding country. Wayfarers passed in tatters and rags and shouting; primitive carts were dragged along by men with ropes over their shoulders. After more than an hour of the main highway, the rickshas turned off on a narrow track which wound around the fantastic projections of stony rises in the plain. At last the road came to dim gray walls which lifted under the shadows of immense trees, and Wilfreda's runner stopped before a roofed gate built of heavy dark timbers. She looked up at the lacquered board hanging above her, on which four Chinese characters were traced in gold.

"How would you translate?" asked Wang Wei-Chou as he came to help her out of her ricksha.

She stepped down, and then stood still, concentrating. "The Flower Garden of Pure Repose," she suggested.

Her host was pleased. "I see you are accomplished in Chinese. The name is given to the place by one of the Ming pretenders wandering as a fugitive, who was sheltered here by an ancestor of mine. Of course the name given by the refugee prince is not very commonly used. The people always call the place the Wang Family Garden." He beat upon the double doors and called aloud, "Shang Shih." There was a sound of shuffling feet within, and they were admitted by a stooped old man with a kindly, intelligent face pitted with scars. He bowed to his master, and stood aside for the men to bring in the rickshas. Then the leaves were swung shut, and Wilfreda found herself in a gloom cast by two spreading trees overhead. Underfoot was gray stone flagging and in her ears the sound of running water.

A low, dark house with a fiber thatch crouched at the left of the covered space inside the gate. A small dark woman, wearing dark blue homespun linen and a white cloth turbanwise on her head, came out of the door and performed a bow before Wang Wei-Chou.

"Here are Shang Shih, the gateman, and Shang Ma, his wife," said her host to Wilfreda.

He spoke to the servants in rapid Szechwanese, which was sufficiently different from the Mandarin which she had been taught to be quite unintelligible to the Englishwoman. While the talk went on, she looked eagerly about her, for during her ten years in China she had never before been in a place of this sort.

She was a little disappointed that there was not more to see. The area surrounded by the outer walls was large, but this rather narrow entrance space was blocked to the north by lower inner walls, pierced by two wide doorways, each closed with four leaves of a greenish blue dimmed with damp and age. The flagged path branched and led east and west along this screening wall toward ground which rose unevenly and was planted with a tangle of growing things which, with their great girth and lofty branches, made her feel like a child in a fairy tale.

Wang Wei-Chou turned to her apologetically. "I ask your pardon for keeping you. We go this way."

He turned east and then went north around the corner of the inner wall. Wilfreda caught a glimpse in the distance of a little summerhouse with slender columns supporting an airy peaked roof, but she had hardly uttered a little sound of pleasure at the sight before her attention was caught by something which seemed an utter contrast to the elegance of the little garden structure. On the east side of the path was an extraordinary collection of stone shapes. Their colors ranged through shades of grays and tawny earth hues; they were piled together with no apparent reason in their arrangement. She stopped and her guide turned inquiringly.

"Oh," said Wilfreda, "please excuse me, but I have never seen anything like this. What—what in the world is it?"

"Ornamental garden rock," the other explained. "We Chinese use a great deal of it. I understand foreigners do not like it."

The old gateman who had followed came up to them now and Wilfreda saw him point toward an opening high in the pile of stones, before which, on a small ledge, there was a clay bowl. She was quite sure she caught what the old man said, since he spoke with emphasis after his master had addressed a question to him.

"The Golden Ones have not come this year. You should burn incense before you leave the garden."

Her host gave no outward sign of his reception of this admonition, but Wilfreda had a feeling that he was a little annoyed, and she did not like to ask questions. She decided, as she followed on, that the bowl was like those she had often seen before roadside shrines. Then, were the Golden Ones garden deities? Jane would probably know. The path, still in deep shade, was narrow, so that it was difficult to keep at Wang's side.

"I suppose," she said to him, "the servants have been asking for news of your family. Where are they now?"

"There are only my mother and my eight-year-old son," was the reply. "Before the American Air Force moved into this district, there was a good deal of banditry and my mother did not consider it safe. She has gone to another family estate, a great distance from here, where she will remain until the war is over. But I hope," he added, "that you and Teacher Jane will not feel nervous. Everything is now under very strict control."

As he spoke they came out of the shade and Wilfreda caught her breath in delight over the prospect which was before her. There was a sheet of water with a little island in it. There were trees leaning from the deeply indented shore, which sent long green shadows into the still gray depths. Immediately at her right she saw a structure oblong in shape and of fine proportions, planned for the enjoyment of the garden scene. It had, on the water side, a seat running the length of the pavilion.

On the bench, occupying himself with a fish pole, was an elderly Chinese in a robe of faded blue silk.

"There is my old tutor, Master Yuan," said Wang Wei-Chou as Shang Shih went forward to announce the newcomers.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Meadow Remembered

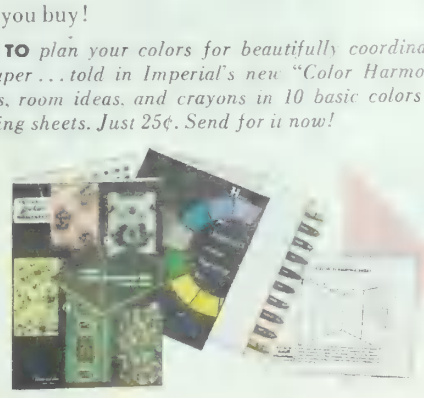
By Mary Ballard Duryee

Summer was waning when
Our island felt the stir
Of shifting wind and sea-borne fog
Over the juniper.

Sweeter than sun it came
To ring us round in space,
Two willing prisoners who stood
Knee-deep in Queen Anne's lace.

Along the meadow's edge,
Back from the firm sea sand
We searched for berries in the grass
Where a hand could touch a hand.

I never saw again
A radiance to compare
With the bright pin points of the fog
That starred your braided hair.



★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

You can do so much more for your home with wallpaper!

More style . . . more beauty . . . more years of service . . . in every price range—that's the wonderful assurance of Imperial Washable Wallpapers. Well within the reach of every budget is the special loveliness, the grace, the individuality that wallpaper can bring to a home. Imperial offers hundreds of fashion-correct patterns and colors. And every one is "Color-Locked," guaranteed for 3 years against fading and to clean satisfactorily when instructions are followed, or it will be replaced without charge. This means economy . . . saves frequent redecorating. Insist on the Imperial Silver Label when you buy!

HOW TO plan your colors for beautifully coordinated rooms, how to relate furnishings and wallpaper . . . told in Imperial's new "Color Harmony Kit" by Jean McLain. Contains color wheels, room ideas, and crayons in 10 basic colors to help you sketch your own schemes on planning sheets. Just 25¢. Send for it now!

IMPERIAL PAPER AND COLOR CORPORATION
Dept. L-61, Glens Falls, N. Y.
Gentlemen: I am enclosing 25¢ for my copy of your "Color Harmony Kit."

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Lady, hold that line!

Don't let your figure get away. Watch your weight every day with a Health-o-Meter.

Here's the beautiful new

Health-o-Meter "187"

Now only $7.95 (Denver and west, $8.65)

- Famous Health-o-Meter accuracy
- Low, streamlined, compact—out of the way in even the smallest bathroom
- Easy-to-read magnified dial—zero to 260 pounds
- Finest baked enamel finish in white, and popular pastel shades

Health-o-Meter

America's weight watcher since 1919...

CONTINENTAL SCALE CORPORATION • CHICAGO 36

. . . yours for YEARS

American Beauty

ELECTRIC IRON

• At better stores

AMERICAN ELECTRICAL HEATER CO., Detroit 2, Mich.

Wilfreda had never before encountered a fisherman wearing silk. He was very thin and hollow-chested; he had a few gray strings of beard straying out of his upper lip and chin. He moved with dignity and deliberation, and he and Wang Wei-Chou stood bowing to each other with courteous inquiries concerning health and prosperity. The bows of the younger man were much deeper than those of the old scholar, and Wilfreda felt in the midst of the formality a genuine reverence for his former teacher on the part of her host. He presented Wilfreda, explaining his errand, and the old man bowed ceremoniously but without looking in her direction. She experienced the sensation of being suddenly invisible and murmured a subdued reply which elicited another polite bow. It was then possible for the host to suggest that he must complete his arrangements for the reception of the invalid. Master Yuan bowed again, and his pupil bent low several times, after which the old man returned to the bench while the others continued along the strand of the little lake.

"Do you mind my asking," said Wilfreda, "about one thing I caught as you were talking? You and Master Yuan used Mandarin, so it was easier to follow than when you speak Szechwanese."

"Of course we speak Mandarin," said Wang Wei-Chou. "My parents invited him to take charge of my education because he was a distinguished scholar from the capital, and they wanted my Pekingese to be good. What is it that interested you?"

"You spoke of a Library of Four Delights. I wondered what they are."

"Breezes in spring, flowers in summ moon in autumn and snow in winter. proper garden libraries are supposed to placed so that they have these pleasures."

Wilfreda was longing to ask about ot buildings of which she had glimpses, e one set apart in its especial nook, each lo ing fragile and fantastic like a bit out o fleeting dream. But Wang Wei-Chou w walking more rapidly. He followed a pa which led around a spur of the hillocks i a secluded part, shut away from the wa by the rises of ground and the density trees. Presently she saw low-lying roofs a damp-greened walls ahead, and then ca to a vase-shaped gate and stepped into a tle paved courtyard planted with pine a bamboo. In one corner, a single branch o flowering plum stretched faintly pink agai the gray-tiled roof and filled the air with cold spring perfume. To north, south, e and west stood separate rooms, little roo with deep eaves and paper-backed lattice joined into a unit by the wall, which fram each corner.

Wilfreda looked about with eagerne "Where are we now?" she asked.

"We call this the Chai of the Thr Friends—the traditional friends you meet art: the pine, the plum and the bamboo." swept his hand in a circle which includ them all.

"How beautifully quiet."

"Yes. It is the most secluded of the hou and it is within reach of the servants. Sha Ma doesn't stay at the gatehouse. Her qu ters are just beyond the hills around t

(Continued on Page 142)

make the most of Aluminum Utensils

It's time to pamper your aluminum pots and pans, for the utensils in your cupboard grow more precious as the supply of new ones dwindles.

• Control warpage—The best way to keep a pan flat on the bottom is to avoid very fast changes in temperature. Avoid excessive cooking heats and let a hot utensil cool before pouring in cold water for soaking. Pressure pans are an exception, they are specially built, so can be cooled rapidly.

• Flatten the bulge—If utensils are wobbly on the bottom, heat them slowly ten minutes. Then turn them upside down, place a smooth block of wood over the bottom and hammer with a mallet. Food cooks more evenly in a flat pan, so it's worth the effort—and noise.

• Loosen the lime—A thick deposit of lime in a teakettle adds weight and slows heating speed. To remove it, heat the dry utensil five minutes over low heat. Then tap the bottom gently with a wooden spoon. A light film can be loosened by boiling ¼ cup of vinegar plus water to fill in a utensil for ten minutes. To keep the lime coating from forming so rapidly, empty a teakettle after use, and add ½ teaspoon of vinegar to the water in the bottom of a double boiler.

• Brighten the metal—Minerals in some water and food, and strong alkali soaps, darken aluminum. The discoloration is not harmful but may be unattractive. To remove, boil an acid solution (two tablespoons of cream of tartar for each quart of water) in the pan for five minutes. Minerals in water or food also may be responsible for the formation of small pits in the aluminum. Regular cleaning and polishing with a steel-wool pad or cleanser retard this action, and keep the metal bright.

• Replace uncertain handles—Many handles that have been scorched or worn until they are loose are held in place by screws. New parts can be bought from stores that sell the utensils or ordered from the manufacturer, and are easily screwed in place.

which lovely pattern is your lifetime choice?

Reed & Barton's Francis First — regal luxury; unmatched in detail . . .

Reed & Barton's Marlborough — gracious motifs of the 18th Century . . .

REED & BARTON
STERLING

Reed & Barton's Dancing Flowers — so gay . . . and so very feminine . . .

Reed & Barton's Georgian Rose — as romantic as an English garden . . .

Reed & Barton's Classic Fashion — an authentic pattern for modern tables . . .

Reed & Barton's Burgundy — as fashionably French as Paris . . .

Reed & Barton's Pointed Antique — serene simplicity of early American . . .

Reed & Barton's French Renaissance — brilliant 15th Century design . . .

YOUR pattern in finest-quality solid silver by Reed & Barton is an everlasting, ever-lovely expression of your taste and personality. Start your service now, with six-piece place settings — luncheon knife and fork, teaspoon, butter spreader, salad fork, cream soup spoon. You pay so little for the luxury of Reed & Barton sterling . . . with place settings just $28.75 to $37.50, including tax.

"How To Be A Successful Hostess": For this 52-page booklet of helpful hints, send 10c to Box 990 L, Taunton, Massachusetts.

We're Just Right for You in

Slumberon

Slumberon's secret of superb sleeping comfort is the exclusive combination of Ortho-Flex and Si-Latex.

ORTHO-FLEX...

Burton-Dixie's patented innerspring unit. Hundreds of "magic fingers" provide individual coil control. Ortho-Flex gives you a more level sleeping surface...buoyant controlled body support.

SI-LATEX...

Burton-Dixie's miracle comfort cushion that makes Slumberon America's smoothest, most luxurious mattress. Si-Latex insulates all spring feel and assures definitely longer mattress life.

BUY ON PROOF Make the convincing "Seeing is Believing" test at your favorite store. Prove to yourself, before you buy, why Slumberon is the mattress that is just right for you.

Burton-Dixie
CORPORATION • CHICAGO 8, ILLINOIS
MAKERS OF FINE SLEEPRODUCTS

ALSO MAKERS OF KOT-N-TOP PILLOWS, DELUXE BEDSPRINGS, BURTONIGHTERS, STUDIO COUCHES

(Continued from Page 140)

little water basin in front of the chai. By the way, I hope Shang Ma won't bother you ladies."

"Bother us?"

"I think I should mention what my mother wrote before she left. It seems Shang Ma occasionally has a—a delusion. It's nothing violent, just hysteria, brought on by a bad war experience, I suppose."

"What sort of delusion?"

"Well, she thinks she's a fox."

Wilfreda remembered prevalent superstitions about human beings who become possessed by fox spirits which are very unpredictable in their behavior, and felt immensely interested.

Wang continued: "She goes off into a sort of trance and says all sorts of things appropriate to foxes, but she comes out, if you leave her alone . . . and if she doesn't get excited. She's never done any harm during her seizures, but I understand Shang Shih is badly frightened by them. They don't happen often, and otherwise you will find her very helpful. She will cook and clean; the garden coolies will go out to buy food for you in the villages. Of course some arrangements here are primitive; but with the servants, I hope it won't prove too difficult."

"Difficult! Nothing could be more perfect."

"Please list whatever you find lacking, and my coolies will bring the things out from Huai Yuen."

He handed Wilfreda a notebook and pencil and swung wide the tall carved door of the room to the north.

"This will be best for Teacher Jane. There are no beds, as you see, but I have approached some acquaintances for army cots which you should find comfortable. Shang Shih knows how to set them up, with their frames for nets. Do you have nets?"

"Yes, both of us."

Wilfreda had taken a hasty look inside the door and was scribbling down items.

"If you will excuse me now, I must go to pay my respects to Master Yuan, and attend to a few other matters. I will not be long. Perhaps you will be glad of a chance to concentrate on your list."

He went away, and Wilfreda wandered about the court and looked in at the doors which were standing open. She felt the freshness of the uncluttered rooms which had evidently just been put in perfect order. The floors were of stone; the white plaster walls reached to open rafters. There were chests of plain dark wood and wardrobes of homely solid shapes with hinges and locks set in perfect rounds of plain brass. Slender-legged tables were flanked by straight-backed chairs; the patterns in the lattices differed in each room and gave a touch of delicacy to the prevailing austerity.

WILFREDA sank down upon the stone step to the east room which she intended for her own use, and felt the soft grayness of the day, and the green silence of the court creating an utter peacefulness within her. Living here would be primitive, as Wang Wei-Chou had pointed out. All food must be cooked on a charcoal brazier and carried to Jane, who must not be subjected to the fumes of the open stoves. It would probably tax her ingenuity to deal with sanitation. She added disinfectants to her list which now included dishes, basins, pails, a chair with cushions for Jane . . . and then she paused, wondering how she would contrive to pay for what she had already put down. Inflation prices were cruelly impossible. Then she recalled a supply of sulfa drugs which Michael Chambers had sent with her in case they might be of use for Jane, and decided that the hospital might barter the drugs for what she needed. She wondered how many tablets of sulfa she would have to pay for ten bars of laundry soap.

She put the notebook away and walked across the chai which was to be the living-dining room to the covered gallery built across its south windows and extending arm on the west side of the pool, which g the whole arrangement an air of the grea privacy. It would serve the added pur of space for promenades in the wet weat which was so persistent in Szechwan fronted on the pool, edged with nat stones and surrounded with cupping l which shut the chai into its isolation silence.

Her thoughts reverted to the refugee wo in which both she and Jane had been mersed, and from which it seemed incred that they were now to be released. It was believable that the serene beauty of place could exist on the same planet w wartime China. For Jane, the garden wo mean not deliverance but only respite. whatever respite was possible, Jane sho have.

When Wang Wei-Chou returned, Wilfr followed him back through the garden pa without question or comment. But as t passed the rock pile, she raised her eyes noticed that two sticks of incense were sm ing in the little clay bowl on the ledge.

LAO CH'I and Lao Pa brought Jane to River Garden. They carried her on a bam stretcher which had a blue cotton awnin hide her from the public eyes. Wang W. Chou walked by her side the whole w Wilfreda was in the rear with rickshas loa with her purchases, under the superinte ence of Shang Shih, who was faithf carrying out his master's directions w regard to the "shih m" as he phrased "teac mother." At the gate, Sh Ma opened to them, as the stretcher went ward into the green pa Wilfreda saw two ye butterflies, unusual in e and in intensity of c that made her think crusted gold. The gorgeous pair went p ing about Jane's stretcher, hovering ove and going along with it with flourishe shining wings. She spoke to the old serv

"Shang Shih, do you see those yellow terflies? What do you call them?"

The old man seemed to experience sa faction and relief. "We call them the Gol Ones. They come every year."

"Do you have many Golden Ones?"

"We have only these two."

On the stretcher, Jane raised herself f a moment to look out into the green sile "Ah," she said softly as she sank d again. "This is a green-gray Chinese gar I shall be better here."

To Shang Ma the gateman gave his v upon the new arrival. "The Golden C have returned. They followed the shih u and even rested upon her curtains. It is tain that good fortune has entered our g with her. It must be that she is a sheng je a holy person."

The morning after he had brought Jar the River Garden, Wang Wei-Chou arr at the door in the white wall of the court of the San Yu Chai, and paused before ing to be admitted. Inside he could Shang Ma in conversation with Wilfred

"And what is the age of the shih mu? Forty-seven? Even though she is so thin weak she doesn't look it. Are her parents ing? . . . Oh—they have left this w Ayah! Brothers and sisters how many? None? The shih mu is alone, then. A pity great pity."

Jane's host knocked, and when Shang opened to him, dismissed her. She depa to recount to Shang Shih the information had gleaned and her master entered court.

"Do you find you can talk with the s ants without difficulty?" he asked freda.

"They seem to understand my poor M darin," said Wilfreda. "At least well enc to provide the simple things I ask for."

"Szechwanese is a form of Mandar said Wang. "If you are ever in difficul Master Yuan will help you out."

(Continued on Page 144)

We dream sometimes that we could do much better with our life if we really tried, and the fact is we could.
William Feather Magazine.

"Good housekeepers use Dan River Sheets"

—says Mrs. Beulah G. Clarke, Executive Housekeeper, The Homestead, Hot Springs, Virginia

